ABSTRACT

This eighth grade unit is one of a sequential learning series of the Focus on Inner City Social Studies (FICSS) project developed in accordance with needs and problems of an urban society. A description of the project is provided in SO 008 271. The basic purpose of this eighth grade curriculum is to study the contributions of various ethnic groups to American history. This unit focuses on the history of the American Indian. Specific student inquiry areas include the history and culture of the Indians of the Eastern and Northeastern woodlands, Indians of the Southeast, Plains Indians, Southwestern Indians, and Indian-white relations. The content of the unit includes teaching strategies, source materials, learning objectives, specific learning activities, and teacher and student resources. (Author/DE)

INTRODUCTION TO THE CURRICULUM OF GRADE EIGHT

Scope of the Curriculum of Grade Eight

The basic purpose of the eighth grade course of study is to see American history through the eyes of five ethnic groups who peopled the country and contributed to its present way of life. After students complete their investigations, it is hoped that they will be able to view basic events in the story of the American nation from several viewpoints and that they will recognize the cultural, political, and social roots of some of America's current problems and areas of tension. As a result of their study, it is hoped that the students will also be better able to help their country become a vital nation which takes pride in its diversity and actively seeks to promote it.

The six units which are planned for grade eight are:

- 8.1 Indian Americans
- 8.2 European-Americans
- 8.3 African-Americans
- 8.4 Hispano-Americans
- 8.5 Asian-Americans
- 8.6 American through Foreign Eyes

Scope of the 3.1 Unit

Since the Indians, as Columbus mistakenly called them, were the first inhabitants of the Americas, this first unit for the year deals with them and is designed to answer the following questions:

1. What are the characteristics of the major Indian cultural groups existing at the time of contact with other ethnic groups that settled the present United States?
2. What is their history as it relates to the story of the total development of the United States?
3. What have been the changing policies of the United States government toward the Indians?
4. What is the current status of the Indians, and what are the sources of their increasingly militant dissatisfaction?
5. What are current actions and recommendations intended to improve that status?

Because only four weeks is allotted to this unit, it is necessary to omit consideration of the prehistoric development of the Indians in America as well as the complicated language relationships of the Indian tribes. It is felt that time can be most usefully employed in consideration of the initial coming of the Indians to the Americas; the cultural groups existing when settlers of the present United States made contact with them; and their history, problems, and development from that time on.

INTRODUCTION

Introduction to a Unit Teaching Strategy Incorporated in Units

Suggested Teaching Procedures and Introductory Activities

Teaching Procedures

1. These units are based on a depth study strategy approach. It is felt that this method is consistent with the "learn by doing" theories of John Dewey, which have been corroborated by Piaget.
2. The basic steps for this strategy consist of introductory activities conducted by the teacher which excite the interest of the student and cause him to ask questions about the new study. These questions serve as an introduction to the scope of the topic.
3. The students, working in groups or individually, research the questions they have raised and categorized. Each student contributes to the committee work in his own special way and at the same time, develops the ability to work in a group situation.
4. One of the most easily recognized trends in the development of recent thought in social studies education is that which is directed toward providing inquiry experiences for the pupil. In these experiences students would not necessarily be told the meaning of the data they would encounter nor would the data necessarily be presented to them. They would have to search for it and to bring meaning to that which they found. From this description, then, it is seen that the depth study strategy proposed here is in concert with the spirit of inquiry.
5. When the group prepares its presentation for the class, they have many occasions to review and restructure their information. After hearing each of the presentations the teacher leads the class in an overview and helps them gain perspective on the topic. The facts gained are used to develop hypotheses and generalizations. Again the facts and understandings are used to develop the culminating activity. Although each of these activities is somewhat different, they all are forms of review or reuse of acquired information. The student, then, is involved in no less than three opportunities to recall and use the new data. Each time, of course, the information is called for in a new context.
6. In a depth study approach, the teacher assumes the role of the structure of learning activities. In addition, the teacher is the most readily available resource person, both for process and content. The class could conceivably ask the teacher to talk to them about a specific topic or to discuss a film or filmstrip. If the teacher has had special experiences which are pertinent to the study, the class may call upon him to show slides or to deliver a special talk.

