ABSTRACT

In September 1980, the Board of Education of the City of Chicago and the U.S. Department of Justice signed a consent decree that committed the board to the development of a comprehensive student desegregation plan to remedy the effects of past segregation on Black and Hispanic students. To fulfill the goals of the Chicago Desegregation Plan, educational initiatives have been established in elementary and high schools, including specialty programs in racially identifiable schools. This program guide aims to assist in the organization, implementation, and improvement of the Dual Language Immersion Program, which uses both English and another language as the medium of instruction in the elementary school. While continuing development in their native language through the general program of instruction, both limited-English-proficient (LEP) and monolingual (English-speaking) students have the opportunity to acquire the basic skills of interpersonal communication in the second language. This guide describes the Spanish/English program at three magnet schools. It includes instructional goals, objectives, suggested activities, and assessments at beginner, intermediate, and advanced levels. A chapter on cross-cultural competency is also included. Appendices contain program model descriptions, a glossary, a resource directory, and an annotated bibliography of recommended student texts. Contains 26 references. (LB)

Guiding Principles on School Reform

1. All children can learn, given the proper school environment.
2. The purpose of the Chicago Public Schools is the education of the whole child. The schoolhouse is the center of this educational process. Each school is unique and functions as an individual entity.
3. The principal and teachers of a school, in cooperation with the parents and community, know best the potential and needs of their students and are, therefore, the best suited to direct the educational course of their school.
4. The role of all nonclassroom personnel of the Chicago Public Schools is one of support to the schoolhouse.
5. The first priority for the allocation of all resources, both financial and human, within the Chicago Public Schools is the education of the whole child.
6. The multiracial, multicultural, multilingual makeup of the Chicago Public Schools student body is an asset and a resource for enriching the lives of all students.

PREFACE

In September 1980, the Board of Education of the City of Chicago and the United States Department of Justice signed a Consent Decree which committed the Board to the development of a comprehensive student desegregation plan which would "remedy the effects of past segregation on black and Hispanic students."

The Chicago Desegregation Plan, designed to increase educational opportunity through a voluntary student transfer program, was required to have two major goals: (1) establishment of the greatest practicable number of stably desegregated schools and (2) the provision for compensatory educational programs for schools which remain racially identifiable.

In an effort to fulfill the goals of the Plan, educational initiatives have been established in elementary and high schools throughout the city and include magnet schools and magnet programs in integrated/desegregated schools, community academies, and specialty programs in racially identifiable schools. These programs are designed to meet the diverse needs and interests of students.

This program guide illustrates the variety of challenging and exciting educational programs available to students citywide and defines curriculum characteristics unique to specific magnet school programs. Students participating in these programs are provided the general program of instruction with concentration in the specialized subject areas.

INTRODUCTION

The ability to communicate in a second language is an asset in our multilingual, multicultural world. Many students in the Chicago public schools come from diverse cultural and linguistic backgrounds. These students are provided with bilingual education programs that follow federal, state, and local guidelines regarding instructional programs for limited-English-proficient students. Students who speak only English are also given the opportunity to acquire a second language.

The purpose of this guide is to assist in the organization, implementation, and improvement of the Dual Language Immersion Program, a unique program that uses both English and another language as mediums of instruction in the elementary school. While continuing development in their native language through the general program of instruction, both limited-English-proficient and monolingual (English-speaking) students will have the opportunity to acquire the basic skills of interpersonal communication in the second language.

This guide describes the Dual Language Immersion Programs (Spanish and English) at three magnet schools. It includes instructional goals, objectives, suggested activities, assessments, and an appendix. These may be adapted to meet the needs of the student population as well as the needs of the community. Students participating in this program are provided with the general program of instruction. Instruction in the content areas is given in Spanish and English.

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

The Dual Language Immersion Program is a combination and extension of existing bilingual education programs. It is correlated to the descriptions and goals of the Transitional and Maintenance Bilingual Education Programs for the purpose of developing and maintaining language arts skills for all students in both languages. (For models of the Dual Language Immersion Program, see the appendix.)

Types of Bilingual Education Programs

Transitional Bilingual Education Program (TBE)

Transitional Bilingual Education programs provide educational assistance to limited-English-proficient students through instruction in their native language, culture, and English as a Second Language. Limited-English-proficient students receive content-area instruction at grade level in their native language until they speak and understand English well enough to receive instruction in English.

The goal of TBE is to prepare students to participate in the general program of instruction in English. This goal is achieved by providing instruction in the content areas in the native language, by increasing proficiency in English, by developing language arts skill in the native language, and by fostering an understanding of the cultures of both language groups.

