ABSTRACT

Responses to a questionnaire circulated in March 1981 are summarized. Data were gathered from all states regarding the federal Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSL) and the state guarantee agencies on: guarantee agency organizational types; dates of GSL agreements with the Department of Education; states that guaranteed loans before GSL; distribution of lending institutions; services provided by guarantee agencies; lender promotion activities; agency reserve funds, sources of agency funds; student insurance premium; guarantee agencies; direct lending agencies, and secondary market agencies listed by name; direct lending activities; secondary market activities; revenue bond issuance; lending issues and research; recent figures on loans guaranteed and outstanding, defaults purchased and collections (expressed in numbers, dollars, and percentage of the U.S. total); and addresses of each guarantee agency. These highlights are extracted: (1) the GSL program has expanded rapidly, with over half the states' guarantee agencies coming into existence since 1976, although a number of states had agencies even before the federal program began; (2) there are nearly as many state arrangements (financial and organizational) as there are states, implying great program diversity; and (3) several of the new agencies have had dramatic growth in the volume of loans guaranteed, presaging a more widely-established, broad-based student loan program with a truly national consistency. It is noted that factors not surveyed here, including state banking laws and agency regulations, historical development, state postsecondary financing patterns, industrial activity, and competing credit demands, also contribute to diversity in the GSL program and the national student loan situation. ## Introduction

This 1981 report on the Federal Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) Program summarizes the responses to a questionnaire circulated in March 1981 by the New York State Higher Education Services Corporation (NYSHESC), on behalf of the National Council of Higher Education Loan Programs (NCHELP). The report follows the 1980 State Agency survey, also compiled by NYSHESC for NCHELP.

Many of the data summaries are similar to those of the 1980 report, although some topics were deleted and others added for the 1981 survey, to reflect changing concerns and issues in the GSL Program. The report has been prepared for distribution at the Spring 1981 NCHELP conference.

Historical Background

The GSL Program was established by the 1965 Higher Education Act, Title IV, which also authorized such forms of student aid as Basic Educational Opportunity (now designated Pell) Grants. Title IV emphasized state guarantees of student loans: the federal government was either to (1) reinsure loans guaranteed by states or by private nonprofit corporations, or (2) provide direct federal guarantees in cases in which students were unable to obtain loans guaranteed through state agencies or nonprofit corporations.

The former program has become known as the guarantee agency program and the latter as the Federal Insured Student Loan Program (FISLP), often referred to simply as the federal program. In the former program, state agencies or private nonprofit corporations guarantee loans and are reimbursed by the U.S. Department of Education (ED) for part of all of the insurance claims they pay to lenders. The program is subsidized by the government, operated at the state level, relying on private capital from the many banks and other financial institutions that offer student loans. Although the program is ultimately controlled through federal regulations issued by ED, guarantee agencies vary considerably among states.

FISLP operates in states not served by guarantee agencies, and in areas where a guarantee agency program does not serve all eligible students in the state. ED directly insures lenders against losses on FISLP loans. Although in theory both the guarantee agency program and FISLP may operate side by side within a state, in practice those states with guarantee agencies have come to be dominated by the agency programs, while the remaining few states without guarantee agencies have continued to offer only the federal program.

In 1974 the GSL program represented 46.3% of total loan volume, and FISLP accounted for 53.7%. By 1980 the GSL program had grown to represent 89.6% of total loan volume.

The Data Summaries

The summarized information in this report reveals several significant facts about the GSL Program, and about state guarantee agencies.

First, although the Program is relatively new, it has expanded rapidly. As the upper table on page 7 indicates, over half of the state guarantee agencies have come into existence since 1976, when the Higher Education Amendments of that year offered significant incentives for states to establish GSL agencies if they had not already done so. Between the 1980 and 1981 editions of this report, five new guarantee agencies were established in states that previously offered only FISL loans: Alabama, Arizona, Montana, Texas, and West Virginia.

On the other hand, the lower table on page 7 indicates that a number of states, primarily in the Northeast, had guarantee agencies before the federal program began in 1966. Thus, the breadth of age and experience varies considerably across the nation.

Second, the diversity of GSL program operation among the states is significant, and there are nearly as many different arrangements as there are states participating in the GSL program. For example, agency structural arrangements differ, with three predominant structural configurations: the state may be designated as the guarantor, with program administration contracted out to a nonprofit corporation; the state may be designated as the guarantor, and a state agency, board, public corporation, commission or department administers the program; or all responsibility for guarantee and administration may be assigned to a nonprofit corporation. The table on page 6 demonstrates these variations.

Financial arrangements also differ, as shown in the tables concerning other aid administered, sources of funds, reserve funds, student insurance premium, and revenue bonds. Unfortunately no data are available to describe differences in the student-borrowers--for example, their income distribution and the range of postsecondary institutions they attend. (Previous data from ED indicate that approximately 7,500 institutions are eligible to participate in the GSL program; 3,500 of which are collegiate degree-granting institutions and 4,000 of which are vocational, nursing and other non-degree granting institutions. About 800 foreign schools are eligible to participate in GSL).

The table on page 11 indicates diversity in arrangements with lending institutions. While the majority of states indicated that commercial financial institutions provide all or most of the GSL loan capital, in several states all capital is supplied by one central state lender. A number of states have established a direct lending agency and/or secondary market agency, in addition to the guarantee agency, as the tables on pages 22 through 29 indicate.