AN OUTLINE OF A
TEACHING STRATEGY INCORPORATED INTO THE UNITS

PHASE	PURPOSE
I. Introduction	To motivate students,
II. Raising of questions	To list students' questions.
III. Categorization of questions by students	To organize ideas. To provide experiences in critical thinking.
IV. Formation of and instructions to committees	To form groups for social or psychological ends. To place responsibility for learning upon the shoulders of students.
A. Tasks	To let students know they are defining, pursuing, and reporting their own study.
B. Roles	To aid students in identifying desired organizational schemes for small groups and to help them define the responsibilities and behaviors of leaders and group members.
C. Methods of Researching Information	To aid students in locating, recording, organizing and presenting information.

PHASE

V. Information Retrieval

PURPOSE

To allow students the opportunity to answer their own questions, to employ their library skills, to develop critical thinking and logical organization of data.

VI. Committee Reports

To develop and rehearse the presentation to the class.

VII. Perspective and Overview

To hear the reports of each committee which has sought answers to the questions of the class.

VIII. Developing Hypotheses and Generalizations

To integrate the findings of the committee reports, to note trends, likenesses and differences when compared with other examples known by the students.

IX. Culminating Experiences

To study the information presented to discover some basic principles of the social sciences which may be operant.

To gain further perspective and to enhance

OBJECTIVES

Knowledge

The pupil will know that:

1. In search of food, the Indian probably came from Siberia to Alaska via a land bridge and then southward through the Americas.
2. The Indians came to this continent about 40,000-45,000 years ago.
3. The Indians are members of the mongolian race.
4. The names of the five Indian cultural areas in the U.S. were: the Eastern Woodlands, the Plains, the Southwest, the far West, and the Pacific Northwest.
5. The major types of home construction for each cultural area are: Eastern Woodlands-longhouses; Southeast-stockade villages with round-poled houses; Plains-earthen lodges or teepees; Southwest-stored apartment buildings.
6. The most common means of support in the five areas was: hunting, fishing, limited farming and gathering of nuts and berries.
7. The clothing depended on the environment of the area.
8. Examples of clothing for each area included: Eastern - softened animal skins made into shirts, moccasins and skirts; Southeast - breechcloths; Plains - breechcloths; moccasins, buffalo robes, leggings, bead decorations; Southwest - cotton clothing, poncho, fiber breechcloth, little or no clothing; Far West - bark cloth breechcloth, aprons, skirts and basketry hats.
9. Each Indian group had a specific organization to handle war and peace activities. An example for each area: Eastern - tribal organization and representative body in the Iroquois confederation; Southeast - tribes and clans with special war and peace time chiefs; Plains - bands of tribes with a council of elders; Southwest - family units with a headman chosen for warrior-like qualities; Far West - extended family units with a headman.

OBJECTIVES

10. Indian religion was polytheistic in the form of natural spirits or beings, relied on the use of magic, featured economics which were linked with economic pursuits and many groups.
11. Had shamens to lead religious activities.
12. The conquest of the Indian was through force and repression. The major or most important of these conquests were:
 - Eastern: King Phillip's War (1675-8)
Pontiac's Rebellion
Battle of Fallen Timbers
Black Hawk War
 - Southeast: Conquest of the five civilized tribes (early 1800's)
Indian Removal Bill of 1830 forced Indians to move east of the Mississippi
 - Plains: Sioux uprising in Minnesota (1862) final defeat of Sioux at Wounded Knee Creek, South Dakota in 1890.
 - Southwest: Spanish conquered and enslaved Indians use of American troops to put down Indian raids and force Indians on reservations
 - Far West: Government put Indians on reservation after they protested the influx of whites due to the gold rush and coming of the railroad; defeat of Chief Joseph by army in 1877.
13. Identifications for at least five of the following Indian leaders:
 - a. Pontiac
 - b. King Phillip
 - c. Tecumseh
 - d. Black Wolfe
 - e. Osceola (seminole leader)
 - f. Little Crow
 - g. Crazy Horse
 - h. Sitting Bull
 - i. Mangas Coloradas
 - j. Cochise
 - k. Chief Joseph
 - l. Richard Oakes (leader on Alcatraz)
14. The major governmental agency for Indians is the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

