ABSTRACT

Based on a coordinated aural-oral approach, this language arts curriculum guide was developed to teach Navajo students English as a second language. The design of the curriculum provides for longitudinal and horizontal movements to favor concept formation by inductive experience. The plan gears instruction to three instructional levels: low (the learner with first to third grade reading achievement); medium (the learner with fourth to sixth grade reading skills); and high (the learner with seventh grade reading skills or above). Within each class the program provides for the placement of students in a group appropriate to their academic achievement and readiness. Each quarter is broken down into units on grammar, writing, speaking and listening, and reading and literature, with performance objectives listed under each. It is anticipated that this curriculum plan will offer a scope that will stimulate the students' interests, provide a means for closer correlation with their vocational interests and training, and open an avenue for broader cultural integration. THE LANGUAGE ARTS PHILOSOPHY

We believe the goal of our English language arts is the maximum development of language competency enabling the individual to function favorably in today's society. This program will be based on a co-ordinated aural-oral approach.

Although functional and practical English is the key to all areas of the new learnings, it must have its foundations in the wholesome integration with the student's native culture and in the nourishment of the aesthetic nature of man.

Terminal objectives for student performance will be sequenced on a continuum to allow progress from simple to complex, from functional to enrichment, from concrete to abstract. Experiences will become less concrete and more vicarious as the student moves along the continuum. Progress will be structured to allow realistically for the needs and interests of the student, for appropriate minimal standards, and for evaluation.

The student will be placed according to objectives attained; encouraged to increase in knowledge, skills, and positive attitudes. He should be aware of his progress and position on the continuum.

Because nearly all of our students are learning English as a second language, we feel that our approach to a useful program of grammar instruction must be focused on the forms, functions and meanings of the sentence.

Despite the trend away from traditional prescriptive grammar instruction and the premise that the native speaker of English already has a functional command of the language, our problem is not that of analyzing the reasons for the ways one uses the language but that of showing a student how to use the language.

CURRICULUM RATIONALE

Intermountain Navajo students are overaged and are three to six years behind in academic achievement. Because of the advanced age of these students a curriculum has been organized and adapted to meet their needs in mastering the skills of a second language sufficiently to prepare themselves for advanced schooling or to function in an occupational trade.	Proficiency in the use of spoken and written English has been one of the most limiting factors in placing these students in fields of employment. It is anticipated that this curriculum plan will offer a scope that will stimulate the student's interest, provide a means for closer correlation with his vocational interests and training, and at the same time open an avenue for broader cultural integration.	Within each class--pré-high, freshman, sophomore, junior, or senior--the program provides for the placement of the student in a group appropriate to his academic achievement and readiness. This enables the student to move at his own pace. An advanced freshman could be receiving instruction in a "high group," while a slow senior receives the same kind of learning in a slower paced "low group."
The design of the curriculum, as shown in the chart, provides for longitudinal and horizontal movements to favor concept formation by inductive experience. This design places the new learning in the setting of four language arts areas to encourage facility in the use of the skill. It is intended that work in all four areas be used concurrently as reinforcing factors and not as separate media.	The curriculum offerings are grouped into levels of proficiency to define basic minimal learnings. The scope of the program and the objectives have been kept constant. The plan gears instruction to three general levels: low (the learner with first to third grade reading achievement); medium (the learner with fourth to sixth level reading skills); high (the learner with seventh grade reading skills, or above).	The staff is encouraged to use this plan critically as a working model. Teachers should note their point for revision with suggestions for implementation. Refinements from teacher suggestions will be significant in this early stage of development in rendering a practical and functional curriculum.

ORIENTATION

TERMINAL OBJECTIVE

IN THE SCHOOL ORIENTATION UNIT, THE STUDENT WILL: CONTRIBUTE, AT LEAST ONCE ORALLY, IN ESTABLISHING CLASS GOALS AND STANDARDS; TOUR THE CAMPUS, LOCATING GYMS, CLASSROOMS, BUILDINGS BY SUBJECT AREAS, ADMINISTRATION BUILDINGS, CAMPUS SHOPS, AUDITORIUM, ETC.

The student will:

- * Introduce himself in an acceptable manner to the class.
- * Introduce a friend or the teacher to the class.
- * Answer correctly (70% of the time) review questions about introductions and goals.
- * Discuss and set up classroom and building standards.
- * Tour the building, locating the library, office, rooms, and his own classroom.

The student will (in addition to low level):

- * Review an outline of the semester's work.
- * Participate in setting standards for class work and conduct.
- * Take the C. A. T. or the Nelson Silent Reading tests to determine his reading level.

The student will (in addition to medium level):

- * Write the rules of conduct which will govern student behavior in the Language Arts Department.
- * Indicate on maps the major areas of the school: academic and vocational offices, classrooms and shops, guidance center, care center, clinic and administrative offices.
- * Identify, by photograph and name, administrative personnel on campus as well as the locations in which these people may be found.
