ABSTRACT

Community and area resources -- consisting of persons, places, or objects -- gathered from the regions comprising Chenango, Delaware, and Otsego Countries, are listed in this directory. Teachers, local historians, and PROBE staff identified resources which could be introduced to K-12 teachers. In addition to a brief introduction, the book contains two major chapters, the first containing lists of primary sources and cultural and educational resources in communities, arranged by county and then by business or industry, church, historical sites, libraries, local organizations, museums, public buildings, private collections and schools. Human resources include the local historian, political figures, and other significant persons. The second major chapter, a specialized section, offers listings of geological resources in the three counties; an archeological survey and description of the PROBE area; and county political structures in the PROBE areas. Appendices include additional resources, a bibliography of supplementary PROBE materials and publications, and illustrations. A related document is SO 005 973.. (SJM)

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A book of this nature depends upon the knowledge, skills and abilities of countless people. It would be impossible to acknowledge all of those involved with this book, but special thanks are extended to those mentioned below.

To the Secretarial Staff of Project PROBE, Project PRIDE and The Catskill Area Project we extend our thanks. Particular appreciation is extended to Mrs. Kay Cronk whose secretarial skills and abilities coupled with her keen judgment made possible the completion of this work. Special appreciation is also due to Mrs. Evelyn Lower, Miss Kathy Sobers, Miss Janet Escher and Mrs. Donna Baker.

To Don Lucas, his Assistant Mike Tronolone, his Secretary Mrs. Gina Jacobs and to Mrs. Alice Puffer we extend our thanks for their excellent work with the illustration reproductions.

To Mr. Dennis Shea we offer our thanks for his suggestions and editing skills in our Political Science Section.

We extend our thanks also to the staff of the Curriculum Enrichment Center, Norwich, New York for their work in publishing our Directory.

To all community participators, local historians, librarians, political figures and newspaper editors without whom this work could not exist, we extend a debt of gratitude.

To the research and production team consisting of Mrs. Carol DuBois, Mrs. Ethel Edwards, Miss Susan Fox, Miss Barbara Ganim, James Gill, Mrs. Ethelyn Hawkins, Franklin Hesse, Jay Hulbert, Mrs. Lois Hurley, Dave Hutchison, Thomas Lloyd, Robert Parmerter we extend our appreciation for work well done.

Finally, as with any work of this kind, there is a significant person whose ideas, cogent suggestions, and criticisms give the publication direction and finality; for this publication, this person was Dr. Lawrence J. Heldman. It was Dr. Heldman's direction that lead our book to a successful completion.

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

Throughout the period of PROBE's Title III Planning Grant, it became increasingly apparent to staff members that a directory of Community and area resources, including primary source materials, would be of great benefit to all teachers. As a result, a team of teachers and local historians was invited to join the staff in the identification of resources and the collection of pertinent data. These resources (persons, places or objects) were gathered from the region comprising Chenango, Delaware, and Otsego Counties.

What follows is a product of the combined efforts of that group and is offered to all teachers (K-12) as an introduction to the variety of materials available rather than as a definitive listing of all area resources. Limitations imposed by time, money, and staff size precluded a complete listing, but did not prevent the team from identifying a substantial amount of resource material. The directory is intended to provide all teachers with ideas for creating lessons involving the use of these resources. The future use of such material is, of course, limitless.

Early directory planning included a format designed to be handy for teacher use. Although the directory has been issued as a stapled booklet, it was printed on punched paper for eventual transfer to a loose-leaf notebook. Thus, the inevitable corrections and the hoped for additions may be made easily. Any new findings should be reported to PROBE, which will then make such information known to all teachers through the PROBE Newsletter.

It should be noted that this directory is more than just a list of references, for it includes a number of photographs, drawings, and diagrams. These are free (as part of the Public Domain) to be reproduced in any way useful to the teachers: for example, as overhead projections or photocopies for bulletin boards and individual student use. The camera was a useful tool to those who researched the directory and may also be such to the classroom teacher and his students in developing additional materials. Another useful tool was the tape recorder. (See Appendix for a complete list of tapes made during research.) Taping human resources could make an interesting class project, as well as a worthwhile contribution to the presentation of local resources.

Many earlier PROBE produced materials may be used in studies evolving from this directory. For example, The J. Y. Brown unit, devised as a multi-media model for the use of local resources, might suggest activities or lessons. The bibliographies - Life in the Age of Homespun, Politics in the Age of Homespun, and Transportation in the Age of Homespun - might help to provide a broad background against which to study these aspects of local history. The Iron Rail might be used to give a reasonably accurate, if fictionalized, look at railroad construction through the region.

The composite newspapers, The Freeman's Journal and The Otsego Republican, offer commentary on local politics with their opposing views of the 1840 Presidential election (Martin VanBuren vs. William Henry Harrison). Several tape recordings, including the reminiscences of the late Otsego County Historian, Roy Butterfield, and Music in the Age of Homespun by Margaret Cawley, a member of the Music Department at State University College at Oneonta, are also available. Perhaps one of the most helpful supplements, at times even overlapping, is the Field Trip Guide and Map with its listings of sites and sources.

A complete list of PROBE materials, as well as copies of individual items - this directory, its pictures or tapes, for example - may be secured at cost from the Project PROBE office, 134 Old Main, State University College at Oneonta; the Rural Supplementary Educational Center, Stamford, New York; or the Curriculum Enrichment Center, Norwich, New York.

Your comments, corrections, and additions are always welcomed by the PROBE staff. Please don't hesitate to pass along any new information so that it may be passed along to all interested teachers.

CHAPTER II. PRIMARY SOURCES AND COMMUNITY RESOURCES

In order to organize and categorize the material gathered by the research team, the following scheme will be used:

County Name

Category I: Cultural and Educational Resources.

Township - Preston

Mrs. Bliven has material but it is not yet organized. Much of her material on the early history of the region came from Chenango County Directory dated 1869-70 and from History of Madison & Chenango Counties.

She relates many little known facts such as the nickname for North Pharsalia -- "Skunk's Misery" and that East Pharsalia is known locally as "Podunk".

Chenango County Sheriff

Mr. Benenati is the man to see to view the old Chenango County records located in the basement of the old County Clerk's office now part of the Sheriff's office.

Records go back to 1800 many of which are filed in blue record boxes with the dates on front. Papers are dusty and should be handled with care.

Other records are in old ledger books, etc.

Sheriff Benenati is quite interested in the history of Chenango County and can prove to be very helpful in gathering data about the county.

There is a vast wealth of material in the basement storage rooms.

Researchers should wear old clothes and be prepared to get covered with dust.

Memorabilia on Early Chenango County hangings.

Mr. Gibson is an earth science teacher at the Norwich Junior High School and a member of the Central New York Archeology Society.

Mr. Gibson has spent many years digging at the Iroquois Indian sites and has gathered a great deal of data which has become very valuable in the study of Indian culture.

His collection of Iroquois artifacts is quite valuable today, especially for those who wish to study the culture of the Iroquois and learn how to mark artifacts.

Mr. Gibson can prove to be a very important person to those who wish to establish an archeological dig.

On certain occasions he is available for lectures and work on Archeology digs. (Iroquois)

New Hampshire
Connecticut
Massachusetts
Rhode Island
Ohio
Indiana
West Virginia
New York

All pictures and slides are carefully annotated.

These data are the most up to date materials on covered bridges noted by this researcher who is a covered bridge buff.

A great deal of time has been spent gathering information on each bridge studied and photographed.

Mrs. Jennings has been doing a great deal of research on the covered bridges in New York and has an excellent collection of pictures and slides of the bridges already studied.

Bridge styles and builders have also been noted.

This collection is excellent for the Age of Homespun -- 7th Grade.

She writes human interest stories each week for the papers. Mrs. DeLee has many interesting stories to tell:

- 1) Story of monument in field with laurel carved on it.
- 2) Stories of the Underground Railroad.
- 3) Story of her father who found a secret passage in their house. In the

GEOLOGICAL RESOURCES IN CHENANGO, DELAWARE AND OTSEGO COUNTIES, NEW YORK

By Dave Hutchison

Introduction This report lists, describes and explains the origin of some of the geological features that may be seen in the field in Chenango, Delaware and Otsego counties, New York. A brief geological history of the area is given first. This is followed by the description of the glacial and geological features. No attempt has been made to list museums, collections of libraries in the area although some of the institutions of higher education may have these resources available. Information about maps, geological reports and aerial photographs is given at the end of the report.