OBJECTIVES

15. The white man's contact helped the Indian by introducing the horse, metal tools, firearms, and sheep.
16. The contact with the white man also led to intertribal fighting, changes in the social-cultural, political, and economic way of life for the Indian, and introduction of white man's diseases.
17. The pattern for Indian-white relations involved pushing the Indian west and making him dependent on trade goods, then pressure or force him to give up his land, then put him on reservations.
18. Early government leaders, including Jefferson, felt that the solution to the Indian problem was to teach them to farm.
19. After the defeat of the British in 1812 War, the American government could more easily exploit the Indian.
20. The British had been the Indians' ally against the American government.
21. The Bureau of Indian Affairs was created in 1824 and put under the Department of the Interior in 1849.
22. The BIA responsibilities include: protection and welfare of the Indian, supervise reservations, handle land questions and sales, supervise education, help provide jobs.
23. Indian territory in the late 19th century was present day Oklahoma.
24. The General Allotment Act of 1887 gave individual pieces of land to each Indian.
25. The Allotment Act failed because the land was too poor for farming.
26. Indians became U.S. citizens in 1924.
27. More attention to Indian needs, especially education, developed in the late 1920's.
28. New economic help (additional land and jobs) and local self government grew out of the Wheeler-Howard Indian Reorganization Act of 1934.

OBJECTIVES

29. Termination (end of special government paternalism) is opposed by most Indians.
30. Under President Johnson, Indians were included in Great Society Programs.
31. There are approximately 600,000 Indians in the U.S. today; more than half on reservations.
32. Largest Indian populations are in the Far Western states, especially Arizona.
33. Most Indians live well below poverty level.
34. Indians have the poorest self-concept of all minority groups.
35. Indians are dissatisfied with: the BIA and its all encompassing control of their life, poor farm land, job discrimination, poor schools, prejudice shown in movies and television and pressure to be like white men.
36. Recently, the Indian is becoming more militant (i.e. Alcatraz), has received help from private sources (i.e. Ford Foundation) and gained spokesmen in Congress (i.e. Senators Mondale and Kennedy), received new schools, and is being treated better in movies and the arts.

SKILLS

The pupil will be able to:

1. Draw conclusions from multiple sources as evidenced in Initiating Activity C.
2. Work with others, as evidenced by his helping to plan and execute committee work.
3. Find information for committee assignment from more than one source by using library card catalogs to find recommended books and others appropriate to his study, by consulting the Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature, by selecting appropriate items in encyclopedias.

Skills (continued)

4. Organize information by combining materials from several sources in one report and by composing an outline, or helping to compose a committee outline, for class distribution.
5. Evaluate information by helping to compare information from several sources during the overview and culminating activities and by helping the class to draw inferences and to make generalizations from such information.
6. Communicate effectively in making his share of the committee report by using appropriate vocabulary, pronouncing words correctly, speaking clearly, using notes, and giving credit for quotations, keeping to a logical and intelligible ordering of information, and respecting limitations of time and the right of others to be heard.
7. Locate the five cultural areas of the Indians as well as important tribal locations, battle cities, rivers, and mountains on an outline map. Identify the names of at least one tribe in each of the five regions.
8. Demonstrate a time sense by being able to determine the sequence of given events in the conquest of the Indians and of changes in U.S. government policy toward the Indians.

ATTITUDES

1. Accept the tentative nature of information by accepting the uncertainty of answers to some questions about Indian origins.
2. Show curiosity, it is hoped, by contributing questions for investigation.
3. Evidence recognition of the need to work cooperatively with others by making a choice of a committee and by helping his committee to organize its work.
4. Evidence recognition of the value of multiple sources of information by using two or more in preparing his committee report and by being able to cite these sources.
5. Show a sense of responsibility by carrying out his committee assignment and by endeavoring to present a report of good quality to the class.

6. Evidence a disposition to think critically by helping to eliminate duplication of questions for investigation, by organizing material from two or more sources for his own report, and by making contributions to the overview and culminating activities.
7. Show respect for the opinions of others by following class rules of discussion and by accepting valid ideas, and disagreeing tactfully with ideas he considers invalid, while organizing questions in committee sessions and during overview and culminating activities.
8. Evidence a sympathetic concern for the Indians by being willing to listen to, or to present, the Indian point of view on subjects connected with this unit.

