ABSTRACT
        The Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council developed a Volunteer Evaluation System. Its objective was to create a way to gain knowledge of volunteers' skills and place them in appropriate volunteer positions. A five-step system was created to collect information about volunteers at set intervals and pass it along to appropriate staff members. The steps were inquiry/orientation; interview; volunteer training through a workshop; testing of the 12-hour probationary period; and an ongoing review system, with a scheduled review after every 50 hours of instruction. A new tutor data application form was also developed. Space was provided for comments by the volunteers regarding training and the five-step process and observations by the staff of the volunteer's potential.
An objective that was not achieved was the provision of a process for staff, volunteer, and student to assess the program's procedures.

ABSTRACT

The Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council developed and tested a Volunteer Evaluation System. This system consisted of five (5) stages:

1. inquiry/orientation

2. interview

3. training

4. probation

5. ongoing review

This report should be of interest to those who select, supervise and place volunteers in adult literacy and adult basic education programs.

INTRODUCTION

Before this project was undertaken we had no interviewing of volunteers. We were having problems with the tutor/student match. Students were dropping out because their goals were not being addressed and the tutor was not willing to listen to the student's needs. We were also finding volunteers placed in tutoring positions when they were better suited for other volunteer positions. Finally, when our area coordinators made the match, more was known about the student than the tutor.

These issues led us to conduct a project to create ways of being more knowledgeable of the skills of our volunteers. This project was not well received by staff at first. As the staff worked with this project, however, the advantages of taking these steps began to outweigh any disadvantages. There were volunteers redirected from tutoring to other volunteer positions. These decisions were made as a direct result of this project and proved immediately to be successful.

Goal I: To provide a five-step system to integrate new volunteers into the program.

        Objective Ia: To develop and test an inquiry/orientation stage.

        Objective Ib: To develop and test an interview process.

        Objective Ic: To continue to provide the training a volunteers

                                       needs for their position.

        Objective Id: To test the probationary period.

        Objective Ie: To develop an ongoing review system.

It was important to make the assimilation of the volunteer into our agency as smooth and successful as possible. It was the staff's intention to put more work into the initial screening of the volunteer. It was felt that it would in the long run be less stressful and time consuming for the staff.

We expected to have this process completely disseminated throughout the agency before the end of the year. This project was not well received by everyone in the early stages. Gradually, more and more staff considered this project necessary.

Goal II: To create a new tutor data application.

The objective was to provide space on the data application for comments and observations by the volunteers and staff.

As GPLC created and tested the various tutor data applications, we realized we were limiting the potential of the data application. We wanted the data application to assist the staff regardless of the position the volunteer eventually held. We also wanted the form to be beneficial should the volunteer change roles in our organization over time. This often happened.

GPLC wanted to see comments by the volunteer regarding our training and our five-stage process. We wanted the staff that came in contact with the volunteer to have the opportunity to make written observations of the volunteer's potential. The change from a tutor data application to a volunteer data application evolved for us.

Also, this project uncovered a need not previously identified. That need was for the training of staff in interviewing skills. How to inform a volunteer they were not appropriate for our program, or they were not appropriate for tutoring, were the most difficult to address.

As GPLC worked through this project, our initial focus, the volunteer tutors, began to change to represent all volunteer positions.

Our project name was changed from Volunteer Tutor Evaluation System to Volunteer Evaluation System to reflect this change in focus. Consequently equal value was placed on all volunteer positions. This made it easier to redirect volunteers when the situation called for it. It also increased the number of volunteers in positions we were having difficulty filling.

Goal III: To provide vehicles for staff, volunteer and student to assess the program's procedures.

It is hoped that all parties involved, student, volunteer and staff member, will be able to give input on how the agency can improve and assist more people.

Prior to this project there was no written report giving the student's opinion. As we move toward a more "learner centered" agency, the input of the student is being incorporated into all aspects of the program.

The Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council has not been pleased with the percentage of students giving input into the program. It is the wish of the staff that students in the program have a greater opportunity to provide feedback. GPLC has never had student evaluations done in written form. This project has set the stage for this to occur.

The pages which follow will outline the experiences we had developing this project. They will show the structure of our agency and how we assimilated the stages into our structure. It is our feeling that this project may assist other agencies in the placement of volunteers.

Each goal is covered in a separate chapter.

Chapter One

Before this project began we did not have procedures for an inquiry/orientation step. There was no interview process taking place. The probationary period existed; however, it was not stressed before the matches were made. Our area coordinator first mentioned this concept of probationary period to the volunteer when the area coordinator made the matches. We did not mention it when the volunteer first called. Since we did not have an interview process, it was not done then, nor did we mention this in our training.

Therefore tutor volunteers were not aware of the probationary period. Volunteers assigned to other volunteer positions did not have a probationary period at all.

