  - 6. Average adult should know 11,700.
  - 7. Superior adult should know 13,500.

B. Learning words from context

1. Grasping the meaning of a word from the sense of the words used with the word.

2. Words learned this way become part of reading and listening vocabularies, but before they can be added to a speaking vocabulary, must learn pronunciation and exact meaning.

3. Exercises in learning words from context

C. Making correct definitions

 Learning how to make a definition correctly will enable one to think straight and to learn exact meanings of words.

2. Three steps to follow when defining a word:

a. Name the word to be defined.

b. Name the general class to which it belongs.

- c. Name the characteristics that distinguish it from other members of its class.
- d. Example: A mutineer(1) is a person who(2) forcibly resists rightful authority.(3)

3. Exercises

D. Learning activities with synonyms, antonyms and homonyms

- 1. Exercise for synonyms
- 2. Exercise for antonyms
- 3. Exercise for homonyms

E. Choosing exact and vivid words

1. Changing general and vague words to exact and vivid words to improve expression.

 Exact and vivid words give listeners or readers clear ideas, and create definite images.

3. Exercises in choosing exact words

F. Choosing concise words

 Using one meaningful word in place of many words will help to avoid wordiness and dullness.

2. Exercise in rewriting sentences replacing words with a single word that has same meaning

G. Prefixes, roots, and suffixes

 Many long and difficult-looking English words are only combinations of common prefixes, roots, and suffixes, many of which come from the Greek or Latin language.

2. A knowledge of some of the more important source words increases vocabulary skills greatly.

3. Prefixes, roots, and suffixes to learn:

| Prefix    | Root           | Suffix                     |

J. Foreign expressions

- 1. Many foreign words and phrases are used in the English language.
- 2. Example: If you read the following in a newspaper, would you understand and be able to pronounce the foreign phrase? "A coup d' stat by army officers forced the king to flee."
- 3. Exercise

K. Slang

- 1. Slang has a place in language depending upon situation.
- 2. Continual use of slang stunts vocabulary growth.
- 3. Habitual user of slang would probably find it difficult to explain in standard words what slang terms mean.
- 4. Exercise

Connotation and Denotation

1. Connotation

Definition: a meaning or significance suggested by a word or expression apart from and in addition to its dictionary meaning; implies ideas and emotions.

b. Examples: mother, church, school, etc.

2. Denotation

- a. Definition: a direct specific meaning implies all that strictly belongs to the definition of a word.
- 3. Exercises in distinguishing denotative and connotative words

Suggestions for vocabulary building

- Listen carefully; learn words as they are used by skilled speakers.
- 2. Read widely--use some of your leisure time to become acquainted with many different kinds of writing and their particular vocabularies.
- Use context whenever possible; try to obtain the meaning of unfamiliar words from the context of the sentence or paragraph.
- 4. Use the glossary; do not overlook the value of a glossary as a means of getting the definition of new words, especially technical terms.
- 5. Use the index of a textbook.
- Practice the dictionary habit; become well acquainted with it as a source of information.
- 7. Consult Roget's Thesaurus and learn to use synonyms properly.
- 8. Study word families and word parts; become familiar with common prefixes, suffixes, and word roots.
- 9. Keep lists of new words and their meanings in your notebook.
- 10. Use new words in sentences, in speaking and writing. Try to add several new words each week.

V. PRACTICE IN VOCABULARY SKILLS

A. Action II Series, Houghton-Mifflin

- 1. Readings
- Workbook with vocabulary skills and reading comprehension worksheets
- B. Exercises and activities drawn from Teacher's Reference Books