The nature of this report permits a listing of only a few examples of the glacial and geological features found in the area. It is hoped that students will use the described examples as references for their own observations and will enlarge upon this list. As a student observes a feature he should ask himself two questions: "How was the feature formed?", and "When was the feature formed?" Often he can't give a definite answer to either of these questions, but he might come up with a logical answer, thus utilizing the inquiry approach. Further study might show that his first answer was correct or that it should be modified in light of new evidence. In either case the student has transcended time and has used his powers of observation and reason to piece together some sort of a working hypotheses to explain a feature that was formed thousands or perhaps millions of years ago.

Geological History - General The earth is about 4.5 billion years old, but there is no direct evidence of this in any rocks in New York. The oldest rocks exposed in New York are the Precambrian rocks of the Adirondack Mountains and the Hudson Highlands around West Point, which are about 1.1 billion years old. These are igneous and metamorphic rocks which were derived from older sedimentary and igneous rocks. Although the first living forms developed earlier in Precambrian time two or three billion years ago, there is little chance of finding any evidence of life in the Precambrian rocks in New York because of their intense deformation.

Precambrian time lasted until about 600 million years ago (.6 billion years ago). During the last few million years of Precambrian time there was extensive erosion or peniplanation which reduced the previously existing Precambrian mountains and highlands to a level surface called a "peniplane".

Cambrian seas invaded New York between 600 and 500 million years ago depositing sandstones on top of the flat Precambrian erosion surface and limestones and dolomites on top of the sandstones. The Cambrian sediments can be seen along routes 5 and 5S east of Canajoharie and at other places along the Mohawk River Algal growths are preserved in these same aged rocks at the Petrified Gardens four miles west of Saratoga Springs.

During Ordovician time (500 to 430 million years ago) seas continued to occupy most of New York. Limestones, dolomites and shales were deposited in the Early Ordovician seas. In some parts of New York there are abundant fossils in the Early Ordovician. During middle and Late Ordovician time muddier conditions existed in the seas as the sediments of the Queenston delta were being deposited. This delta was built by rivers carrying muds and sand from the Taconic Mountains which were being uplifted in the eastern part of New York and staces to the east. The part of the dark shale and sandstone sequence can be seen immediately north of Sharon Springs on Route 10 in Schoharie County. As these beds contain very few fossils, it can be concluded that conditions were not favorable for life at this location, or if conditions were favorable for life all traces of it have been destroyed. Probably the first explanation is valid because the waters were too muddy for animals to thrive.

During Silurian times (430 to 395 million years ago) many different conditions prevailed in New York. Thick salt beds, which represent evaporating seas in an arid climate, thin iron ore deposits, wind blown sands, fossiliferous shales and limestones are found in various parts of the state. The only Silurian rocks exposed in Chenango, Delaware and Otsego counties are fossiliferous limestones in the northern part of Otsego County and adjacent Schoharie County. These are probably exposed along Route 80 between Springfield Center and Van Hornesville along Route 166 north of Route 20 although neither of these probable outcrops have been field checked. In adjacent Schoharie County, Silurian rocks are well exposed on Route 10 on the south side of Sharon Springs. The Silurian rocks are not as thick here as they are further west in the state because this area was at the edge of the Silurian seas. To the west the Silurian rocks become much thicker and, because they are relatively resistant to erosion, form a prominent cliff (or escarpment). This escarpment which is capped by the resistant Lockport dolomite extends across western New York and Ontario and is responsible for the formation of Niagara Falls.

Many fossils such as brachiopods, gastropods, and corals to mention a few can be found in Silurian rocks.

Geological History of Chenango, Delaware and Otsego Counties In the three county area and, in fact, in all of southern New York and the Catskill Mountains the exposed rocks are almost exclusively Devonian in age (395 to 345 million years ago). The Devonian rocks are well exposed and reveal an interesting story of the geological events which took place.

During Early Devonian time warm seas covered the three county area and the rest of southern New York depositing a thick limestone called the Helderberg limestone. The name comes from the Helderberg Mountains southwest of Albany where the limestone is well exposed. It is also well exposed in places along Route 20 in northern Otsego County especially just east of Route 166. In adjacent Schoharie County it is exposed northeast of Cobleskill where extensive solution and cave development have taken place. Many animals lived in this warm, limy sea and fossil corals, brachiopods, gastropods, crinoids, and trilobites can be found in the Helderberg limestone. In some places chert is found in discontinuous layers in the limestone. Because the Helderberg limestone is relatively more resistant to erosion than adjacent formations it forms a prominent cliff or escarpment from the Helderberg Mountains to approximately Utica.

After deposition of the limestone, the seas withdrew from the area and a surface of erosion (or an unconformity) developed on top of the Helderberg limestone. Seas again advanced into the area depositing first sandstones and shales on the unconformity and then another limestone, the cherty Onondaga limestone. The contact between the sandstones and shales and the overlying Onondaga limestone can be seen on the east side of Route 166 about 1/2 mile south of the turnoff for Route 20. The sandstone contains some peculiar markings whose origin is unknown and the overlying Onondaga limestone contains brachiopods, corals and crinoids in the lower part. These fossils have been replaced by silica and do not weather as quickly as the enclosing limestone. It has taken thousands of years for these fossils to weather out of the limestone so they should NOT BE COLLECTED.

The Onondaga limestone is resistant to erosion and forms a conspicuous escarpment across much of New York.

At the end of Early Devonian time extensive mountain building was taking place again in New England. This produced upland areas whose sediment laden streams drained westward into New York forming another delta, the Catskill delta. Thick deltaic deposits extended across much of New York and southward into Pennsylvania. At first the muds and sands were deposited in a shallow sea forming the Hamilton Group which contains abundant marine fossils such as brachiopods, pelecypods, gastropods and trilobites. Later in the Devonian the rising land mass to the east supplied so much sediment that the delta built itself upward above sea level. These sediments formed the Genesee Group, Sonyea Group, Java Group, and West Falls Group which are considered to be continental in origin rather than marine because of their red color and the presence of plant fossils. The iron in the sediments combined with free oxygen in the air to be oxidized to a red iron oxide. These red continental sediments are seen in numerous road cuts at higher elevations in the southern part of Otsego County, the eastern part of Chenango County and extensively in Delaware County. An extensive fossil forest was uncovered near Gilboa in Schoharie County when the dam for the Schoharie reservoir was being built. Stumps from this forest can be seen on the west side of the bridge across Schoharie Creek just north of Gilboa Dam. Other plant fossils are abundant in the continental sedimentary rocks in southern New York and the Catskill Mountains.

Some other features which are compatible with a deltaic origin for these rocks are cross-bedding and ripple marks. The cross-bedding may have been formed by meandering streams flowing across the delta and depositing their sediment at an incline to other bedding planes in a previously cut channel or depression. Cross-bedding may also have been formed by water currents in the shallow water of the marine part of the delta.

Ripple marks may be formed by currents in shallow water in a marine environment or along the floodplain of a river. Both cross-bedding and ripple marks are quite common in the three county area.

In some of the marine beds flow rolls are present. Presumably these were formed when the unconsolidated sediments deposited on the inclined surface of the delta started to slide and roll down the gentle slope. The resulting bed has a rolled, cylindrical appearance. These are well exposed at the north end of the outcrop along Route 28 at Goodyear Lake dam in Otsego County, near Colliersville.

Post-Devonian Geological History in Chenango, Delaware and Otsego Counties No bedrock younger than Devonian age is present in the three county area or anywhere in the Catskill Mountains. Either these rocks were never deposited or else if they were deposited they were later removed by erosion, thus the events from the end of the Devonian to the beginning of the Cenozoic (345 to 65 million years ago) are not recorded and represent a huge gap in the geological record of this area. During this time another peneplane was formed.