Third, the data contained in the final tables (page 36 - 44 ) show that several of the new guarantee agencies have experienced dramatic growth in the volume of loans guaranteed. As they have done so, loans guaranteed by the older agencies have declined as a proportion of the national total. For example, the largest state's share of the national total declined from 29% to 18% between 1977 and 1980, while the share of one new agency increased over six-fold (from 0.15% and 0.94% of the national total). This shift in relative loan volumes among guarantee agencies presages a more widely-established, broad-based student loan program with a truly national constituency.

This report focuses on state guarantee agencies. But differences in state banking laws, regulation of financial institutions, historical development, postsecondary financing patterns, industrial activity and competing credit demands also contribute to diversity in the GSL program and the student loan situation across the nation. In the words of one state guarantee agency executive, "Analyzing these numbers alone in insolation is always insufficient to fully understand the total environment in which a guarantee agency delivers its services to the people".

The following table indicates the status of responses through May 1, 1981. At this time, 47 of the 48 states with guarantee agencies had responded to the questionnaire. The table also indicates those states that contract with a non-profit servicing corporation (United Student Aid Funds or Higher Education Assistance Foundation) for GSL guarantee and/or administrative functions.

LEADING ISSUES AND RESEARCH

Guarantee agencies indicate that these are the major issues to be faced within the next 12 months:

ALABAMA: Lender promotion.

ALASKA: Changes in the GSL Program that would make it economically unattractive for lenders to remain in the program, computer changes to comply with current regulatory changes.

ARKANSAS: Proposed Federal budget cuts.

CALIFORNIA: Uncertainty of the possible changes to the GSL Program -- changes that can affect lender participation, income and expenses.

COLORADO: Installing data processing system, completing student expense survey, implementing PLUS Program, revising program to comply with Federal regulatory changes.

CONNECTICUT: Legislative changes, servicing, changes in automation.

DELAWARE: Regulations for PLUS Program, changes in the program due to changes in legislation.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA: Implementation of PLUS program, multiple disbursement for lenders, in-house data processing.

GEORGIA: PLUS Program, implementation, regulations procedure manuals, form revisions, field service recruitment and training of lender personnel.

HAWAII: Meeting requirements established by reauthorization, including forms revision, informing lenders of Reagan administration plans for budget cuts and impact on GSLP, providing secondary market availability and servicing.

IDAHO: Possibly Federal statutory changes, availability of loan capital.

ILLINOIS: State legislation for PLUS Program and implementation of program, implementation of an insurance premium for the student loan program.

INDIANA: Proposed Reagan administration changes, development of state secondary market.

IOWA: Research on probable impact of Reagan administration proposals for revisions to GSL Program.

KANSAS: Implementation of PLUS Program, multiple disbursement for lenders, in-house data processing.

KENTUCKY: Implementation of PLUS Program, impact of administration proposals on state guarantee agencies.

- MAINE: Congressional budget cuts, secondary market considerations.
- MICHIGAN: Coping with proposed GSL reductions, increasing inter-agency communications.
- MINNESOTA: Impelmentation of PLUS Program, multiple disbursement for Tenders, in-house data processing.
- MONTANA: Creating secondary market.
- NEBRASKA: Implementation of PLUS Program, multiple disbursement for Tenders, in-house data processing.
- NEVADA: Continued Federal support for GSL Program.
- NEW HAMPSHIRE: Implementing an automated system, PLUS loans, encouraging Tender participation when faced with major changes in GSL program.
- NEW JERSEY: Completion of new on-line data processing system, beginning research program on issues related to GSL, examining alternate source of funds for operating costs if ACA is eliminated, out-of-state collections.
- NEW MEXICO: Inclusion of commercial lenders in program, to provide access.
- NEW YORK: Anticipating and contending with Federal budget cuts.
- NORTH CAROLINA: Adjusting to a return to pre-MISAA days.
- NORTH DAKOTA: Uncertainty of GSL Program now under consideration in Congress, inflation and interest rates.
- OHIO: Implementation of PLUS Program and the design, development and implementation of a complete data processing package, development of a new Policies and Procedures manual to implement the 1980 Amendments.
- OKLAHOMA: Automation.
- OREGON: Preparation of a lender/school GSL manual.
- PENNSYLVANIA: Implementation of the provisions of the 1980 Amendments, developing the operational capabilities for the PLUS Program, revising GSLP application to conform to ED common form, while facing the probability of additional program changes and funding limitations due to Federal budget cuts.
- RHODE ISLAND: Automating loan division, locating new site, developing experience in PLUS Program.
- SOUTH CAROLINA: Budget reconciliation, PLUS Program.
- SOUTH DAKOTA: Proposed GSL Program cuts.
- TENNESSEE: Changes in GSL Program proposed by Reagan administration.
- TEXAS: Proposed Congressional cuts.

UTAH: Servicing improvements and financing.

VERMONT: Establishing a secondary market.

VIRGINIA: Proposed changes in Federal legislation, agency regulations of schools and lenders.

WASHINGTON: Providing last-resort lending, servicing, development of program review procedures, automation of internal procedures, automation of communications with lenders and schools.

WEST VIRGINIA: Implementation of PLUS Program, multiple disbursement for lenders, in-house data processing.

WISCONSIN: Implementation of whatever changes in GSL are approved by Congress in response to Reagan administration proposals.

WYOMING: Implementation of PLUS Program, multiple disbursement for lenders, in-house data processing.