VI. MEDIA AND MEANING

A. Advertising

- 1. Truthful, factual advertising performs
  - a. Public service
  - b. Learn the merits of a product
  - c. Compare it with others in order to make best purchase
  - d. Learn new products and their uses
- 2. The wrong kind of advertising may create desires for products you may not need and cannot afford.
  - a. Must be able to recognize advertising that is deliberately misleading.
  - b. Much advertising, instead of giving facts concerning the product, intentionally appeals to basic human desires to be popular, to be attractive, to be like others, to be respected, and perhaps envied.
- 3. Word magic in advertising
  - a. "If something is repeated often enough, people will not only remember it but also believe it."
    - The average American sees or hears about 1600 ads a day, but notice only 80!
    - Almost everything depends on advertising—the books we read, the movies we see, the clothes we wear, and often even the thoughts we think.
  - Our opinion of a product often depends upon the name the advertiser has given it.
    - Women's stockings called "beige" increased sales twenty times when name of color changed to "Desert Sand."
    - The same quality hankerchiefs were placed side by side on a counter. One box, labeled "Linen Hankerchiefs" priced at $1.00 each sold almost twice as many as the box labeled "Nose Rags" for $.25!
    - 3. Ads don't always sell the product; they sell the symbol of the good life.
  - c. What ads do
    - 1. Makes us feel a need
    - 2. Shows how a certain product can satisfy this need
  - d. Ten common methods of advertising
    - Word magic: product advertised is made to sound exciting. "Gleam" toothpaste will be more popular than "Glumer's." Competing products are made to sound inferior - "old-fashioned powder cleansers," or "plain aspirin."

- 2. Transfer: transfer of feelings and ideas from one thing to another. For instance, a cigarette ad shows a young couple, trees, rocks, and a waterfall. The reader has good feelings about all of these things and transfers his feelings to the cigarette.
- 3. Testimonial: a famous person is paid by an advertiser to say he uses a certain product.
- 4. Plain folks: claims that products are the choice of ordinary people; show pictures of products being used and enjoyed by "plain folks" just like us.
- 5. Snob appeal: the opposite of "plain folks," the advertiser tells us to buy this product because the common people do not use it; appeals to desire to be better than average person.
- 6. Band Wagon: to do what everyone else is doing; this method often used for new products and improvements in older products. We are made to feel that if we do not "jump on the band wagon," we will be left out.
- 7. Direct order: the oldest and simplest method of advertising. The product is shown and poeple are told to buy it. Advertisers know that some people must be persuaded, others must be told. Direct orders work.
- 8. Bargain price: most ads do not mention exact prices. When prices are mentioned in ads, they are said to be "low." One store's "bargain" price may be higher than another's charges every day of the year. A "20%" off sign means nothing if a store has raised the prices the week before. Words like "reduced." "low, low," "extras," "free of charge" are used
- 9. Jokes: almost everyone enjoys jokes and many people remember them. If a joke is tied up with the product, people will remember the product, too.
- 10. Facts and figures: some ads use facts and figures to work on our minds as well as our feelings; they try to show why that particular product is the one we should buy. We must ask ourselves if the facts and figures really prove when they seem to prove. A high-priced brand of aspirin advertises it goes to work faster than any other brand 30 seconds faster. A fact, but the time is hardly worth the cost. Figures are misleading. "Crunchie Potato Chips stay fresh up to 20% longer." Longer than what?

e. Honesty in advertising

- 1. Most advertisers are honest
- 2. Government keeps a close eye on advertising.

4. Guides for reading advertisements

- a. Do I need this product? Can I afford it?
- b. Is it accurately pictured? Are its qualities fully and honestly described?
- c. Is the cost completely stated, or are some charges hidden?

- d. Is it the best buy in its class?
- e. How is the advertisement encouraging me to buy? Does it appeal to my good judgment, to my emotions, to my prejudices, or to my vanity?

B. Reading newspapers

- 1. As an average American, reading a newspaper is a part of your daily life.
- Main service of a newspaper is to give the news local, national, and foreign.
- 3. A good newspaper features real news in the order of its importance rather than emphasizing crime and scandal in headlines and pictures in order to sell papers to uncritical readers.
- 4. Guides for reading newspapers
  - a. Try to distinguish between facts and opinions in news accounts. Read other newspapers for different viewpoints and for comparison with the newspaper you receive at home.
  - b. Judge newspapers by the kind of news that is featured and the way it is presented.
  - c. Begin to read regularly more parts of your newspaper than you do now. Learn the arrangement of your newspaper.
  - d. Learn newspaper terms to help you understand a newspaper better.

