Descriptors- BLIND, COMMUNITY AGENCIES (PUBLIC), DIRECTORIES, *EXCEPTIONAL CHILD SERVICES, FEDERAL AID, LIBRARY SERVICES, RESIDENTIAL SCHOOLS, SPECIAL PROGRAMS, SPECIAL SCHOOLS, STATE AGENCIES, *VISUALLY HANDICAPPED, VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

The directory lists agencies serving the blind in the United States. Services are presented for each state and are categorized as either statewide services (primarily under governmental auspices) or local services. Statewide services are further organized according to type: aid to the blind, educational services, library services, vocational rehabilitation, and other special services. Local agencies are arranged alphabetically by town or city. The description of each agency includes its name and address; often the executive director is named, the service provided specified, and the telephone number given. Appendixes provide supplementary lists of the following specialized agencies and organizations: (1) associations of professional workers and councils of agencies for the blind, (2) federal agencies, (3) guide dog schools, (4) medical research organizations, (5) national consultative voluntary agencies, (6) special resources for reading and educational materials, (7) other organizations interested in service to blind persons, and (8) professional preparation programs. FOREWORD

The American Foundation for the Blind is most grateful for the cooperation of the several hundred agencies and organizations whose help was solicited in gathering material for this—the 15th edition of the Directory of Agencies Serving Blind Persons in the United States. The 1967 edition of the Directory has been prepared with the objective of increasing still further its usefulness to agencies, to professional workers, and to others seeking information about services for blind persons.

It is important to note that services to blind people are not confined to organizations specializing in this field. In every urban community, nonspecialized agencies assist blind persons as part of their total function or, it is to be hoped, should recognize that a person should not be denied their facility or service because of blindness. Such basic resources are supplemented by the necessary services provided by agencies specializing in the handicap of blindness such as those listed in this book.

Inclusion in the Directory does not signify endorsement of agencies by the American Foundation for the Blind nor an evaluation of their standards. Generally, for an agency to be included in the Directory, it must be incorporated as a nonprofit organization, have a board of trustees, and have at least one paid executive. However, exclusion from the Directory does not imply disapproval: many helpful services to blind persons are carried on by volunteer groups and civic organizations, occasionally through direct service but usually through supplementing the work of one or more of the established agencies appearing in this Directory.

Persons who desire evaluative information about a particular agency are advised to consult local or national organizations concerned with standards—for example, local Health and Welfare Councils, Better Business Bureaus, or the National Information Bureau. In addition, the American Foundation for the Blind itself often is able to give objective criteria with which either donors or persons seeking service can make their own judgment.

The Foundation will be glad to take under consideration any suggestions for change in either the format or the content of future editions which are called to its attention.

M. ROBERT BARNETT

Executive Director,

American Foundation for the Blind, Inc.

FEDERAL AGENCIES

Library of Congress, Division for the Blind and Physically Handicapped, Washington, D. C. 20540. Robert S. Bray, Chief.

Serves the United States, its territories and insular possessions. From an appropriation provided annually by Congress since 1931, the Division conducts a national program to bring free reading materials to the nation's blind and physically handicapped residents. These materials consist of books in braille, "talking books" recorded on 33-1/3 and 16-2/3 rpm microgroove discs, a collection of books on tape, and talking book machines. To be eligible for the program, a person's blindness or physical limitation must be certified by a competent authority. All reading matter is provided free of charge, including postage.

Books available in the Division's selections are general in nature, and include classics, current fiction and non-fiction—the kind of reading offered the average sighted person who patronizes a free public library. The Division also provides a reference information service on all aspects of blindness and other physical handicaps which affect reading.

The Division selects, orders and directs the distribution of these recorded and embossed books to 34 regional libraries for blind and physically handicapped people. These regional outlets function as circulating centers, using the mails to serve blind readers directly. Talking book machines are distributed through agencies in each state.

Volunteers play an essential part in building the Library's collection by transcribing books into hand-copied braille, recording books on magnetic tape, and maintaining and repairing talking book machines. A staff of blind braille instructors conducts a national correspondence course to train sighted persons in this skill, and a similar course to train blind persons as braille proofreaders.

