ABSTRACT

This guide is designed for a one-semester elective course in Afro-American literature for high school juniors and seniors. The approach to the literature is generally by genre. After a statement of philosophy, the guide lists cognitive, affective, and psychomotor objectives for the course; suggests teaching-learning activities concerning readings, class discussions, written or oral presentations, and examinations; gives techniques for assessing students' progress; and outlines available learning resources (print, non-print, and resource persons). An annotated bibliography on Afro-American literature is also provided for the teacher. Appendices include an annotated list of literature by and about Negroes, a list of books to make up a classroom library for the course, and a list of social studies books to aid in teaching Afro-American history. ## P R E F A C E

Afro-American literature is a one-semester elective course offered by the English Department to juniors and seniors for one-half credit. It meets 55 minutes (three mods) per day and three days per week. The approach to Afro-American literature will be generally by genre, and the emphasis will be on American black writers.

The required texts - all paperback - to be purchased by the students are:

Black Voices, ed. by Abraham Chapman

Three Negro Classics, ed. by John H. Franklin

Autobiography of Malcolm X

The Learning Tree, by Gordon Parks

"Blues for Mister Charlie," by James Baldwin

Why We Can't Wait, by Martin L. King, Jr.

Fairoaks, by Frank Yerby

An African Treasury, ed. by Langston Hughes

Any teacher embarking upon this course should be aware of the wealth of material available and should set aside many hours for reading. For this purpose a bibliography for the teacher is included in Section VI. The majority of the Writing Committee's time was spent in reading, intensively and extensively, as many books by Afro-American writers as time permitted and then evaluating them. The Committee feels that it barely scratched the surface.

PROPOSED

A STATEMENT OF PHILOSOPHY FOR EVANSTON TOWNSHIP HIGH SCHOOL

The faculty of Evanston Township High School seeks to provide a learning environment in which each student can acquire feelings of adequacy, an attitude of disciplined self-direction, and skills and knowledge for life-long learning in his quest for self-fulfillment.

We believe in the dignity and worth of each student and in his unlimited potential for growth. We believe that experiences which actively engage him in the process of learning and which relate to his interests and abilities are more likely to be meaningful and contribute to growth. The climate of the school should nurture and sustain the inquisitiveness of the student as he searches for and discovers new meanings in the context of his environment. To this end we believe that we should assist each student to discover and extend his interests and talents and provide both the means and opportunities for their expression.

We believe that schooling should be value oriented. The climate of the school should stimulate and support the willingness of each student to be open to all experience, to analyze his beliefs and feelings, and to develop criteria which influence behavior and recognize the rights of his fellowmen. The school community should stress the freedom to inquire, to challenge ideas, and to examine alternatives while valuing the freedoms of others and the discipline of responsible behavior.

We believe that each student should understand the meaning of American democracy and have opportunities in the classroom and school to practice its fundamental tenets. He should acquire an understanding of the ideas, events, and processes which have shaped the evolution of his culture and the cultures of other peoples and to interpret and apply these concepts in his efforts to comprehend and cope with present experience. Therefore, we believe that schooling must be relevant both to the needs of the student and to the community, society, and world in which he lives. Experiences provided in the curriculum should relate to and value the richness and diversity of human experience and inspire each student to seek to improve the condition of mankind, to discover a loyalty which transcends the self and is realized in the common purposes of man.

We believe that each student must understand and adjust to the dynamics of change. He should understand the methods of science and become sensitive to the effect of science and technology upon the individual, the family, and the institutions of society. His total experiences should be planned to facilitate the development of personality and the strengthening of critical thinking powers to enable him to face the future with confidence and to cope with the changing conditions of the psychosocial and physical worlds in which he will interact.

We recognize that the school shares the responsibility for the total development of the student with the family and other agencies of the community. We believe that when communication among all significant persons in the life of the student is fostered his growth is enhanced.

