SCIENCE POLICY - FOREIGN AND INTERNATIONAL Compiled by John F. Buydos

TB 89-1

Harch 1989

SCOPE: Science policy concerns the formulation and implementation of national and international plans to establish or influence courses of action affecting science and technology. Science policy may include supporting research and development comprehensively or in selected fields, determining priorities for research and development to achieve national objectives, and collaborating with other nations in the pursuit of common goals. This Tracer Bullet lists relevant sources of information on how science policy is formulated as well as its effects on the development of scientific and technical knowledge. The science policy of nations other than the United States, collaboration between individual nations or among groups of nations, and the science policy of international organizations are included. Coverage of U.S. science policy is limited to those aspects relating to U.S. foreign policy. For coverage focused on the United States, refer to TB 83-4 on Science Policy.

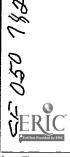

This guide offers a review of the literature in the Library of Congress on foreign and international science policy. Not intended as a comprehensive bibliography, it is designed—as the name of the series implies—to put the reader "on target."
