ABSTRACT

Listed for each of the 50 alphabetically presented states are the legal definitions of handicapping conditions and age requirements to determine eligibility for public school special education programs. Explained are changes in special education laws, which have increased exceptional children's range of eligibility for special education services to below 6 and above 18 years of age in some states (some states have removed all minimum age requirements). Other changes mentioned are expansion of categories of children (such as children with handicaps resulting from rubella, or learning disabled children) eligible for programs, and endowment of the state superintendent of schools with authority to include children with handicaps who are not mentioned in listed categories. As the opportunities for handicapped children to receive an education expand in the United States, there is an increasing awareness that the degree and quality of this expansion is heavily dependent on the activities of government at all levels and in all branches -- executive, judicial, and legislative. Recognizing government's crucial role in the expansion process and the information needs of persons or agencies involved in or considering change, The Council for Exceptional Children through a grant from the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped, U.S. Office of Education established the State-Federal Information Clearinghouse for Exceptional Children (SFICEC) to provide this information.

The purpose of SFICEC is to identify, acquire, process, selectively retrieve, and disseminate information pertaining to government and the education of handicapped children. In carrying out this charge, SFICEC has developed a computer-based information system for the efficient and accurate retrieval of information.

To disseminate this information, SFICEC develops and distributes information products with material drawn from its data base. The products focus on specific areas pertaining to government and the education of handicapped children and utilize information from the law, administrative literature, attorney general's opinions and actual litigation. Other products discuss key issues and areas of concern to educators, parents, and public policy makers. In addition, SFICEC is also prepared to conduct searches to answer individual specific information requests.

Acknowledgement must be given to Beverly Wetzel, Nancy Selzer and Nancy Bolick of the State Federal Information Clearinghouse for Exceptional Children staff for the capable manner in which they contributed to the writing, typing, proofreading and in fact the entire production of this document.

HANDICAPPED CHILDREN REDEFINED - LEGAL ELIGIBILITY FOR SERVICES EXPANDED

Alan Abeson/Elaine Trudeau

Within recent years, marked changes have occurred in special education laws to increase the range of exceptional children eligible for special education services. The impact of Headstart programs, federal interest in early education for the handicapped (The Handicapped Children's Early Education Assistance Act, P.L. 90-538), and research demonstrating the value of preschool programs have motivated many states to eliminate age 6 as the "open sesame" to school for the handicapped. At the other end of the scale where laws in the past provided for the conclusion of educational experiences for the handicapped at age 16 or 18, some states have extended the limit to 21 and in at least one case, 24 (Kansas General Statutes, Section 72-5342).

Since at present there is no clear determination of the optimal age for introducing handicapped children to educational programs, some states have passed legislation which specifically removes minimum age requirements. In Idaho and Kansas, where such laws have been passed (Idaho Code, Section 33-2001; Kansas, Senate Bill 31, 1969), programs may theoretically be provided for handicapped children at birth. The Maryland and Connecticut laws also state no minimum age but indicate that special education programs may be conducted for children "who have not attained school age but whose educational potential will be irreparable diminished with special education at an early age [Connecticut General Statutes, 1967 Supplement, Section 10-76d; Maryland Senate Bills 17 & 38, 1969]." California law permits the operation of experimental programs for deaf and severely hard of hearing children from 18 months to 3 years (California Education Code, Section 6812-5). Similarly, in Indiana experimental programs may be established for deaf children as young as 6 months (Indiana House Enrolled Act No. 1070, 1969).

More than one-half of the states presently authorize programs for the handicapped until age 21 are eligible to continue to receive special education services until they reach 24. Students at the state school for the deaf in Iowa may have the usual age limit of 21 extended to age 35 if special circumstances exist (Iowa Code Title 12, Section 270.3). In other states such as Ohio and Oklahoma no maximum age is stated for the provision of special education services.

Beyond the expansion of services to children on the basis of earlier and later ages, the categories of exceptional children eligible for programs have also been expanded. For example, after the rubella epidemic of 1964 which produced major concern about multiply handicapped children a number of states added this category or the deaf blind to their definitions of handicapped children. The increasing awareness of the "learning disabled child" and pressures to provide programs for such children have resulted in the inclusion of terms denoting learning disabilities in the definitions of the handicapped in 18 states (Legislation for Children with Learning Disabilities,

*Updated from a December, 1970 Exceptional Children article

CEC-SFICEC, 1970)

Examination of the definitions of handicapped children which are utilized within state laws indicated that the majority lists the categories of children who are eligible for programs. A typical example of this type of definition is the following from Kansas:

'Exceptional children' means children under twenty-one years of age who (a) are crippled; or (b) have defective sight; or (c) are hard of hearing; or (d) have an impediment in speech; or (e) have heart disease; or (f) have tuberculosis; or (g) have cerebral palsy; or (h) by reason of emotional and social maladjustment or intellectual inferiority or superiority do not profit from ordinary instructional methods; or (i) are unable to attend the regular public school classes with normal children by reason of any physical or mental defect [Kansas General Statutes, Section 72-5334].

While the West Virginia law also lists categories, it also provides the state superintendent with the power to include other children not listed as handicapped and thus eligible for special education. This law includes the following exceptionalities: "visually impaired, hearing impaired, physically or orthopedically handicapped, autistic, intellectually gifted, socially or emotionally maladjusted including the delinquent, learning disabilities both physical and psychological, and any other areas of exceptionality which may be identified and approved by the state superintendent of free schools [West Virginia Senate Enrolled Bill 44, 1969]."

In an attempt to provide flexibility in the definition of the handicapped which would prevent children from "falling into the cracks" between categories, New York state in 1967 adopted a law which defines a handicapped child as "one who, because of mental, physical, or emotional reasons cannot be educated in regular classes but can benefit by special services... [Laws of New York Article 89, Section 4401]" leaving the further delineation of children to be served to the state education department.

It must be added that although a specific category of handicapped child may be absent from the state definition of handicapped children, it does not mean that services are not provided to those children. The rules and regulations adopted by each state to implement its laws frequently refine and interpret the definitions to be broader and more inclusive.

Presented below is an overview of the definitions of the handicapped and the age requirements for programs in the 50 states.
