THE MADISON, WISCONSIN, CURRICULUM GUIDE FOR THE TEACHING OF READING AND LITERATURE IN KINDERGARTEN THROUGH GRADE SIX IS DIVIDED INTO THREE PARTS. PART 1 CONTAINS THE MADISON POINT OF VIEW CONCERNING READING AND LITERATURE IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS, AND PROVIDES FLOW CHARTS TO HELP THE TEACHER PERCEIVE THE TOTAL READING AND LITERATURE PROGRAM. GRADE-LEVEL EXPECTANCIES IN THE TEACHING OF READING ARE LISTED FOR THE AREAS OF WORD RECOGNITION, COMPREHENSION, ORAL READING, AND STUDY SKILLS. READING EXPECTANCIES FOR INTERPRETIVE SKILLS ARE ADDED FOR GRADES FOUR THROUGH SIX. FOR THE TEACHING OF LITERATURE, GRADE-LEVEL EXPECTANCIES ARE LISTED FOR THE AREAS OF LITERATURE AIMS, TYPES, AND ACTIVITIES. PART 2 INDICATES MORE SPECIFIC EXPECTANCIES FOR EACH GRADE LEVEL IN THE TEACHING OF READING AND LITERATURE. IN ADDITION, LISTS OF SUGGESTED MATERIALS FOR TEACHING LITERATURE--ONE EACH FOR GRADES KINDERGARTEN AND ONE, FOR TWO AND THREE, FOR FOUR AND FIVE, AND FOR SIX AND ADVANCED PUPILS--ARE PROVIDED. PART 3 INCLUDES SUGGESTED ACTIVITIES FOR DEVELOPING READING READINESS IN KINDERGARTEN, A FLOW CHART INDICATING FIVE LEVELS OF RATING THE QUALITY OF A READING INSTRUCTION PROGRAM, SUGGESTED ACTIVITIES FOR ENRICHING THE LITERATURE PROGRAM, A LIST OF THE NEWBERY AND CALDECOTT AWARD BOOKS, AND A SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY OF REFERENCES FOR THE TEACHER. THIS GUIDE IS A COMPANION TO "GUIDE TO TEACHING LANGUAGE ARTS, LISTENING--SPEAKING--WRITING." (SEE TE 000 083.) IT IS RECOMMENDED BY THE NCTE COMMITTEE TO REVIEW CURRICULUM GUIDES, AND IS NOTED IN "ANNOTATED LIST OF RECOMMENDED ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY CURRICULUM GUIDES IN ENGLISH, 1967." (SEE TE 000 140.) IT IS ALSO AVAILABLE FROM THE MADISON PUBLIC SCHOOLS, P.O. BOX 2189, MADISON, WISCONSIN 53701, FOR $3.00. (MM)

FOREWORD

The Guide to Teaching Reading and Literature, Kindergarten-Grade Six, has been prepared by the committees of Madison teachers listed below. This guide is submitted to you teachers for use and critical evaluation. I am sure you will find many refreshing ideas and an abundance of source materials to aid you in helping our children grow in their ability to read and in their appreciation of literature. A modern reading and literature program recognizes its responsibility for making reading at any level a satisfying experience, one for which the child has been adequately prepared, and within which skills and appreciation have a maximum chance for development. The primary responsibility of the elementary school is to teach children to read, since reading is a necessary tool for all learning. Children are helped through literature to develop a sensitivity to ideas and ideals and to their own heritage. Children may develop a lasting enjoyment of literature if it is taught correctly. Our success in teaching the total language arts will be determined by how well we are able to develop in children the ability to read and listen intelligently and critically, and to speak and write clearly, accurately, and effectively.

We are grateful to all members of the staff who contributed to this guide.

PREFACE

All the teachers of reading and literature in the Madison elementary schools have had opportunities to contribute to the development of this guide. Without their willingness to offer suggestions, the guide could not have been written.

Help was also derived from curriculum materials previously prepared in the Madison Public Schools, and from current trends expressed in textbooks, courses of study, and professional literature.

This guide provides a basic framework for the teaching of reading and literature. In a growing school system, where students frequently transfer from one school to another, allocations of suggested expectancies, learning experiences, and materials of instruction should help to give scope and sequence to the teaching of reading and literature. The guide recommends procedures, bibliography, and a philosophy of instruction.

From teachers' worksheets and discussions, the following generalizations can be made:

1. In the Madison point of view there are eight major divisions of the language arts: developmental reading, literature, listening, speaking, grammar and usage, writing, spelling and handwriting. The eight divisions are taught as situations arise; they are correlated with various units, or they are taught directly.
2. Reading is a highly complex mental process by which children get thoughts from printed symbols. Growth in reading is related to the physical, mental, emotional, and social development of the child. Many and varied experiences help to lay the foundation for learning to read. Thus reading and literature contribute to the wholesome all-around development of a child.
3. The reading skills must be learned in sequence. A child progresses from one reading level to the next in an orderly pattern at his own rate.
4. Children should learn to read critically in order to evaluate information, to solve problems, or to make sound judgments.
5. Pupils whose reading level is low should be given help as soon as possible, otherwise they may become discouraged by repeated failures, form poor reading habits, and develop poor attitudes toward reading and literature.
6. The teacher must enjoy literature so she can inspire the children.

This guide:

1. gives information as to reading and child development: methods, materials, grouping, the place of oral reading, the place of phonics in the reading program, experimentation in reading time allotment, and evaluation of the reading program.
2. gives the Madison point of view concerning what is good literature, the philosophy of teaching literature, an evaluation of the literature program and time allotments for all reading activities.
3. provides flow charts and expectancies by grade levels, to help the teacher determine the total reading and literature experience.
4. suggests reading lists in both poetry and prose, films and filmstrips, and extensive learning abilities and experiences.
5. provides scope and sequence to reduce overlapping and gaps in the learning experiences of children.
6. suggests various approaches to meet the problems of individual differences.

We extend our thanks to the committee, the chairmen, consultants and all teachers who assisted in the preparation of this guide.

INTRODUCTION

The Madison Point of View

Reading

WHAT IS READING?

Reading has been defined in many different ways. Perhaps the most common definition, and one with which most educators agree, is that reading is a process of securing the author's meaning from the printed or written page and reacting to it. Reading is a complex process which involves the physical, intellectual, and emotional aspects of our being. Reading is not a single skill, but is rather a group of many inter-related skills which must be applied simultaneously.

They are a part of the larger area of communication skills, and are closely related to those abilities necessary for effective listening and for oral and written expression.

Reading is more than the ability to recognize, pronounce, and state the meaning of printed words. It is even more than selecting the main ideas in paragraphs or stories. Reading in its highest state is the ability not only to comprehend the ideas presented by an author, but also to interpret them and integrate them with previous experiences. A child does not learn to read in one year nor in six. The process of learning to read effectively should continue throughout a lifetime.

READING AND CHILD DEVELOPMENT

The teaching of reading in our schools is consistent with our knowledge of the way children grow and develop. Research tells us that reading development follows the general principles of child development. We know that reading and child development are related in at least two ways: first, knowledge of the developmental patterns of children determines, to a great extent, what and how they should be taught; second, reading instruction influences child development by providing new interests, developing new abilities, and influencing attitudes and behavior. Since reading provides worthwhile mental, social, and emotional experiences for children, it contributes to their wholesome development.

TYPES OF READING

A balanced reading program at all grade levels includes guidance in three distinct types of reading:

Developmental reading is concerned with the sequential development of basic reading skills, such as word-recognition skills, oral reading skills, basic comprehension skills, and with instruction in the phonetic and structural aspects of our language. This type of reading instruction teaches children to read skillfully.

Functional or work-type reading includes activities to aid children in finding, organizing, and using relevant reading material, and in applying study skills and advanced comprehension skills in content fields. These activities teach children to use reading efficiently as a learning tool.

The goals of recreational reading are enjoyment, broadening of interests, and development of appreciation and discrimination in literature. Personal reading adds satisfaction and richness to life. A balanced program of recreational reading includes traditional and modern classics, realistic and fanciful fiction and plays, poetry, informational materials, and periodicals. The teacher plays a significant role in the encouragement of recreational reading. His enthusiastic approach can awaken in a child a love of reading which will lead to a lifetime of enjoyment.

In a balanced program class time should be provided for each of these types of reading. Although the major emphasis at the primary level is on developmental reading, the teaching of basic concepts in functional reading should begin in the first grade and continue throughout the primary grades. Conversely, the major emphasis at the intermediate level is on functional or work-type reading. However, advanced skills in developmental reading should also be taught at the intermediate level. Recreational reading is important at all grade levels.

STAGES OF READING INSTRUCTION

There are several successive stages in reading development. These stages, however, are overlapping, and there is no distinct separation between them. The reading readiness stage includes the period of preparation for reading. This continues until children reach a level of general maturity which enables them to react to formal reading instruction successfully and without excessive difficulty. Home environment plays an extremely important role in reading readiness. Parents can read to their children, teach them to listen attentively, and encourage them to express themselves in correct language even before they are enrolled in the kindergarten.