We believe that in the final analysis all learning is personal; it is the product of meanings acquired by the individual as he interacts in a social setting. To learn to function effectively in that setting, the student must be given the chance to work independently and to set goals and determine the means to achieve them. The student who has acquired the skills of critical thinking, who knows what he ought to do with respect for himself and with reverence for others, and who demonstrates the capacity for self-direction and achievement is likely to attain self-fulfillment and be a contributing member of society.

I. Course Organization

Any of the major themes of literature can be easily related to the discussions presented in the various genre selections. The teachers should have in his grasp a full knowledge of all the material he plans to cover. In this way he can best present his unit by drawing examples from all genre. For this reason longer works are begun immediately. From this major reading assignment the teacher draws the basic class outline and supports it with poems, short stories, etc.

For example, a teacher could assign the reading of the opening sections of Booker T. Washington's Up From Slavery and W. E. B. DuBois' Souls of Black Folk, both selections available in Three Negro Classics. These works are chronological records of the growth of two Negro leaders. Therefore, early references are made to the period of slavery and reconstruction. Here, then, the teacher should introduce and emphasize conditions of slavery which are roots of today's Negro revolution. One should immediately see the convergent themes from which he may choose to draw a seminar focus or even a unit theme. Additional information can be presented concerning any of the following points: (1) the stereotyped slavery "Negro," (2) conditions of the plantation, (3) children of slavery, (4) degradation of the male, (5) family structure in the slave "communal," and others. Of course, these points will probably be included in each area discussed, but the course must be flexible enough to allow for themes, ideas, and concepts to be covered as they arise. Additional concepts to be covered should include (1) that every man is a human being and due the respect of every other man, (2) that listening is imperative for the improvement of human relations, (3) that seminar discussions are most successful if everyone contributes ideas and participates fully, (4) that better understanding of people can be learned by reading, studying, and discussing literature, (5) that Afro-Americans have made significant contributions to American literature, and (6) that creating positive images of minority-group members helps all people in shaping of self-concepts. These concepts should be introduced to the student through the various genre: i.e., autobiography, poetry, drama, novel, short story, and literary criticism.

II. Objectives

A. The cognitive objectives of Afro-American literature are:

1. To improve the student's reading skills by requiring close and concentrated interpretation and evaluation of the assigned material
2. To provide sources of information concerning the Afro-American and his feelings as expressed by the Afro-American himself
3. To show the excellence of representative genre of Afro-American literature through discussion and criticism
4. To teach effective discussion techniques as a means to solving some problems in the vital area of human relations
5. To illustrate some of the historical significance of the Afro-American as shown in his literature
6. To develop a better understanding of the variance in language patterns and vocabulary as exhibited in the literature of the Afro-American
7. To encourage students to respond creatively to the literature

8. To encourage insight into mass problems of race differences as depicted in Afro-American literature
9. To develop the student's critical capacities so that he can judge good and bad literature

B. The affective objectives of Afro-American literature are:

1. To foster the desire to read more and with discrimination in the area of Afro-American literature
2. To develop channels of communication which will lead students to respect and understand each other's differences
3. To provide a learning climate in which each student feels free to respond to various stimuli from the literature
4. To encourage students to respond creatively to the literature
5. To develop a sense of pride in the literary achievements of Afro-American writers
6. To help students discover themselves and their differences as they relate to each member of the class

C. The psychomotor objectives of Afro-American literature are:

1. To improve the student's physical writing skills by requiring complete and legible examinations and compositions
2. To improve the student's oral reading skills by requiring students to interpret orally passages from the literature
3. To improve the student's skills in discussion by encouraging total participation--both listening and speaking.

III. Suggested teaching-learning activities

Because the primary purpose of the Afro-American literature course is to present as many representative literary works by Afro-Americans in the various genre as previously indicated, much emphasis is placed on reading. Students are required to read, read, read.

Most of the class discussion, etc., stem from those required readings in each genre as decided by the teacher. Although a basic list has been decided previously, it should be noted that some of the choices are subject to change if the demands of the class and the agreement of the teacher deem such change is profitable to the overall purpose of the course or the specific unit involved at that time. Careful considerations have been given to each literary choice, and the beginning list best meets the needs to accomplish the objectives of the course.