Maintenance Bilingual Education Program (MBE)

In addition to the goals of TBE, Maintenance Bilingual Education Programs provide the opportunity for the limited-English-proficient students and bilingual students to continue to develop their native language through the general program of instruction.

The goal of the MBE is to develop and maintain the student's English-speaking skills as well as those of the native language, thus enabling the student to participate in the general program of instruction in both languages.

Dual Language Immersion Program (DLI)

In addition to the goals of the TBE and MBE programs, the Dual Language Immersion Program provides students who speak only English with the opportunity to develop a second language. Dual Language Immersion Programs are also described under such titles as Developmental Bilingual, Interlocking Bilingual, Two-Way Bilingual Immersion, Bilingual Immersion, Two-Way Language Immersion, and Back-to-Back Language Programs.

The DLI program, as described in Kathryn J. Lindholm's Directory of Bilingual Immersion Programs: Two-Way Bilingual Education for Language Minority and Majority Students "essentially involves some form of dual language immersion, where the non-English language is used for at least fifty percent of the students' instructional day; the program involves periods of instruction where only one language is used; both English and non-English speakers (preferably in balanced numbers) are participants; and the students are integrated for all content instruction."¹

¹ Kathryn J. Lindholm, Directory of Bilingual Immersion Programs: Two-Way Bilingual Education for Language Minority and Majority Students (Los Angeles, Calif.: Center for Language Education and Research, 1987) p.5.

The goal of the DLI program is to develop and maintain language arts skills in both languages as well as foster an understanding of cultures.

The Dual Language Immersion Program has been implemented in three Chicago public schools. Their programs, although similar, were developed and tailored to meet their individual needs.

Inter-American Magnet School opened in 1975 through the initiative of Spanish and English-speaking parents. The school provides English language arts and Spanish language arts to all students from preschool through eighth grade as well as content-area instruction in both languages, with an emphasis on the study of the cultures of the Americas.

Kanoon Magnet and Sabin Magnet schools, founded at later dates, are based on the same model. Each school reflects the needs of the community it serves as well as its student population.

Sabin Magnet School provides instruction of Spanish as a Second Language for monolingual English-speaking students and limited-Spanish-proficient students. In the primary grades, all students benefit from content-area instruction in both languages. Limited-English-proficient students at all grade levels receive content-area instruction in Spanish in addition to English as a Second Language. Focusing on the need to develop critical thinking and problem-solving skills in all students, classroom instruction in both languages is complemented by work in mathematics, science, and computer laboratories using both languages. In the classroom, the development of these skills is addressed by the implementation of the principles of the Paideia Proposal.

Like Sabin, Kanoon Magnet School provides instruction of Spanish as a Second Language and English as a Second Language for all students at levels appropriate to their abilities. In keeping with the holistic approach to education, Kanoon's International Studies program integrates four components: international studies, cultural arts, multicultural music, and multicultural literature. Students also participate in numerous extracurricular activities in the second language.

The programs at these three schools provide students with continued development of Spanish language arts even after proficiency in English has been attained.

Special features found at these schools include:

- early childhood language exposure

- full-day kindergarten

- classes in English Language Arts (ELA) and in Spanish Language Arts (SLA)

- classes in English as a Second Language (ESL) and Spanish as a Second Language (SSL)

- subjects taught in English, subjects taught in Spanish, and subjects taught in both languages

- contests, such as the Academic Olympics, in both English and Spanish

- team teaching at different levels

- a caring, cooperative school climate that promotes the affective, social, and cognitive development of each student articulation with the foreign language departments in Chicago public high schools an integrated art, music, and international studies program

parent tutors and speakers in both languages

parallel textbooks in Spanish and English for social studies, science, mathematics, and reading opportunities for cultural exchanges both in Chicago and abroad

special cultural events, such as Bilingual Career Day, Immersion Day, and African-American History month active parental involvement in school activities

state certified bilingual teachers, at all grade levels

selection of teachers through position advertising, visitation, and interviews conducted by parents and staff auxiliary personnel for small group instruction, music, art, computer science, and international studies

INTERFACE WITH THE CORE CURRICULUM

The instructional program of the Dual Language Immersion Program is correlated to the instructional objectives of the core curriculum. Bilingual subject-area specialists are responsible for instruction in both languages. To enhance the total instructional program, dialogue and coordination of effort between bilingual classroom teachers, administrators, and ancillary personnel is necessary.

