ABSTRACT

This document is concerned with the major components of the process of planning new or remodeling old facilities for the teaching of home economics. The philosophy of home economics and trends within the field of study should form the basis for planning facilities, followed by a delineation of the roles and responsibilities of all involved personnel in order to establish necessary linkages. Needs assessment in the areas of program, students, and facilities forms the third stage followed finally by a checking of the curriculum areas by teachers to identify local program needs. The importance of wide ranging involvement is emphasized. Flowcharts and extensive checklists are included in the expectation that by these means attention will be directed to critical issues and processes involved in the complex procedures concerned with facility change. Foreword

EDUCATORS at all levels are frequently faced with making decisions concerning the planning of new or the remodeling of existing facilities. Administrators, principals, and teachers are called upon to present evidence that changes in facilities are needed. Superintendents and Boards of Education are involved in translating this evidence to the community. To provide educators with a resource to assist in accomplishing these missions, a task force was created by the State Department of Public Instruction to develop Guidelines for Planning Facilities, Home Economics Education, Secondary Schools.

This document, Guidelines for Planning Facilities, is based upon the home economics philosophy and program as reflected in the 1970 Wisconsin Home Economics Conceptual Structure and Planning Guide. It is concerned with four major components of the planning process: philosophy and trends in the field of study, planning models and related functions, planning principles and assessment, and planning specifications for program areas. This information should be useful to local school districts in planning for a facility change. Specific objectives of the document are to

- state the philosophy of home economics and trends in the field of study as the basis for planning facilities.
- provide a basis for understanding the necessity to involve concerned persons in all stages of the planning process.
- provide ways and means for local school districts to accomplish a self-evaluation in preparation for planning new or remodeling existing facilities.
- emphasize the necessity for keeping open the lines of communication throughout the planning process.
- assist all people involved in planning with the formation of creative solutions to problems by utilizing contributions from a variety of resources.
- prevent important considerations from being overlooked during the planning process.

The publication is divided into four parts, each of which is related to every other part. Therefore, it is important to begin with the study of philosophy and trends. The next step is to establish linkages by delineating roles and responsibilities of all involved personnel. The third step in the planning process is to assess needs relative to program, students and facilities. In the fourth section, checklists related to home economics curriculum areas are provided to assist the teacher identify local program needs.

It is hoped that this document will provide assistance in directing attention to critical issues and processes involved in the complex procedures concerned with facility change.

Acknowledgements

THE Department of Public Instruction wishes to express gratitude to the committee of Wisconsin home economics teachers and consultants whose invaluable contributions made possible the development of Guidelines for Planning Facilities, Home Economics Education, Secondary Schools. Recognition is also given to those district administrators, Local Vocational Education Coordinators, teacher educators, and classroom teachers who read and evaluated the working papers of this document.

Philosophy and Trends

Philosophy of Home Economics Education in Wisconsin: K-12

THE BASIC philosophy of home economics education in Wisconsin reflects those goals of general education which strive to provide optimum opportunities for each student to realize his potential. The particular concern of home economics is education for family living. This education continuously seeks to promote the effectiveness of the individual as a member of family and society in the self-actualization process. The individual, the family, and the society exist in a dynamic relationship; change in any one is associated with change in the other two. In support of this philosophy, the Wisconsin Home Economics Conceptual Structure and Planning Guide focuses on the integration of three unifying areas of family living: Human Growth and Development, Personal and Family Relationships, Management of Personal and Family Resources. The study of the interrelations of these three areas is the core of home economics education which synthesizes knowledge drawn from its own research, from the physical, biological, social, and behavioral sciences, and from the arts and applies this knowledge in promoting the well-being of individuals and families in society.¹

Trends in Home Economics Education: K-12

To implement this philosophy, attention must be given to trends in home economics education. Currently, these include:

1. Decision-making and evaluation in the use of human and material resources relative to values and goals.
2. Multi-disciplinary approach and team teaching in all subject areas.
3. Use of the home economics facility by other school personnel and the community.
4. Coeducational classes in all subject matter areas.
5. Independent learning activities.
6. Increasing enrollments in home economics.
7. Use of instructional materials which are multi-cultural, multi-racial and multi-class oriented.
8. Use of a variety of media equipment and instructional materials.
9. Increased adaptation of learning modes to meet the needs of exceptional students.
10. Comprehensive conceptual teaching with learning activities designed to meet the needs of local communities.

