ABSTRACT

This document begins with an overview of trends and issues in the area of adult literacy. This overview briefly addresses: the number of adult illiterates, the costs of adult illiteracy, adult illiteracy as a barrier to increasing U.S. competitiveness, efforts that have focused on adult illiteracy, the issues that have surfaced, and recommendations to reduce adult illiteracy. A list follows of resources that provide information about adult literacy. Print resources available from ERIC are listed by author, with title, place of publication and publisher or source, date, and ED or EJ number. Similar information is provided for several non-ERIC print resources. In addition, a listing is provided of organizations that can be contacted for further information. Addresses and telephone numbers are included. (YLB)

ADULT LITERACY

An Overview of Trends and Issues

Since President Reagan announced the Adult Literacy Initiative in September 1983, the high illiteracy rate among American adults has received national attention. It is estimated that 2.3 million adults each year join the existing pool of those 27 million adults who are functionally illiterate. The individual, social, and economic costs of adult illiteracy are high. Many illiterate and low-literate adults fail to achieve their individual potential and frequently are unable to participate fully in society. Adult illiteracy is also recognized as a barrier to increasing U.S. competitiveness. One-fifth or more of all adult workers probably need improvement in their basic skills to become fully productive in the workplace.

A number of efforts have focused attention on adult illiteracy. In addition to the National Adult Literacy Initiative, other major programs include the Business Council for Effective Literacy, formed as a vehicle to involve businesses in literacy programs in local communities; the Coalition for Literacy, an 11-member organization that cooperated with the American Association of Advertising Agencies on a nationwide media campaign; and Project Literacy U.S. (PLUS), a national media outreach literacy program sponsored by ABC and PBS.

As a result of these efforts, a number of key issues related to adult literacy education have surfaced: the characteristics of illiterate adults, the use of volunteers in literacy education programs, the impact of changing technology on literacy skills needed to function in the workplace, the need for more effective evaluation mechanisms, and the need for better linkages and communication within the field of adult literacy education. A significant reduction in adult illiteracy depends upon increased research activity, the development of new coalitions, and increased emphasis on prevention.

This Trends and Issues Alert contains a number of resources that provide information about adult literacy. Included are print resources as well as organizations that can be contacted for further information.