BEHAVIOR

The pupil will:

1. Participate actively in the group by contributing to class discussion and committee work.
2. Work cooperatively with others by accepting role of leader or follower as the situation requires, by accepting his share of the committee work, and by respecting the ideas of others, and by contributing any special talents he may have to joint efforts.
3. Act courteously, by his manner of participation in committee and class discussions.
4. Act responsibly by carrying out class and committee assignments.
5. Develop a commitment to positive action by contributing ideas to the discussion of what can be done to improve the status of Indians today and by participating in any action the class decided to take in this regard.

STRATEGY

I. Introductory Activities

- A. To interest pupils in the study of American Indians.
- B. To encourage pupils to raise questions about the American Indian which will structure the scope of this unit.

I. SUGGESTED INTRODUCTORY ACTIVITIES

A. MYSTERY

On an overhead projector place the transparency showing just the migration patterns of the Indians.

Ask:

"What do you think is shown on this transparency?"

Accept answers such as wind patterns, etc. If the class does not guess, then inform them that this is the probable route the Indians took when they came over from Siberia to the North American Continent. Inform them that the first study in the eighth grade is American Indians.

B. INDIANS OF THE UNITED STATES

Place the second transparency on the projector and draw from the class the kinds of information shown on the transparency as you put down the various layers. The important thing is for the class to know that there are five major groups of Indians which can be part of the study of this unit.

C. BULLETIN BOARD AND BOOK DISPLAY

In order to expose the class to the full scope of the unit to be studied, prepare a bulletin board on which you have posted some of the following: photographs of famous Indians, news clippings about current Indian problems in various sections of the United States.

The various books provided in the kit can be placed on another table to provide a display.

Pupils should be encouraged to view the bulletin board and the book display with the purpose in mind of asking questions about the kinds of things they would like to know about Indians.

MATERIALS

"The Coming of the Indians"

"Indians of the United States"

I. SUGGESTED INTRODUCTORY ACTIVITIES (continued)

D. Have a filmstrip set up and allow students to run the strip as they wish; don't use the record.

E. REALIA

Optionally the teacher might further enhance the above experiences by developing a table of realia, (real things of Indian origin). In addition, the mood might be set by playing a record of Indian music or of a political speech by a modern Indian leader.

MATEKING

STRATEGY

11. Raising Questions

Purpose:

1. For the students to form a basis on which to investigate the various dimensions implied in the title of the unit.
2. The student should ask their own questions to facilitate the development of a student-structured unit.

LEARNING ACTIVITIES

List questions about American Indians which result from the initiating activities.

This could be done by:

1. The group acting as a whole, with two students serving as secretaries to write alternate questions on the board.
2. Dividing the class into several "buzz groups" for the purpose of compiling group lists of non-duplicating questions before writing a class list on the board.
3. Having each student write each of his questions on a separate piece of paper and then forming small groups to eliminate duplications before writing a class list on the board.

Some possible questions:

1. Who were those Indians pictured in the film strip?
2. Where did the Indians live?
3. Did all Indians live in the same way as those pictured in the filmstrip?
4. What is the culture of the Indians like?
5. What problems did the Indians face with the whiteman?
6. What are the major problems of the Indians today?
7. How are they handling their problems?

Note: It is hoped that there will be many more questions, possibly thirty to forty. Because the questions determine the areas of investigation, the more questions, the better.

STRATEGY

III. Categorizing Questions

Purpose:

- A. To organize the questions raised by the class.
- B. To gain experience in critical thinking.
- C. To determine the number of committees needed to investigate the areas of the questions.
- D. To determine the various aspects of Indian life--past and present--which need to be explored.

LEARNING ACTIVITIES

Sorting the list of questions compiled by the class might be done by:

1. The group acting as a whole, with one or more secretaries, giving the same number or letter to questions on the board that deal with the same subject.
2. Each student writing one or more questions from the board on separate pieces of paper and then having one or more persons gather questions which the class feels belong together.