AAWB Seal of Good Practice, 1966.

National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Bethesda, Maryland 20014. Richard L. Masland, M.D., Director.

As one of 9 National Institutes of Health, which form the main research arm of the Public Health Service, the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness was charged by Congress in 1950 with research in the field of neurological and sensory disorders, which includes problems relating to blindness. These disorders form the third cause of death in the United States, and the leading cause of permanent disability.

In addition to research on neurological and sensory disorders, the Institute is responsible for research on the gross, microscopic and chemical structure of the nervous system. Similarly, it conducts research on both normal and abnormal functioning of all sensory and nervous tissues.

The Institute's program for the cure and prevention of blindness has undergone major developments this past year. There are now six research centers for blindness, each having a broad program, yet concentrating on special problems, including cataract, glaucoma, disorders of the cornea, infections of the eye, and disturbances of eye movement. An additional two centers, more broadly concerned with sensory and perceptual disorders, are providing information on fundamental mechanisms through which light impulses are converted to nervous energy and transmitted to the brain for interpretation.

Much of the research at the Institute is basic in character and patients are not directly involved. However, patients are admitted to the Clinical Center when their diagnosis fits a current research project and they are referred by their physician. Within the Institute's laboratories at Bethesda, the attack on uveitis and the clinical evaluation of drugs in eye disorders have been intensified. Scientists also are investigating the basic process of nerve and tissue growth in the eye. Investigators have launched a broad clinical and epidemiological study of blindness due to vascular diseases of the eye. In addition, a Model Reporting Area for blindness is providing consistent data on the nature and distribution of the blinding diseases in this country.

Under the guidance of a Special Vision Subcommittee of the Council, the Institute has launched a major review of the vision research field, highlighting areas of special need. A scientific information center is being developed to provide support for a continuing review and for the rapid dissemination of research knowledge to scientists and practitioners throughout the world.

Approximately three-fourths of the Institute money goes into outside grants. The Institute's vision research training program has expanded; in fiscal 1966 approximately 386 persons received support through 42 graduate training programs for studies in this field.

Research grants support both basic and applied research projects comparable to those carried on inside the Institute. Examples of these are the grants which have been made for glaucoma and cataract research. Grants support eight outpatient vision research units in medical centers across the country.

A number of outside institutions are collaborating with the Institute on a long-term, nationwide study of some 60,000 mothers and children. This research looks for causes of blindness and other neurologic disorders arising during pregnancy, childbirth, or early infancy. Many kinds of specialists are involved, including ophthalmologists, obstetricians, pediatricians, biometricians and neurologists.

Inquiries concerning patient services and demonstration projects should be referred to the Neurological and Sensory Disease Service Branch, Bureau of State Services, Public Health Service.

Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington 20202 (WO 2-4353).

The Office of Education provides consultative services to state, county and city school systems and to residential schools throughout the country in the interest of all handicapped children, including the visually handicapped. Through conferences, field service, bibliographies and other publications, effort is made to stimulate the organization and development of educational programs which will meet the needs of children requiring special instructional methods. The Office is also responsible for the administration of Title III of Public Law 88-164, as extended and expanded by Public Law 89-105, dealing with the training of teachers, administrators, college instructors, and research specialists needed in educational programs for handicapped children as well as with research and demonstration projects related to the education of these children.

Title VI of Public Law 89-750, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act Amendments of 1966, provides for a two-year program of grants to the states for the education of handicapped children and for the establishment in the Office of Education of the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped to administer programs in the Office related to the handicapped. An addendum to this Directory will contain the names of key personnel in the newly established Bureau.

Veterans Administration, Washington, D. C. 20420. W. J. Driver, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Department of Medicine and Surgery: provides hospital, domiciliary and nursing home care, and outpatient medical services to eligible veterans of the armed services. Generally speaking, blinded veterans are integrated with all other veterans for treatment and care. Special exceptions are made as follows: an intensive and comprehensive program of basic reorganization to blindness is provided at the Blind Rehabilitation Center, Hines, Illinois, regardless of the part of the country in which a veteran resides; and prosthetic and sensory aids are provided to help overcome the handicap of blindness for veterans who meet specific eligibility requirements.

