ABSTRACT

Intended to help various segments of the community, including parents, senior citizens, local representatives of business and industry, retired teachers, and college students in the quest for quality schooling for all children, this directory contains information on intergenerational programs located throughout the state of California. Program listings are divided into four general categories: school-based, community/agency-based, employment-based, and child care programs. The listings provide such information as program ideas, funding sources, and people (including phone numbers and addresses), who are involved on a day-to-day basis in programs that contribute to a greater understanding between youths and older adults. The directory does advise that, in most cases, Department of Education personnel have not visited or validated the particular programs described. (HOD)

Preface

One of the biggest tasks facing public schools today is to restore public confidence in the quality of our schooling. The task of improving education, however, does not fall on the schools alone. Schools are reaching out to various segments of the community, including parents, senior citizens, local representatives of business and industry, retired teachers, and college students as powerful allies in the quest for quality schooling for all children.

In many school districts and communities, reaching out specifically involves drawing on the talents and experiences of older adults. A recent study of the changing demographics in our society indicates that by the year 2000, one-third of the people in the United States will be over the age of sixty and will constitute the largest single minority in the country. Because older adults have a lifetime of experience, knowledge, and expertise to offer, schools are beginning to look on them as viable resources for strengthening the educational program. Having seniors come together with children at school and in other community settings is highly rewarding to the youths as well as to the seniors. Students thrive on the individual attention and assistance provided by the seniors. Seniors benefit from sharing experiences and remaining active, contributing members of the community.

This directory contains information on intergenerational programs located throughout the state--programs that are creating a mutually beneficial alliance between senior citizens and youths. Program listings are divided into four general categories--school-based, community/agency-based, employment-based, and child care programs. The listing is not comprehensive but represents a start toward sharing information about program ideas, funding sources, and people who are involved in a day-to-day basis in programs that are contributing to a greater understanding between youths and older adults. In most cases Department of Education personnel have not visited or validated the particular programs described in this document. It will be up to local community representatives to decide which approach for establishing an intergenerational program is best suited to their needs. We hope that this information helps more schools and communities to begin their own local efforts. If your program is not listed or if you know of an intergenerational program not mentioned in this listing, please contact us.

We wish to acknowledge and express appreciation to Deborah Hauptert, student intern, for revising and updating this 1985 edition.

I. School-Based Intergenerational Programs

(These programs are initiated by the school or take place primarily in the school setting.)

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Adopt-A-Grandparent
Deterding Elementary School
San Juan Unified School District
6000 Stanley Ave.
Carmichael, CA 95608
Contact: Jon Geil
Phone: (916) 482-5630

In this program a fifth grade class makes weekly visits to a nearby convalescent hospital. Each child visits with a foster grandparent for an hour. The children prepare various activities to share with their grandparents during the visit.

Capitola/Soquel Community Activities
620 Monterey Ave.
Capitola, CA 95010
Contact: Rebecca Doerr-Swofford
Phone: (408) 475-5935

Through the combined efforts of the city of Capitola and the Soquel Union Elementary School District, over 20,000 persons over the age of sixty participate in programs that range from an elderly feeding program sponsored by the Tri-County Nutrition Services to a community garden. This agency provides leisure and recreational services for residents of the mid-county area, manages facilities for the school district after school hours, and supplements the regular school curriculum by offering activities such as art, music, and sports.

Geriatrics Study Program
Pueblo Vista Elementary School
Napa Valley Unified School District
1600 Barbara Road
Napa, CA 94558
Contact: Jan Fischer
Phone: (707) 253-30

In this program fourth, fifth, and sixth graders from the Learning Lab for Gifted Students are divided into S.A.G.E. Committees (Students Aware of Growing Elderly) whose goal is to complete a report on various aspects of aging.

School-Based Intergenerational Programs (cont.)

The goal is not to accumulate facts but to heighten students' awareness of the problems, joys, and inevitability of aging.

Intergenerational Program
Adelante High School
Roseville Joint Union High
School District
350 Atlantic St.
Roseville, CA 95678
Contact: Kathi McCulla
Phone: (916) 782-3155

This community service program makes contact with all the convalescent hospitals in the Roseville community. Continuation high school students make cards for all the holidays throughout the school year and distribute them to the convalescing seniors.

The students also develop and distribute a job skills list to the senior citizens at the nutrition center. Students volunteer to perform various tasks free of charge, such as car tune-ups, fence fixing, roof repairs, carpentry, painting, housecleaning, and pet care. Some students who attend beauty school style hair and manicure nails.

McKinleyville Union Elementary
School District
P.O. Box 2067
McKinleyville, CA 95512
Contact: Edna Nungester
Phone: (707) 839-1971

This countywide senior citizen center, located on campus at the McKinleyville Elementary School, serves about 40 to 50 elderly persons a day. Intergenerational activities between children and seniors include visits by children to the center once a month, tutoring of special needs and other children in the classroom by the seniors, and performances by the children's choir at the center on holidays and special occasions.