Possible committees and areas of investigation:

Committee 1:

Indians of Eastern Woodlands--Northeastern Hunters

- I. Location
- II. Some of Tribes
- III. Homes
- IV. Means of support
- V. Clothing
- VI. Organizations
- VII. Religious and other customs
- VIII. Conflicts with settlers of United States area
- IX. Important leaders

Committee 2:

Indians of Eastern Woodlands--Southeastern Farmers
(Same sub-topics as above)

Committee 3:

Plains Indians--Prairies and High Plains
(Same sub-topics as above)

Committee 4:

Southwest Indians
(Same sub-topics as above)

STRATEGY

III. Categorizing Questions
 Questions about the origins of the Indians can be investigated individually by each committee in specific reference to its Indian group.

- Committee 5:
 Western Indians (Plateau, Great Basin, California) and Indians of Pacific Northwest
 (Same sub-topics as above)
- Committee 6:
 Indian-White Relations then and now
- I. Effect on Indians of contact with whites.
 - II. Policies of United States government toward the Indians.
 - III. The status of the Indians today.
 - IV. Reasons for Indian dissatisfaction.
 - V. Evidence of concern about Indian status.
 - VI. What is needed to improve the status of Indians today?

Student questions and interests may dictate a different kind of committee organization from the one above. However, in the event that the committee organization is similar to the one above, the following explanations and suggestions may be useful to the teacher:

1. Committees 1 and 2 are really studying the same cultural group; however, the volume of material almost demands the division of labor indicated.
2. Committee 4 may wish to confine its investigations to Pueblos, Navahos, and Apaches; again, the volume of material is the reason.
3. Committee 5 could omit the Pacific Northwest Indians, since they occupied so small a portion of the present United States, but they are colorful and different in some ways from other American Indians.
4. Committee 6 really should be composed of the best readers, because they will need chiefly to use materials written for adults. This committee may wish to eliminate the first sub-topic, but will be able to find information on all the others from materials listed under "Essential Source Materials" as well as from articles in the encyclopedias mentioned in the Bibliography.

- IV. Formation of and Instructions to Committees
1. To identify the necessary tasks of the committees.

LEARNING ACTIVITIES

The students may wish to work in groups to pursue those topics which most interest them. The content might also be revealed through a more traditional approach, but the unit writers believe it of great importance that pupils learn the skills and the problems associated with cooperative efforts. Thus they recommend the committee as the agent for seeking factual information. The committee organization also allows for individual excellence, especially as it is perceived as effecting group goals.

Activities

Discuss and decide on something like this:

Class discussion concerning:

1. The tasks of a committee
2. The roles of committee persons
3. The sources of information

CONTENT

- A. Tasks of Committees
1. Organize committee
 - a. Random selection by teacher or students.
 - b. Ranking by students of choices on slips of paper.
 - c. Using sociograms to achieve balance within a committee (may be homogeneously or heterogeneously based).
 2. Utilize class questions as starting point for planning committee work.
 3. Add new questions suggested by committee members.
 4. Assign research, find information, coordinate information, develop and present.

V. Information

LEARNING ACTIVITIES

Students may need instruction in the use of these basic library research tools:

1. Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature
(This will be especially helpful to Committee 6)
2. Library Card Catalog
(Committees 1 through 5 will be able to use this to help identify call numbers of books listed in the bibliography and to locate books on specific Indian tribes and leaders. Such catalogs may also indicate visual aids and records.
3. The school system's own visual aid and record catalog will help committees locate useful media for group presentations.
4. The students may wish to talk to Indians in the local community, especially about contemporary problems. If this resource is not available then perhaps they could write to Indians on a reservation.
5. The students might write to the Bureau of Indian Affairs for information about its organization and policies. Also, they could contact Senator Edward Kennedy and his Senate sub-committee on Indian affairs for an explanation of their work.

VI. Reporting Activities

- A. To share information obtained on American Indians
- B. To gain skill in communicating information to others.
- C. To encourage creativity in communication

REPORTING ACTIVITIES

One or more of the following methods of reporting are suggested for use by the various committees:

