ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This list has been developed by members of the staff of the District of Columbia Public Schools and has been edited and published under the supervision of the Publications Division of the National Education Association.

Because of the increasing use of paperback books in teaching and because of the great demand for materials on Negro life and history, the Committee on Civil and Human Rights of Educators is happy to cooperate with and lend support to this project.

We are especially grateful for the hours of work spent in compiling and annotating by Joseph E. Penn, supervising director, Mrs. Elaine C. Brooks, educational specialist, and Mrs. Mollie L. Berch, educational specialist—all of the Department of History of the District of Columbia Public Schools; to Dr. Sidney Dorros, director of the NEA Publications Division for supervising publication arrangements; to Mrs. Kirsten Carter of the NEA Publications Division for editorial and technical assistance; and to Ken Frye, also of the NEA Publications Division, for creating and designing the cover.

INTRODUCTION

The task of providing the knowledge and skills necessary for good human relations both in the classroom and in the community presents a great challenge and responsibility to all who have been entrusted with the education of our young.

Although the textbook is only one among many education tools, it is still an important one. Despite a growing need for all students to know and understand the role and contribution of Negro Americans to American life and culture, many textbooks continue either to ignore Negro Americans or to present them in a biased or distorted stereotype manner. Fortunately, however, there is a growing number of paperback books—relatively inexpensive and readily available to teachers, students, and parents—which can greatly help to remedy this inadequate treatment.

The following list is intended as an aid and reference guide to teachers and students who may have a limited background of information on the role and contributions of Negro Americans to the American way of life. Librarians also will find the list useful in helping students locate assigned materials, broaden their horizons, and enrich their reading experience. It is further hoped that parent-teacher organizations and other community groups will use this guide to recommend additions to family reading.

No attempt has been made to include all paperbound books written about Negro Americans. We have tried to select books which teachers can use for their own enrichment as well as can their students on the secondary school level. Books listed range from fiction that the reluctant reader on the seventh-grade level will enjoy to books dealing with basic problems in American society of interest to college-bound senior high school students. Classroom teachers of English and Music and all other teachers who desire a selected reference guide will find this list useful.

Since so many books written on the Negro American are not geared to classroom use, it is imperative that the teacher carefully select the books that are to be used in his classroom to help students gain greater insights and deeper understandings. Some of the books listed will be helpful only in a limited area of study. Other books which have literary merit were omitted from this list because we felt that they were not suitable for a teaching-learning situation in a secondary school classroom. It is hoped that the proper use of this guide will lead to stimulating class activities, imaginative and creative thinking on the part of both teachers and students, and to a greater understanding of present-day social problems.

ANNOTATED LIST

Notes on the use of this list: To the right of each entry is a code which should be interpreted as follows: HS — suitable for high school students; JHS — suitable for junior high school students; SEC — suitable for both high school and junior high school students. To obtain copies of books which are not available from your local distributor, write to the appropriate publishers whose addresses are listed on pages 25-28.
