ABSTRACT

Maine has had educational television (ETV) for about 12 years. ETV has been successful in putting on public service programming, despite the legislature's suspicions of this type of programming. The fact that ETV has not had more widespread success in instructional television for the state's classrooms may partly depend on the state legislature's stingy appropriations for this purpose. The author, himself a legislator, hopes that more can be done with ETV and cable television, but he is concerned that we do not really know how to use the "monster" known as television. Attached are Maine legislative acts pertaining to public broadcasting. (JK)

Educational TV (Maine)

Senator Katz is chairman of the Maine Senate Committee on Education and former majority leader of the upper house. A graduate of Tufts, Katz served on the Augusta City Council and is a member of the Maine Education Council and Maine School Building Authority. Treasurer of the Education Commission of the States for the current year and a member of the ECS Steering and Executive Committees, he is in the jewelry business in Augusta.

Educational TV in Maine is about 12 years old, and one senses that it has come of age to a greater extent than ever before. It is supported by our legislature, and yet that legislature is so basically deeply suspicious of the juice in the field of public service that it walks on thin ice. It is one small step away from controversy at any given moment, yet it attracts capable staff and to this one legislator it is doing an effective job in public service.

While commercial TV talks about public service programming, ETV does something about it in Maine, even to the point of becoming deeply involved in hot emotional issues. The appearance of elected officials before the camera may give each party the impression that the other is being favored, but actually a balance is carefully maintained, and during the legislative session a legislative report is a nightly affair.

Even after a dozen years and a four-station network, ETV which is administratively under the university, skates on ice which is painfully thin. There are legislators, including myself, who feel that the prime orientation of ETV should be ITV or instructional television. We are frankly disappointed that this magic media has not developed spectacular success stories in Maine classrooms. Yet, we must stand indicted for our stingy attitude towards appropriations to the State Department of Education, which through an organizational twist gets the money which then is tolled out to the university and others for instructional television.

In Maine we watch the development of cable TV and read about the little black box which will sit on top of any TV set and play prerecorded video cassettes on demand and hope that our electronic technology can be used with increasing success by that voracious consumer of resources we call public education. The special session of the Maine legislature coming up early next year will be out to make a significant investment in further development of instructional TV. I approached the session shaking with carefully controlled optimism. As a legislator I am willing to support an appropriation, yet, I am beset with a nagging doubt that we really know how to properly use this monster called television. ■