Project Business Junior Achievement
1671 The Alameda, Suite 201
San Jose, CA 95126
Contact: Amy Distaulo
Phone: (408) 288-7500

Project Business is a nationwide flexible economics education program that supplements existing eighth or ninth grade social studies classes. Business persons, either employed or retired, are recruited to teach the basic concepts of the American economic system for one period a week for nine to thirteen weeks. Project Business provides the curriculum material, and the business person provides his or her business knowledge and expertise. Project Business is used by the schools to stimulate interest in the American economic system, improve the image of business, and introduce young people to private-sector career opportunities.

Contact: Nora-Joanne Gerber/Bill Heller
Phone: (707) 224-5619 or (707) 224-3151 (answering machine)

This program uses the skills and talents of senior citizens to assist low-achieving high school students. The seniors are hired as instructional tutors to work on a one-to-one basis with students who need additional assistance in the basic skills or other curriculum areas. Tutors also work with mainstreamed special education students.

Albany, CA 94706
Contact: Helen Laird
Phone: (415) 525-7873

Project JOY introduces students in private and public schools to older people in the community who live in senior centers and nursing homes to promote mutual respect, understanding, and friendship between the generations. The project involves an in-depth aging awareness curriculum, regular visits to senior centers and nursing homes, an intergenerational summer camp, older guests sharing stories about their lives in the classroom, and in-service education for teachers and parents.

A pet care program provides training for students in handling healthy and crippled animals from the Humane Society. Through role-playing, students learned to share the animals with retired persons who can't see or who are unfamiliar with animals.

Elk Grove Unified School District
8830 Sharkey Ave.
Elk Grove, CA 95624
Contact: Beverley Hartman, Project Coordinator
Phone: (916) 685-3160

The major objective of Project WARMTH is to establish and develop one-to-one relationships between senior citizens and children. Activities focus on the identified needs of the individual child, as determined by his or her teacher, parents, and, in some cases, counselor. These activities range from academic tutoring to the development of increased self-esteem through scheduled outings and meetings.

Contact: Eve Siegel or Claire Herzog
Phone: (415) 864-4223 or 864-4229

The SEER Project is a component of the San Francisco School Volunteers and is designed to recruit, train, and place people aged sixty and over to work with students in San Francisco's public schools on a volunteer basis. This year, approximately 150 SEER volunteers have provided tutoring services in basic skill areas as well as special subject areas (science, computer science, arts and crafts, music, chess); monitored libraries; and served as resource speakers. Their work provides additional resources to teachers in the classroom and gives students unique opportunities to get to know and share learning experiences with older people. SEER volunteers can participate in a wide variety of training options, including one-on-one orientation for tutors; "Pathways to English" groups for volunteers working with limited-English-proficient students; and SEER workshops in skill areas, child development, and aging awareness.

This project provides senior citizens with a way to share their skills and knowledge with students in public high schools. The seniors serve as tutors for students who need to improve their reading, writing, and math skills. They also give guest presentations on the careers from which they retired. In exchange for their services, seniors are provided the opportunity to use the school's facilities and equipment, such as the library, the shops and technical facilities, the homemaking and art rooms, the photography darkroom, and the business department equipment. Seniors are also given free admission to all athletic events and drama productions.

Intergenerational activities occur at the preschool, elementary, and high school levels through the volunteer program. High school students visit and read to senior citizens at the Redwoods Retirement Home. Seniors come to the school or do volunteer tasks, such as typing and phoning, at home. At the L'Chaim Jewish Community Center child care program, seniors and children participate in various activities throughout the year, such as going on field trips; singing songs; and celebrating Passover, Thanksgiving, and other holidays. Commencing with the 1984-85 school year, children from the Gallinas Elementary School will be participating in an oral history project with the seniors at L'Chaim Jewish Community Center.

Biology Program, Lawrence Hall of Science
University of California, Berkeley
Berkeley, CA 94720
Contact: Kimi Hosoume
Phone: (415) 642-0834 or 642-6345

The focus of this program is a series of hands-on discovery science workshops presented weekly to individual classes in kindergarten through grade six in the Oakland and Richmond school districts. The workshops are team-taught in the schools by Lawrence Hall of Science staff members and senior citizens. The goals of the program are to (1) students in grades two through eight with positive weekly interaction with seniors; (2) provide hands-on discovery science activities for school-aged children; and (3) create a resource bank of seniors trained in discovery-based science activities.