Since children come to school with varying backgrounds and degrees of readiness, the school begins its readiness program by enlarging and expanding on their previous experiences. Teachers plan to develop systematic visual and auditory perception skills, to increase the facility of oral expression, to expand the listening vocabulary, and to build a desire for reading. Because of individual differences in ability, background, and maturity, children are ready for formal reading instruction at different times. A very few may be ready to read when they enter kindergarten; others may not be ready for formal reading instruction until the latter part of the first grade or later. Most children, however, appear to be ready to begin formal reading instruction after a few weeks of readiness experiences in the first grade.

During the period of initial reading instruction, children develop a basic sight vocabulary, learn to use left-to-right progression on the page, develop basic word-recognition techniques, and use simple comprehension skills. Simple exercises are used to give practice in following a sequence of events, selecting main thoughts, choosing relevant details, and drawing inferences. The basic skills of reading are introduced in this stage which is attained by most children in the first grade.

Rapid progress in reading skills is made by most children in the second and third grades. During this period, the basic skills which were introduced earlier are reinforced. Vocabulary is expanded, word-attack skills are introduced at a more mature level, and comprehension skills are stressed throughout. Both oral and silent reading receive emphasis. The achievement of greater independence in reading is a major goal.

The period of wide reading extends through the intermediate grades. During this period, silent reading receives major emphasis and attention is given to increasing the rate of reading. Reteaching and reinforcement of basic skills is presented on an individual or small-group basis, as needed. Advanced skills of phonetic and structural analysis, comprehension, and interpretation are also taught at this level. Major emphasis is placed on the efficient use of reading in study techniques for the content area. Extensive practice in using reference books for locating information, in evaluating material read, and in organizing material for reports is offered at this level. Recreational reading is probably more extensive at this stage than at any preceding or succeeding levels.

The period of refining skills, habits, and tastes should continue throughout the secondary school, college years, and indeed throughout life. Each stage of actual reading instruction is of vital importance and should receive adequate attention in a balanced reading program.

WHY IS READING IMPORTANT?

Our society places great importance upon the ability to read. The teaching of reading has always been a major objective of education in a democratic society. Furthermore, the teaching of reading is the unique and exclusive function of the school. Although many agencies and organizations assist in the attainment of other objectives of education, no other organization attempts to teach reading. The strength and ultimate outcome of a democracy depend upon an intelligent, informed citizenry that can read, think critically, and judge intelligently what it has read.

The ability to read is basic to virtually all other learning and, as such, is the most essential tool of learning. There are unlimited opportunities for developing and strengthening reading skills by using them in social studies, science, arithmetic, health, physical education, and the arts. The teaching of reading should continue not only during scheduled instructional periods, but throughout the day in most classroom situations.

Research tells us that children and adults are profoundly influenced by what they read. Schools have a responsibility not only to provide the best materials available in text and library books, but also to teach children to read critically and analytically newspapers, magazines, and other materials which are used to propagandize. The number of new books published each year is staggering. Demands on children's time are also increasing. With so much material at hand and so little time for reading, we need to teach children to be selective in their reading by exposing them to the best in children's literature. Cheap comic books and slick magazines will seem trashy to them in comparison.

WHAT IS THE MADISON PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING READING?

METHODS

Since reading is a complex process involving the physical, intellectual, and emotional aspects of human behavior, parents and teachers need to realize that there is no one simple plan of instruction, nor one simple solution to reading difficulties. No one brand of phonics, no one type of textbook, no one kind of class organization can solve all reading problems. The best teaching of reading involves the skillful use of a variety of methods. Today the best teaching of reading includes many techniques of word-recognition, including their phonetic and structural analysis, comprehension and thinking skills, work-study skills, and advanced interpretive skills.

MATERIALS

Three basal reading series are used to teach in sequential order the basic reading skills which are needed for all types of reading both in and out of school. Although most basal readers employ a controlled vocabulary, methods of identifying new words in any situation are also taught. The reading vocabulary of children is consequently by no means limited to the vocabulary of their basal readers.

In addition, supplementary readers are used, including basal readers of other publishers, and so-called literary readers. From the earliest possible moment, emphasis is placed upon reading all kinds of materials, such as social studies, science, and health textbooks, as well as upon a wealth of library books.

For their value in reinforcing skill development workbooks are used with all groups at the primary level. They are also used with the slow-moving group at the intermediate level, since this group needs constant repetition of skills for mastery. For average and accelerated pupils, advanced skill development is taught in the regular reading period, through the use of practice sheets, and through the application of new reading skills in the content areas.

Weekly newspapers are used at each grade level for the dual purpose of keeping abreast of the news and developing the specific reading skills needed for this type of reading.

The central library in each of our schools, staffed by a librarian with experience as an elementary teacher, is an integral part of the reading program. Teachers and librarians share the responsibility for teaching locational skills and appreciation of children's literature. Each class has at least one library period per week. At the primary level, this period is used to introduce children to the best in children's literature, and to allow them time for browsing and selecting books for recreational reading. At the intermediate level, the emphasis on children's literature is continued; more time is provided for selection of books; skills of library procedures and the use of reference materials are also taught during library periods.

GROUPING FOR INSTRUCTION

Children of approximately the same stage of maturity and level of achievement should be grouped together for reading instruction. In most cases, it has been found practical to have three reading groups in a class at the primary level. A different basal reading series is used with each group. Methods are varied in accordance with the children's abilities. Grouping should be flexible, however, since individual children vary in attendance and progress.

At the intermediate level, teacher-judgment, based on the individual needs and abilities of the pupils, determines the number of groups needed for instruction. A variety of materials is available, from which the teacher can select those suitable for each group. However, throughout the elementary grades, the slow-moving group uses one basal reading series for continuity of skill development.

INSTRUCTIONAL PERIODS

Since reading is the most essential tool of learning, sufficient time must be provided for thorough, consistent teaching. The recommended weekly time allotment for reading instruction, including skill development, children's literature, and the library period is: Grade One - 400 minutes; Grades Two and Three - 325 minutes; Grades Four, Five, and Six - 300 minutes. This time is divided between that spent with the teacher for direct teaching of reading skills and oral reading, and that spent in work on reading assignments, worksheets, or workbooks. Many teachers at the primary level like to have an afternoon reading period also, when the entire class functions as one group for their mutual enjoyment of supplementary literary readers, or for the reading and discussion of news items.

At the intermediate level, the reading period is spent in teaching advanced skills of word-recognition and comprehension, the teaching of skills needed in the content areas, news reading and reporting, or in group enjoyment of literature. Some teachers at the intermediate level like to combine the reading period with a period devoted to the content areas in order to teach the use and application of certain work-study skills. Caution is needed, however, to ensure the inclusion of a balanced program of advanced word-attack and comprehension skills as well as of the enjoyment and appreciation of literature.

ADJUSTING THE READING PROGRAM TO INDIVIDUAL NEEDS

There are children in almost every classroom who are achieving below or above the normal rate. It is most important to meet the needs of those children who are achieving below their grade level, or at less than their individual expectancy. It is necessary to identify poor readers, discover the cause of their reading problems, and organize an effective instructional program for them as soon as possible.

A distinction should be made between the children in need of remedial instruction and the slow-learning pupils. Adequate provision is made for the slow-learning pupil through grouping, pacing, and specialized materials. The teacher permits him to move slowly through the materials, allowing time for a great deal of repetition of the skills for mastery.

The child in need of remedial instruction is one who is average or above-average in ability, but who is unable to read at his expected level. For a number of possible reasons, the usual reading instruction has not brought desired results. The possible causes for such reading difficulty are many and varied: physical factors; emotional factors; home conditions; instructional factors, such as frequent moving from school to school; or a too-early age or stage of maturity when reading instruction was begun. Whatever the cause, diagnosis of the reason for inability to read is necessary, as well as diagnosis of specific reading difficulties. In such cases, the help of the remedial reading consultant and the school psychologist are enlisted by the principal. Both consultants offer suggestions to the teacher for working with the child alone and in group situations.

It is equally important to meet the needs of the more able readers. These children must be inspired to continue their rapid progress. They must be identified, and an instructional program must be planned for them. Able readers still need developmental group instruction for the orderly development of skills, discussion of literature, and participation in group activities based upon the reading.

Able readers may be grouped according to their needs for advanced vocabulary or interpretive skills, or according to special interests. Sometimes they are used as leaders for special reading activities with other groups of children. Time should also be provided occasionally for working with these children individually on advanced skills. Varied and challenging materials must be available for these able pupils, and time should be provided for them to devote to independent reading and study.

ORAL READING

Oral reading of a selection has value at both the primary and intermediate levels. Through listening to children read orally, primary teachers can diagnose difficulties in sight vocabulary, phonics, other word-attack skills, and comprehension. The use of oral reading is also important in increasing fluency, improving expression, and gaining confidence in reading. Oral reading receives less emphasis, but is still important at the intermediate level, where teachers use it for diagnostic purposes with slow-learning pupils. Moreover, average and accelerated children also need to continue to develop the ability to read well orally. Practice in oral reading is achieved through such activities as reading an exciting or humorous portion of a book for class enjoyment, reading a sentence or a paragraph to prove a point, or reading a selection to inform the group on a subject of general interest.

