INTRODUCTION TO SURVIVAL LEARNING MATERIALS

Harold, a fourth grader, can read at the sixth grade level but he cannot answer a simple question about the label on an aspirin bottle. Portia, a ninth grader, has difficulty reading at the third grade level and has a terrible time reading a map of her local neighborhood. All pupils need instruction in materials we refer to as survival learning materials — those materials related to the needs of adult society which expects everyone to read certain labels, directions, signs, etc.

Local schools are increasingly adding survival learning skills to their objectives for all children. As the heavy foot of accountability begins to be felt, parents are asking that their children be prepared for the demands that will be imposed upon them by the real world as well as the academic world. Reading experts have long advocated survival reading instruction for older pupils with serious reading disabilities. The time has come for such instruction to be an important segment of everyone's curriculum.

This booklet is designed to provide some starter ideas for teachers to use in developing their own packet of survival learning materials. The procedures suggested and the examples included are literally starters. We have found that teachers expand on them easily. Once introduced, pupils also seem to bring ideas and create materials to share with other pupils.

The following procedures have been helpful to those interested in getting started.

1. Survey your pupils, their parents, and other teachers to determine the types of survival reading skills needed. The success of the program depends upon the appropriateness of the content. Third grade youngsters might not get very excited about reading a driver's manual, but tenth graders usually have interest in this area.
2. Locate materials. They are everywhere — in the home, at school, in the grocery store, in magazines and newspapers, on maps, etc. Try to locate materials which hold local importance. For example, use local maps and local papers — the materials pupils will need to be skilled at reading. Ask pupils to bring materials from home that interest them.
3. Formulate questions. In the examples which follow, we have prepared questions of three types:

Set 1. Questions are related to locating facts which are important and directly stated.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Set 2. Questions require the pupil to interpret what he has read.

Set 3. Questions require the pupil to make some application of what he has read. In many instances, these questions require thinking beyond the information given.

All questions are presented to the pupils while they have the material in front of them. Memory is not expected . . . the objective is to be able to locate an appropriate answer. If you try them yourself, you will note that rereading is often a necessity. Pupils may look back into the material to locate any answer.

4. Package the materials. In our examples we have packaged the materials in pocket folders. The reading materials are in one pocket, the questions in the other pocket. Answers, when appropriate, are on the back of the sheet which contains the questions. We have found it useful to place the reading materials and questions in plastic folders.

Others have placed the original material in a large box. Pupils pick the material from the box and read it in a form in which they will find it in their society. For example, instead of using the label from a pair of trousers, a used pair of trousers would be in the box and the pupils would be expected to tell you how they might be washed.

A third way of packaging is to place the materials on a piece of cardboard and cover them with clear contact paper. Questions can be placed at the bottom of the card or on the back. Answers can be maintained in a separate folder or envelope. The advantage of this technique is ease of storage.

5. Initially, we have found it useful to introduce survival learning materials in a teacher directed lesson. Pupils should be helped to understand why these materials are being made available to them and how they are to be used. Some pupils may need extra help since there is no control for reading difficulty. We suggest letting some pupils work in pairs to develop their answers. The idea of course, is to help pupils handle these materials and become comfortable with them

Survival learning materials have achieved wide use in many schools. We have seen them used in primary grades as well as in high school and adult education. The response is typically the same — enthusiasm. Pupils quickly see the relevance of the materials and are eager to gain the skills needed in order to understand them. In numerous cases, pupils have generated additional materials, once they understand their purpose and need.

Some teachers have found it helpful to present survival learning materials in units. For example, they make a lot of packets for one broad area such as map reading or label interpretation. By having a variety of materials on a single topic, pupils can choose the specific topics of the most immediate interest to them.

Jack must cook the evening meal every Wednesday because both parents work late. His immediate interest is in reading cooking labels. Judy works after school for a pharmacist and is interested in reading labels on medicine bottles.

Many schools have given teachers time to attend workshops during which survival materials were developed. One advantage of such released time is activities in the amount of sharing that goes on. One idea stimulates another making it possible to generate large numbers of packets in a short period of time.

When placing materials such as these in your classroom, we encourage you to use them in a flexible manner. At times, they might be suited to a teacher directed lesson with a group of students. Or they may be used individually, or by small groups working independent of the teacher. We have found that interest is maintained by using the materials in different ways.

FOLLOWING DIRECTIONS

On the following 10 pages, you will find five examples which can be used to assist you in developing activities which may help your students understand how to follow directions when reading such materials as toothpaste advertisements, directions on how to prepare frozen foods, steps to follow when assembling do-it-yourself kits, labels giving directions on how to properly wash clothing, and how to interpret labels on medicine bottles.

TOOTHPASTE LABELS

All toothpaste manufacturers make certain claims about their product. The following label was found on a box of toothpaste. Read the label carefully, then answer the questions on the next page.

Colgate — The toothpaste with the anti-cavity ingredient MFP . . . it's the fluoride formula with the Colgate cleaning agent Gardol. Clinical tests have shown this formula an effective aid in the reduction of the incidence of cavities.

"Colgate with MFP has been shown to be an effective decay-preventive dentifrice that can be of significant value when used in a conscientiously applied program of oral hygiene and regular professional care."

Council on Dental Therapeutics — American Dental Association

FROZEN FOODS

Some frozen foods have very complicated directions. See how you do with this one.

FROZEN PIE

STORAGE INSTRUCTIONS

Keep unopened package solidly frozen until ready to use. If the pie is accidentally thawed, bake as soon as possible according to the following directions. DO NOT REFREEZE.

TO BAKE

1. Preheat oven to 400°F.
2. Remove frozen pie from carton.
3. Cut slits in crust (this permits steam to escape and prevents crust from cracking).
4. Place frozen pie (in its foil pan) on a cookie sheet on middle rack of oven. (Cookie sheet helps even browning of bottom crust, catches any drippings and also supports hot pie as it is taken from oven.)
5. Bake at 400°F until crust is golden brown, 75 to 85 minutes in most ovens. (Ovens vary tremendously in their temperature accuracy and heat distribution. You may have to use a higher or lower temperature on your regulator to obtain an even golden brown top crust. If pie has been accidentally thawed, baking time will be reduced about 10 minutes.)
6. Remove from oven and cool for about one hour before serving.

Questions on Baking a Frozen Pie. Pick one set and try it.

- Set 1. 1. Should you thaw this pie before cooking it?
2. Why should you cut slits in the crust?
3. Oven temperature for this pie should be about what degree?
- Set 2. 1. How should you change the directions if the pie is accidentally thawed?
2. What two reasons are given for using a cooking sheet under the pie?
3. What should you do before placing the pie in the oven?
- Set 3. 1. What would happen if the pie thawed and were refrozen?
2. How much time would you need from starting to get the pie ready until you could eat it?
3. How can you tell if your oven is operating differently in temperature from the directions?

Answers: Compare your answers with ours or check with your teacher.

- Set 1. 1. No—place frozen pie in oven.
2. Permits steam to escape and prevents crust from cracking.
3. 400 degrees.
- Set 2. 1. Bake as soon as possible and reduce baking time by 10 minutes.
2. Helps even browning of bottom crust, catches drippings, and supplies support.
3. Cut slits in crust.
- Set 3. 1. It would not be good to eat; frozen foods should not be thawed and refrozen. Check with your teacher.
2. About 2 hours and 15 to 25 minutes.
3. Your pie will bake faster or slower than the directions indicate.