11. Consideration for the development of wage-earning programs in relation to appropriate subject areas articulated with post high school programs.
12. Consideration for the development of career education concepts in relation to all subject areas.
13. Utilization of the community as an extension of the classroom and as a learning center.
14. Utilization of community-based personnel and resources in the classroom.
15. Increased citizen involvement in planning and implementing programs in local schools.
16. Applicability of home economics concepts K-12.
17. Articulation of home economics programs K-12.

Trends in Family and Child Development

1. Increased consideration for variations in individual and family life styles.
2. Concept of inter-personal relationships within the family extended to embrace the human race.
3. Concept of the family as a nurturance center for all family members.
4. Emphasis on the development of a self-concept and role identity.
5. Increased interchange and sharing of responsibilities as family members assume multi-roles in society.
6. Increased options for the use of leisure time.
7. Emphasis on the development of the total person—physical, social, emotional and intellectual development.
8. Coordination of human growth and development theory with opportunities for interacting with children through school and/or community situations.
9. Increased reliance of the family upon outside agencies to share its responsibilities.
10. Increasing number of children in day care/nursery school situations.
11. Increasing career opportunities in family and child services.
12. Integration of parent education as a part of the child development program.
13. Emphasis on the importance of play as a medium for learning.

Trends in Family Consumer Education

1. Inclusion of consumer education concepts kindergarten through grade 12.
2. Multi-disciplinary approach serving as a basis for teaching the concepts concerned with the management of human and material resources relating to the decision-making process of family and individual values and goals.

3. Increased citizen involvement in planning and implementing educational programs in local schools.
4. Increased consumer advocacy to effect more efficient management of personal, family and environment resources.
5. Transfer of family-oriented activities from production to consumption of goods and services.
6. Increased involvement in legislative procedures for the protection of consumer rights.

Trends in Family Housing and Interiors

1. Emphasis on a living environment which fosters human and family development.
2. Increased mechanization in the home.
3. Increased mobility of individuals and families.
4. Increased number of housing choices for families.
5. Consideration of the relationship of the stages of family life cycle to choice of housing.
6. Increased number of families choosing housing units other than single family dwellings.
7. Increased number of homes occupied by nuclear families rather than extended families.
8. Expanded range of materials used for housing and furnishings.
9. Increasing opportunities for careers related to housing and interiors.

Trends in Family Clothing and Textiles

1. Consideration of the psychological-social value of clothing.
2. Construction of clothing as a management decision, an expression of creativity and or constructive use of leisure time.
3. Consideration of the influence of needs and environment on clothing selection.
4. Consideration of the evolution of fashion and garment industry.
5. Increasing opportunities for careers related to clothing and textiles.

Trends in Family Nutrition and Meal Management

1. Emphasis upon psychological-social aspects of family nutrition and meal management as well as the application of principles from scientific nutrition research.
2. Increased number of food choices available to meet daily nutritional requirements.
3. Alternative meal patterns selected as a result of increased variety in life styles.
4. Increased awareness of the relationship between management of resources, leisure time and family meal patterns.
5. Application of technological changes in food and nutritional science to community and world food problems.
6. Increasing opportunities for careers related to foods and nutrition.