THE PLACE OF PHONICS IN THE READING PROGRAM

The teaching of phonics is essential in any balanced reading program. Both the reading and spelling programs used in our schools place a great deal of emphasis on basic phonetic principles. A thorough phonics program is introduced at the primary level and advanced skills in phonetic and structural analysis are taught at the intermediate level. The use of such formal, time-consuming, and extreme methods of teaching phonics as were in vogue a half-century ago is, however, neither necessary nor advisable in a reading program today.

EXPERIMENTATION IN OUR SCHOOLS

Experiments with individualized reading have been tried in several schools. At the present time, there is no evidence to indicate that this method of basic reading instruction is superior to the method of using a basal reading series and grouping for instruction. The extreme difficulties of organization and planning, of being thoroughly acquainted with all of the materials being used by children, of being aware of each child's needs and limitations and providing for them, make this a method to be used only by very competent, experienced teachers of reading. We do, however, advocate wide reading and reporting of library books from the earliest possible moment in a child's reading experience. Some teachers initiate a unit of individualized reading near the end of the school year after a group has completed the basal reading series. Teachers at the intermediate level occasionally use an individualized reading approach with an accelerated group. These methods of using individualized reading are more closely related to recreational reading than they are to a program of teaching the basic skills of reading. Although the individualized reading approach has certain advantages, at the present time it does not seem to be a practicable method to be used by all teachers with all children.

Other methods of teaching reading are being suggested and tried. Experiments with new materials and new approaches to the teaching of reading are now being carried on in some of our schools. We believe in experimentation and constant re-examination of the reading program. Much careful experimentation, including longitudinal studies, needs to be made with these various approaches before an estimate of their real worth can be assessed.

EVALUATING THE READING PROGRAM

Evaluation of the reading progress of individual children is a vital part of the reading program. To be effective, evaluation should include the pupil as well as the teacher. Parents should also be kept informed regarding techniques and results of evaluative procedures. A competent teacher uses all of the recommended evaluating techniques, such as observation by the teacher, informal tests, standardized tests, pupil self-evaluation, and group evaluation. Continuous evaluation gives indication of the progress of individual students at any given time, provides information for the teacher to plan effective, individual teaching, and acquaints the school principal with the immediate and long-range needs of the instructional program.

HOW MAY THIS GUIDE BE USED?

1. Read the entire section, Madison Point of View in Reading.
2. Examine the flow chart in reading to note progression of skill - development through the grades.
3. Read the expectancies in reading for your grade level carefully and analytically. Use other books and resources, as needed, for more detail or clarification of the expectancies to be taught at your grade level.
4. Examine the expectancies of the preceding grade level to learn what has been taught previously. Since these expectancies are intended to be challenging, it is possible that only the accelerated pupils may have grasped the concepts which were taught previously. The average pupils will have been introduced to these concepts, but they will require a great deal of review and, in some cases, reteaching for mastery. Many slow-learning pupils will not have progressed far enough to have been introduced to all of the concepts at the preceding grade level. Teachers should go back as far as is necessary to find the level of expectancies which has been attained by each slow-learning pupil.

5. Examine also the expectancies of the next grade in order to see what is anticipated for the next level of instruction. Teachers should not hesitate to take accelerated pupils as far as they can go. Caution is required, however, to ensure that teaching is done thoroughly at each level of instruction.

The Madison Point of View

Literature

WHAT IS GOOD LITERATURE?

Literature is the record of man's experiences and thoughts. It includes writings in prose and poetry which express, in excellent form and style, ideas of permanent or universal interest. Poetry is characterized by rhythm, word music, pleasing and inspiring qualities, and moral tone--plus that indefinable something which makes poetry. Fiction presents an interpretation or criticism of life expressed through consistent characters in a well-developed plot. Nonfiction embraces a wide variety of subject matter which should have significance for the persons reading it. Language is the flexible instrument of expression in all literature.

6. Study again section III of the guide, Resources for Teachers, for definition of terms, sources of games and activities, and books on the teaching of reading.

7. Re-check expectancies for your grade level at midyear and again at the end of the year to evaluate your children's progress and to note skills which are yet to be taught and areas where re-teaching is necessary.

WHY IS LITERATURE IMPORTANT?

Literature adds immeasurably to the richness of life. Through reading one lives vicariously the first-hand experiences of others. One can gain insight into the present as well as past cultures of all peoples. Good literature is frequently an emotional seismograph of a period.

Literature provides an opportunity to understand the motives of human conduct, including one's own behavior. One may learn to view himself in perspective, understand society as it is today, and predict, to a degree, some of the social problems of the future.

Literature is a great source of personal enjoyment. One revels in the beauty of expression, imaginative thinking, and great ideas. One learns to go beyond superficial understanding and literal interpretation in any form of creative reading which establishes a personal rapport with the author.

For children, literature satisfies many needs. According to May Hill Arbutnot, the right books satisfy a need for security, the need to belong, the need to love and be loved, the need to achieve, and the need to know.

Through wide but selective reading, through identification with characters, and greater understanding of people, emerges an understanding of goals, standards, and beliefs. One's own philosophy takes form.

WHAT IS THE MADISON PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING LITERATURE?

We believe that teachers should:

- enjoy and appreciate our literary heritage before they can teach and guide children in the field of literature.
- possess an extensive literary background which they should work to maintain, or should be willing to acquire through wide personal reading and literature courses.
- develop the ability to create an environment conducive to the development of literary appreciation.
- be alert to what literature can do for the personal growth of their pupils.
- understand that reactions to names, races, and places are often determined by early readings; that enthusiasms, as well as prejudices, are not only contagious, but lasting.
- be aware that they have a personal responsibility to teach children, not to think in terms of stereotypes and cliches, nor to base their opinions on limited reading and faulty interpretation.
- regard reading as an integral part of healthy development, rather than as a rarefied personal experience.
- realize that all pupils need not read the same materials; they must be offered a varied reading program to meet their different interests, abilities, and wide range of maturity.
- provide encouragement for the memorization of poetry as an individual endeavor in which children choose to participate by providing opportunities for them to recite their favorite poems.

- be aware that children who are encouraged to memorize poems which appeal to them build lasting enrichment into their personal background.
- create situations which might conceivably help in the integration of knowledge by finding likenesses in contemporary expressions in art, music and literature; by reading stories appropriate to cultures being studied in social studies; by reading biographies of scientists who made discoveries related to a unit in science.
- be aware that teachers and school librarians can reinforce one another's work in the rewarding experience of teaching literature.

HOW MAY THIS GUIDE BE USED?

1. Read the expectancies to understand the nature of literary experiences designed for your grade level.
2. Become familiar with books listed for your group of children.
3. Make a broad plan for literary experiences in terms of a quarter or a semester. Provide for a certain balance of poetry and prose in the following categories: poetry, folk and fairy tales, myths and legends, science and nature, biography and history, and fiction.
4. Check the section on activities to get ideas for the implementation of your plan.
  - Which books will you read (a chapter a day) to the class?
  - From which books may you read excerpts to stimulate individual interest in reading?
  - What class themes for individualized reading are appropriate for your group?
  - How can you make provisions for pupils to react and interact to common reading experiences?
  - What small group and individual contributions might you use for the entire group?
  - What literary experiences could you add to enrich units in content areas?
  - Which literary experiences that can be expressed through art, music, and movement can you suggest?

HOW MAY THIS GUIDE BE USED? (continued)

5. Examine the section of the guide, Resources for Teachers, for lists of books, films, filmstrips, and records which will aid in enriching the program in children's literature.

WHERE DO WE FIND TIME TO TEACH LITERATURE?

Daily periods of at least 15 minutes should be designated for literary appreciation in the primary grades.

The intermediate grades will profit from daily reading of selected materials by the teacher, and twice weekly periods of at least 30 minutes for class and individual study of literature. In addition, it is important to remember the spontaneous appreciation of a poem or story brought to mind by an immediate situation, and the fact the the reading of literature integrated with content areas serves to enrich education.

READING READINESS IN KINDERGARTEN

Teachers must be aware of the factors which underlie reading readiness, if children are to be adequately prepared for reading instruction. Some of these factors include: adequate physical development, emotional and social maturity, intellectual maturity, experience background, and desire to read.

One objective of the reading readiness program is wholesome social adjustment to the school environment. Good personal and group work habits are also necessary. Opportunities should be provided for motor development involving both large and small muscles. A vital concern is growth in language ability and listening skill.

Many experiences in kindergarten prepare children for the formal teaching of reading in the first grade. Children need to acquire clear understanding of the ideas and words they will meet when they start to read. They also need to acquire knowledge of the world around them, a prerequisite for learning to read. Throughout the kindergarten year, interest in books and reading should be encouraged. Questions about words and letters should be answered, but no formal teaching of reading should be begun at this level.

EXPECTANCIES IN THE TEACHING OF READING

READING READINESS IN BEGINNING KINDERGARTEN

General Traits

- Adjusts to general school environment.
- Shows interest in books.
- Develops understanding that printed symbols represent thoughts and ideas.
- Shows interest in printed word.
- Learns to associate with people, processes, and things.
- Gains meaning for future reading through increasing background of experiences.
- Becomes aware of "left to right" and "top to bottom" sequence.
- Acquires ability to see likenesses and differences in objects and pictures.