1. A series of student-made slides copied from books and magazines, or a series of pictures shown on an opaque projector, or student-made transparencies with commentary by members of the committee.
2. Use a filmstrip on a tribe of Indians from a particular cultural area, if available from school or public library collections. Have the committee tell what is good about the filmstrip presentation and what additional information might be given about Indians of that cultural area.
3. On an enlarged wall map of the United States, draw figures of Indians in proper costume for each cultural area. If space permits, other symbols of the culture could be added--type of home, for example.
4. On a salt-relief map of the United States, place figures in proper costume for each cultural area. If space permits, add other symbols of the culture for each area.
5. Compose a series of protest songs or ballads to represent past injustices in each cultural area plus a modern event such as the occupation of Alcatraz; or, write one song with stanzas for each area and at least one modern event, plus a refrain that expresses a reason for current Indian militancy. If possible, play a Buffy Sainte-Marie record to get the idea.
6. Have debates on the pro's and con's of such topics as the quality of service provided by the Bureau of Indian Affairs or "integrity" vs. "integration" as a solution for Indian problems.
7. Written group reports.
8. Interviews with famous Indians as impersonated by members of the class.
9. Panel discussion (most appropriate for Committee 6).

REPORTING ACTIVITIES

10. Whatever method of reporting is used, each committee could prepare a one page dittoed summary of the most important factual material for each member of the class.

STRATEGY

VII. Overview

- A. To review the most important information gathered by the various committees.
- B. To prepare for the formation of generalizations drawn from diverse data.

CONTENT

After the committees have reported to the class, time should be allowed for review of what has been learned and to evaluate the efforts of the learner. Perhaps the class will reconsider all the original questions that were raised and see whether they have been answered. The major questions will require review so that foundation is laid for going beyond the material studied to the generalizations.

There will be some BIG QUESTIONS to be considered as a result of the study and possibly some value judgments to be made. Possibly the students will wish to consider the following:

1. How did the white man's assumption of Indian savagery cause bloodshed that in many cases was unwarranted?
2. Why were there various degrees of organization among the Indian tribes; from the federation of the Iroquois nations to the simplicity of the family unit?
3. Why did the concern for group welfare and group decision making play such an important part in the social structure of the Indians--What purpose did it serve?
4. How do you account for the de-emphasis on accumulation of personal wealth among almost all Indian tribes? What purpose did this communal ideal serve?
5. How did the horse help to change the lives of the Plains Indians?
6. Why did the white settlers disregard the rights of Indians, their humanity, and love of land, as they moved west?

7. How does the white man's treatment of the Indian typify the political concept of "power not morality" as the basis for decision making?
8. What affect has the changing nature of the federal government's Indian policies and the incompetency of government agents had on the state of Indian life today?
9. What positive signs are appearing today both within the federal government and among Indians that promise hope for the future of the Indian?
10. What are the major contributions of Indians to American and World culture?
 - a. Made it possible for first European settlers in what is now the United States to establish themselves.
 - (1) Gave food
 - (2) Taught farming
 - (3) Acted as guides
 - (4) Supplied furs and other goods for markets in colonists' homelands
 - b. Social and Political concepts and structures influenced settlers and European philosophers
 - (1) Federation government
 - (2) Elected leaders are servants of people
 - (3) Society must respect individual diversity
 - c. Plants first domesticated by American Indians form one-half of world food supply today

4. "(An important principle underlying all systems of government is) that of willingness to sacrifice for the general good of the group."
5. "The investment of leaders with the exclusive right to employ force or coercion in government occurs only with the formation of the conquest state."
6. "...the simpler a culture is, the fewer are the materials and the narrower is the range of knowledge of which the inventor can be possessed, so that as a consequence the possibilities of invention are more limited."
7. "Political, social, and economic discrimination will usually enable the majority to suppress a minority."
8. "After a period of docile acceptance of second-class status, it can be anticipated that minorities will seek leaders to confront the societal forces which constrain them."
9. "Attempts to gain equal citizenship for a minority group will usually encompass the range of activities from legal to extra-legal to violent actions dependent upon the degree of felt frustration, the length of the deprived period, and the extent of political, social, and economic response."

Unit 8.1

September, 1970

From The American Indian by Sydney E. Fletcher.
New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1954. Pages 17-21.

"Throughout most of man's long life on this earth there was not a single human being in all of North and South America. Wildlife flourished, but so far as people were concerned these two continents were a huge vacuum. And then between twenty-five and thirty thousand years ago men began to trickle in through a small opening....

"All of the water that was frozen in the glaciers, sometimes ten thousand feet thick, had evaporated from the oceans and then had fallen as snow. Consequently, the level of the oceans was lower than it is today - three hundred feet lower in some places - and land stood out where none can now be seen.