The strategies for developing and implementing an interfaced dual language instructional program include the following:

- providing professional planning time for all teachers to plan and implement integrated instruction
- providing staff development for educators in existing programs and for those initiating a dual language program
- determining areas of subject commonality and developing strategies for implementing cooperative teaching programs
- planning assemblies, exhibits, field trips, audio-visual programs, and lectures by guest speakers that correlate with several subject areas
- planning and implementing school immersion activities that coalesce both languages with the core curriculum studies
- planning and participating in local, regional, and national language competitions
- planning enrichment activities, such as home stays, language camps, travel abroad, and student exchange programs
- encouraging classroom discussions and analyses that highlight languages, cross-cultural awareness, and global understanding
- developing analytical and problem-solving skills through the infusion of critical thinking skills into the instructional program

ARTICULATION

Articulation connects curriculum, instruction, and evaluation from classroom to classroom, grade level to grade level, and school to school. The purpose of articulation activities is to help each student feel at ease in a new setting, ensure that each student receives appropriate placement, and assist each student in making appropriate decisions concerning educational goals. This is accomplished by standardizing course content, exposing students to information needed for continuous progress in the language, validating the goals and objectives for the course of study at each level, and developing and implementing an assessment program.

The following activities and responsibilities are suggested to assist school personnel in planning for the smooth transition and adjustment of students.

Initial School Entry (Preschool/Kindergarten)

To provide an easy transition from home to school for incoming students, schools may wish to meet with parents prior to the student's entry to school. The philosophy, expectations, and description of the dual language immersion program are explained to the parents at this meeting.

Transition from Kindergarten To Primary, Intermediate, and Upper Grades

Planning meetings for kindergarten, primary, intermediate, and upper grade teachers should be scheduled to ensure that activities are continuous; individual assessment is ongoing; information regarding health problems, unusual talents, and special interests is exchanged; and records are complete and up-to-date.

Meetings to inform and involve parents of students in the Dual Language Immersion Program are on-going to explain how the program affects students at different stages of development.

Transition from Elementary to High School Program

Special emphasis should be placed on the articulation program for dual language students entering high schools. Continuity is a major principle in language instruction. It is essential that elementary students continue their study of a language without duplication or interruption. They may choose magnet high school language centers that offer advanced level courses, bilingual high schools, or other secondary schools. Appropriate placement is based upon providing a continuous curriculum suitable to the students' abilities, achievements, interests, and goals. To help facilitate the transition from elementary school to the secondary school, counselors, and foreign language teachers may do the following:

- discuss the differences between magnet high school language and bilingual centers and other programs

- discuss academic achievement, placement, and program options

- relate course choices to educational and occupational goals

- acquaint students with the vocabulary used in the secondary school

class rank	grade point average	semester
course	prerequisite	sequence
elective	requirements	units of credit

show students and parents a film depicting the secondary school atmosphere invite speakers from the participating secondary schools in which the students are interested arrange to have former students of a dual language immersion program who are now in high school visit the elementary school to describe high school programs and activities and answer the students' questions.

review opportunities for students with special talents and interests

plan a Parent-Information Day invite secondary school counselors to the feeder elementary dual language immersion school to discuss anticipated new experiences with the students discuss the ways in which the students might participate in extracurricular activities

plan field trips to selected high schools distribute and discuss the secondary school student handbook or fact sheet which explains school rules and regulations

Staff Responsibilities

To ensure a smooth transition to the high school, the Department of Language and Cultural Education provides the following recommendations for staff in the elementary and secondary schools.

Elementary Counselors. Elementary counselors will inform students of language program options--language academies, international studies, bilingual centers, and magnet schools. Elementary counselors should also do the following:

contact the Department of Language and Cultural Education to arrange proficiency testing for eighth grade students at the end of the first semester of eighth grade and to obtain articulation forms (See the appendix, page 179, for "Report and Recommendation(s) for the Elementary School Foreign Language Program.")

record proficiency test scores in cumulative folders explain to the elementary student that some high schools administer in-house placement tests obtain articulation forms from elementary school foreign language teachers make sure that the articulation forms are placed in cumulative folders advise elementary students to continue studying the same foreign language during high school

High School Counselors. It is recommended that high school counselors help each student achieve a smooth transition from the elementary school language program to the high school program. It is also recommended that high school counselors do the following:

obtain cumulative folders with articulation forms from the elementary school counselors forward articulation forms to the department chairperson for recommendations regarding placement obtain scores from proficiency and/or placement tests and contact the department chairperson and/or foreign language teachers to assist with student placements

record credit on the Official Record and Transcript (Form H1-116 R) under the section "Optional Exams Passed" and place the form in the Envelope for Student's Records (Form H1 115-A) (No credit is given for in-house placement tests.)