Speaking

- Uses voice to communicate needs and wants.
- Enjoys talking about his background experiences.
- Demonstrates wide speaking vocabulary.
- Develops ability to express thoughts clearly, effectively, and courteously.

TRANSITIONAL READING READINESS PERIOD

General Traits

- Shows increasing interest in books.
- Enjoys picture books and develops attitude of inquiry about printing below picture.
- Begins to derive information from pictures.
- Learns to handle books and turn pages properly.
- Begins to recognize likenesses and differences in his environment: shapes, colors, pictures.
- Sees likenesses and differences among letters.
- Demonstrates desire to read.

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE ONE

The main purposes of the instructional program at the first grade level are: developing beginning reading skills, forming good reading habits, promoting desirable attitudes toward reading, and developing an appreciation of reading.

Many children who enter first grade are ready and eager to learn to read. These children possess sufficient intellectual, physical, social, and emotional maturity to profit from reading instruction. For them, a prolonged readiness period is neither necessary nor desirable. Other children need further readiness experiences for a period of several weeks before beginning formal reading instruction. A few children need a prolonged period of readiness activities before they are ready to begin reading.

As children progress in reading in the first grade, more advanced word-recognition skills are developed, comprehension skills are broadened, and enjoyment of reading is increased.

EXPECTANCIES IN THE TEACHING OF READING

READINESS FOR BEGINNING READING

General Traits

- Shows a desire to read.
- Enunciates and pronounces words clearly.
- Understands and uses left to right visual progression.
- Follows directions in games and activities.
- Dramatizes familiar stories.
- Participates in group discussion.
- Discusses and criticizes plans for activities.
- Can repeat directions for making things.
- Participates in making experience charts of group activities and experiments.
- Understands and uses charts of helpers, numbers, colors.
- Evidences readiness for reading as measured by informal and standardized reading readiness tests.

Auditory Perception

- Listens for and identifies common sounds.
- Perceives location of sounds.
- Recognizes rhymes and rhyming words.
- Becomes conscious of similarities and differences in the sound of words.
- Perceives beginning consonant sounds in words and pictures.
- Recognizes words that begin with t, b, s, m, f.
- Recognizes rhyming words from pictures.

Visual Discrimination

- Recognizes likenesses and differences of objects.
- Observes picture details: form, size, action, reversals.
- Interprets picture details.
- Notices likenesses and differences in the appearance of words.
- Engages in kinesthetic - visual activities: drawing, coloring, tracing, word blocking.
- Recognizes similarities and differences in letters, words, phrases, sentences.
- Recognizes letters of the alphabet.

Word Perception

- Associates certain words with objects and pictures when they apply to personal experience: labels, signs, names.
- Builds a meaningful sight vocabulary.

Comprehension

- Recognizes quickly the meaning of certain words and groups of words.
- Asks about the meaning of words.
- Anticipates outcomes of a series of pictures or events.
- Retells a series of events in proper sequence.
- Tells in own words the main idea of a story.

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE ONE (continued)

DEVELOPMENTAL READING

Word Recognition

Phonetic Analysis (Auditory perception and visual discrimination)Consonants

- Recognizes most consonant sounds in initial position.
- Recognizes some consonant sounds in medial and final position.
- Recognizes some consonant digraphs (ch, sh, th, wh) .
- Recognizes many consonant blends in the initial position (bl, pl, fl, st, br, gr, tr, dr, fr).
- Recognizes some consonant blends in the final position (ck, nd, nt, st).

- -- single consonant sounds in initial and final position.
- -- blends and digraphs in initial position.

Vowels

- Knows the names of the vowels and their long sounds.
- Perceives the sound of short vowels in initial position.
- Perceives the sound of some vowel digraphs (ou-out, ow-cow).

Phonetic Parts

- Recognizes letter forms (alphabet).
- Perceives words with similar phonetic parts (rhyming endings).
- Recognizes some phonograms (in, ike, old, ook, oy, all).
- Understands that if a word ends in two similar consonants, one of these is silent (call).

Structural Analysis

- Recognizes plural forms ending in s and es.
- Recognizes possessive forms (singular) .
- Recognizes verbs ending in s, d, ed, ing.
- Recognizes compound words made up of two known root words.
- Recognizes contractions with one letter omitted.
- Recognizes capitalized and non-capitalized forms of words.

Word Analysis

- Knows common words by sight (50 - 100) .
- Discriminates between words easily confused: (saw, was).
- Uses configuration clues as needed length of word, height of word, words that look almost alike.
- Uses picture and context clues to check phonetic and structural analysis.
- Understands that some words express opposite meanings (fat, thin) .
- Understands that some words have similar meanings (too; also).
- Understands that some words sound alike but are spelled differently and have different meanings (no, know; to, too, two) .
- Realizes that words may represent more than one meaning (I will go. His name is Will.) .
- Understands that some words are used instead of names (he, she, they) .
- Uses new words in meaningful context.

DEVELOPMENTAL READING (continued)

Comprehension

General Expectancies

- Identifies the main idea of a sentence, paragraph, or story.
- Recalls the sequence of events in a story.
- Predicts the outcome of a story.
- Understands that a sentence is a meaning unit.
- Uses punctuation as a guide to meaning: period, question mark, exclamation mark, quotation mark, comma.
- Reads and follows simple directions.
- Reads to find answers to specific questions.
- Uses pictures and context as clues to meaning.
- Begins to read in thought units.

Rate of Reading

- Reads basic silent reading materials with satisfactory comprehension at approximately 55 words per minute.

Oral Reading

- Reads loudly enough to be heard.
- Learns to relax while reading.
- Remembers that each syllable of the word is important.
- Avoids a weak mumbling type of reading.
- Overcomes common difficulties: reversals, substitutions, omissions, additions.
- Evidences rhythmical progression of eye movement from left to right.
- Shares reading in an audience situation.
- Reads fluently and smoothly.
- Gives dramatic interpretation of conversation in reading.
- Uses care in enunciation and pronunciation of words.
- Takes character parts in a story.

FUNCTIONAL READING

Locating Information

Books

- Begins to use the table of contents of books.
- Locates a story from a page given in the table of contents.
- Locates information in a sentence, paragraph, page, or story.

Pictures

- Finds the answers to questions in pictures.
- Uses pictures as an aid to understanding of context.

Dictionary

- Learns that words are arranged alphabetically.
- Realizes that words sometimes represent more than one meaning.
- Organizes words alphabetically according to beginning letter.
- Begins to use picture dictionary.

Library

- Becomes aware of the library as a source of recreational reading.
- Becomes aware of the library as a source of information.
- Begins to take out books to "find out about things".
- Begins to take out books to read for enjoyment.

Maps, Charts, Graphs

- Finds familiar landmarks on neighborhood maps.
- Begins to read and interpret health and temperature charts.

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE THREE

At the third grade level, many children are ready for the transition stage in which a beginning is made of the independent study skills needed for the intermediate grades. Children must be able to handle both factual and fictional material independently. The silent reading rate must increase and new methods of attack of unfamiliar words should be introduced. All children do not reach this stage simultaneously. Some will be ready for the more advanced skills, while others will still need simpler materials and constant repetition of basic skills for mastery.

Teacher guidance and a well-planned reading program are still very necessary. Continuous growth in essential reading skills is of vital importance. Children should also be encouraged to read more challenging materials.

EXPECTANCIES IN THE TEACHING OF READING

DEVELOPMENTAL READING

Word Recognition

Phonetic Analysis

Consonants

- Recognizes the variant sounds of single consonants (c, k, s, z, g, x).
- Uses skills for determining hard and soft consonants introduced earlier.
- Recognizes consonant blends (two- and three-letter).
- Recognizes common consonant digraphs in initial, medial, and final position.
- Understands the principles governing variant sounds of consonants (c and g before e, i, y; voiced s and z, ed as t).
- Understands that the digraphs gh- and ph have the sound of f.
- Understands that certain blends and digraphs are not separated in syllables (bl, st, gr; ch, th, sh).
- Uses skills governing silent consonants introduced earlier.
- Notices additional words which have silent consonants.

Vowels

- Recognizes the variant sounds of single vowels (a, e, i, o, u).
- Understands that digraphs and double vowels stand for more than one sound.
- Understands that different vowel letters give the same vowel sound (look, put; move, feed; laid, say; her, eem).
- Understands that silent vowels are often visual clues to vowel sounds.
- Uses context as a key to pronunciation of new words containing diphthongs (oi, oy; ow, ou).
- Recognizes many phonograms (eem, ought, tien, atch, erm, east, ound, oil).
- Begins to recognize the unstressed vowel or schwa sound (e, i, o).
- When the consonant l follows a vowel, the vowel sound is scarcely heard (kamel, pencil, trial).
- When words end with the consonant l followed by e, the e is not sounded (apple, puzzle).
- Recognizes common digraphs and double vowels. (oo, oo, oa, ui, ou, aw, ea and ow followed by r).
- Understands and uses the principles governing vowel differences introduced earlier (grade 2).