"The fifty-six-mile stretch between Siberia and Alaska was one such place. Curiously, the snow fell much less heavily there than on the great land masses, and the coast of Alaska and Canada, too, were free of ice long before the glaciers melted and disappeared from other regions. Animals began to wander across the land bridge between the two continents, then south along the ice-free American shoreline. And men, always on the lookout for good hunting, trailed the animals. And so it was that twenty-five thousand years ago - more or less - men first came to America

"After a while, as they moved southward along the edges of the glaciers, groups of people began to branch out from the main stream of the migration. Some spread out to the southeast into country that the great ice sheets hadn't touched. Others pushed on through Mexico and into South America.

"Behind them more and more hunters kept coming. At the same time the glaciers were slowly retreating. About fifteen thousand years ago the ice had melted back far enough so that a new route opened up. Men could follow the Yukon River and cross a low pass to the Mackenzie River. From there it was fairly easy going over ice-free country all the way through Canada and onto the Great Plains east of the Rockies. Wave after wave of people followed this route. Latecomers fought with older inhabitants for the right to hunt, but they mingled with each other, too, and wandered farther, until at last there were human beings all over the Americas....

"Since most of the Indians came to America by way of Siberia, you might naturally jump to the conclusion that they were Mongolian, that perhaps they resembled the Chinese. Many of them did, but not the earliest arrivals. They had in them very different strains which are now found among peoples in distant areas of the earth."

From A Pictorial History of the American Indian
by Oliver Lefarge. New York: Crown Publishers,
Inc., 1956. Pages 11-12.

"The New World was settled slowly, by dribblets of people crossing from Siberia into Alaska from time to time over a period of fifteen thousand years or more. Here and there, mostly in the Southwest of the United States, archaeologists have found traces of the early comers. They have found flint, bone, and wooden tools, traces of their campfires, and bones of the animals they hunted....

"Most of the people who were to become Indians crossed over into the New World before any of the inventions or discoveries that changed the story of the Old World had been made. Some came over even before men had domesticated the dog. The latest finds, tested by what is called the radio-carbon method, which tells the age of charcoal by measuring its remaining radio-activity, indicated that men of Indian type had reached New Mexico 20,000 years ago, long before mankind anywhere had emerged from the Old Stone Age. They were Stone Age people. They had no pottery, probably no basketry. The earlier ones had no bows and arrows; they hunted with spears and darts or javelins. With their simple weapons they killed huge creatures, a giant sloth as big as a bear, elephants, mammoths, and a giant species of bison much larger than the bison today.

"The immigrants were not all alike. Some were tall, some short; some had long heads, some had round heads. Some modern American Indians are much darker than others, so we know their ancestors must have varied in color also. As we should expect of people coming out of the Far East, a Mongoloid heritage was common among them. Mongoloid features are what unite today's Indians racially. On the whole, they have very slight beards, their hair is black and straight, their eyes longish and often slightly slanted. Their cheekbones are high and their faces usually rather broad. Their typical skin color is a yellowish ivory which tans to a strong brown.

"Along the Atlantic Coast the first white men found Indians who were lighter than most. When they tanned, their skins had a reddish cast, resulting in a handsome copper color. The early explorers called these people 'red men'."

From Indians by Edwin Tunis. Cleveland: The New World Publishing Company, 1959. Page 15.

"No race of men originated in America.

Neither the bones of primordial man nor of the great apes that preceded him have been found here. But man has been here a long time. Charcoal from one of his campfires has been shown from its radioactivity to be more than 23,800 years old, and Dr. George F. Carter has found traces that suggested man's presence perhaps even before the last glacier covered the northern half of the continent.

"Authorities no longer argue as to how men came into America. They crossed dryshod from Asia on an isthmus exposed across what is now Bering Strait when glacial ice had captured much of the world's water and lowered the level of the sea. The chances are that many of the immigrants didn't realize they had crossed anything. Hunting, they followed the musk ox; fleeing from pursuit, they escaped into a new world which was to them only more of the old one. Their dogs were the only domestic animals that came with them. There was never any mass migration apparently, only a continuing and fluctuating drift.

"Since these people came out of Asia, it was formerly assumed that they were Mongoloids, related to the present Mongolians; hence all American Indians must of necessity be Mongoloids. It now appears that the very early Asiatics were not themselves all Mongoloids; other races lived in that region or at least passed through it."