Students will also choose additional reading from supplementary reading sources: (a) An important supplementary reading source is the teacher's office collection of copies of popular Afro-American novels, stories, essays, etc. These materials can be checked out from the office "library" and read upon recommendation by the teacher or by request of students who indicate specific interests. These materials may be used further as resource or supplementary materials to various subject or content-centered units discussed within a genre or crossing from one genre to another for support. Students may also recommend new titles for this "private" collection specifically for Afro-American literature students.

(b) It is unnecessary for resource centers to stock class sets of any of the materials the course includes; however, each resource center librarian is encouraged to increase the number of works by Afro-American writers and perhaps an independent project of some member(s) of the class should be a continuous highlighting of Afro-American contributions in the field of literature. (c) Central library, as a part of this project, has revamped and updated the reading lists available to all students. Afro-American literature students make extensive use of this list, as the library staff, in its updating the reading list and upon request of the writers of this course, has specified those works by blacks as an additional part of the thorough list of works entitled Literature By and About Negroes. (See Appendix B)

As the course of study indicates, the reading aspect of the class is in several phases: (1) assigned readings, (2) supplementary recommended reading, and (3) interest level reading. Again, because the major emphasis is discussion, writing assignments, quizzes, and tests are held to a minimum. Students however, are given an opportunity to exhibit skills in writing reactions, responses, and possibly creative writings, all as a result of prepared stimuli. But students know early of the de-emphasis on writing and the emphasis on accumulation of ideas and attitudes as a result of their reading experiences in this course. Seminar contributions and half-group discussions are most important in deciding an evaluative grade for the course. Independent study projects should be encouraged, and these may be completed in the form of term papers or brief research projects, as well as oral presentation projects.

As this Course Guide states earlier, much of the student's progress is determined by the varying manner in which he contributes to the class discussions. Obviously these discussions are not (and should not be) predictable at all times, but as in a traditional situation, most discussions will have a definite focus, and specific goals will have been previously set for that period.

Large group discussions (involving total class participation) are generally teacher-directed to the point that students are able to grasp the significance or major emphasis of literature being studied. These periods can also most benefit from special student reports, symposiums, and the few essential background material presentations. During these sessions a general classroom formality should prevail.

Small group activities center about half-groups and quarter-groups. These groups function in a general seminar sense. Their purposes are to discuss the readings that the students have been assigned. Also an important function of the small group is to provide an opportunity for students to share supplementary reading as well as personal experiences and attitudes. An attempt should be made to divide the class into its smaller groups so as to get a cross-section of student abilities, interests, and attitudes represented in each group. Also the groups' make-up should vary when change is effective or necessary.

Each individual student should be encouraged to make at least one special contribution to the group. This may take the form of a book review, a biographical study and report, an assigned report or presentation in a special area, etc. The purpose of the assignment is to give the student the opportunity to exhibit his own leadership skill, as the report, hopefully will end with a discussion of the material with the student as source person or discussion leader. (Many of these oral presentations result from independent study projects.)

The area of independent study continues to be one of question in the minds of many students. It is hopeful that the list of possible areas of independent study provides proper interest, and together with the class stimuli, students will tackle interesting unassigned projects. Certainly, the teacher should encourage any particular interest that can lead to an independent study project any student may have. These projects are designed to serve also in the area of enrichment, and choices cover such wide areas as the theater, the dance, politics, art, music, sports, etc., all areas in which the black man has made major contributions. Hopefully, these projects become valuable sources for further study in the area.

Writing is and should be an integral part of any class granting English credit; however, because of the extent of reading students are required to perform and the resulting discussions stemming from this reading, writing assignments should be minimal, but very directed. Most papers fall into three areas: (1) impromptu responses, (2) essay examinations, and (3) special individually directed assignments. In each case the student is expected to exhibit a knowledge of basic composition skills, but the greater emphasis naturally is placed on content. (No formal lessons in composition or grammar are taught.) Therefore, a student who writes poorly but grasps the basic concepts of the lesson and expresses an understanding of this material receives comparable complimentary grades.