Department of Veterans Benefits: furnishes compensation and pension for disability and death for veterans and dependents; vocational rehabilitation services, including counseling, training and assistance toward placement into employment upon completion of training, to blinded veterans disabled as a result of service in the armed forces during World War II and the Korean conflict and post Korean veterans as well as certain peacetime veterans; provides loans for the purchase or construction of homes, farms and business property.

The maintenance of the Veterans Administration is through federal appropriations.

For further information regarding service or eligibility, communicate with the nearest office of the Veterans Administration.

Vocational Rehabilitation Administration, Division of Services to the Blind, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D. C. 20201. Mary E. Switzer, Commissioner of Vocational Rehabilitation; D. C. MacFarland, Ph.D., Chief, Division of Services to the Blind.

The Vocational Rehabilitation Administration provides national leadership and technical guidance for the federal-state vocational rehabilitation program. It also administers grants-in-aid for support of the state rehabilitation programs. As an integral part of the Administration, the Division of Services to the Blind provides leadership and guidance to the states in the development of programs for the provision of vocational rehabilitation services to blind persons and administers the provisions of the Randolph-Sheppard Act.

In the federal-state system, state agencies provide actual services to the disabled. Each state has a bureau or division of vocational rehabilitation. In 37 states, vocational rehabilitation services are provided to blind persons by separate commissions or agencies for the blind. In the remaining 13 states, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam and the District of Columbia, these services are provided to blind persons by the same agencies which serve persons with other disabilities.

The Division of Services to the Blind develops methods, standards and procedures to assist state agencies in the rehabilitation of blind persons. Through these agencies, eligible individuals are placed in industry, in vending stands and small commercial enterprises; in the professions; in managerial, sales and office work; in agriculture; in sheltered workshops; and in home industries. The Division of Services to the Blind conducts continuous study to determine the number of blind persons who are employable, to ascertain the types of occupations they might fill, and to learn what factors contribute to their success or failure in these occupations.

Among the specific activities of the Division of Services to the Blind in the coordination of state agency efforts are the following: (1) assisting the states in developing programs which provide complete vocational rehabilitation service to blind persons to enable them to become self-supporting and usefully employed; (2) assisting the states in analyzing occupations to ascertain their suitability for performance without the use of sight, and demonstrating to employers the suitability for employment of blind persons who are properly selected and adequately prepared for work; (3) promoting and supporting institutes and training programs for personnel of state agencies serving the blind; (4) encouraging sound research through grants to qualified institutions both for basic scientific study and demonstration processes; (5) assisting in developing and providing for adequate adjustment services to blind persons; (6) conducting studies and preparing descriptions of occupations in which blind persons are or may be successfully engaged; (7) preparing technical guides and other materials for the use of staff members of state agencies; (8) developing, in cooperation with state agencies, new training facilities for blind persons, and assisting in the expansion of existing facilities; and (9) maintaining continuous relationships with other public and private agencies for the blind.

In providing leadership to the state vocational rehabilitation agencies for the blind, the Division of Services to the Blind receives technical and consultative assistance from the other functional units, including the regional offices, of the Vocational Rehabilitation Administration.

The Division of Services to the Blind is responsible for administration of the Randolph-Sheppard Vending Stand Act (Public Law 732, 74th Congress, 49 Stat. 1559, as amended by section 4 of Public Law 565, 83rd Congress, 68 Stat. 663; 20 U. S. C., Chapter 6A, and further amended by Public Law 89-333, 29 U. S. C., Chapter 4) which assures preference for blind persons in the operation of vending stands on federal properties. The Act provides for the designation by the Vocational Rehabilitation Administration of state licensing agencies and for the issuance of regulations designed to assure such preference by the heads of each federal department and agency in control of the maintenance, operation, and protection of federal property, after consultation with the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and with the approval of the President. The Act also provides for enlarging the economic opportunities for the blind; making surveys of concession stand opportunities for the blind; making surveys of industries to obtain information that will broaden employment opportunities for blind persons; and making information obtained as the result of these surveys available to the public, especially persons and organizations engaged in work for the blind.

