FOREWORD

Although Newark State School has provided an educational program for its residents since 1894, the program did not become unified until the position of education supervisor was established in 1950. When Mrs. Geraldine Collins was appointed to that position, she initiated a program of curriculum development which has resulted in the unification of the program and a definition of its philosophies and objectives.

In the boginning, the teaching staff was slow in accepting the need for developing a curriculum; however, a set of aims and objectives was established in 1953 and served as a foundation for the educational program for educable children. In the meantime, the supervisor had revised the classification of school children and had established a progression within the program.

During the next few years, the program and curriculum was gradually revised until 1959, when the position of education director was established and Mrs. Collins was promoted to that position. With the assistance of the education supervisor, she continued the program of curr. ulum development by conducting a workshop which resulted in the definition of the educational program in terms of the nature and needs of the pupils, the philosophy of the program, and its aims and objectives (14).

The educational program which emerged was similar in many ways to the CRED program of New York City (3, 4), but allowed for conditions peculiar to the institution:

C. A.	Core	Emphasis
5 - 8 yr.	The Individual	Social Skills
9 - 12 yr.	The Ward	Academic Skills
13 - 14 yr.	The Institution	Academic Skills
15 - 16 yr.	The Community	Occupational Skills
17 - 20 yr.	The Worker as a Citizen and Social Being	Occupational Skills Social Skills
3	5 - 8 yr. 9 - 12 yr. 3 - 14 yr. 5 - 16 yr.	5 - 8 yr. The Individual 9 - 12 yr. The Ward 3 - 14 yr. The Institution 5 - 16 yr. The Community 17 - 20 yr. The Worker as a Citizen and Social

Since the objectives of the educational program of Newark State

School may be generalized as social and occupational adjustment, this program has especially provided for the development of skills of adjustment, through the use of bi-monthly themes, relating directly to areas of adjustment, i.e. grooming, leisure time, transportation, communication, health, safety, etc.

Several curricula were studied (1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12), but none seemed to meet the conditions of Newark State School, so a committee of teachers were appointed in 1963 to develop a social adjustment curriculum, which was adopted in 1964 for use with the educable children. Plans were projected for curricula in occupational adjustment and manual occupational skills, to be followed later by curricula in academic skills, and work was begun on the occupational adjustment curriculum in the spring of 1964.

In using these curricula, the teachers are asked to recognize that it may be necessary to teach any or all skills at the upper levels, despite their assignment to one or more of the lower levels.

PRINCIPLES OF EDUCATION

- I. The capacities, limitations, and experiences of the mentally retarded differ from those of normal children. At the same time, individual differences in the cause and complexity of the retardation is especially significant; therefore, education for retardates must be adapted to the nature and needs of the children, individually and collectively.
- tion and motivation than normal children, so educational methods should reflect this greater need. There should be no attempt to force the individual beyond his ability and readiness.
- III. Mentally retarded children are deficient in the ability to transfer learning. For them there is limited projection in time or location, and limited postponed values. It is necessary, therefore, to teach directly and concretely the skills they need for adjustment to institution and community life.

PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION

Among the moderately and mildly retarded residents of Newark State School, most are potentially capable of making some contribution to their environment. The degree and nature of the contribution reflects a complex interaction of personal and environmental factors: some will achieve independence in the community; others will need the continued security of a closely supervised environment. Regardless of the pattern of each one's life, it is the responsibility of the school to promote full utilization of individual ability and to foster the development of a realistic self-concept.

Given adequate preparation and guidance, mentally retarded persons have demonstrated a capacity for acquiring occupational skills; however, an appropriate educational pregram should place major emphasis on the basic skills of social, occupational and economic adjustment, with additional opportunities for each individual to broaden and extend these skills, in order that he may be able to adapt himself to any employment which may be appropriate to his aptitudes and abilities.