DEVELOPMENTAL READING (continued)Phonetic Analysis (continued)

- Blends consonant and vowel sounds smoothly.
- Recognizes familiar phonetic parts.
- Uses phonograms as helps to pronunciation and as aids in unlocking new words.
- Recognizes syllabic parts of words.
- Understands that a syllable is a word or part of a word which contains one vowel sound.
- Understands that syllabic division is an aid in determining vowel sound in words of more than one syllable.
- Recognizes one-syllable words with silent e.
- Sees vowel digraph as one syllable.
- Recognizes phonograms in syllables.
- Recognizes final syllables with le.
- Observes the effect of accent on syllables.
- Uses syllabication as an aid to pronunciation.

Structural Analysis

- Uses the principles of structural analysis introduced earlier.
- Recognizes contractions with more than one letter omitted.
- Identifies root words in inflected or derived forms.
- Recognizes words formed by adding prefixes (dis, im, in, un, re).
- Recognizes words formed by adding suffixes (ful, ily, ish).
- Recognizes words formed by changing f to v and adding ending or suffix.
- Finds and makes unusual compound words.
- Begins to understand and use the principles of syllabication:
  - If the first vowel in a word is followed by two consonants, the syllable usually ends with the first of the two consonants.
  - If the first vowel in a word is followed by a single consonant, the consonant usually begins the second syllable.
  - If a word ends in le preceded by a consonant, the consonant usually begins the last syllable.

Structural Analysis (continued)

- Understands that syllables do not break between consonant blends or special two-letter consonant symbols (ch, sh, th).
- Knows how to divide compound and hyphenated words into syllables.
- Understands that prefixes and suffixes are syllabic units.
- Observes use of accent mark on syllables as an aid to pronunciation.
  - Hears the accented syllable in a word.
  - Realizes that accent affects vowel sound.
  - Understands that accent is placed where it fits correctly in meaning.
- Understands that o is a syllable when found at the beginning of two-syllable words (about, above).
- Begins to understand the principles for determining vowel sounds in syllables.
  - A single vowel usually has the short sound unless it comes at the end of a syllable.
  - If there are two vowels together in an accented syllable, the first usually has the long sound and the second is silent.
  - If there are two vowels in an accented syllable, one of which is silent e, usually the first vowel has the long sound and the final e is silent.
  - If the vowel in a syllable is followed by r, the sound of the vowel is usually controlled by the r sound.

Word Analysis

- Discriminates between words of similar form (wonder, wander)
- Uses phonetic analysis and context clues introduced earlier to unlock new words.
- Uses structural analysis and context clues introduced earlier to unlock new words.
- Combines word attack and picture clues, as needed.
- Observes multiple meanings of words (bear, bear).

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE THREE (continued)

Word Analysis (continued)

- Recognizes common homonyms (bear, bare).
- Distinguishes synonyms and antonyms.
- Distinguishes between words of similar meaning (looked, stored).
- Selects a meaning appropriate to the context.

Comprehension

General Expectancies

- Interprets the main idea of sentences, paragraphs, stories.
- Recognizes sequence of events in a story.
- Reads for details with increasing speed.
- Anticipates outcomes of stories.
- Comprehends phrase and sentence meaning.
- Uses punctuation as a guide to meaning.
- Gains skill in making generalizations based on reading, observation, and experience.
- Distinguishes between fact and fancy, relevant and irrelevant material.
- Reads and follows more complex directions.
- Recalls facts and events, both general and specific.
- Reads longer selections with speed, accuracy and comprehension.
- Increases comprehension through an enlarged reading, listening, and speaking vocabulary.
- Attacks and understands new words by using previously learned words and study skills.

Rate of Reading

- Reads basic silent reading materials with satisfactory comprehension at approximately 120 words per minute.
- Adjusts speed of reading to the purpose.

Oral Reading

- Stands or sits correctly, yet comfortably.
- Re-reads selections orally with increasing fluency.
- Reads in idea units, not word units.
- Uses punctuation marks as a guide to expression.
- Gets the meaning as he reads and reflects interpretation in his reading.
- Reads ahead in order to give continuous flow.
- Uses his voice to transmit emotion.
- Uses facial expression to help his interpretation.
- Enunciates clearly and develops pleasing voice quality.
- Indicates characterization by voice.
- Prepares for oral reading by preliminary silent reading.
- Listens to others read and notices expression.

FUNCTIONAL READING

Locating Information

Books

- Uses the table of contents with greater facility.
- Skims table of contents to see what a book contains.
- Recognizes and uses the title page.
- Begins to use the index and glossary.
- Understands the purpose of divisions of books.
- Distinguishes between recreational and work-type material.
- Refers to paragraph on a page when citing a location.

Pictures

- Finds details in pictures.
- Finds answers to questions in pictures.
- Reads captions accompanying pictures.

FUNCTIONAL READING (continued)Locating Information ( continued )Dictionary ( Readiness )

- Alphabetizes words in a list according to first, second, and third letters.
- Divides words into syllables as an aid to pronunciation.
- Uses accent mark as an aid to pronunciation.
- Uses picture dictionaries as needed.
- Recognizes diacritical marks for long and short vowel sounds.
- Begins to use primary dictionary.

Library

- Enjoys the library as a place for recreational reading.
- Understands that the library is a source of information.
- Understands that books are grouped by classification numbers and in alphabetical arrangement.
- Begins to use card catalog.
- Learns the significance of call numbers on books.
- Begins to find information from reference books in the library.
- Selects books on a certain topic for classroom use.

Maps, Charts, and Graphs

- Begins to read and interpret simple maps. (pictorial and geographic)
- Learns to "read" directions ( N, S, E, W ) on maps.

Evaluating Information

- Keeps in mind the purpose for his reading.
- Uses his own experience as a means of checking the validity of printed statements.
- Checks with other statements in the same book.

Evaluating Information ( continued )

- Begins to read independently for reports, information, and problem-solving.
- Re-reads to locate specific information, to verify an opinion, to prove a point.

Organizing InformationOutlining

- Finds the main thought of a paragraph.
- Organizes ideas according to time sequence.
- Organizes ideas according to obvious cause-effect relationships.
- Places subheadings under proper main headings.

Summarizing

- Summarizes in his own words ideas gained from reading.
- Begins to classify words and events.
- Summarizes ideas and organizes them for future use.

Interpretive Skills

- Senses humor in situations.
- Interprets fanciful stories with imaginary characters.
- Interprets stories set in backgrounds different from his own.
- Recognizes emotional reactions, motives, and inner drives of story characters.
- Identifies and evaluates character traits.
- Interprets ideas implied, but not clearly stated.
- Makes judgments and draws conclusions.
- Shows growth in making inferences.
- Continues to form sensory images: sight, sound, touch, smell, taste.

FUNCTIONAL READING (continued)

Interpretive Skills ( continued )

- Begins to interpret idioms and unusual language.
- Begins to recognize story or plot structure.
- Identifies and reacts to the mood of a passage, story, or poem.
- Perceives relationships of time, place, sequence, part-whole, cause-effect, class.
- Compares and contrasts ideas, events, details.
- Improves in critical reading.
  - Recognizes false statements.
  - Selects pertinent ideas.
  - Discards irrelevant statements.
  - Recognizes and appreciates humorous ideas and events.
- Begins to read creatively.
  - Interprets enriching imagery.
  - Imagines details not given.
  - Uses judgment to form an opinion.
- Assimilates ideas read.
  - Uses ideas gained from reading to solve problems in other areas.
  - Integrates ideas read with previous experience.

EXPECTANCIES IN THE TEACHING OF LITERATURE

AIMS OF LITERATURE

Appreciation and Taste in Literature

Impression

- Continues to evidence a keen delight in hearing books and poetry read.
- Begins to broaden interest range in reading.
- Becomes aware of beauty and rhythm in the sound of words.
- Develops increasing appreciation for illustrations.

- Uses reading to a greater extent as a leisure-time activity.
- Takes greater interest in authors and illustrators of children's literature.
- Distinguishes humor, pathos, suspense.
- Develops in creasing skill in visual imagery.
- Increases store of sensory imagery.
- Begins to read stories with more characters and more complex plots.
- Enjoys hearing stories beyond his reading ability.
- Begins to develop attitudes which lead to permanent interest in reading.
- Begins to develop understanding of the differences and similarities in prose and poetry.
- Begins to notice description and characterization in stories and poems.
- Begins to grasp the author's point of view.
- Begins to notice settings of stories and books.
- Begins to distinguish quality in writing.

Expression

- Participates in choral speaking of poetry.
- Memorizes short poems of his choice.

Expression (continued)

- Enjoys telling stories to the group.
- Continues to dramatize stories and narrative poems.
- Reads to the group selections of his choice.
- Shares books through discussion with the group.
- Composes original stories and poems.
- Makes book reports by giving funny or exciting excerpts from favorite books.

Appreciation of Our Cultural Heritage

- Acquires through literature a broader understanding of his own world and the world of others.
- Becomes acquainted with the literary heritage of his country: adventures, biographies, legends.
- Broadens his interest in American life beyond his immediate environment.
- Enjoys American folklore and "tall tales".
- Begins to recognize cultural patterns in literature: Pilgrims, Southwest Indians, etc.