Opportunities for impromptu responses or reactions occur often, and in this particular course, a student's immediate response in a recorded form can be most helpful in determining attitudinal changes in a short test period within a unit, as well as a general transitional change. These quick ten-minute to perhaps half-hour writing sessions can provide ideas for future class discussions as well as much evidence of affective learning progress. Hopefully, students learn early to be honest and sincere in their responses to various readings and discussions. These are credited, but not all should be graded.

One or two major examinations are essential to the course. Examinations are designed to cover general knowledge and attitudinal changes primarily; thus objective tests would hardly prove beneficial to this purpose. An occasional "pop" quiz on assigned reading can be expected, but only in cases where the class has exhibited a laxity in outside reading preparation should these become frequent.

An extensive written contribution is required of each student. Several alternative choices are to be offered to the student at the beginning of the semester. Additional suggestions for topics will be continuously offered throughout the semester. Certainly, here is another area in which independent study activities can be coupled with required assignments to an advantage. As stated before, form is considered, but the major emphasis is content.

If the class achieves the high level of involvement in the subject matter of the reading which is expected, then the response should be a valuable asset in the area of creative writing. This area should certainly be considered and explored whenever possible. These students should produce some relevant original material, and they are encouraged to write.

Movies, television, magazines, newspapers, and recordings offer valuable aids in presenting interesting background, high-lights, or relevant material to various aspects of the human experiences from which much of the literature of the Afro-American writers has been taken. These audio-visual aids have been explored, and some of the better materials have been catalogued for inclusion in this course. However, these sources serve only as supplementary materials, and stress is placed on their contribution to the understanding of the literature. Some of the available materials which are used in the class are listed in Section V under Non-Print Resources. Because this list is ever increasing, special attempts are made to constantly review films, television shows, magazine articles, and other sources for helpful current aids.

IV. Suggested evaluation or assessment techniques

Evaluation techniques must be varied to attempt to appraise the student's progress toward all of the objectives of Afro-American literature. In the area of cognitive learning, essay examinations are used to evaluate the student's reading, comprehension, composition, and study skills. Quizzes can be utilized for an immediate check of daily preparation. Expository compositions--impromptu and out-of-class--assess the student's awareness of new sources of information, of an understanding of the variance of language patterns, of his insight into problems of race differences, of the representative genre of Afro-American writers, and of his sense of literary criticism. Awareness of the foregoing will also be seen in the student's performance on examinations.

Participation in seminar discussions appraise the student's grasp of discussion techniques, his development of open channels of communication, his respect for others and their opinions, his understanding of and respect for racial differences, and his insight into himself and Afro-American literature.

Examples of creative writing--poetry, prose, drama, etc. -- suggest how well the student has responded to various stimuli designed for evoking creative endeavors.

Independent study projects and activities appraise partially the student's increased desire to read more widely in the area of Afro-American literature, his newly acquired critical acumen, and perhaps even his ability to work with fellow students on projects done together.

Affective learning is best assessed by non-reactive tests. In observing his students, the teacher can determine if any changes have taken place in student attitudes toward each other, towards themselves, or toward Afro-American literature. Good intergroup relationships can indicate self-discovery and sensitivity. Pride in Afro-American literature is certainly observable by the teacher in the student's examinations, compositions, creative responses, and verbal behavior.

Psychomotor skills are in many cases being evaluated simultaneously with cognitive learning. Involvement and improvement in writing, speaking, and listening are evidence of achievement of psychomotor objectives.

VI. Teacher's Bibliography (Helpful materials for the teacher)

Baldwin, James. "Blues for Mister Charlie." Dell, New York, 1964.

This three-act play, set in Mississippi, clearly illustrates the powerlessness of the blacks in confronting the white power structure. A white store owner kills a young black, lies under oath, gets witnesses to falsify testimony, and is acquitted by a jury, all of this despite the majority of the town knowing he murdered the man. The play develops several characters and uses a unique setting.