Planning Models and Related Functions

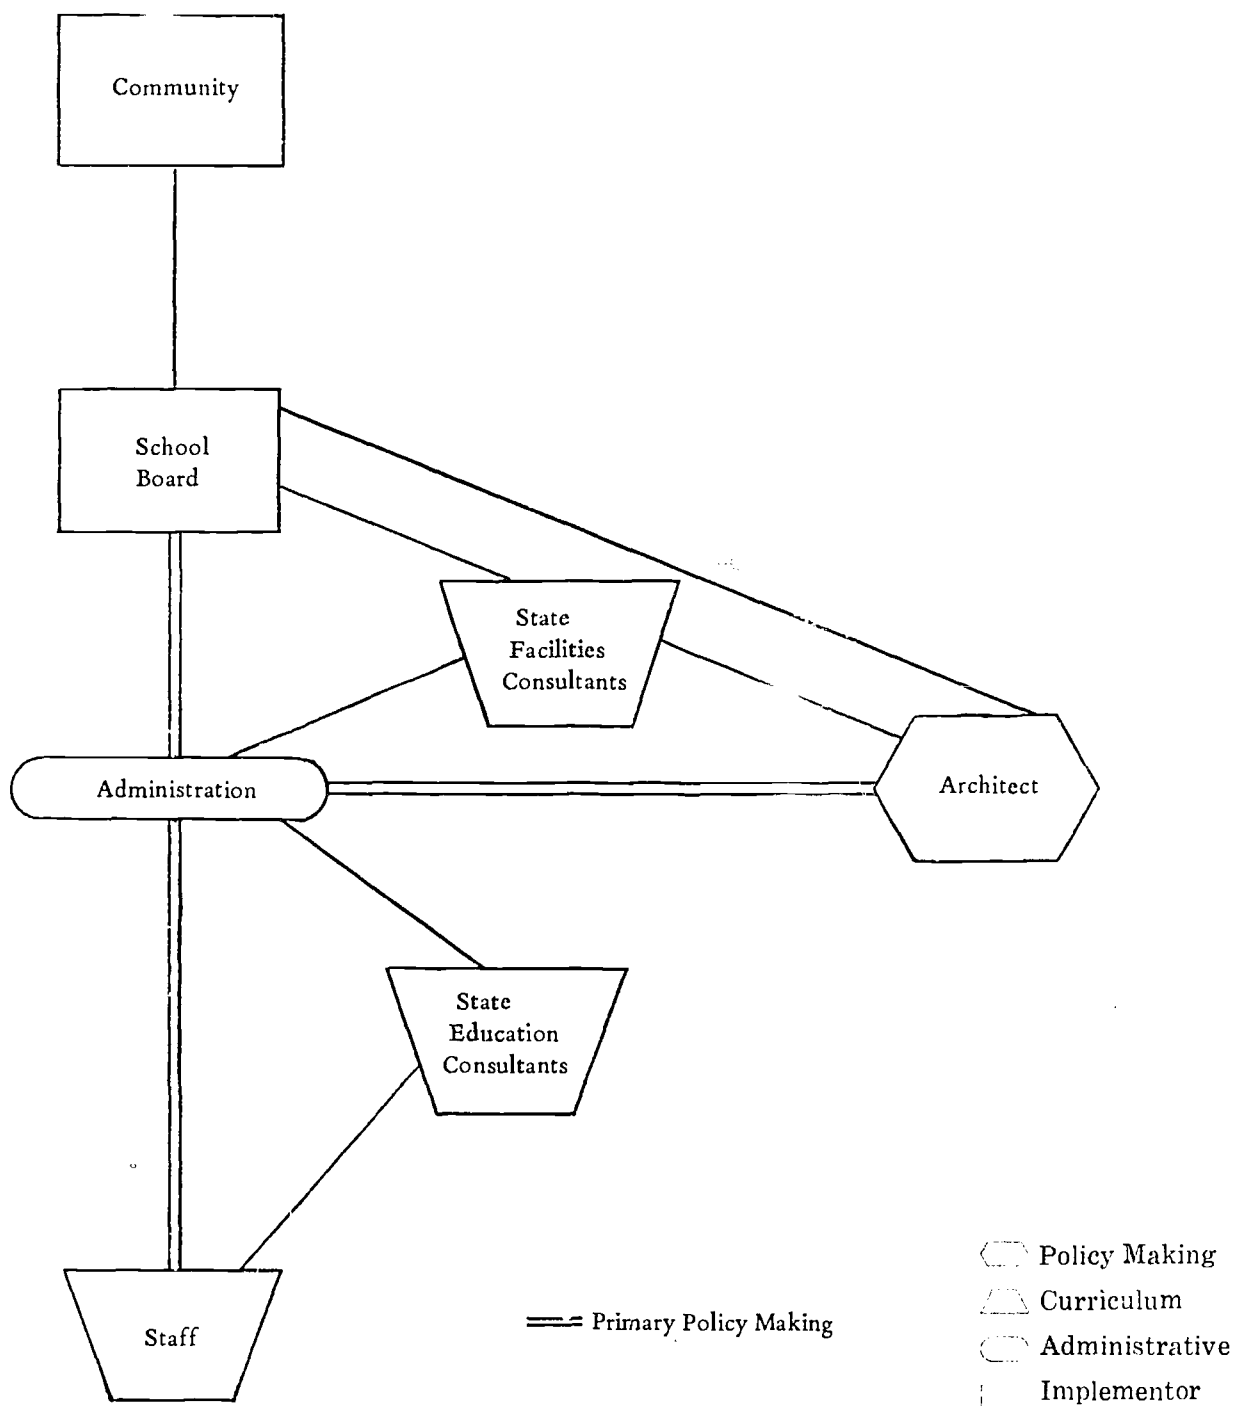

Facility Planning Models

THREE organizational models appropriate to various sizes of school districts have been developed.

