"Learning to understand one's self and to get along with others involves the essential habits, attitudes and skills necessary to understand and adjust to one's strengths and weaknesses, to develop moral and spiritual values basic to our democratic society and the ability to get along with others (such as peers, family, groups, authorities, opposite sex, strangers, etc.) in social relationships."*

This excerpt from the Wisconsin State Curriculum for the Educably Mentally Retarded describes briefly and accurately the authors' objectives in writing this curriculum. This curriculum is designed to prepare the students to be responsible, creative and independent adults, and it is in this way that their needs can best be met.

INTRODUCTION TO THE TEACHER

This curriculum is based on the assumption that social living is the main concern of the Educably Mentally Retarded student at the secondary level. It is within the context of social living that we have attempted to successfully meet the needs of these students. The curriculum has been divided into eleven units, each designed to deal with a major aspect of social living.

The first unit, Self Concept and Social Attitudes, attempts to help the student become aware of himself as an individual, aware of his goals and values, of his strengths and weaknesses, and of his limitations. The teacher should try to instill the attitude that a healthy self concept is beneficial to the well-being of the individual. It is the understanding of the authors that a healthy self concept leads to a more effective use of one's time, and it is with this in mind that the teacher should approach the unit.

Leisure Time.

The unit, Communication, is intended to aid in the personal growth of the students by making them aware of their environment through the communication skills of reading, writing, and speaking.

The unit, Safety and First Aid, should make the student aware of the various safety precautions essential to daily living and instill an attitude of sensible safety. In dealing successfully with his environment, the student should also be informed on how to react effectively to emergency situations. To insure one's physical well-being involves proper maintenance of the body as outlined in the unit, Health and Physical Fitness.

In discussing Citizenship Participation, the teacher should instill a sense of community involvement in the student by making him aware of his rights and obligations as a citizen. It is hoped that this review of citizenship participation will give the student a healthy attitude toward laws and the democratic system.

Effective management of one's income is a major concern of the E. M. R. student. The unit, Money and Financing, is intended to guide the student toward the most profitable use of his money. When approaching the unit, Vocational and Occupational Needs, keep in mind that these students will be entering the job market after the completion of their secondary education. It is important to expose them to a variety of career possibilities and what is involved in selecting and maintaining a job.

A thorough and objective education of drugs and drug abuse is important because the environmental and psychological problems of these students may make them more susceptible to the abuse of drugs. By presenting the facts as rationally and realistically as possible it is intended that the student will have a sensible attitude toward drug use.

The unit, Human Development, is intended to give the student a healthy and objective outlook on human sexuality. The teacher should approach the topic with openness and honesty, and should encourage a similar response from the students. The teacher may also wish to include the parents in this program in order to foster wholesome attitudes within the context of parent-child relationships. The unit, Marriage and the Family Unit, completes the discussion of human development by investigating the intricate and binding relationship of a marriage. It is important that the students understand that marriage is a permanent relationship bound by each partner's total commitment to the other.

All too often, the Educably Mentally Retarded student is left with a feeling of helplessness, incompetence and detachment upon completion of his academic career. We feel that this curriculum can help the student evaluate himself with a more positive outlook of himself in relation to his social environment. It is the objective of this curriculum to equip the student with the skills and attitudes necessary to function effectively in society.