5. Reading the front page

- a. Most important news usually appears on the first page of the newspaper.
- b. Make-up of main news story
  - 1. "Banner" or "streamer" introduces the story.
    The banner is the heavy dark print acrosss the top of the page.
  - 2. "Headline" gives additional information preceding the story the headline is the heavy print at the top of the column.
  - 3. "Date line" gives place and date of event being reported.
  - 4. "Lead," or first paragraph of story, tells the most important facts of the story, usually answering the questions what, who, where, when, and why (or sometimes how).
  - 5. Explanations and details follow the lead paragraph.
- c. Bring to class several different newspapers. Discuss the banners and headlines on the first pages. Has the important news been emphasized? What makes news important?

- d. Read the most important news article on the front page of the daily paper. Find the central idea and follow its development from the first statement in the lead to the details added in other paragraphs. Find the five w's. Outline the article and then write a summary.
- 6. The parts of a newspaper
  - a. Feature stories
  - b. Editorials
  - c. Letters to editor
  - d. Articles by columnists
  - e. Sports
  - f. Social
  - g. Program schedules
  - h. Comics

7. Newspaper vocabulary

- a. AP (Associated Press) and UPI (United Press International):
  American companies that provide newspapers with national and foreign news and photgraphs.
- b. Banner: the heavy, dark headline across the top of the front page
- c. Beat: the daily routine covered by a reporter
- d.  $\underline{\text{By-line}}$ : the name of the person who reported the story
- e. Caption: the explanation below a picture
- f. Cartoon: a drawn picture, usually humorous or exaggerated in nature
- g.  $\underline{\text{Cub}}$ : an inexperienced reporter
- h. Deadline: the time set for having the paper ready for printing
- i. Dummy: the exact plan of a page showing the headlines and placement of pictures and stories
- j. Feature story: a story of human interest that stirs the feelings of the reader. Its news value is usually unimportant, and it is written like a short story, leading up to the climax instead of beginning with a lead paragraph.
- k. Filler: a brief story or item used to fill an empty space
- 1. Headline: the title line or lines above an article
- m. Lead: the first paragraph of a news story

- n. Proofreader: a person who reads the preliminary printing to correct errors made in setting the type
- o.  $\frac{Scoop}{a}$ : getting an important news story ahead of any other paper
- *p. Bring to class several different newspapers. Locate examples of a, b, d, e, f, j, k, 1, and m of the newspaper terms.
- *q. Make a collection of cartoons from several newspapers.
  Display on posters or on the bulletin board. Discuss language, purpose, and effectiveness.
- *r. Poor proofreading leads to typographical errors in the newspaper. Find and make a class exhibit of such errors. Talk about the importance of proofreading.

C. Magazines

- 1. Magazine readers have increased enormously in recent years.
- 2. Magazines are popular reading because they offer entertaining fiction, informative articles, excellent pictures, and good advertising.
- News articles are especially informative because magazine writers have the time and space to give details and explanations that newspapers cannot give.
- 4. Two types of magazines
  - a. Magazines of large circulation for public in general
  - Magazines published for readers who have special interests with stories, articles, advertisements, and pictures selected for those particular groups.
- 5. Guides for widening magazine interests
  - a. If you are in the habit of reading only a certain few, become acquainted with other magazines. Check the Reader's Guide for the names of magazines that deal with your hobbies, recreations, and future career.
  - b. Try reading magazines that will improve your mind. Advance to magazines having more difficult material and broader interests.
  - c. Before subscribing to a magazine, compare its contents, appearance, readability, and price with those of others of its type.
  - d. So that you can form your own opinion, read at least one magazine that gives the facts on both sides of public questions. Generally speaking, select magazines that are not overcrowded with advertising.

* optional

- e. Before disposing of magazines, clip helpful articles and pictures. Keep a file of useful information gathered from your reading.
- 6. Learning activities in using magazines
  - a. Name one or more magazines published especially for each of these groups of readers: High school students, small children, men in general, women in general, working girls, businessmen.
  - b. Examine carefully two magazines published for same group of readers. Compare word choice. Examine two or more magazines aimed at different types of readers. Compare style and word choice.

c. Collect copies of as many different magazines as possible. Display, examine, and compare.

- d. Show how certain types of "pulp" magazines may prevent clear thinking, may lead to constant dreaming, may arouse unworthy ideas, and even stimulate crime. Give examples. Compare subject matter of the reading material with advertisements in such magazines.
- e. Choose a magazine you do not ordinarily read. Read it and analyze its material. Make a report on your judgment of the magazine.