Since the beginning of the Cenozoic (65 million years ago) and perhaps earlier the area has probably been gently domed upward. This increase in elevation has given the streams renewed energy over millions of years enabling them to erode deeply into the bedrock and the post-Devonian peneplane. The Susquehanna, West Branch and East Branch of Delaware, Unadilla, and Chenango valleys probably were all eroded because of this doming, producing a dissected Plateau. As these major streams eroded the bedrock, they cut through both resistant sandstones and less resistant shales to form deep valleys. Tributary streams drained into these but some did not carry enough water to erode the more resistant sandstones. Consequently, in some places waterfalls have developed where the streams flow over the sandstones.

Because the sandstone is more resistant than the shales, it frequently caps the tops of mountains and forms relatively steep cliffs while the shale which is protected from erosion by the overlying sandstone forms more gentle slopes. This comparison between the sandstone and the shale can be seen in many places. One good example is South Hill three miles east of Oneonta. A good vantage point is from the parking lot of Grant's Store on Route 7. At one time shale may have been on top of the sandstone, but it has been eroded away.

In summary, most of the rocks of the three county area were deposited as part of the Devonian Catskill delta. The earlier (or lower) rocks of the delta contain abundant marine fossils and are dark in color, but the later (or upper) parts of the delta contain continental fossils including plant remains and are red in color. As the supply of sediment was from the east, the sediments in the Catskill Mountains are more coarse, thicker and have a greater percentage of red beds than the sediments in the western part of the state.

Within the Devonian aged rocks, there are several alternating sandstone and shale beds which reflect uplift and increased stream flow in the source area to the east.

Erosion has played an important role in developing the mountains and valleys.

Rocks older than the Devonian sediments of the Catskill delta are exposed along the edge of the Catskill Mountains to the north where streams in the wide Mohawk Valley have eroded a broad, deep valley and to the east in parts of Schoharie County.

The present accordant heights of the hills and mountains are remnants of the post-Devonian peneplane which has been warped or domed upward.

Glacial History of Chenango, Delaware, and Otsego Counties During the last million years ice covered much of the northern part of North America. New York was covered at least once and possibly as many as four times. The last glacial ice melted from the three county area about 10,000 years ago which is not very long ago considering that we were previously talking about events which took place hundreds of millions of years ago.

The glacier both eroded and deposited material. Some of the erosive features are the over steepening of the sides of many of the major valleys and the development of a "U" shaped profile from the original "V" shaped profile which rivers had eroded. The Susquehanna, Cherry Creek, Charlotte, Unadilla, and Chenango valleys plus many others all show evidence of this. This is especially evident on topographic maps.

In many places glacial striations show to a minor extent the erosive ability of the glaciers and indicate the direction of ice movement at that locality. The striations are scratches in the bedrock produced when rocks frozen in the glacial ice were dragged across the bedrock.

In general, evidence of glacial and glaciofluvial deposition is abundant in the valleys. "Glaciofluvial" deposits are formed by rivers carrying the melt water of the glaciers. Moraines, kames, kame terraces and kettle holes are all common in the valleys.

Moraines are constructed when the rate of melting at the front of the glacier is equal to the forward flow of ice within the glacier. As a result the sand, gravel and boulders which are entrapped in the flowing ice are deposited at the front of the glacier in irregular, unsorted, and unstratified piles several tens of feet or hundreds of feet high. In the three county area the best moraines are found in the valleys, although in other parts of New York and North America excellent moraines are found in other places.

Kames are formed when there is a depression on the ice and the melt water forms a lake. Sands and gravels are deposited in the lake to form sorted and stratified deposits which are lowered down onto the ground as the ice melts away.

Kame terraces are formed when a river carrying melt water flows between the ice in the center of the valley and the valley wall. Stratified and sorted sands and gravels are deposited in the bed of the river. This is lowered down onto the side and floor of the valley when the ice melts.

As kames and kame terraces contain clean water washed sands and gravels, they are good sources of commercial sand and gravel. Most of the gravel pits in the three county area are either kames or kame terraces.

Kettle holes are depressions a few hundred feet to a few thousand feet across and several tens of feet deep in glacial moraines or associated deposits. These are formed when large blocks of stagnant ice are covered with glacial debris as the glacier melts. Eventually these large hunks of ice melt leaving a depression. A very good example of a kettle hole is just west of Route 28 1.7 miles south of Cooperstown.

Glaciers also produced some interesting side effects in the three county area as a result of the ice damming up rivers to form lakes which overflowed and cut deep gorges. Grand Gorge which is south of the village of Grand Gorge on Route 30 in Delaware County was eroded when ice dammed the Schoharie River north of Grand Gorge and the resulting lake drained out through Bear Kill to the East Branch of the Delaware River at the lowest point which was free from ice.

A similar situation occurred when ice blocked the Mohawk River and formed a lake which overflowed at the lowest ice free point to the south. One of the first ice free outlets was just north of Cherry Valley in northern Otsego County. The lake drained through this outlet to Cherry Valley Creek for only a short time until the ice melted away from lower outlets at Summit Lake four miles above Springfield Center and at a low spot one mile north of East Springfield in northern Otsego County and at a place near North Winfield in Herkimer County. The water flowed through these outlets and entered the Susquehanna and Unadilla Rivers. Another outlet also drained into Chenango River.

The gorge at Grand Gorge is much deeper than any of the other former channels mentioned, so apparently this served as an outlet for a much longer time than any of the other outlets.

At the time when the overflow water from the lakes flowed southerly the valley floors were not eroded as deeply as they are at the present time and the rivers flowed at a higher elevation than they do at the present time. Some of these were as much as 100 feet higher than the present rivers. The old flood plains of the rivers can still be seen in many places as terraces elevated above the present river.

In summary, the glacial ice modified the three county area by producing "U" shaped valleys and depositing glaciofluvial debris in the valleys, but most of the topography was produced by streams eroding the Devonian deltaic sediments.

List of Glacial and Glaciofluvial Features The following lists some features that were formed by the glaciers of the rivers associated with the melting of the glaciers ("glaciofluvial" features). As the glaciers melted the rivers were carrying much more water 10,000 years ago than they are at the present time, and the rivers were flowing several tens of feet or perhaps a hundred feet higher than they are at the present time. Since then the present rivers have eroded down into the glacial and glaciofluvial materials.

As present streams are much smaller than the streams carrying the glacial melt water, they are "underfit streams". This means that the present streams are too small to have cut the wide valleys seen in most of the three county area.

It should be remembered that the valleys were initially eroded several millions of years ago and that the glaciers and their melt water have just modified these earlier formed valleys.

LAND FORMS THAT ARE OF INTEREST
IN THE PROBE AREA

Along Susquehanna River

1. Harpursville - elevated terrace at 1075'.
2. Bainbridge - elevated terrace on south side of river at 1110'.
3. Sidney - Note valley of Susquehanna becomes wider below its confluence with the Unadilla River due to the increase in water carried by the valley south of the confluence when the glaciers were melting.
4. Unadilla - River Terrace south of river at site of Evergreen Hill Cemetery 1120'. Also terrace along Route 7B two miles east of junction with Route 7 at 1120'. Terrace between Susquehanna River and Ouleout Creek 2 1/2 - 3 miles east of Unadilla at 1140'.
5. Otego - about three miles east of Otego on south side of Susquehanna terrace at 1140' at site of Quackenbush Cemetery.
6. Oneonta - Kame terraces on Route 23 1 1/2 - 2 miles east of Oneonta at 1160' - gravel pit shows stratification.
7. Colliersville - Terraces one mile south of Colliersville at 1180'.
8. Goodyear Lake and Dam
9. Portlandville - Glacial moraine material on East side of Susquehanna. Just north of Portlandville many Kettle holes - Saddlebag Lake is a Kettle hole.
10. Index - Immediately north of Index - moraine material and Kettle holes - one is situated on west side of Route 28 1.7 miles south of Cooperstown. Oaks Creek contains much morainic material and many Kettle holes.
11. Headwaters of Susquehanna River are Otsego Lake at Cooperstown.

