ACTIVITIES

1. Students will keep a journal of observations of communications situations and their own speaking experiences and progress. The teacher will, from time to time, assign specific topics for the journals. The journals will also contain quotations, poems, and short anecdotes that the student should be prepared to share with the class as called upon. Journals will be collected and checked by the teacher every two weeks. The journals serve as an effective communication channel between students and teacher.
2. Self-concept: students will prepare a nonverbal "autobiography."
3. Self-concept: students will prepare a dialogue between two of his "selves" discussing some problem or situation.

4. Students will practice introductions by introducing fellow students after listening to the introductory speeches.
5. Students will practice active listening by filling out evaluation forms on fellow students' speeches.
6. Students will interview a member of the faculty or administration or an outside guest.
7. Students will choose a topic and prepare a discussion according to the principles taught in class.
8. Students will spend one class period practicing "Rogerian listening."
9. Students will be required to choose and present an interpretive reading in class.
10. Students will complete a library assignment that familiarizes them with available resources.
11. Students will listen to a series of tapes, "Effective Communication" and "Dynamics of Group Discussion" and complete activities as presented on tapes.
12. Students will view a variety of filmstrips emphasizing various areas of the communication process. (see "Materials.")
13. Using the techniques of persuasion and propaganda presented in "The Persuasion Box," students will write a one minute advertisement.
14. Students will play the games, "Body Language" and "Propaganda."
15. The best way to learn to speak is by speaking. Students will be required to be involved in twelve speaking situations in the eighteen weeks of the course. Students will be given speech formulas and will be expected to follow these. Outlines of several designated speeches will be required and are to be handed to the instructor one day prior to the scheduled speech.