Berek, Peter. "Using Black Magic with the Word on the World." Saturday Review, November 30, 1968, p. 35.

Bone, Robert. "Negro Literature in the Secondary School: Problems and Perspectives." English Journal, April, 1969, p. 510.

-----, The Negro Novel in America. Yale University Press, New Haven, Conn. 1965.

A chronological listing of Negro novels from 1853 to 1952.

Bontemps, Arna. American Negro Poetry. Hill and Wang, New York, 1963.

This poetry collection includes the work of a wide variety of Negro poets. It has a very interesting arrangement, for it appears to develop from the early traditional poetry to the new angry black poetry of soul.

Carmichael, Stokely, and Charles V. Hamilton. Black Power. Vintage, Division of Random House, New York, 1967.

Good reading to gain a perspective of one militant group's thought on the Negro revolution.

Cattle, Thomas. "The Wellesley Incident." Saturday Review, March 15, 1969, p. 67.

Chapman, Abraham, ed. Black Voices. Mentor, New York, 1968.

This anthology includes sections on fiction, autobiography, poetry, and literary criticism plus a long introduction. Selections are good and varied. The book lends itself to comparative studies.

Chapman, Abraham. The Negro in American Literature. Wisconsin Council of Teachers of English, Oshkosh, Wis., 1966.

This pamphlet provides excellent introductory material for teaching a course of this nature--plus it contains an extraordinary bibliography of materials available.

Cleaver, Eldridge. Soul on Ice. Dell Publishing, New York, 1968.

This is intense and powerful writing from a black who speaks from his soul and "tells it like it is." As shocking as it becomes at times, this is a favorite book of many students, and any informed teacher should have this background reading.

Dodds, Barbara. Negro Literature for High School Students. NCTE, Champaign, Ill., 1968.

A pamphlet of this nature is a must in formulating what is available and is good reading for this course. Its arrangement is unique and easy to use; its annotations are most helpful.

Drake, St. Clair. Negro History and Literature. American Jewish Committee, New York, December, 1968.

This is a very helpful annotated bibliography.

Ellison, Ralph. Shadow and Act. Random House, New York, 1964.

This is a series of essays discussing basic human experiences--hopefully in such a way to make symbolic identification with those of other backgrounds possible.

Fair, Ronald. Many Thousand Gone. Harcourt, Brace and World, New York, 1965.

The novel, although brief, gets to the heart of the reader and presents a situation which reveals how close to slavery conditions many Negroes still live.

Franklin, John Hope, ed. Three Negro Classics. Avon, New York, 1965.

This collection includes: Booker T. Washington, Up From Slavery, W. E. B. DuBois, The Souls of Black Folk, and James Weldon Johnson, The Autobiography of an Ex-Colored Man. It is an excellent book for a comparative study.

Frazier, E. Franklin. Black Bourgeoisie. Collier Books, New York, 1957.

Interesting background reading is provided in the area of the rise of the middle class Negro. The book is a resumé of the middle class Negro's ideas and attitudes.

Gross, Seymour L. and John E. Hardy. Images of the Negro in American Literature. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, 1966.

This book is divided into two sections: traditions and individual talents. The first section includes six essays by various writers on the image of the Negro in colonial, the Old South, reconstruction, early Harlem, and twentieth century literature. The second section deals with writers and their treatment of the Negro in their literature including: Melville, Stowe, Twain, Hughes, Faulkner, Welty, Wright, Ellison, and Baldwin.

Hayden, Robert, ed. Kaleidoscope. Harcourt, Brace and World, New York, 1967.

This is an extensive anthology of Afro-American poetry with a good historical introduction. It includes a variety of poets--many contemporary--with biographical sketches of each.

Hill, Herbert. Anger and Beyond: The Negro Writer in the United States. Harper, Row, and Co., New York, 1966.

Here is a collection of essays on American literature including works by Saunders Redding, LeRoi Jones, Arna Bontemps, Ossie Davis, and others.