Along Chenango River

1. At Chenango Forks - irregular topography produced by glacial and glaciofluvial activity.
2. At Greene - elevated terrace at elevation of 1020'.
3. At Brisben - irregular topography produced by glacial and glaciofluvial activity - Kettle hole on east side of County Road 32 in southern part of Oxford Township.
4. Warm Lake is probably a Kettle hole.

5. The south of Oxford - lar topography west of County Road 3 of the glacial and glaciolacustrine activity.

6. The northeast of Oxfo. - terrace at elevation of 100 ft.

3. Kame terrace 1/4 mile west of Butts Center. Shows cross-bedding and normal stratification.
4. At the east end of Otsego and Delaware Counties the valley becomes narrow. The creek has its origin three or four miles east of Charlotteville in Fox Vly in Schoharie County.

Along Schenevus Creek

1. Terraces at 1200' to 1260' on south side of Schenevus Creek between Cooperstown Junction and Maryland.
2. Small kettle holes southeast of High School in Schenevus on north side of Delaware and Hudson Railroad Track.
3. Valley becomes quite narrow at east end of Otsego County where Schenevus Creek begins. The bottom of the valley is at an elevation of 1480' and hills on either side are at an elevation of over 2300'.

Along Cherry Valley Creek

Some of the best glacial features are seen along County Road 35 which follows the east side of the valley and goes through Westville and Middlefield.

1. Terraces and morainic material are present 2 1/2 miles from Junction of Route 35 with State Route 166 just east of Milford.
2. A mile north of Westville there is hummoclly morainic material with numerous kettle holes.
3. Just north of Middlefield there is morainic material.

Along West Branch of Delaware

1. The West Branch of Delaware starts 2 - 3 miles north of Stamford.
2. East and west of Bloomville for two miles there are terraces at an elevation of about 1500' - morainic material and Kettle holes.
3. North of Delhi there is a terrace at 1440'.
4. Walton - four or five miles east of Walton between Route 10 and the river there is morainic material.
5. South of Walton about eight miles Cannonsville Reservoir starts, and obscures any glacial or glaciofluvial deposits if they are present.

Along East Branch of Delaware

1. East Branch of Delaware starts at Grand Gorge Station in a small pond and swampy area about 1/2 mile south of Grand Gorge.

2. Grand Gorge was cut when Schoharie River was dammed with ice and water flowed westward along Bear-Kill and then southward into East Branch of Delaware.
3. At Hubbell Corners and Roxbury there are terraces with stratified gravel.
4. West of Margaretville Pepacton Reservoir fills valley and obscures any glacial or glaciofluvial deposits if they are present.

List of Geological Features

As numerous outcrops of Devonian age rocks are present in the three county area, these will not be itemized, but generalizations will be made.

1. Reddish colored sandstones, siltstones and shales imply continental deposition. They can be seen in much of Delaware County, southern Otsego County at higher elevations, and in southeastern Chenango County at higher elevations.
2. Greyish and greenish colored sandstones, siltstones and shales usually imply marine deposition, however, some of these are continental. These can be seen in any of the three county area but are the only rocks found in northern Otsego County (except for some limestone) and western Chenango County.
3. Limestones are found only in the northern most part of Otsego County and adjacent Schoharie County.
4. Plant fossils can be found throughout the area and especially in the continental deposits.
5. Stumps from the oldest known forest in the world may be seen on the west side of the bridge across Schoharie Creek just north of Gilboa Dam in Schoharie County.
6. Fossils of brachiopods, pelecypods and gastropods are common in the marine sandstones, siltstones and shales.
7. Cross-bedding and ripple marks are common throughout the three county area.

List of Fire Towers

The following fire towers provide excellent vantage points to see the post-Devonian peneplane or dissected plateau, and river valleys modified by glacial ice.

Chenango County

Berry Hill Tower (nine miles west of Norwich)

Delaware County

Bramley Mountain Tower (five miles northeast of Delhi)

Rock Rift Tower (six miles north of Rock Rift)

Twadill Point Tower (four miles north of East Branch)

Mt. Utsayantha Tower (2.5 miles southeast of Stamford)

Otsego County

Hooker Hill Tower (five miles north of Maryland)

Most of the towers are open from April to November and most are accessible by car. Usually the fire departments near these towers can give you further information. Visitors are welcome.

RESOURCE GUIDE

- A. Lists of geological maps and lists of publications in geology and paleontology are available from:

New York State Museum and Science Service
State Education Department
Albany, New York 12224

- B. The following publications are particularly useful in the tri-county area:

Broughton, J. G., and Others. Geology of New York State - A Short Account. Educational Leaflets Series No. 20. $1.00.

Fairchild, H. L. The Susquehanna River in New York, etc., 1925.

Rich, J. L. Glacial Geology of the Catskills. 1935. $1.50.

Richard, L. V. and Zenger, D. H. Stratigraphy and Paleontology of the Richfield Springs and Cooperstown Quadroughs. New York: Museum Bulletin No. 396, 1964. $1.00.

- C. Miscellaneous Resources

1. Set of 30 rocks and minerals described in educational leaflet No. 10 ($.25) may be borrowed for a period of one month from:

Lending Service
Museum Education Office
New York State Museum
Albany, New York 12224

2. Educational Leaflets are available at nominal costs.

3. A children's set of 20 rocks and minerals is available at a cost of $1.25:

Archeological Survey and Description of Resources

in the PROBE Area

By F. J. Hesse

Resources available for archeological study in the counties of Chenango, Delaware, and Otsego, may be divided into three categories:

- 1.) Organizations directly affiliated with the New York State Archeological Association;
- 2.) Private collections of artifacts and reference works;
- 3.) Public collections of artifacts and reference works.

In the first of these categories the tri-county area is fortunate to have two chapters of the New York State Archeological Association -- the Chenango Chapter and the Upper Susquehanna Chapter. Both are actively engaged in contributing beneficial information such as speakers, collections of artifacts, and guidance in methods used in archeological field work. All field work should be done under the supervision of trained and/or qualified archeologists to insure conservation of the site and to provide accurate interpretations of all discoveries.

The second source of archeological information, the private collector is important because he provides many varied samples of artifacts characteristic of this area (a list of known collectors is attached). Most collectors are very willing to show their artifacts and share their experiences. However, it should be noted that the majority of collectors are not archeologists which places some limitations upon their usefulness in archeological studies.

Finally the third category, public collections of artifacts and reference works, includes libraries, museums, and schools. (A partial listing of these institutions will be found at the end of this article). The artifacts displayed in these public collections is often a mixture rarely defined by cultural sequence. However, if one is acquainted with the projectile point types that represent various cultural phases in New York, he can interpret much of the material for himself. He can also enlist the aid of competent amateur archeologists or individuals who possess a knowledge of artifacts to help interpret such collections. It cannot be stressed too strongly that if one is truly interested in learning factual information about our archeological heritage, he must listen with a soft ear to the many tales of folklore that surround the common knowledge about our former inhabitants, the Indian. Reference works important to students of archeology will be found in most libraries in the area. Since it would be impractical to make a complete survey of all libraries in the tri-county area and their potential source of written archeological information, a list of books is mentioned in the attached Bibliography so that anyone interested can request materials from their nearest library. (Most librarians will arrange inter-library loans for books not in their collections). It is, no doubt, obvious that a knowledge of artifacts if needed before one can begin to assimilate and interpret the lithic (stone) remains that will be our main interest.

Projectile points are the most common of all artifacts and perhaps the most important, since it is from these artifacts we can begin to identify different cultures and various periods of time. In New York there are 27 basic types of projectile points. These points may be broken down into different groups that represent three major time periods in New York:

- 1.) Paleo - Indian
- 2.) Archaic - Early Archaic
Middle Archaic
Late Archaic
Transitional
- 3.) Woodland - Early Woodland
Middle Woodland
Late Woodland

The Clovis Point (a projectile point dating to 7,000 B.C.) characterizes the Paleo-Indian period. The Archaic Period (3,500 to 1,000 B.C.) is a time in which hunting, fishing, and food gathering were the primary means of subsistence. One of the more important parts of this period is the Transitional stage which represents the initial usage of stone pots and a development from them to early ceramics. The third period, the Woodland, saw the full development of ceramics and agriculture.