Enrichment of Experience and Extension of Information

- Discovers in literature a source of both enjoyment and information.
- Shows continuing interest in the library and the variety of books available there.
- Selects books independently.
- Increases understanding of time and sequence through literature.
- Selects and reads informational books.
- Begins to evidence mental growth as a result of experiences in literature.

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE FOUR

The reading program at the intermediate level builds upon the reading habits and skills developed in the primary grades. Children are introduced to reading materials which include more advanced vocabulary and sentence structure. This is the period of widening interests, when reading is both a basic tool for learning and a source of enjoyment and enrichment.

The task of the teacher at the intermediate level is to help children develop more mature reading habits and abilities. The teacher varies the techniques of teaching reading according to the needs of individuals within the class. Some pupils need continued instruction in primary reading skills. Others are ready for more advanced word-analysis and interpretive skills. Time and encouragement should be provided for all children to engage in recreational reading.

DEVELOPMENTAL READING

Word Recognition

Phonetic Analysis

Consonants

- Continues to improve in recognition and use of variant sounds of consonants (c, g, gh, s).
- Continues to use skills for determining hard and soft consonants introduced earlier.
- Recognizes silent consonants in reading (b-lamb, gh-right, b-doubt, w-wrong, k-knee).
- Recognizes all of the common consonant blends introduced earlier, including qu (kw).
- Recognizes the common consonant digraphs, including the variant sounds of ch, ph, th.
- Understands and uses the principles of syllabication of blends and digraphs introduced earlier.

Vowels

- Knows and uses the long and short sounds of the vowels.
- Understands and uses vowel sounds controlled by r, l, w (her, tall, saw).

Vowels ( continued )

- Understands and uses the variant sounds of the vowels, including y.
- Realizes that one vowel sound may have several spellings.
- Understands the diacritical marking of vowels.
- Understands that vowels are sometimes silent in syllables.
- Recognizes the common vowel digraphs, such as ea, oo.
- Knows the sound of the common diphthongs (oi, oy; ou, ow).
- Understands and uses the principles governing vowel differences introduced earlier (grade 2).
- Understands that accent affects vowel sounds.

Phonetic Parts

- Uses phonetic elements as guides to pronunciation.
- Recognizes immediately common phonograms introduced earlier (grade 2).

DEVELOPMENTAL READING (continued)Structural Analysis

- Continues to use the principles of structural analysis introduced earlier.
- Recognizes and understands the meaning of most contractions (can't, I'll, won't).
- Recognizes possessive forms of words (Jim's, boy's).
- Recognizes and uses irregular verb forms.
- Recognizes and figures out the meaning of compound words (airplane, merry-go-round, schoolhouse).
- Recognizes and figures out the meaning of hyphenated words (forty-four, nimble-footed).
- Continues to use principles of plural endings introduced earlier.

Root Words

- Identifies root words in longer words.
- Understands that the final e of a root word is dropped before the endings ed and ing.
- Understands that a single final consonant (after a single vowel letter) is doubled before an ending in one-syllable words.
- Understands that the final y is changed to i before an ending beginning with e.
- Understands that many words that end in f form their plural by changing f to v and adding es (leaf, leaves).

Prefixes and Suffixes

- Recognizes and knows the meanings of such prefixes as a, be, ex, re, un, dis, im, in.
- Recognizes and knows the meaning of such suffixes as able, er, em, ful, ish, less, ly, ment, ness, th (numbers), ward, y.
- Realizes that words sometimes contain double suffixes (cheerfully, forgetfulness).

Syllabication

- Understands and uses the principles of syllabication introduced earlier.
  - If the first vowel in a word is followed by two consonants, the syllable usually ends with the first of the two consonants.
  - If the first vowel in a word is followed by a single consonant, the consonant usually begins the second syllable.
  - If a word ends in le preceded by a consonant, the consonant usually begins the last syllable.
- Understands that syllables do not break between consonant blends or special two-letter consonant symbols (ch, sh, th).
- Knows how to divide compound and hyphenated words into syllables.
- Understands the relationship between vowel sounds and the number of syllables.
  - Realizes that syllabication is an aid to pronunciation.
  - Observes use of accent mark as an aid to pronunciation.
  - Applies simple rules of syllabication as an aid in unlocking new words.
    - Knows how to divide words with prefixes and suffixes into syllables.
    - Understands the principle for dividing words containing vowel digraphs.
    - Understands the principles for determining vowel sounds introduced earlier.
      - A single vowel usually has the short sound unless it comes at the end of a syllable.
      - If there are two vowels together in an accented syllable, the first usually has the long sound and the second is silent.
      - If there are two vowels in an accented syllable, one of which is silent e, usually the first vowel has the long sound and the final e is silent.
      - If the vowel in a syllable is followed by r, the sound of the vowel is usually controlled by the r sound.

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE FOUR (continued)

Word Analysis

- Uses phonetic analysis and context clues introduced earlier to unlock new words.
- Uses structural analysis and context clues introduced earlier to unlock new words.
- Uses pictures as clues to pronunciation and meaning.
- Uses punctuation as an aid to meaning.
- Understands that synonyms are words which have similar meanings.
- Understands that antonyms are words which have opposite meanings.
- Understands that homonyms are words which sound the same but have different meanings.
- Chooses other words as substitutes for synonyms.
- Uses colorful words and expressions.

Comprehension

General Expectancies

- Interprets the main idea of stories.
- Anticipates outcomes.
- Comprehends phrase and sentence meaning.
- Recognizes connotations and denotations of words.
- Expands skill in making generalizations based on reading, observation, and personal experience.
- Compares and contrasts ideas, events, details.
- Continues to enlarge his vocabulary.
- Skims material to find certain information.
- Develops further the ability to recall story events in sequential order.
- Distinguishes between fact and fancy.

Rate of Reading

- Reads basic silent reading materials with satisfactory comprehension at approximately 170 words per minute.

Rate of Reading (continued)

- Adjusts his silent reading rate according to the purpose for which he is reading.

Oral Reading

- Has a purpose for reading aloud (to inform, entertain, prove a point, demonstrate proficiency)
- Prepares material ahead of time.
- Reads at a suitable pace. (faster for material denoting excitement, slower to denote calmness)
- Uses punctuation marks to guide reading.
- Uses special type, such as italics, as a guide to expression.
- Reads conversation, building characterization.
- Reads directions and explanations effectively.

FUNCTIONAL READING

Locating Information

Books

- Understands the purpose of the parts of a book: title page, copy-right date, index, glossary, list of maps and illustrations.
- Uses with facility the tables of contents of books.
- Gains skill in using the index.

Pictures

- Studies pictures as orientation for stories or units.
- Uses pictures to answer questions or to prove a point.
- Studies pictures for details not given in context.
- Uses pictures as aids in carrying out directions. (science experiment)

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE FIVE

At this level, emphasis is placed on the efficient use of reading in study techniques for the content areas. Silent reading receives the major emphasis, and attention is given to increasing the rate of reading. Advanced skills of phonetic and structural analysis, comprehension, and interpretation are also taught.

The teacher plans activities which involve extensive practice in using reference books for locating information and organizing material for projects and reports. Re-teaching and reinforcement of basic skills are continued on an individual or small-group basis, as needed. Activities in literature and recreational reading continue to receive emphasis in a balanced reading program.

READING DEVELOPMENT IN GRADE SIX

The demands for effective reading techniques at the sixth grade level are numerous. Children need increased power to identify and understand more difficult words. The need for specialized skills to be used in the content areas becomes more acute. New study skills, such as the effective use of materials from a variety of sources, skimming, and interpreting information should be acquired here. Effective oral reading is likewise needed in a number of audience situations.

The task of the teacher is to plan a program of systematic reading instruction which enables all children to progress in reading achievement. Some pupils need continued instruction in basic word-recognition and comprehension skills, while a few are ready for much more advanced reading skills. For all pupils, there should be continued provision for literary activities and encouragement of wide recreational reading.

SUGGESTED ACTIVITIES FOR DEVELOPING READING READINESS IN KINDERGARTEN

ACTIVITIES TO DEVELOP GENERAL READINESS

- Provide many opportunities for listening to stories and poems.
- Have children dramatize favorite stories.
- Provide opportunities for children to retell stories after they have been repeated often enough for the class to know them well.
- Tell a "Continued Story". Teacher begins and introduces one or two characters. Each child, in turn, adds a sentence or two to keep the story moving.
- Provide ample opportunity for sharing experiences. Encourage children to ask questions about the contributions of the other children.
- Use pictures for interpretation. Say, "Tell what is happening in the picture". Suggest that children compare their own experiences with those of children in the pictures.
- Describe objects in "Feeling Box". Use rocks, shells, pieces of fur, yardgoods, marbles,
  - a. Children sit in circle, draw object, describe how it feels, and identify it.
  - b. Children sit in circle, close eyes while one child withdraws an object and describes it. Members of group then guess what it is, and child who guesses correctly takes place of first child.
- Use "Identifying Color Game".
  - a. Place different colored objects in various colored boxes. Ask a child to choose one of a certain color from a particular colored box.
  - b. Child withdraws object from color box while children in circle hide eyes. Child describes object and places it behind his back before other children open their eyes. First child calls on a member of the group to guess color of object described. Use the following possible objects: small red car; green glass marble; blue toy cup; yellow crayon; orange top; purple block; black toy telephone; white doll's shoe. Objects are discussed before placing in box.
- Have children make scrapbooks to help improve eye-hand coordination. Provide magazines for cutting. Let children organize clippings in categories and mount them.
- Encourage natural opportunities for children to give directions to each other and follow directions in functional situations. Use the opportunities offered by natural dramatic play. The teacher must, however, limit directions to those that are really important.