The training step did exist; however, the training was becoming the place where many non training functions were expected to be done while still doing training. The observing of volunteers, making recommendations, providing an orientation and giving the agency requirements were all covered in training. So much time was being taken by all of these various functions that the tutor workshop training was becoming adversely affected. We were finding that we were not having enough time to cover all the scheduled training material. Likewise, the presenters had much to do preparing for their part, setting up the materials, signing volunteers in and fielding questions. At some workshop sessions presenters were unable to make observations of the volunteers to pass on to the appropriate staff member. We had to go back to having the training workshops concentrate on training and find some other point to accomplish the screening and evaluation of volunteers. When possible, the presenters still tried to make observation for future staff use. It was critical for the area coordinator to have as much information as possible on the volunteer when they were making the match.

GPLC created the five-stage program in order to pick up information on the volunteers at set intervals and pass along to the appropriate staff member. Also each step would enable the volunteer to obtain whatever information they may need to make a determination that this was what they wanted to do.

At the inquiry/orientation step, our receptionist would provide a quick overview of our program to the volunteer when they called in. The receptionist took the volunteer's name, address and telephone number. (exhibit 1) Based on the volunteer's zip code, the receptionist provided the name of the area coordinator responsible for that volunteer's area.
The volunteer was advised, that once he received our information packet, he was to read over it. If he had any questions he was to call the designated area coordinator for further details.

The information packet (exhibit 2) included a mission statement, the agency history, a list of volunteer positions and their duties, a schedule of upcoming workshop dates, a volunteer data form, a workshop registration form and the name, telephone number and office hours of the appropriate area coordinator. At the end of each day, or no later than the end of each week, the receptionist notifies the area coordinators, giving them the name and telephone numbers of the volunteers who called from their area.

At the interview stage, there were two possible ways interviews were scheduled. First, the area coordinator or his designee, would call these volunteers to see if they had any additional questions, if they were still interested in volunteering, and to schedule a interview. Second, when the volunteer returned the workshop registration form to our main office, the training staff notified the appropriate area coordinator. The area coordinator then contacted the volunteer to set up the interview.

The actual interview process was handled in one of three ways, depending on the area coordinator's schedule. Some of our area coordinators are full-time staff, some are part-time staff . They could conduct the interviews either one-to-one in person, over the telephone, or in small groups of 2 to 3 volunteers. Some of our area coordinators did all of their interviewing personally, others had experienced volunteers in our program to do the interviewing.

The questions we used in the interview (exhibit 3) were revised three times. We are not completely happy with all of the questions, even now. Not all staff members are satisfied that the questions will trigger the kind of response we are seeking. They also feel some of the questions are awkward to ask. These two issues continue to be a concern. Moving through the process, many staff members expressed their inability to handle certain situations in the interview. GPLC sought training for the staff which would cover interview techniques. The training was facilitated by an outside organization, the Pittsburgh branch of the American Society for Training and Development. This organization assists agencies with employee training. The training covered interviewing techniques.

Once the volunteer had an interview and was selected for tutoring, he was registered in one of our training workshops.
We have twelve a year, rotating throughout the communities where we have area coordinators working.

After the volunteer has been trained, they are placed in the volunteer position they like or they have ability and time to do. If the volunteer became a tutor they were matched with a student. This match would be monitored closely for twelve hours of instruction. After the first twelve hours of volunteering or probationary period, the volunteer is asked to comment on the experience so far. A written review of the records on the pair is made. Then the match, if good, continues for 50 hours of instruction before another review is made.

The ongoing review occurs at every new 50 hours of instruction. This is also the time when the student is retested. Since we do assessments on the students after each 50 hours of instruction, it seemed feasible to use these intervals to provide ongoing review for the volunteer tutor. Providing ongoing review for the other volunteer positions has been a challenge. Since the volunteer tutor makes up the largest number of volunteers in our program, we structured an ongoing process. For the other volunteer positions we left the review process to those staff members responsible for the volunteer to handle.

Our experience has suggested to us the importance of understanding the staff's knowledge and ability when developing such a process. If the staff has little or no ability in interviewing, for example, training will need to be provided. If the staff feels uncomfortable doing a step, it will not be done. It is important to help staff see the advantages for the agency and their particular job.

CHAPTER TWO

The data form we were using before this project, was revised several times. We feel the present form has the greatest versatility (exhibit 4, 5, 6,7). By developing and testing the data form, we realized we were minimizing the value of most of the volunteer positions. We had been attaching prestige to the volunteer tutor positions, but changing the data form to be inclusive helped alleviate this problem.

All volunteers fill out the same data form. All volunteers provide references and all volunteers are able to write comments or suggestions they may have.

This data form has gone a long way in assisting the interview and match process.

It has been our experience that having a standardized data sheet for all volunteers to complete is beneficial. As stated earlier, staff had an easier time redirecting a volunteer from one to one tutoring, to another volunteer position. It was virtually impossible to redirect a volunteer from being a tutor to another position prior to this project.

CHAPTER THREE

Trying to provide vehicles for assessing the program's procedures, has been difficult to do during this project.

The structure of our five-step process will provide informal measures for how the programs are going. We wanted to have in place a formal way of measuring how the agency is being accountable from the student, volunteer, and staff point of views.