Hughes, Langston, ed. An African Treasury. Crown Publishers, Inc., Pyramid Publications, New York, 1961.

African writers have been scanned and their works have been compiled into this anthology of articles, essays, short stories, and poetry never previously published in the United States. Biographical notes on the writers are included.

-----, The Best of Simple. Hill and Wang, New York, 1961.

-----, Simple's Uncle Sam. Hill and Wang, New York, 1965.

Humorous reading which provides light background to deep feelings harbored by the Negro concerning ghetto living and life in general.

-----, ed. The Best Short Stories by Negro Writers. Little, Brown and Company, Boston, 1967.

This valuable anthology gives a chronology of stories from 1898 to the present. Included are leading stories by Negro authors, including Dunbar, Bontemps, Wright, Ellison, Baldwin, Fair, and others of lesser fame.

Jones, LeRoi. "The Baptism and the Toilet." Evergreen Press, New York, 1966.

Both of these short one-act plays illustrate Jones' attitude toward religion, sex, love, peer group pressure, etc., in contemporary life. The language is rough.

Jones, LeRoi and Larry Neal. Black Fire: An Anthology of Afro-American Writing. Morrow and Co., New York, 1968.

This long volume (670 pages) is a collection of essays, poetry, fiction, and drama. The plays are all one act (some as short as six pages) with small casts and rugged language. Black-white confrontations are the major concerns of the playwrights: Garrett, Jackson, Patterson, Drayton, Jones, Caldwell, White, and Freeman.

King, Martin Luther, Jr. Why We Can't Wait. Harper and Row, New York, 1964.

This book illustrates Dr. King's excellent skill as an essayist. It gives important build-up for the Negro revolution as it had become at the height of King's career. The book includes the famous "Letter from Birmingham Jail" and concludes with a chapter which offers proposals for a justified conclusion to the struggle.

Littlejohn, David, Black on White: A Critical Survey of Writings by American Negroes. Grossman Publishers, New York, 1966.

Littlejohn takes a critical look at several writers (Wright, Baldwin, Ellison, etc.) and at the major genre they have used (drama, poetry, novel). He also gives the reader an interesting history of American Negro writers divided, as he sees them, into Before and After Native Son.

Lomas, Louis E. The Negro Revolt. Signet Books, New York, 1962.

This book presents an outspoken, important explanation of the history behind the Freedom Riders, Sit-ins, Prayer Marches, etc., and leads into the development and meaning of the racial protest in America today. Included are chapters on such organizations as NAACP, Black Muslims, representatives of white liberals, black militants, etc. It is excellent reading.

Malcolm X with Alex Haley. The Autobiography of Malcolm X. Grove Press, New York, 1965.

Malcolm X's story is that of a man born out of his time. He speaks the tragic truth with realism and provides an excellent study of the "growth of a man" while doing so. The book is excellent and needs to be read by students, but the reading should be done under the guidance of a mature teacher who has carefully studied the important developments of the man and who can prevent misinterpreting minor issues as major ones.

Margolies, Edward, ed. Native Sons: A Critical Study of Twentieth Century Negro American Writers. Lippincott, New York, 1968.

Following two introductory chapters, a complete chapter is devoted to each of eight major writers and their works. The essays are informative and critical as they give insight into the writer and his work. Authors discussed are William Attaway, Richard Wright, Chester Himes, James Baldwin, Ralph Ellison, Malcolm X, William Denby, and LeRoi Jones.

Negro Heritage Library. Educational Heritage, Inc., New York, 1966. (6 volumes)

Excellent references by several prominent editors on Negro heritage, the Negro's road to freedom, Negro womanhood, emerging African nations and their leaders, and Martin Luther King.

Perkins, Eugene. "Black Writers and the Liberation Movement." Illinois English Bulletin, May, 1969, p. 3.

Redding, Saunders. On Being Negro in America. Bantam, New York, 1964.

Excellent personal essay (book length) in which a Negro novelist expresses the costs and confines of race and the racial experience.

Rexroth, Kenneth. "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Saturday Review, June 11, 1969, p. 71.