Archeological evidence suggests a scanty Indian population of the Upper Susquehanna during historical times. Some contact camps have been found at Otsego Lake another may have been at the Goodyear Lake power dam while still another was at Otego Creek. However, the only positively identified historical sites that the writer can vouch for, based on excavation and artifact study, are as follows:

1.) The Old Fort at Sidney, New York, located on the east side of the river three quarters of a mile above the old confluence of the Unadilla and Susquehanna Rivers.

2.) The village site at Windsor, New York, also on the east side of the river, about one mile above the present village of Windsor. Both of these sites have yielded artifacts that prove conclusively direct European influence. Metal tools made of iron and brass have been found. Glass trade beads, predominantly the opalescent type, and European crockery have been recovered.

The Chenango River was more open to historical Indian settlements and probably these sites of historical note can be traced to the Oneidas of the Iroquois Nations.

Throughout the three counties of Chenango, Delaware, and Otsego, archeological evidence points to facts that reveal a near continuum of habitation of this area since the Pleistocene era. Habitation as early as 9,000 years ago is quite likely, as attested to by the discovery of the Clovis fluted points scattered over the area. Literally every basic point type representing various cultures known to have lived in New York State has been found in the three counties. Hundreds of sites have been discovered, and an untold number of artifacts have been picked up and/or dug from this tri-county area over recent years. All of this archeological evidence suggests that this was a favorable geological area, abundant in natural food supplies, with good water and a fair climate. Perhaps the only major drawback for our ancient occupants was the lack of a good chert supply. The most frequently utilized local source of chert was of nodules of flint which had been deposited here during the Glacial Period. Since the area afforded a poor supply of chert, obtaining good quality chert necessitated traveling distances. Thus we have, either by trade or travel, a variety of lithic material represented in the artifacts of our area that are not native. Some of these materials are jasper (from Pennsylvania), mottled Onondaga chert (from central and western New York), Normanskill flint (from the Hudson River Valley), rhyolite and argillite (from Pennsylvania), steatite (from either Pennsylvania or eastern New York), and high grade chalcedony (from Ohio). These flints were taken from quarries where they could be found in the form of outcroppings, usually located in areas where limestone is common. Such flint quarries can be found in central and western New York, the middle Hudson River valley and Lehigh Valley, Pennsylvania.

The materials most commonly used in the manufacture of artifacts were stone, bone, antler, wood and shell. The most durable of these being the lithic materials. Plant fibers, such as hemp, were used. Raw copper in the form of nodules was also utilized. Knives, spears, celts (axes), and other articles (including ornaments) were made from this material.

A variety of artifacts were produced besides the common projectile. Knives and scrapers are to be found in abundance. Hammer stones and net sinkers are frequently recovered along the Susquehanna. Flint drills and pins were also manufactured. Stone axes, such as celts, are common along with the more prevalent adze and chipped stone chopper. Pestles and mullers used for grinding food stuffs may also be found, as well as their counterparts: mortars and matates. Other miscellaneous artifacts such as beads, shafting stones, pendants, gorgets, pots, pipes, birdstones, bannerstones, and bar amulets are among the rarer items. Many of these artifacts can be placed chronologically in affiliation with certain cultural phases in particular time periods. Others were in general use throughout prehistoric times. The Upper Susquehanna was inhabited predominantly by prehistoric peoples who knew nothing of the white man. This fact is proven by the archeological evidence of the many artifacts and sites that have been found throughout this area.

In conclusion, it should be emphasized that the beginning student of archeology should not undertake any field work or excavations without supervision from professional archeologists. Too often, scientific information is lost or overlooked by the beginner, eager to find artifacts, because he lacks sufficient knowledge of interpretation. We all should be aware of the responsibility we have to preserve all archeological information, however small it may seem. This can only be accomplished by following the procedures set forth by the professional archeologist.

Public Buildings Where Artifacts May Be Viewed

- 1.) Cooperstown Indian Museum - Peter Correy, Director.
- 2.) Hartwick College Library, Oneonta, New York - Yager Museum
- 3.) Mt. Upton Central School
- 4.) New Berlin Public Library
- 5.) N. Y. S. College of Education at Oneonta, New York
- 6.) Old Stone Fort, Schoharie, N. Y.
- 7.) Otego Free Library
- 8.) Stamford Public Library
- 9.) Upper Susquehanna Historical Society, Oneonta, New York
- 10.) New York State Historical Association Research Library, Cooperstown, N. Y.

Private Individuals with Artifacts to Be Viewed*

- 1.) Charles S. Colburn, R. D. #3, Oneonta, N. Y., Tel. 432-3449, member of the Upper Susquehanna Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents over 800 prehistoric artifacts collected locally. Some of the outstanding pieces are: antler harpoon, large Genesee spear, steatite pot lugs and sherds, large stone pendant, and green slate pipe stem modified to a jangle. Collection is cataloged.
- 2.) Stanford J. Gibson, 29 Sunset Drive, Norwich, N. Y., Tel. 334-4407, member of the Chenango Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A., and Pennsylvania Archeological Society. Collection represents 12,000 artifacts of both prehistoric and historic origin, collected locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: pipes, Paleo artifacts, Iroquois bone items, and Iroquois pots. Visits by appointment.

- 3.) Everett Goldsmith, Center Street, Franklin, N. Y., Tel. 829-5441, member of the Upper Susquehanna Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents over 1,000 artifacts of both historic and prehistoric origin, collected locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: bannerstones, large spears, pendant, rare bone awls and bone tools, axes, and other stone tools. Collection is cataloged, and is displayed so that it can be easily seen.
- 4.) F. J. Hesse, 138 Main Street, Otego, N. Y., Tel. 988-6322, member of the Upper Susquehanna Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents about 5,000 artifacts of both prehistoric and historic origin, collected both locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: birdstones, pipes, Paleo-Indian items, rock shelter material, polished stone artifacts, and fetishes. Collection is cataloged, and is displayed so that it can be easily seen.
- 5.) Mr. Howard Hoagland, Davenport, N. Y., Tel. 278-5713, member of the Upper Susquehanna Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents about 300 prehistoric artifacts collected both locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: stone mortar, spears, Paleo-Indian items, and flint projectiles. Collection is cataloged and is displayed so it can easily be seen. Visit by appointment.
- 6.) Gaston Isliker, R. D. #1, Unadilla, N. Y., Tel. 563-7376. Collection represents 6,000 artifacts of both prehistoric and historic origin, collected both locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: semilunar knives spears, moonstones, gouge, stone and pottery vessels, pipes, stone tools, and bone tools. Collection is displayed so that it can be easily be seen. Visits by appointment.
- 7.) Donald Kilmer, R. D. #1, Hamden, N. Y. 865-4709. Collection represents over

- 200 prehistoric artifacts, all collected locally on the Kilmer Farm. Material is representative of the Owasco culture. Some of the outstanding pieces are: pipes, drills, sinewstones, and pot sherds. Collection is displayed so that it can be easily seen. Visits by appointment.
- 8.) Jasper H. Partridge, R. D. #3, Bainbridge, N. Y., Tel. 967-3955, member of the Morgan Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents nearly 3,000 artifacts of both prehistoric and historic origin, collected both locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: large collection of pottery jars and pipes, beads, effigys, and polished stone articles. Collection is cataloged, and is displayed so that it can be easily seen. Visits by appointment.
- 9.) Gally Reed, 221 Bird Avenue, Sidney, N. Y., Tel. 563-5421, member of the Upper Susquehanna Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents about 6,000 artifacts of both prehistoric and historic origin, collected both locally and outside the immediate area. Some of the outstanding pieces are: platform pipe, three-holed gorget, grooved adz, drilled stone disc, large collection of beads, and combination celt-sinew. Collection is displayed so that it can easily be seen. Visits by appointment.
- 10.) Theodore Whitney, New Berlin, N. Y., Tel. 847-9119, member of the Chenango Chapter, N.Y.S.A.A. Collection represents about 4,000 artifacts of both prehistoric and historic origin, collected locally. Some of the outstanding pieces are: preserved fabric from 900 A.D., and type set of N.Y.S projectile points. Typed pottery sherds, and a special collection of some 400 slides on archeological excavations at many sites. Collection is cataloged, and is displayed so that it can be easily seen. Visits by appointment.
- 11.) Miss Ann Willis, 10 Beaver Street, Stamford, N. Y., Tel. 652-2601. Collections represents about 200 pieces of prehistoric artifacts collected both locally and from the southwest U. S. Some of the outstanding pieces are: pestle, chert projectile points, preserved fabric, and large ovate knife. Visits by appointment.

