CONTENT:

- A. Origins of the short story
 - 1. Ancient forms
 - a. Mythology
 - b. Fairy tales
 - c. Folk tales
 - 2. Early authors
 - a. Washington Irving - The Sketch Book
 - b. Nathaniel Hawthorne - Twice Told Tales
 - c. Edgar Allan Poe - defined the short story and demonstrated his theories
- B. Characteristics of the short story
 - 1. Poe's definition from a review of Twice Told Tales
 - a. Should be short enough to read at one sitting
 - b. Every word and event must be directly aimed at a single effect
 - c. Compared the short story to the lyric poem
 - 2. Modern interpretations of the short story
 - a. Definition is becoming increasingly vague
 - b. Character development is not deep
 - c. Concentrates on a single climax; a single emotion
 - d. Length not as important; length varies

3. Varied structures of the short story

- a. Exposition, conflict, rising and falling action, climax, revelation, and denouement may be found in varied orders and with varied emphasis.
- b. Basic pattern of narrative organization: exposition, conflict, rising and falling action, climax, revelation, and denouement.
- c. Special patterns:
 1. Stockton's "The Lady or the Tiger" - ends at moment of climax
 2. Brown's "The Puzzle-Knot" - conflict's presented before the exposition

C. Theme in the short story

1. Significance of the title
2. Significance of character qualities
 - a. Repeated actions by characters
 - b. Ideas of the characters
 - c. Comments by the author on the characters
3. Significance of the forces working on the characters
 - a. Forces that act against the characters
 - b. Forces allied with the character
 - c. Difference in the character from beginning to end of story as a result of these forces
4. Significance of setting
 - a. Repeated descriptive details
 - b. Location of story geographically

D. Characterization in the short story

1. Types of characters
 - a. Simple character - "flat"
 1. See only one, literal dimension
 2. Character presents no surprises
 - b. Complex characters - "round"
 1. See character from all angles
 2. Character may not turn out to be what first anticipated by reader
2. Clues to characterization
 - a. Title of the story may name the major character and/or his importance
 - b. Introductory passages concerning the appearance of the character may be revealing

- c. Repeated actions and different actions which contribute to a single impression of the character are revealing.
- d. Ideas of the character; his thoughts are significant
- e. Reactions of other characters to the major character are important.

E. Plot in the short story

1. Qualities of the beginning

- a. Character is in a reasonably stable condition (static)
- b. Introduction of a problem, obstacle, or conflict (POC) or a combination of the three.
- c. This necessitates action by the character
- d. Includes exposition and conflict

2. Qualities of the middle

- a. Character makes choices
- b. Story reaches a climax - he chooses the last possible choice available to him
- c. Climax shows success or failure of his efforts to attain what he wants as he copes with POC
- d. Includes rising and falling action and climax

3. Qualities of the end

- a. Character returns to static condition as a result of his interaction with forces that caused POC.
- b. Character is usually changed at the end
- c. Includes revelation and denouement

F. Symbolism in the short story

1. Significance of description of setting

- a. Details describe a time, place, and atmosphere that may be symbolic in themselves.
- b. Details may also signify conditions associated with such a setting.

2. Significance of names, appearances, and the objects they observe:

- a. Names may infer a characteristic of a person
- b. Appearance may infer something related. Example: The paint on the boys in Lord of the Flies is the same color as the standard colors of the Nazi movement.
- c. Certain objects have become standard symbols (especially in individual authors). Example: King's scepter represents authority.

3. Significance of repeated actions

- a. Repeated actions may indicate a traditional ritual. Example: Jackson's "The Lottery"
- b. The actions themselves may be symbolic. Example: In Communion bread and wine represent the body and blood of Christ.

G. Irony in the short story

1. Details in a story will lead the reader to draw certain inferences about the nature of characters and conditions which later actions will prove to be untrue.
 - a. Some details may lead the reader to suspect irony later in the story.
 - b. Look for a definite point which will lead to a reversal of initial impressions.
2. Reviewing the story after completing it will reveal full extent of irony.
