ABSTRACT

This document is a course outline for a community college Chicano Studies course focusing on the development of the Chicano and his role within Latin American society. The course seeks to examine broad concepts such as colonialism, discrimination, racism, and conflict and cultural pluralism within the Chicano context in the American Southwest and as they relate to other societies in Latin America. Included in the outline is a list of required course texts and a lecture and discussion schedule for each of the 15 weeks during which the course is conducted. A bibliography and a list of useful films are attached. (JDS)

Description

The socio-politico development of the Chicano and his role within Latin American society will examine broad concepts such as colonialism, discrimination, racism, conflict and cultural pluralism within the Chicano context and in turn relate them to other societies in Latin America.

Rationale

In the past, many Chicano Studies courses have concentrated upon historical, economic and socio-politico events which have taken place solely in the American Southwest. Generally only a cursory and peripheral view of Mexican history is presented to uphold such concepts as illegal territorial acquisition, aggression and internal colonialism. The oft repeated stories of La Malinche, Quetzalcoatl and the Grito de Dolores have little direct bearing on the Chicano population of today and the ties which still bind them to the social and political events which have and are taking place in 20th C. Mexico and the rest of Latin America. Within the framework of my specific project, I hope to examine those dynamics which are currently affecting Latin America and the large Chicano population residing in the Southwestern part of the United States. I intend to explore the notions of dependency theory, neo-colonialism immigration, and other factors which appear to have a direct application to Latin America and the Chicano population of the United States.

Objectives

The objectives of this course are two: first, to critically assess the notions of colonialism and dependency as represented in the required reading for the course; and second, to relate the Chicano to other "so-called linguistic and social minority groups in Latin America."

The first objective, focusing on the colonialism and dependency literature, is to be realized by all course participants actively engaging in the course discussions based on the assigned readings for the week, and by each participant leading--off one course discussion by presenting a brief oral critique of the major issues or arguments developed in the assigned readings. In addition, lectures as well as films and slides will be utilized for instructional purposes.

The second objective, relating the Chicano population to other societies in Latin America, is to be achieved by each course participant writing a term paper of his or her choice relating the Chicano to one other society in Latin America. This task will be made easier through lectures given by the instructor on the fundamentals of comparative analysis and comparisons of Latino societies.

Course Structure and Lecture and Discussion Schedule

This course could be designed for two 2 hour lecture periods or for four 1 hour lecture periods per week. For the purposes of this course outline I will use the former.

Required Texts:

Acuna, Rodolfo, Occupied America: The Chicano's Struggle Toward Liberation (San Francisco: Canfield Press, 1972).

Chilcote, Ronald H. and Edelstein Joel C., Latin America, The Struggle with Dependency and Beyond (New York: A Halstead Press Book, John Wiley and Sons, 1974).

Lecture and Discussion Schedule

Week 1

- A. Introduction, Objectives of the Course, explanation of course syllabi, assigned reading, etc.
- B. Lecture and Discussion, defining and assessing such concepts as Cultural Pluralism, Dominant-Subordinate Group Structures and Class Conflict. Many of these concepts are presented in Yerman and Steele, Majority and Minority: The Dynamics of Racial and Ethnic Relations.

Week 2

- A. "Colonialism, Discrimination and Racism Their Interworkings." This lecture will concentrate on the relationship of the three concepts above and how they are manifested in society through cultural and institutional structures.
 - a. The instructor will lead a discussion in order to reach some class unanimity as to what each concept really means.
- B. "The Ancient Peoples of Latin America: Are They Really Ancient?" This lecture will look at the cultural heritage of Latin America before the coming of Cortez and the many achievements which they made in the development of food, architecture and science.
 - a. The significance of the Spanish Conquest will be discussed, (the psychological and the social).