Artifact Identification

Plate 1

- A. Gorget - material - banded slate; use - problematical (possibly a hair ornament); generally used during the early and middle Woodland stages.
- B. Clovis fluted point - material - chert; use - javelin or spearpoint head; used during the Paleo-Indian period. (7000 B.C.)
- C. Pitted hammerstone - material - usually local cobblestones; use - pounding; used throughout all stages.
- D. Celt - material - schist; (other hard stone was also utilized); use - weapons and woodworking tools (this should not be confused with the adz); used throughout most stages.
- E. Corner-notched point of the Brewerton type - material - chert; use - javelin head; used during the Middle Archaic stage.
- F. Flint pin - material - chert; use - probably a clothes or hair fastener; this particular specimen used during late Woodland.

Plate 2

- G. Pestle - material - stone; use - crushing or pounding substances in mortars; common throughout Archaic and Woodland stages.
- H. Pendant - material - usually of a hard stone, quite often slate; use - ornament; common during the Woodland stage.
- I. Bone fishhook - material - bone; use - fishing; used from Early Archaic to Late Woodland.
- J. Harpoon - material - antler; use - fishing; used from Middle Archaic to Late Woodland.
- K. Pop-eyed birdstone - material - banded slate; use - problematical; used during Early Woodland.

Plate 3

- L. Scraper - material - chert; use - working of wood and hides; used throughout all stages.

- M. Knife - material - chert; use - cutting tool; basic forms were used throughout all stages.
- N. Plumet - material - granite; use - possibly used in connection with fishing paraphernalia; used during the Middle Archaic.
- O. Full-grooved axe - material - hard stone; use - weapon or woodworking tool; used from Middle to Late Woodland. Not common in New York State.
- P. Stone bead - material - sandstone; use - spearhead; used during Middle Archaic (This particular example is of the Genesee type).

Plate 4

- R. Atlatl weight - material - both hard and soft stone were used; use - part of a spear throwing device; used mostly during the Archaic.
- S. Pottery effigy - material - terra cotta; use - this particular specimen adorned a castellation on a pottery vessel; used during Late Woodland.
- T. Smoking pipe - material - terra cotta; use - smoking; used from Early Woodland to historic times.
- U. Effigy pipe bowl - (stem missing) material - terra cotta; use - smoking; used from Early Woodland to historic times.
- V. Fetish - (bird) material - soft stone; use - magico-religious charm; used from Late Woodland to historic times.

INTRODUCTION

County Political Structures in the PROBE Area

The political structure unit which follows is broken into two major parts. Part I is a written description and model of Otsego County Government. Part II includes two political structure models - one of Delaware County and the other of Chenango County. A tape, produced by James Gill, accompanies the two models in Part II and is available for reproduction at the Title III Centers mentioned in the introduction. A list of significant people who may aid in research and/or act as resource people is also included in Part II.