It is our hope that this vehicle will be developed in the near future.

For now, we are very pleased with the materials that were developed through this project. We are also pleased because this project identified needs we did not realize we had and it has helped us to begin to address those needs.

Staff members, once skeptical, now see the value of interviewing volunteers before they are trained.

It has been our experience that a serious attitude regarding where volunteers are placed and how they are brought into the agency can only strengthen the positive support we give to our students.

Volunteer Opportunities

There are many ways to participate in the work of the Literacy Council. The following is a brief outline of our agency's volunteer opportunities.

From the Area Office

Administrative Assistant

Learn about the literacy council from the ground up. Assistance is needed in many different phases of office procedures. Two to eight hours monthly. Day or evening. Fifteen locations around Allegheny County.

Interviewer

Interview and administer reading assessment to incoming students. Retest active students at regularly scheduled intervals. Arrange appointments at mutually convenient times and locations. Three hours training. One interview per week (approximately 1 1/2 hours). Daytime or evenings.

Student Book Club Leader

Lead a monthly book club for new adult readers. Three hours monthly.

Public Speaker

Volunteers who have tutored in GPLC's program may join our speakers bureau. We send speakers to community and church groups throughout Allegheny County. Three hours per month.

Public Relations Assistant and Fund Raiser

Spread the word about the great success that adult learners are having with GPLC. Get involved in special events to support our services. Time commitment negotiable.

Training Assistant

Work with our training coordinator assisting at day or evening workshops. Present training material. Provide clerical help. Approximately three hours a week.

Tutoring Opportunities

One-to-one Tutor

Tutor an adult learner in basic reading and writing or math skills. Meet twice weekly for one and one-half hours. Must attend a 12 hour training workshop. Pre-registration required. Use workshop registration form.

EXHIBIT2   (8pages)

Small-group Math Tutor

Tutor a group of three to eight students in basic math. One evening per week (approximately two hours). Must attend the twelve-hour tutor workshop and a three hour workshop in small group methods. (Pre-registration required)

Small-group Reading Tutor

Tutor a group of three to eight students in basic reading and writing skills. Meet twice weekly for 1 1/2 hour sessions. Team tutoring is encouraged.. Must attend the 12-hour training workshop. and a three hour workshop in small group methods.(Pre-registration required.)

Substitute Tutor

Serve as a backup for tutors who are ill or on vacation. Flexible schedule. Must attend the 12-hour tutor training workshop.

From Your Home

Telephoner

Contact up to ten tutors on a monthly basis for records, tutor needs, and special information. One to two hours during the last week of the month. Done from the home.

Special Projects Manager

Take charge of a special project or an aspect of a project. Some examples: Organize refreshments for workshops and meetings. Plan special events such as local or agency-wide tutor/student recognition ceremonies. Projects will vary with agency needs.

Other Opportunities

With a staff member's assistance, develop a project or volunteer position based on your interests and talents. Hours negotiable.

Volunteer opportunities vary based on agency needs. To inquire about current openings, please fill in the form below and send it to the Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council.

Mission Statement & History

Mission Statement

The misson of Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council is to teach youth and adults basic reading, writing, and math skills so that they may reach their fullest potential in life and participate productively in their community.

History of the Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council

In 1965, in Florida, Mary Yardumian heard a speech by Frank Laubach, the well-known literacy educator and author of the Laubach Method. She was inspired to become a literacy tutor and soon afterwards began teaching immigrant workers near her Florida home.

In 1971, after moving to Pittsburgh, she found no volunteer literacy program in Allegheny County or in nearby counties. Mrs. Yardumian then prepared to become a trainer of tutors so she could help new programs get started. Between 1975 and 1980 she trained tutors in every area of western Pennsylvania, enabling programs to be established in at least twelve other counties.

In 1976 Mrs. Yardumian founded Greater Pittsburgh Literacy Council with a group of volunteers from the Pittsburgh area. Since she continued to respond to requests for training from all over the state, GPLC did not grow very rapidly.

By 1982 the demand for tutoring was too great for Mrs. Yardumian and her volunteers to handle. A long-range planning committee recommended that the Council become a non-profit corporation and that it constitute a board of directors.

In August 1982 GPLC was incorporated and moved into an office in the East Liberty branch of the Carnegie Library. The first two staff members were hired in 1984, and the following year the first area site was established on the North Side of the city.

Since that time GPLC has moved twice, each time in response to a growth in services to students. Our present office at 100 Sheridan Square is the result of our first capital campaign and is designed to meet the specific needs of GPLC. The Council's professional staff has grown to twenty-one members. Neighborhood-based programming has continued to develop and today there are fifteen area offices in donated space in libraries, school districts and social service agencies.

GPLC's services have been expanded to include pre-GED instruction; group instruction in reading, math, and spelling; and vocational guidance. In 1990 GPLC's staff will assist volunteers in providing service to 1,300 students whose reading abilities range from zero to eighth grade level.