- Encourage children to solve own problems which occur in blocking and dramatic play.

ACTIVITIES TO DEVELOP AUDITORY DISCRIMINATION

- "What Did I Do?": Make sound while children hide eyes. Children then guess action.
  - Examples: tapping wood or metal, tearing paper, dropping eraser, clapping hands, etc.
- "What Is Making This Sound?": Name object rather than action.
  - Use wood block, pitch pipe, piano, tambourine, triangle, bell, rhythm sticks, etc.
- Rhyming Word Game: Say; "I am thinking of something in the room that rhymes with bag." Children guess answer and one who answers correctly comes to front and presents similar riddle.
- Beginning Sounds Game: Say, "I am thinking of something in the room that begins like dog." Children give answer and one who answers correctly gives the next riddle.
- Counting Game: Give several children "secret" numbers under ten. One at a time children come forward and tap numbers. Other children tell what number each had.
- Game To Vary Routines: On occasion, use game situations to indicate when individual should take turn for specific activity. Have children think of words in various categories: opposites; rhyming words; names of birds, farm, and zoo animals; fathers' work; parents' first names; telephone numbers; addresses.

FIVE LEVELS OF RATING
THE QUALITY OF READING
INSTRUCTION PROGRAM

FIVE LEVELS OF RATING THE QUALITY OF

The act of judging the quality of instruction provided for pupils is a matter of relating the characteristic features of the program and the practices used to implement the program. This chart shows five levels of quality in a reading instruction program; Level V refers to the highest. One can determine which level best characterizes the reading instruction program of a school or a grade within the school through the aid of this chart.

LEVEL I

READING PROGRAM

A. The reading program is based on basic textbooks. Each class reads through the textbook for the grade level. There are few other reading opportunities.

B. No effort is made to be certain that all reading skills are taught. Word recognition is emphasized in the primary grades.

C. The teaching of phonics receives very little emphasis.

D. Little or no library reading is done by the children.

E. Literature read in the classroom is limited to selections found in textbooks.

LEVEL II

The reading program is based almost entirely on basic textbooks. Each class reads through the basic reader for the grade level and one or two other readers on the same grade level.

Some effort is made to teach important reading skills. However, no attention is given to developing skills as children need them.

Isolated drill in phonics receives much attention. The entire class participates.

Children are encouraged to do library reading. However, only a limited number of books are read.

The teacher reads to the children occasionally.

LEVEL III

The reading program is based upon one or two sets of basal readers. The teacher makes good use of the manuals accompanying the texts.

Greater attention is given to the teaching of various reading skills. The teacher attempts to teach skills to children when needed.

Phonics is taught according to suggestions in the teacher's manuals.

Children do a considerable amount of library reading.

The teacher reads good literature to the class frequently and children read some on their own.

LEVEL IV

The reading program is based mainly upon the developmental program presented in several basal reading series. Each reading group uses a different basal reader. Enrichment readers, weekly newspapers, and other books are used.

The reading program consists of the systematic and sequential development of reading skills in both oral and silent reading.

The systematic developmental program of phonetic skills is taught at all grade levels.

Children read widely in many areas. An abundant supply of library books is available.

The teacher reads good literature to children. Pupils participate in the planning and presentation of activities in literature to the class.

LEVEL

Same as Level IV. A much use is made of magazines, newspaper materials. The library is a regular part of the reading program.

Same as Level IV. A reading skills is made in areas. There is much attention of reading instruction by the teacher and teacher's ability for teaching reading library skills.

Same as Level IV. A program in phonics is needed by individual pupils.

Same as Level IV. The and teacher work together in encouraging the expansion of children's reading interests.

A balanced program of literature is planned for children and the teacher with each activity provided for activities.

INSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Quality of instruction provided for pupils is a matter of relating the characteristic features of the program and the practices used to implement the program. This chart indicates reading instruction program; Level V refers to the highest. One can determine which level best characterizes the reading instruction program of a school or a grade or a room in the aid of this chart.

LEVEL II

No attempt is made to determine readiness of individuals or groups for various reading skills. An attempt is made to determine readiness of the first grade classes for formal reading instruction.

Children given the same assignment. Occasionally very slow pupils are given less work.

Techniques are sometimes varied to allow children to take character parts in reading stories. Teacher asks single factual questions to test comprehension.

There is little correlation between reading and other subject areas. Work-study skills receive little emphasis.

Few books other than textbooks are available from a small collection in a room library.

Some workbooks are used. They might not be part of the basal reading program.

LEVEL III

Reading readiness tests are used to determine the readiness of individual first grade pupils for formal reading. Little attention is given to determining readiness of pupils for various phases of the reading program.

Children are placed in two or three groups according to general reading abilities. Grouping not flexible.

Techniques of teaching oral and silent reading are varied somewhat using the suggestions in teacher's manuals. The teacher asks "why" and "how" questions to test pupils' comprehension.

Reading is sometimes correlated with the other language arts. Some work-study skills are taught.

Many books other than textbooks are available through room and public libraries.

Workbooks are used for the purpose of strengthening reading skills for the entire class.

LEVEL IV

A definite attempt is made to determine readiness of each child for the various phases of the reading program. Observation by the teacher, teacher-made and standardized tests used.

Children are placed in groups according to their reading abilities. This grouping is flexible.

Varied and interesting teaching techniques are used to teach basic skills of phonetic and structural analysis, comprehension, and the work-study skills.

There is some correlation of reading with other subject areas. Emphasis is given to teaching work-study skills needed for the content areas.

Many books are available in many areas of interest and at many levels of reading difficulty.

Workbooks are used for the purpose of strengthening reading skills where needed by class or by individual pupils. Weekly newspapers are also used.

LEVEL V

Special effort is made to determine readiness of each pupil for the various parts of the reading program. Various techniques are used.

Children are placed in groups according to common reading difficulties or general reading abilities. Grouping is highly flexible.

Varied and interesting techniques are used to teach the basic and advanced skills in reading. Deeper interpretive skills are taught.

There is correlation and integration of reading with other subject areas in large units of teaching.

Many books are available in the central library in many areas of interest and at many levels of reading ability. Magazines and newspapers are also available.

Same as Level IV.

RESOURCES FOR TEACHERS-- LITERATURE

SUGGESTED ACTIVITIES FOR ENRICHING THE PROGRAM IN LITERATURE

DEVELOPING TASTE AND PERMANENT INTERESTS IN LITERATURE

PRIMARY

- Have a reading corner to suggest a "reading for pleasure" atmosphere.
- Change books for each of the units studied.
- Allow children to browse in the library.
- Encourage children to read the favorite books of their parents and grandparents.
- Suggest that children take books home to read silently, to read as a family group, or to have adults read to them.
- Explore individual interests and show each child how to obtain fine books that satisfy his personal needs and develop new interests for him.
- Encourage children to become familiar with the Lewis Carroll Shelf Award offerings.
- Read poems and select from them words to put in lists for color, sound, action, and feeling.
- Read poems to express feeling and rhythm.
- Encourage children to memorize poems of their own choice.

INTERMEDIATE

- Have a suggested reading list of the best of literature posted on a bulletin board. Use Literary Heritage for Madison Children.
- Arrange selected books related to current interests of individuals and of the class on a reading table.
- Discuss and evaluate books that have received awards for literary excellence, such as the Newbery and Caldecott Medal books.
- Discuss qualities of enduring literature. Consider the writings of contemporary authors which may become classics.
- See movies of and listen to radio programs on books which have become classics.
- Have children bring favorite books from home for a room collection. After the individuals in a class have read many of them, have discussions to decide which ones may be classed just as "escape" reading and which ones have characteristics of enduring literature.
- Discuss how one's taste changes! Why does a book which interested him two years ago fail to do so now?
- Discuss the importance of plot of a story.
- Discuss style of writing of various authors. How does the style of writing enhance the plot? List words which have sensory appeal. What adjectives build up imagery? What figures of speech are intriguing?
- Compare style of writing of various authors.
- Record mood poems on tape. Play tape during milk period or other period of quiet relaxation.
- Memorize poetry as an individual project. Allow time for reciting of favorite poetry.

ORAL AND SILENT READING OF LITERATURE

- Read to children to set standards for children's reading and develop appreciation of literature.
- Have pupils read to classmates to stimulate interest.
- Read by pairs or in huddles to heighten enthusiasm and to practice for audience reading.
- Encourage reluctant readers by pairing or grouping them with excellent readers.
- Read "Chinese" fashion to prepare for reading to the class.