PART I

Otsego County Governmental Structure

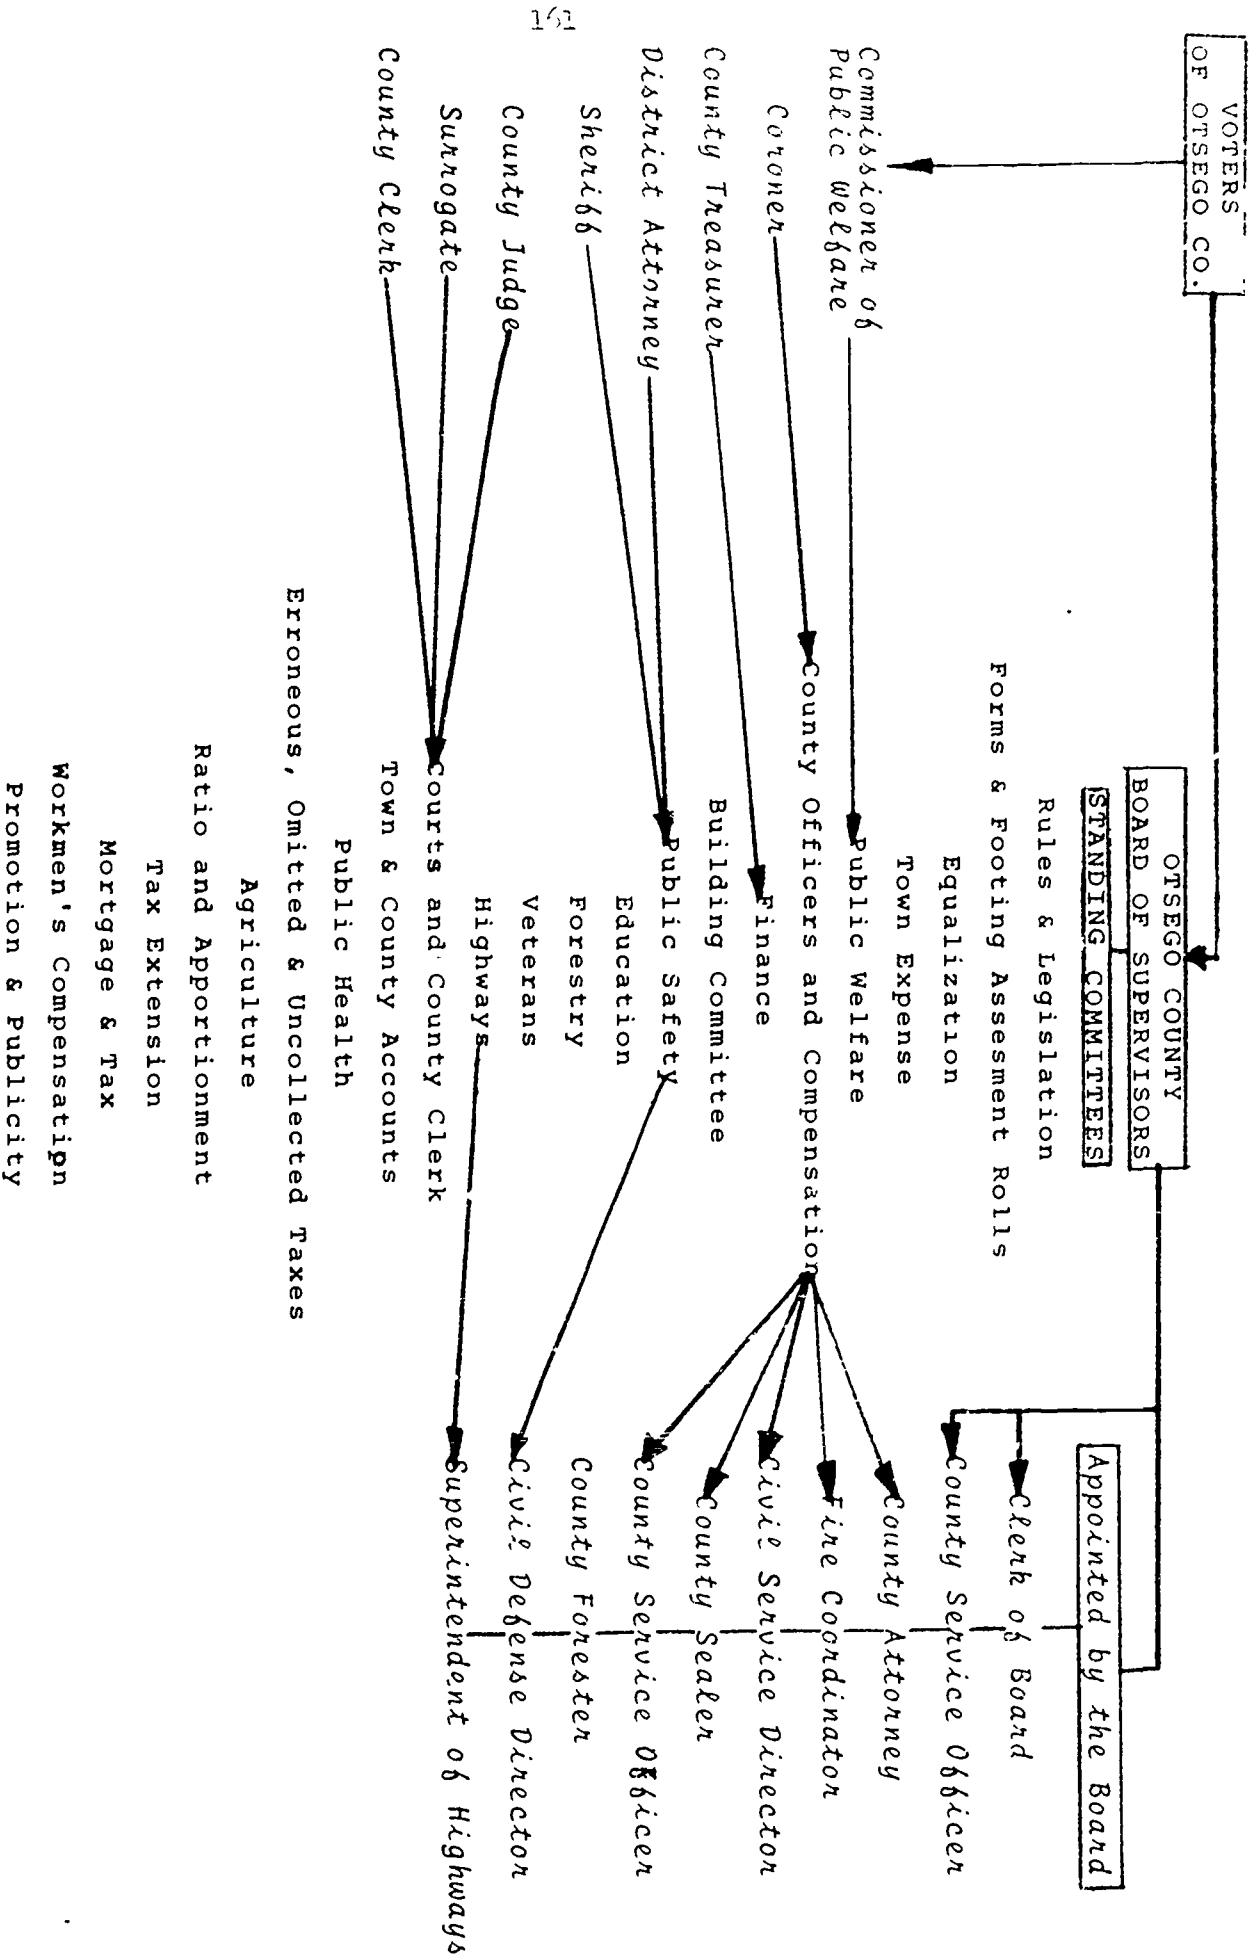

OTSEGO COUNTY
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

The responsibility for county wide governmental operations rests in the hands of a twenty-five (25) member Board of Supervisors. These supervisors are elected representatives of the various towns in Otsego County. Although reapportionment will make changes in the structure of the Board, the functions will remain very much the same.

These Board functions are outlined in a small pamphlet, Otsego County Board of Supervisors - Rules of Order. This sixteen page booklet establishes meeting procedures and standing committees. Under Rules of Order the Board Chairman, elected from and by Board members, appoints, with Board consent, standing committees. The committees consist of three members except for nine members each in the Equalization Committee and the Committee on Forms and Footing of Assessment and four members on the Committee on Public Welfare. Each committee's duties and areas of responsibility are outlined. At present there are twenty-three standing committees. (The twenty-third committee has been added since the last publication of Rules and Order and thus has not been given an official number.)

In addition to the Board there are a number of elected or appointed officials who Generally operate independently of the Board although they do make annual reports and are responsible to a specific standing committee. The organizational flow chart included herein indicates the elected or appointed officials and their relationship to standing committees.

DELAWARE COUNTY GOVERNMENT STRUCTURE
(FLOW CHART 1964)

EXPLANATION

The Board of Supervisors (11) in Delaware County elected at the local level (1) act at the County level. They hold broad powers through audit and control of county finances, approval and appointments of many officers, and creation of authorized committees (see (A) and (B)). Note Offices (9) through (11) approved or appointed by Board of Supervisors. All bills, finances audited and approved by Board of Supervisors, usually no auditor appointed. Supervisors act on/through all standing committees.

Teachers should note and emphasize inter-relationships of different levels of government. County is not to be assumed the process of decentralization of Government from higher levels. Aid, assistance and power at county level is derived from higher levels and the services it provides. They should be encouraged to direct inquiries to the proper (A) Standing Committees of the Board of Supervisors as all action must be moved through these Committees. Committees (B) are authorized by law/approved by the Board of Supervisors, often act autonomously by delegated power from higher levels of government.

Delaware County has one major exception in offices filled by election, that is office of (15) Medical Examiner appointed by voters under title of (15) Medical Examiner

SOME RESOURCES IN THE SHERBURNE LIBRARY

The Sherburne Library, East State Street, Sherburne, New York, has many excellent books and scrap books concerning the history of Sherburne and the surrounding area. Below are some of the most interesting books and reference materials:

Early Years in Smyrna and Our First Old Home Week by George Munson.
Chenango Union Press.

Excerpts from the above:

First settlers - 1792 - Joseph Porter and wife. Wife died soon after arrival and was buried beside an Indian family.

Second family - Joseph Tobey and wife. Arrived March 3, 1793. On May 7, 1793 Jerusha Tobe, was born. He was the first white child born in the town.

The book is fascinating reading. The early settlers, their problems and ways of living are discussed in a very readable way. Seventh grade students would love it!

The Story of Pitcher Springs by Mabel Hagen.

This is a type-written account of how the discovery of mineral springs caused a community to spring up. It includes the story of the discovery of the springs and of the cholera epidemic which made the springs famous all over New York State and some of the nearby states in 1832.

There are excellent descriptions of the coming of early families, their hardships, occupations and family life. There is a very good description of the early school - page 63 (1832-44). There are copies of the minutes of the early school meetings which are most interesting.

It is interesting to note that the population in early times was 250; in 1954 it was six people and today I could not find anyone who actually lives there. The springs can be seen but one has to be carefully directed. However, they are covered with stones and no use is made of the mineral water.

The Chenango Canal by Barry Beyer - 1954.

The 1850 Census of Sherburne

A History of the Village of Sherburne -^s Illus. 1896 - John Gomph.

William Smith and Lady by Katherine Roof. Note: This is a biography of the William Smith who married Abigail Adams and gives the reason why she is not buried with him in the Sherburne cemetery.

Scrap Books - There are several of these containing very worthwhile material on the history of Chenango County and Otsego County. Also, there are many books containing the minutes and activities of the D.A.R.

APPENDIX H

The St. Johnsville Enterprise News a few years ago published an account of Adam Helmer's heroic run of September 16, 1778, made to save the German Flats settlers from Brant's raiders. Helmer's run was successful and only two of the people of the western Mohawk Valley settlements met death when the red and white savages destroyed houses, barns, and crops. "Adam Helmer's Famous Run" is the work of Mrs. Mildred R. Staunton, a teacher at Mount Vernon and a great-great-grand daughter of Scout Adam Helmer...

Before the publication of Mrs. Staunton's description, there had been many versions of Helmer's run--as to where it started, and the route taken. Her account now clears up the discrepancies and contradictions and the argument over the feat made famous in the popular novel, "Drums Along the Mohawk." One of these, which affected the length of Helmer's run, or seemed to, was the statement in the Gov. Clinton papers, Vol. 4, P. 39, that Helmer lay in bushes "about nine miles south of German Flats and saw the enemy pass." This was so but the brief report mentioned does not say that Helmer had previously run about 25 miles, as Mrs. Staunton's account brings out.