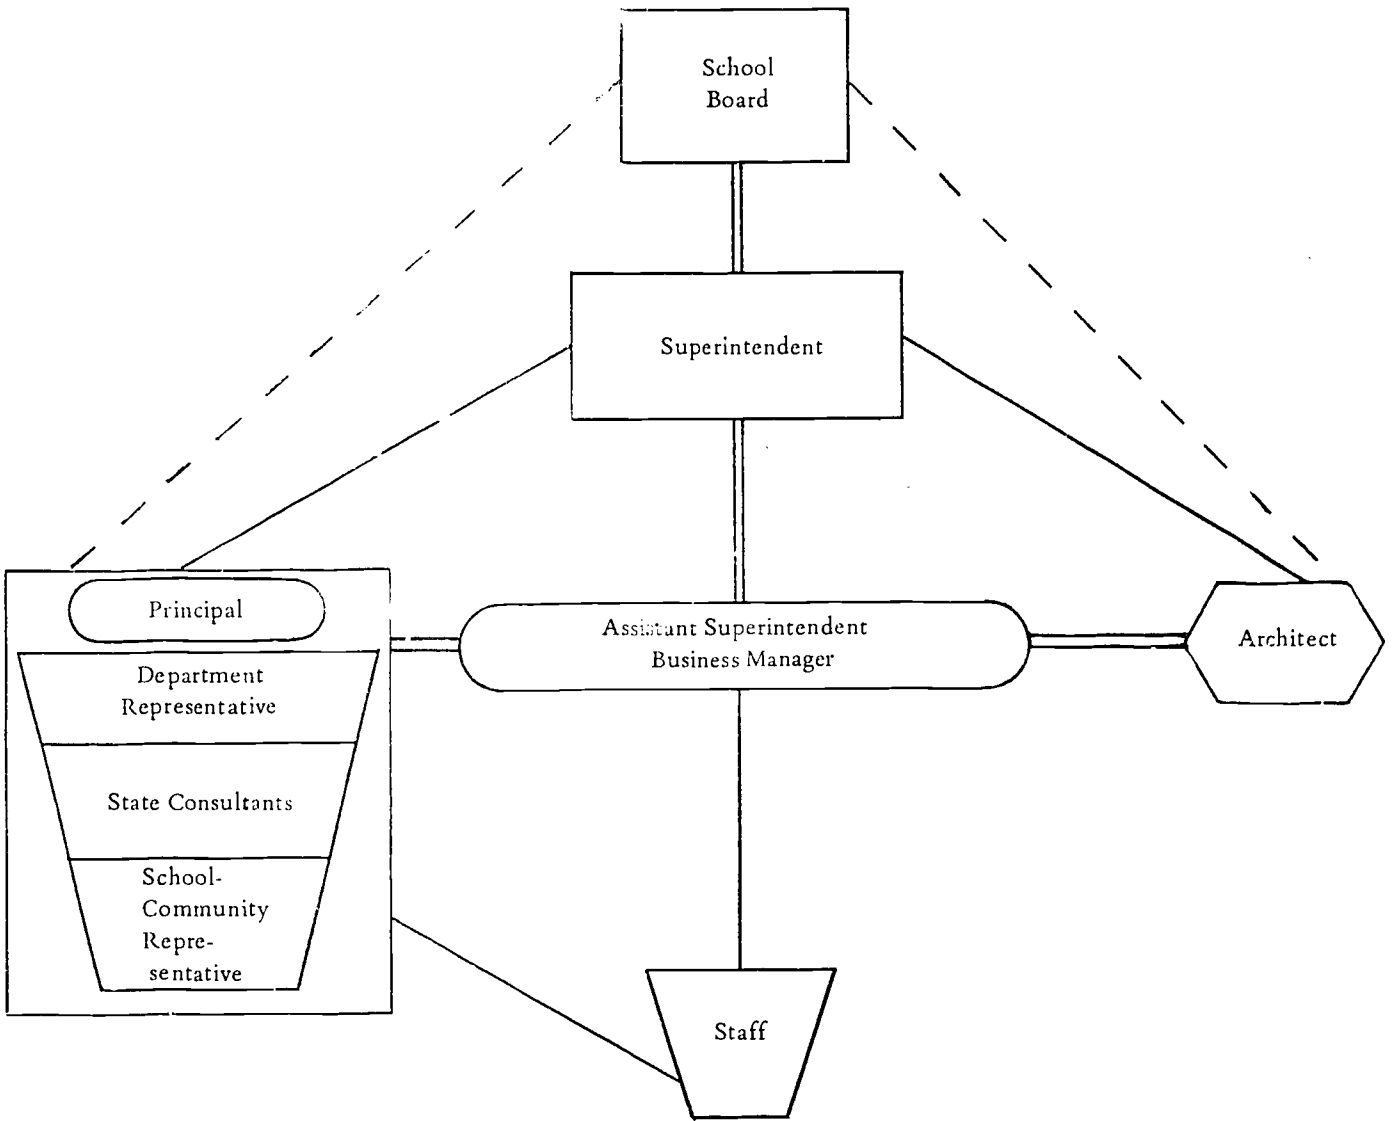

To illustrate various types of relationships among persons involved in facility planning the selection of a model will be dependent on factors such as administrative personnel and availability of resources. The models are followed by a description of suggested responsibilities of personnel involved in policy-making, administrative, curriculum development and implementation function.

Model III

Functions of Facility Planning Personnel

1. Policy Making Functions

Develop broad outlines of the things that need to be done and methods to accomplish the purpose set for the enterprise.

2. Administrative Functions

Coordinate all important duties of interrelating the various parts of the work.

Communicate concept of total educational program to the appropriate personnel.

Communicate to local school administrators effective types of educational programs, teaching approaches, organizational patterns and use of space. Organize the structure at the local school level through which work divisions are arranged, defined and coordinated to achieve the identified objectives.

Responsible for early and continued communication between appropriate personnel.

Serve as a liaison between central administration, local school staff and architect.

Develop short and long range budget for plant facilities based on data secured from teachers, principals and city/state consultants.

Develop long range plans to reflect the total school age population and the affect on each grade level. Account for the budget in the form of fiscal planning, accounting and control.

3. Curriculum Development Functions

Communicate educational trends in specific subject areas to personnel responsible for developing educational specification.

Interpret home economics instructional program compatible with current enrollment and educational trends to faculty, administrators and architect.

Involve staff members and/or principals in establishing guidelines for the utilization of space and equipment to facilitate the educational program.

Communicate recent trends in the utilization of space and equipment for the administration, local staff, and/or architect.