Grand People
Fresno Unified School District
5550 N. First St.
Fresno, CA 93710
Contact: Sandy Kataoka
Phone: (209) 441-3885

The Grand People Program promotes intergenerational understanding throughout the community. Senior agencies help recruit and interview seniors to ensure they are placed in the appropriate volunteer positions. Seniors give tutorial assistance, living history interviews, pet care instruction, cultural awareness, and other demonstrations and presentations to children. Teachers of elementary students are encouraged to take their classes to visit and entertain at senior retirement facilities or convalescent hospitals. Pen-pal projects have been very successful.

Tustin Unified School District
300 S. "C" St.
Tustin, CA 92680
Contact: William Wingo, Principal
Phone: (714) 730-7360

Currie School's Courtesy Card Program encourages students to seek ways to be of service to their fellow students, teachers, and community members. A "Courtesy Card" is issued to a student when he or she performs an act of service. After 15 cards are awarded to a student, he or she is presented with a large framed certificate during a special assembly, thus providing recognition and reinforcement of positive student behavior.

Since 1974, students participating in the Courtesy Card Program have done voluntary work for Tustin Manor, a home for the elderly. The activities are coordinated through the economics and French departments at Currie.

Tustin Unified School District received a Golden Bell Award from the California School Boards Association in 1983 and the Disneyland Community Service Award in 1982 and 1984.

San Diego, CA 92182-0273
Contact: Shirley A. Lockery
Phone: (619) 265-6765

This project involves older volunteers in reading, math, and science activities conducted after school for unsupervised (latchkey) children. The program offers a means of using existing untapped resources to meet many community needs.

Twenty-five or more senior volunteers work with approximately 150 elementary schoolchildren each day after school. The project represents a dynamic vehicle for studying the extent to which intergenerational activities have an effect (positive or negative) on attitudes, feelings of self-esteem, and life satisfaction of both the children and the older volunteers.

Phone: (619) 422-1127

The program has various components, including:

1. Grandparents Club. A one-to-one program involves senior citizens and children in a bilingual classroom. Field trips, special events, and special classroom activities are held to encourage the seniors to be involved in the classroom.
2. Grandparent Trip Chaperones. Senior citizens participate in regularly scheduled field trips. The seniors attend field trips with small groups of students to help the students gain more enjoyment from the trips.
3. Senior Classroom Volunteers. Seniors are recruited and trained by the volunteer coordinator to assist in classrooms on a regular basis. They assist in recordkeeping for the read-a-thon.

Funding for the Grandparent Program is through the Lauderbach PTA Advisory Council. Seniors are also involved at the school, on school advisory councils, and in the PTA.

Senior citizens provide services to schools as part of two program components. Through the museum outreach effort, seniors participate in classroom presentations that relate to local history and people. Students have an opportunity through this component to "experience" history through eyewitnesses and are exposed to human social situations beyond their immediate experiences.

Secondly, the speakers' bureau utilizes seniors as resource people for career awareness seminars and for enrichment in subjects contained in the curriculum. The bureau responds to specific requests from teachers for resource people.

Phone: (818) 330-5066

Project SWING is designed to recognize the importance of and provide a reciprocal communitywide opportunity for interaction between seniors and elementary schoolchildren. Particular emphasis is placed on involving schools with limited-English-proficient children. A system for matching skills, interests, and abilities of senior citizens with the needs of schoolchildren is central to the project. A major emphasis of the program is academic remediation, particularly reading. Remediation is accomplished through joint efforts of a special math/reading program and tutorial services provided by SWING volunteers.

Intergenerational Program
2175 The Alameda
San Jose, CA 95126
Contact: Marilou Cristina
Phone: (408) 243-8959

IAP's Intergenerational Program matches high school student volunteers with older persons for the benefit of each. Students visit their older friends once a week for two to three hours and do various errands and chores, including grocery shopping, housekeeping, gardening, and light meal preparation. Time is set aside for visiting and getting to know one another. The older persons talk with students about their experiences and memories of historical events and assist students in choosing hobbies.

Some students receive school credit for their volunteer work; the majority of students, however, receive no school credit and participate to become acquainted with and serve older people.

This project is designed to improve the social conditions and environment of the seniors and young people living in inner cities. Intergenerational groups, each composed of six teenagers and six elderly participants from an inner-city neighborhood, analyze their needs, those of their peers, and the effect of those needs on intergenerational relations. The format is both educational and action oriented and includes formulation of plans for community outreach by the intergenerational groups and implementation of the plans with the assistance of government and industry as well as academic and community resources.

San Francisco, CA 94109
Contact: Ann Lee, Youth Coordinator
Phone: (415) 776-1500 ext. 292

In this program young Asian immigrants learn about and serve their community through service to elderly people. The young people find it hard to live in a strange place where customs are very different and where they don't know the language. The Chinatown elderly feel lonely and alienated from friendly contacts. This program strives to deal with these unhappy situations.