- Develop interest and taste through a chapter a day read by the teacher. Variations in tone and volume help to create the spell of good literature.
- Read at the appropriate time poems and stories to heighten an immediate feeling, express an emotion, or to parallel an existing situation.
- Compound the enjoyment of reading a new story or book by having groups of five or six children take turns in reading aloud.
- Select readings of prose materials which are particularly rhythmical and euphonious to sharpen literary appreciation.
- Read poetry silently and "listen" to the sound of words.
- Engage in choral reading, using light and dark voices, girl and boy voices, and solo voices, as well as having the entire group read in unison.

STORY TELLING

PRIMARY

- Have a daily period for story telling.
- Tell stories with exaggeration and drama to create an interest in the art of story telling and to improve ability to hold an audience.
- Retell stories to develop a feeling for sequence.
- Utilize magazine pictures and flannel boards as props to build up to the climax of a story and to develop audience interest.
- Stimulate the imagination of small children by finger plays.
- Motivate story telling by a picture, a news item, or the beginning of a story told by the teacher.
- Ascribe personalities to flowers, vegetables, automobiles, and other inanimate objects to encourage excursions into imaginative realms.
- Tell seasonal stories appropriate to current units of work.
- Repeat refrains of a story with a story teller.
- Share favorite "trade book" stories.
- Take a realistic beginning of a story about a classmate and carry it off into the field of high adventure.

INTERMEDIATE

- Have weekly or bi-weekly story hours.
- Experiment in expressing feelings, moods, and emotions.
- Tell original stories in relays and allow children to improvise as they progress.
- Give the climax of a story in a sentence or paragraph. Have children supply the beginning and the ending.
- Develop modern versions of old stories. Substitute new methods for old in communication, transportation, and other activities. Note the change in mood.
- Prepare tape recordings of children's story telling for a "radio" program.
- Tell a story illustrated by commercial or pupil made slides.
- Present several stories or poems about one theme as a literary program.

A CLASS THEME FOR INDIVIDUALIZED READING

- Share literary experiences on a common theme:
  - Reading for fun
  - Funny stories
  - Accumulative tales
  - Animal stories
  - Stories about seasons
  - Holiday stories
  - Fairy stories
- Increase breadth and depth of literary background by sharing experiences on a common theme.
  - Fiction for recreational reading
  - Reading on individual interests and hobbies
  - Reading literature which integrates with units in social studies or science
  - Folk literature
    - What outstanding social qualities are represented?
    - What qualities of a hero are common all over the world?
    - What are some motifs of folk tales?

A CLASS THEME FOR INDIVIDUALIZED READING

PRIMARY

- Fantasy
  - Old tales of magic
  - Fanciful tales
  - Imaginative tales
  - Science fiction
- Folk tales
- Rhymes
- Poetry
- Stories of other lands
- Stories of famous people
- Stories related to units being studied

INTERMEDIATE

- Fairy tales
  - Which fairy tales are vehicles for satire?
  - How do some criticize society?
- Myths
  - What ideas of deity are expressed by myths?
  - How do they explain the origin of the universe?
  - How do they personify forces of nature?
  - How do they explain natural phenomena?
  - Compare and contrast some of the Greek, Roman, Norse, and Finnish Myths.
- Legends
  - In what ways do legends idealize history?
- Fables
  - Note characteristics of the structure of fables - short, concrete, and direct.
  - How do they develop a moral?
- Biography
  - What do we learn from lives of great people?
  - How do social conditions determine the type of person to achieve greatness?
- Travel
  - How do travel books extend one's horizons?
  - How do they motivate individuals to see the world?
  - How do they help in world understanding?
- History
  - How do stories portray love of country?
  - How have our ideals been perpetuated through historical books?

SUGGESTED ACTIVITIES FOR ENRICHING THE PROGRAM IN LITERATURE (continued)

GROUP EXPERIENCES AND CONTRIBUTIONS IN LITERATURE

PRIMARY

- Impersonate a book character
- Make up riddles about stories.
- Dramatize stories using own words.
- Dramatize original stories.
- Dramatize stories with stick or hand puppets.
- Dramatize with invisible props.
- Act out or pantomime a story as it is read.
- Pantomime part of a story; have audience guess the character or action.

INTERMEDIATE

- Observe Book Week by a carnival. Have a series of groups stage exciting episodes from favorite books. Let the audience guess the titles and the character. Give a succession of clues to help in identification.
- Dramatize an individual or a group adaptation of a favorite book.
- Dramatize with marionettes.
- Dramatize "in the round" - the audience around the actors.
- Dramatize with audience participation.
- Dramatize creative writing of the class.
- Establish reading clubs to satisfy individual interests: Scandinavian Club, Poetry Club, Humor Club.

PUPIL REACTION AND INTERACTION TO COMMON EXPERIENCES IN LITERATURE

- Express reactions to stories read.
- Compare and contrast reactions of children who have read the same literature.
- Have class discussions on stories.
- Discuss the behavior of characters in terms of ethical and moral values.
- Discuss possible alternative behavior of characters in terms of ethical and moral values.
- Read fables and myths; discover object lessons.
- Evaluate television programs. Select those which seem best for regular viewing.
- Develop oral book reports according to points which grow in complexity as pupils mature.
- Impersonate a salesman and sell favorite books to the class. The book is sold when read by a classmate.

- Write reactions to books on 3 x 5 cards. File in a box for class reference.
- Place written reactions to historical books in the appropriate place on a time line. This helps in orientation and integration of ideas and time sequence. Summaries can be placed in a miniature book cover.
- Find solutions to personal problems by reading about similar situations in books. (bibliotherapy)
- Experiment in role playing.
- Have class discussions on these books by asking students, "Have you read books which
  - helped you understand yourself better?
  - helped you understand your parents better?
  - helped you to understand why your friend acts as he does?
  - seemed so real you felt the events were happening to you?
  - made you feel you were present in a historical event?"
- Have panel discussions on books with an analysis of values expressed by author.
- Have small group discussions on favorite descriptions, humorous incidents, exciting passages, or dramatic events.
- Discuss several books by the same author.

EXPRESSING LITERARY EXPERIENCES THROUGH ART, MUSIC, AND MOVEMENT

PRIMARY

- Illustrate stories in sequence.
- Illustrate descriptive words into pictures.
- Draw the main idea in a story.
- Make shadow boxes for representations of scenes.
- Draw pictures of what book characters might see in their natural settings.
- Construct mobiles to illustrate favorite books.
- Paint murals of book scenes.
- Discuss reactions to a famous painting. Write an interpretation in colorful words.
- Let pupil imagine himself as an object in a picture and express appropriate feelings and observations.
- Read, rather than sing, lyrics to music.
- Read poetry and prose to a soft background of music.
- Become familiar with rhythmic patterns typical of certain geographic areas.
- Learn folk dances of the countries of story book friends.
- Connect music with folk tales such as Ravel's Mother Goose Suite, Prokofieff's Hansel and Gretel, and Tchaikovsky's Sleeping Beauty Waltz.

INTERMEDIATE

- Draw cartoon strips of stories.
- Make modern illustrations for old classics.
- Become acquainted with famous illustrators.
- Arrange bulletin boards to create interest in new books available.
- Create sets for dramatizations.
- Improvise period costumes.
- Develop technique of using a symbol to suggest a costume or a setting.
- Create scenes from famous stories in dioramas.
- Make pictorial literary maps.
- Read rhythmically with percussion accompaniment.
- Pantomime in rhythm to accompany recitations (poetry or prose).
- Write group poetry for rhythmic interpretation:
  - Each person writes one sentence on a theme such as work, travel, pleasure, excitement.
  - Divide into groups and arrange sentences in a collective poem.
- Arrange group recitations of this poetry.
- Select mood music as a prelude to reading poems in a period for sharing favorite poetry.
- Become familiar with musical interpretations of folk literature.
  - Tchaikovsky - Nutcracker Suite
  - Dukas - The Sorcerer's Apprentice
  - Stravinsky - Firebird
  - Wagner - Nibelungen Ring - Story of Siegfried

EVALUATING BREADTH AND DEPTH OF READING

- Keep personal records of books read.
- Use motivation charts to record class readings.
- Mount book jackets with written comments of pupils who have read the book.
- Use a reading wheel to encourage exploration of all areas of literature.
- Keep personal records of readings under basic categories of literature.
- Use class motivation charts designed as book cases. Write titles on "book backs", the colors of which represent categories, such as blue - fiction; yellow - adventure; green - biography.
- Use "A Literary Heritage for Madison Children". Indicate dates read after titles of books.
- Report on books from all categories. Forms of reports required should be appropriate to the reader's level of maturity.
- File reports in a class book under heading such as fiction, travel, biography. Names of children contributing may be on the fly leaf.
- Evaluate individual readings in terms of appropriate degree of difficulty and scope.
- Modify reading habits to increase breadth and depth.

THE CALDECOTT MEDAL BOOKS

The Caldecott medal is awarded annually to the artist of the most distinguished American picture book for children published during the preceding year. The award is named after Randolph Caldecott, the famous English illustrator of books for children. The horseman on the medal is taken from one of his illustrations for John Gilpin. The first award was donated by Frederic G. Melcher in 1938. The selection of the book and presentation of the award are made by the Children's Services Division of the American Library Association.