From The American Heritage Book of Indians, narrative by William Brandon. New York: Simon and Schuster, Inc., 1961. Pages 9-10. The American Indian, adapted from The American Heritage Book of Indians by Anne Terry White. New York: Random House, 1963. Pages 3-4.

"...even the most ancient human bones found in the Americas are of men like ourselves, bones of Homo Sapiens, a creature who appeared on earth possibly 100,000 years ago.

"It was at some unknown time after this date that the ancestors of the American Indians entered the still untouched New World. Who were they? Where did they come from?

"....Finds have been made proving that the earliest Americans were here along with camels, mammoths, giant ground sloths, and primitive horses. By the end of the last great Ice Age - which is to say close to 10,000 years ago - men were here positively. And even that far-off date is being pushed back even further. Carbon 14 tests and other evidence have set men in America back probably to 20,000 years ago, and a recent find near Puebla, Mexico may push him back to well before 30,000 years ago.

"And the wind blows steadily toward a still more distant dawn. Blood-group studies of living Indians have recorded the purest type-A groups in the world, as well as the only known populations entirely lacking A; the purest O groups in the world; and the purest B group in the world. An eminent geographer concludes that the basic peopling of the Americas may have taken place 'before the primordial blood stream of man became mingled.'

"The thing is sure. If the American Indians can claim descent from those early people of 15,000 to 20,000 years ago - and some undoubtedly can - then they are by far the oldest known race on earth. For all the other modern races - Mongolian, Caucasian, and Negro - did not appear till much later."

From "American Indians" by Harold E. Driver in Meritt Students Encyclopedia. New York: Crowell-Collier Educational Corporation, Volume 9, 1967. Page 355.

"The ancestors of the American Indians came from the region of Siberia in northern Asia between 40,000 and 20,000 B.C. Small bands of hunters in search of game probably walked across the Bering Strait on a land bridge, which at that time connected the eastern tip of Siberia with the western tip of Alaska. There were not many of these earliest Indians, yet they migrated all the way to the tip of South America. Archaeologists have found only crude chipped-stone choppers and scrapers as evidence of their existence.

"About 20,000 B.C. new immigrants called Paleo-Indians reached Alaska. More numerous than their predecessors, they were of Mongoloid stock. Their eyes ranged from dark brown to black, and their skin ranged from light to dark or reddish-brown. Their descendants were called Red Men by European explorers because many of them used red paint as body decoration.

The Paleo-Indians had straight, coarse black hair and relatively smooth bodies. They were of medium height and weight with long narrow heads. They were distinguished by prominent, unusually wide cheekbones and hollowed-out surfaces on the inside of their upper front teeth. Modern Indians look much the same, except that they have rounder heads, either from the later immigration of roundheaded people from Asia or from the influence of the environment.

"With no incentive to travel farther in any one day than was necessary to find game, the Paleo-Indians probably spent generations wandering along the ice-free Alaska coast. Gradually, as successive waves of immigrants arrived and game grew scarce, they drifted inland along the valleys of the Yukon and Mackenzie rivers to the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains. Some bands slowly spread east toward the Atlantic and west toward the Pacific, but most turned south alongside the mountain chain to South America...."

Part II consists of documents on Indian history, white policy, white viewpoints, words of Indian prophets and spokesmen.

Steiner, Stanley. The New Indians. New York: Harper & Row, 1968. $7.95

Advertised as "The first full-scale report of the gathering 'Red Power'." Mr. Steiner tells what he learned about rising Indian anger after travels among Indian tribes. Readable style. Not well-suited for research for this unit, but it might make for a good book report in connection with the work of Committee 6.

Tebbel, John. The Compact History of the Indian Wars. New York: Hawthorn Books, Inc., 1966.

Readable account with considerable detail. Better student readers may be able to use this.

Wissler, Clark. Indians of the United States: Four Centuries of Their History and Culture. Garden City, New York: Doubleday and Co., Inc., 1940.

A well-known book no longer in print, but probably in many libraries. A revised edition, also published by Doubleday in 1966, and edited by L. W. Kluckholm is available in paperback for $1.95. Since this book discusses the Indians by language families, it may be difficult to use with this unit.