The youngsters, who have recently arrived from Hong Kong, Taiwan, or Vietnam, are given ongoing training in communication, decision-making, and social skills. The youth also learn about American life and customs and the needs of elderly people. Young people assist at social events attended by older people and are encouraged to establish a one-to-one friendly relationship with an elderly person and assist in many activities such as reading, writing, shopping, or acting as escorts. During the holidays students entertain at senior centers. During the Chinese New Year, students clean seniors' homes from top to bottom.

In this project 25 youths learn agricultural skills by harvesting crops that provide vegetables to low-income seniors. They plant approximately ten acres in vegetables. Participants maintain the garden and harvest the vegetables. Senior volunteers from the Butte County Gleaners Association and the Butte Senior Gleaners direct and assist the youths in the harvest. Distribution of the vegetables to low-income seniors is done through the Butte County Gleaners Association, the Butte Senior Gleaners, and the Butte County Community Action Agency.

The youths earn up to nine units of college credit for their participation and receive placement services through the college placement office and the local Employment Development Department.

The major task of RSVP is to recruit and place seniors in volunteer positions in nonprofit agencies. Seniors are provided insurance coverage while they are volunteering. They are also reimbursed for a proportion of their out-of-pocket expenses and travel money. A newsletter is published monthly to keep the volunteers aware of news pertinent to their needs. Some of these senior volunteers have been placed in schools.

CURRICULUM RESOURCES

The Curriculum on Aging
San Diego County Office of Education
6401 Linda Vista Road
San Diego, CA 92111-7399
Contact: Rita King
Phone: (619) 292-3616

The Curriculum On Aging was developed to help children from kindergarten through grade six develop a more positive attitude toward aging and a greater understanding and appreciation of people of all ages, especially the elderly. The program was designed to reduce isolation and to challenge stereotypes.

A project kit containing 200 highly motivational interdisciplinary classroom activity/lesson cards provides opportunities for students to learn about aging and older people which often bring students and the elderly together for interesting and enjoyable intergenerational experiences.

CALIFORNIA NETWORKS

The Intergenerational Program Network is comprised of program directors, consultants, and members of a wide variety of intergenerational programs and agencies that serve those programs in northern California. It is funded through a grant from the Luke B. Hancock Foundation. An advisory board meets monthly to coordinate intergenerational activity schedules, to develop technical assistance programs, and to support one another in an effort to maintain and promote intergenerational programming in California. The network disseminates information and support through conferences, consultations, newsletters, and an intergenerational Resource Library for Northern California. Contact Nora-Joanne Gerber, Network Coordinator, 4032 Maher Street, Napa, CA 94558; telephone (707) 944-1931 or (707) 224-3151.

The Intergenerational Resource Library holds a collection of children's books focusing on grandparents and aging; gerontology books; curricula dealing with aging awareness; pamphlets on intergenerational programs from around the country; selected videotapes and films, and related film directories and bibliographies.

To become a member of the Intergenerational Resource Library and be eligible to borrow books and make use of the research materials, contact: Hilari Hauptman, Resource Librarian, 6421 Telegraph Avenue, Oakland, CA 94609; telephone (415) 655-8945.

CLEARINGHOUSES AND INFORMATION CENTERS

The Center for Intergenerational Learning, housed at Temple University's Institute for Aging, was created in 1980 to foster intergenerational cooperation and exchange. The center, a nonprofit organization, serves as a resource center and clearinghouse for information concerning existing intergenerational programs; develops and evaluates a variety of intergenerational projects that have a potential for replication; collects and designs written and audiovisual resource materials for national dissemination; and provides technical assistance and training to organizations interested in developing intergenerational programs. Contact Nancy Henkin, Institute on Aging, Temple University, 1601 W. Broad Street, Philadelphia, PA 19122; telephone (215) 787-6970.

The Clearinghouse on Intergenerational Programs and Issues was established to gather information on ACTION programs involved in intergenerational volunteer projects. Information was collected on where and how the projects were initiated; what the benefits were to participating children, youths, and older adults; what problems and barriers were encountered; and ways to foster increased communication between generations through volunteer projects and other community activities. In addition, a search of all available literature, audiovisual materials, and research on intergenerational programming was made through the University of Wisconsin libraries. Information is available on request. Contact Mary Stamstad, Director, Intergenerational Clearinghouse, 540 W. Olin Avenue, Room 137, Madison, WI 53715; telephone (608) 256-5596.

The Community Education Center on Aging, a private, nonprofit program, focuses its resources on community education and aging problems across the country. A national data base on senior citizen programs, including intergenerational projects, is being established. A resource bank called "The Aging and Community Education Connection" will not only include survey results but can also put the interested individual in contact with national organizations and can advise them of where to locate literature and/or audiovisual aids dealing