Following is Mrs. Staunton's article in full:

"Question Over Helmer's Famous Run Is Finally Solved

The Following is an Authentic Account of Adam Helmer's Feat by a Descendant

Start at Edmeston Manor, Southeast Outpost of Otsego Nearest Indian Stronghold"

"In the spring these brave people again planted their fields. Except for occasional attacks upon lonely farm dwellings no hostilities occurred in the valley until July 18, 1778, when some Indians and Tories attacked Andrustown and burned all but one house and killed or captured most of its inhabitants. A few survivors reached the forts under the cover of darkness and told harrowing tales of the atrocities witnessed. On the same day Springfield was destroyed and the few survivors fled to Cherry Valley.

With the winter ahead, crops had to be harvested or famine would complete the destruction begun by their enemies. Brant was known to be at Unadilla where his supplies were getting low. Since his usual method of obtaining food was by force, the colonists decided to send a squad of nine scouts, Lieutenant Adam Helmer being in charge, to the Unadilla valley to ascertain Brant's plans and to warn the outlying settlements if it appeared unsafe to finish their harvest. Meanwhile all able bodied men, women and children were toiling in the fields.

About two miles north of South Edmeston, on the east side of the Unadilla river is the historic old farm of Percifer Carr. This property, prior to, and during the Revolution, was known as Edmeston Manor, being part of a grant of land to Colonel Robert Edmeston for services rendered during the French and Indian wars. It consisted of 10,000 acres on the east side of the river and extended north to the section owned by the Tunnecliffes near Schuyler Lake. It lay on the southeast outpost, nearest to the stronghold of Brant and his Indians. An old trail led north along the ridges to Schuyler Lake.

These families were accused of Tory sympathies which was denied at least by the Tunnecliffes and the Carrs were actually taken to Canada by the Indians as prisoners. They were in a difficult position coming under Brant's influence and unable to adopt any other policy than the one pursued. Both families suffered heavily during the war.

In 1775 a band of strange Indians captured the Carrs and took them prisoners to Canada. Their house was burned as well as their barn and the grist mill on Carr Brook. Today one can still see the dam which was built across the creek several hundred feet up the ravine where a water wheel operated and can see places in the craggy walls of the gorge where rocks were hewn for cellar walls and chimneys. A huge weather beaten old willow still clings to the side of the old crumbling wall of the dam, where a stream of clear limpid water tumbles down into a deep dark pool. This tree is estimated to be well over two hundred years old. A few hundred feet to the north, farther up the hillside its venerable companion, an old oak badly shattered by wind and lightning. If these old trees could only speak, what harrowing, yet thrilling tales, would have rewarded my quest. As it is, about half a dozen terse military reports and some few other documents are the only visible sources of information in regard to what follows.

At this point the Unadilla river flows through a valley flanked on either side by a range of hills rising steeply to an altitude of about five hundred feet above a narrow plain in width from a mile to two miles. Today one can still climb up the old trail from the Carr home following the crest of the ravine through the pasture in which one passes the venerable trees mentioned above, and up to the woods which crown the hills, and thence north over the original trail for several miles. The first part of this trail follows the crest of the hills through what still remains of the old forest. Constant use as a road for hauling lumber and cord wood for nearly two centuries has kept it in fine condition. The remainder is dirt road which south of West Burlington has been abandoned for a few miles but farther on, near Burlington, coincides with a new highway which leads to the foot of Schuyler Lake.

Another interesting thing to be seen on this old farm is a wonderful spring of clear cold water issuing from beneath the roots of an old tree at the foot of the hill directly behind the site of the original Carr home. It was used by the Indians before the advent of the white people and is still in constant use. It was at this spring that the nine scouts were surprised by the Indians. Coming down off the hill as the red men did, the little party of scouts stood no chance against a horde of forty yelling savages and the survivors were driven into the river. In the confusion, Adam Helmer, who was fortunate enough to secrete himself beneath a pile of bushes, waited until the Indians had all passed and then began his famous run to warn his loved ones as well as his friends and neighbors, of their danger. From the spring on the Carr farm to Fort Herkimer it is at least thirty miles as the crow flies and to have zig-zagged along the old trails in order to reach the outlying settlements as tradition chronicles, must have about doubled the trip.

Residents of Unadilla Valley assure me that there is no doubt of his having followed the old trail from the Carr farm to Schuyler Lake and that he came down the west side of the lake. Tradition relates that he warned his sister, Maria, wife of Peter Hoyer at Andrustown and there received fresh footwear. The Augustinus Hess family states that he warned them at Columbia and that all escaped, except the old father Dennis who, spite of the waring, returned to the house for something and was shot as he left his gate. They all made their way to Fort Herkimer in safety. Mrs. Catherine Myers, then a child of ten years of age, who lived in the valley in that vicinity, leaves a vivid description as he came down into the valley just as sunset of that memorable day. She says that he came down what is now called Warren Road between the houses of Rudolph Shoemaker and Jacob Myers. She states, "Helmer's clothing was torn to tatters, his eyes were bloodshot, his hands and face and limbs were bleeding and lacerated from the effects of brambles and bushes through which he had forced his headlong flight. He halted only long enough to shout, "Flee for your lives. The enemy is not an hour behind," and hurried on to the next house.

On through the valley he sped shouting his warning at each house as he ran. When he reached the fort the big cannon boomed out its alarm to call everyone to its shelter. He made his report to Colonel Bellinger, commander of the fort stating that the squad of nine scouts was surprised at Edmeston and driven into the river and that he alone survived by hiding beneath some bushes and that he had made all possible speed to warn the settlers and that nine miles back up the hills he had hidden beneath a tree and counted more than two hundred of the enemy, which was less than half of their number.

Fortunately a heavy rain began falling which hid the activities of the colonists from the Indians who made their appearance behind the Rudolph Shoemaker house just as the storm broke. They encamped in the ravine which extends back among the hills behind the Shoemaker and the Myers homes, partly in what is now the village of Mohawk and partly in the village of Ilion. This is a wild uncultivated spot.

Meanwhile the exhausted Helmer, after a light meal, lay down upon an improvised bed in a corner and fell into a deep sleep of utter exhaustion. So sound was his sleep that the arrival of hundreds of his neighbors during the night did not disturb him. He slumbered on through the noise and excitement occasioned by the occupants of the fort being aroused before daybreak on September 17, 1778, by the burning of nearby houses and barns. All through that harrowing day he slept and when twenty-four hours had elapsed and he still could not be aroused the people began to fear that his superhuman exertion might prove his undoing and that he might never awaken. At last, after nearly thirty-six hours of unbroken rest, the resourceful Dr. William Petrie finally aroused him and gave him some nourishment.

Three days later the intrepid Helmer led a company of militia back to the Carr farm where they found three bodies of the scouts slain as they were surprised at the spring. These bodies were buried where found, and a monument marks their resting place although there has, to date, been no proof of their identities. It is reported that the militia overtook some Indians at this spring and fired upon them. Since, in later years, bullets have been found in the trees and that an old sword has been dug up in this vicinity, it would seem these facts give credence to that report. In reprisal, the colonists sent some friendly Oneida Indians into the field and they captured some ten prisoners and recovered a few head of cattle. This was but a trifle compared to the loss of 63 houses, 59 barns, full of grain, 3 grist mills, 345 horses, 229 horned cattle, 269 sheep, and 93 oxen.

As there is some difference of opinion as to the type of man Scout Adam Helmer was, I will give you a description by his grandson Lewis Crim, formerly of Weedsport, New York. He remembered his grandfather Helmer as a worn bent old man with blue eyes and white hair, who walked with a cane and could seldom be prevailed upon to talk about his exploits. Most of the material which I received from the Crim family came from Helmer's three sons-in-law, Henry Crim, Henry Passage and George Passage who delighted their children by describing Helmer in his prime and relating all his exploits. They claimed that he was slight and fair with blue eyes and light hair. He was about five feet eight inches tall and weighed about 150 pounds. They pointed to the one young man in the family with great pride, as the one who most resembled him.

Very little is known in regard to the five other scouts who escaped the fury of the Indians at the Carr farm. There is no doubt but that one did all he could to warn any stragglers among the hunters; only one person besides Dennis Hess perished in that raid and that was a man named McGinnis who after receiving the warning, hid in his barn and was burned in it."