Welfare Administration, Bureau of Family Services, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D. C. 20201. Ellen B. Winston, Commissioner of Welfare.

Under Title X of the Social Security Act passed in 1935 and amended many times, most recently in 1965, the federal government is helping the states provide assistance for the needy blind. Like the federal-state programs for the aged, for the permanently and totally disabled and for dependent children, this program is directed by the Bureau of Family Services of the Welfare Administration, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Aid to the blind is administered by the states, with federal cooperation and financial assistance. Fifty-four approved state plans, including those of the District of Columbia, Guam, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, are in operation under the Act. In June, 1966, the number of persons receiving aid to the blind in these states totaled 85,007. The total expenditure of combined local, state and federal funds for this purpose was $7,643,312. The average individual payment for all participating states was $89.91 per month.

Each state sets up and administers its own plan within the nationwide framework outlined by the federal law. Approved plans must be statewide in operation, and administered or supervised by a single state agency; the state must pay part of the cost, but may require its counties to contribute if it wishes. The federal government makes grants to meet its share of assistance and administrative costs. The federal government participates in payments to individuals up to an average maximum of $75 a month covering both money payments to blind recipients and payments for medical care in their behalf. It also pays 50% of the administrative costs and after September, 1962, 75% of certain services specified by the Secretary as likely to prevent or reduce dependency. The states are, however, responsible for determining the amount of individual payments. The Social Security Act requires that aid to the blind shall be given on the basis of need, taking into account all the income and resources of the individual except for a certain amount of his earned income. The state must disregard the first $85 per month of the blind person's income, plus one-half of earned income in excess of $85 per month. The state also must disregard such additional amounts of other income and resources as will be necessary to fulfill a plan for self-support. These provisions are mandatory for a 12-month period and optional for an additional period up to 24 months, making a maximum total of 36 months. The Act also includes certain provisions relating to citizenship and residence requirements which the state may not exceed, but may reduce or omit; it sets no age limit for aid to the blind, but the state may do so if it desires. The federal law provides that the examination to determine blindness must be made by a physician skilled in eye diseases or by an optometrist with the choice up to the applicant. A person receiving aid to the blind may not concurrently receive either old-age assistance, aid to the permanently and totally disabled and aid to families with dependent children. Federal funds may not be used in payments made to or in behalf of individuals living in public non-medical institutions.

Federal funds are available to the states for The Kerr-Mills program of medical assistance for the aged who cannot pay for medical care out of their income and resources. A state with this program may include persons 65 years or older who are receiving aid to the blind. Since October 1, 1962, states have been permitted to consolidate their adult assistance programs under a single program of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled. One effect of this is to increase federal participation in medical vendor payments in behalf of the blind. Also, states may adopt a new medical assistance program that will benefit all blind public assistance recipients under Title XIX of the Social Security Act.

One of the most important aspects of this federal-state program is its stimulation of interest in services and rehabilitation for the blind. Co-operative arrangements have been worked out in many states, under the leadership of the state agency administering aid to the blind, to promote sight conservation and the prevention of blindness, and to provide medical services to blind persons in order that their sight may be partially or wholly restored wherever possible. In some states comprehensive programs for the blind, enlisting the services of a variety of state and local agencies, are bringing together not only cash assistance and medical care, but also education, vocational training, job placement, recreation and other services, for the purpose of helping blind people lead lives as nearly normal as possible.

For information regarding provisions for aid to the blind in the Social Security Act and the part of the federal government in administering this program, address Fred H. Steininger, Director, Bureau of Family Services, Welfare Administration. Inquiries relating to the program in a particular state should be addressed to the state administrative agency; in most states this is the state public welfare department.