Communicate information to the appropriate personnel relative to organizational patterns, technological devices and use of spatial areas to facilitate the educational program.

Submit educational specifications compatible to program developments and educational trends.

Communicate special community educational needs and wants.

Suggest community use of facilities.

Submit plans for long range and immediate goals for program development.

4. Implementation Functions

Translate educational specifications into a physical structure.

Serve as the implementor of the enterprise after consultations with designated personnel.

Direct the continuing task of communicating and embodying specific and general orders.

Report to designated school personnel concerning progress of the project.

Planning Principles and Assessment

Principles of Facility Planning

FACILITIES which support learning must provide environments for the two-dimensional offerings of home economics: consumer and homemaking education, and preparation for employment. The subject matter areas related to these two dimensions include those previously mentioned in the listing of trends; namely, Family and Child Development, Family Consumer Education, Family Housing and Interiors, Family Clothing and Textiles, Family Nutrition and Meal Management.

Generally, the home economics center should be planned to be flexible. Flexibility includes EXPANSIBLE SPACE that can allow for ordered growth; CONVERTIBLE SPACE that can be economically adapted to program changes; VERSATILE SPACE that serves many functions; and MALLEABLE SPACE that can be changed "at once and at will."

The following principles are considered basic to facility planning.

1. The educational program is the basis for planning facilities.
2. Facilities should be planned to accommodate changes in the educational program.
3. The facilities should serve the needs of various groups in the community.
4. Facilities for the program can be extended through the use of community resources.
5. Facilities for home economics programs should be planned to reach not only the average, but also the gifted, the physically handicapped, the mentally retarded and the culturally deprived.

6. Proximity, flexibility, and convenience of classrooms and work areas where teachers can cooperatively plan and produce materials should be provided.
7. Safe and healthful environments should be provided for all departmental participants.
8. Mobile versus permanently installed storage and equipment should be used to provide flexibility of space.
9. Accessible and convenient storage of mechanical teaching aids should be provided.
10. Movable partitions and portable furnishings and equipment can help in adjusting space requirements to meet specific needs.
11. Accessible and convenient outdoor space adds to the flexibility of the department particularly in the area of child development and family recreation.

Instrument for Assessment of Present Facilities

When a change of facility is under consideration, it is highly desirable to involve teachers, administrators, community representatives, students, architects and consultants. Representatives of these groups should complete the following instrument in each of the program areas of home economics: Family and Child Development, Family Consumer Education, Family Housing and Interiors, Family Clothing and Textiles, and Family Nutrition and Meal Management.

A composite profile of ratings for each of the areas will reflect compatibility of program and facilities and will provide a vehicle for communications when evaluating facilities.

Planning Specifications for Program Areas

General Considerations for Planning

To ASSURE that new or re-designed facilities are compatible with philosophy and program development, a series of questions relating to these factors must be given careful consideration. They are identified as

- What general dimensions of home economics are (to be) offered in the department. i.e., comprehensive home economics education, consumer education, occupational education, interdisciplinary consideration?
- What subject matter areas are (to be) included in the departmental offering? (Include levels, length of offering, etc.)
- What general groups of learners are (to be) served by the department? What are their characteristics and general needs?
- For what other purpose will the facility be used?
- How will the present student clientele compare to the future anticipated clientele in terms of numbers and makeup? (Total, boys, girls, special needs, non-enrollees, adult users, pre-schoolers, etc.)

- To what extent are facilities now shared with other departments?
- What evidence, if any, exists to document that facility sharing will change in the future?
- To what extent does the local school program (present and proposed) reflect the state and national philosophy and trends in home economics education?

Checklists related to home economics curriculum areas are designed to assist the teacher identify local program needs.

Each checklist has the following four general categories:

- 1.0 General Specifications
- 2.0 Student and Teacher Activities
- 3.0 Furniture and Equipment Needs
- 4.0 Utility Needs
- 5.0 Other Important Factors

The following Key Code should be used to specify facility needs:

- 1 = major emphasis in local program
- 2 = some emphasis in local program
- 3 = slight emphasis in local program
- N = no emphasis in local program