program students in the appropriate year and level advise students of college entrance requirements--minimum of two years of the same language for most state schools and up to four years for highly competitive schools and universities with special programs

Elementary School Teachers and High School Department Chairpersons. It is recommended that the elementary school teachers and the high school department chairpersons do the following:

- promote articulation between high school and elementary programs
- arrange and coordinate proficiency testing in the high school and with the feeder schools
- record credit on the Official Record and Transcript (Form H1-116R) under the section "Optional Exams Passed" and place the form in the Envelope for Student's Records (Form H1 115-A)
- organize meetings and inservice workshops at the local level
- assist in program development
- facilitate communication among teachers, administrators, and the Department of Language and Cultural Education

PROGRAM COMPONENTS

Personnel

Successful implementation of a dual language immersion model program depends upon effective leadership and administration, a capable bilingual teaching and support staff, and active parent and community support. These three major components should work cohesively to ensure the delivery of a quality dual language immersion program.

Administration and Support

The general superintendent, central office support staff, and the district superintendent oversee the operation of a school system. They promote and encourage dual language immersion programs as a means of attaining a systemwide goal, as stated in the Chicago Public Schools Systemwide Educational Reform Goals and Objectives Plan, 1989-1990, of "preparing students for the international marketplace through increased mastery of languages and understanding of the world's cultures."

The school principal is the instructional leader and is responsible for day-to-day operations. The principal shares decision-making powers with the Local School Council, an elected group of parents, teachers, and community members. Their involvement in and commitment to native language maintenance, second language acquisition, and cultural awareness is basic to the effectiveness of the program.

A Bilingual Advisory Committee acts in a consultative role to the principal and the Local School Council in those issues which affect the limited-English-proficient (LEP) student population within the school. Teachers, parents of LEP students, and community members are represented in this group.

Instruction

The instructional team is made up of teachers, teacher aides, tutors, and classroom volunteers. Well-qualified teachers, proficient in both Spanish and English, are indispensable to this model. Teachers proficient only in English can also be employed to teach those subjects taught exclusively in English.

Bilingual teacher aides, tutors, and classroom volunteers support, extend, and enrich the instructional program of the professional teacher.

A Professional Personnel Advisory Committee (PPAC) acts in a consultative role in all matters related to instruction and the school environment. The PPAC is made up exclusively of teachers.

Qualifications of Personnel

Qualifications of a school principal for a dual language immersion school may include:

- . sensitivity to and an awareness of bilingual and dual language immersion programs
- . demonstrated proficiency in Spanish and in English
- . knowledge of current methodologies in first and second language acquisition
- . experience with multicultural parent and student populations

Qualifications of a bilingual teacher may include:

- . demonstrated proficiency in teaching content-area subjects and language arts in Spanish and in English
- . knowledge of current methodologies in first and second language acquisition

- . previous experience in bilingual education programs
- . multicultural sensitivity and appreciation
- . participation in local, regional, and national professional development meetings and conferences
- . talents and/or skills in other areas to facilitate the development of immersion activities

Special Functions of the Administrative and Instructional Team

In addition to overseeing and implementing the basic school program and meeting general curricular requirements, personnel of the dual language school cooperate in the following:

planning and implementing the Dual Language Immersion Instructional Program planning and implementing designs for student recruitment and enrollment, community and parent involvement, articulation with receiving elementary and high schools, and interfacing the language program with the general program of instruction recruiting and supporting qualified bilingual instructors and language specialists monitoring the success of the program

promoting and publicizing the school's special language programs in the community

recognizing student achievement

identifying sources and securing funding for the language program coordinating the involvement of ethnic communities with the language program arranging for the upgrading and updating of facilities, equipment, and instructional materials for the language program arranging and assisting in providing staff development opportunities

Facilities, Equipment, and Materials

The instructional program in an effective Dual Language Immersion Program is enhanced by an atmosphere that reflects the languages taught in the school. A quality program is also advanced by the availability and utilization of electronic equipment and current instructional materials.

Facilities

The elementary dual language immersion program should reflect the languages and cultures taught in the school. Suggestions for doing so include the following:

- have staff members use both languages to greet visitors
- decorate hallways, offices, and classrooms with cultural items
- display students' class projects
- print signs, bulletins, and newsletters in both languages
- use both languages when making announcements from the main office
- conduct conversations on school grounds in both languages
- converse and sing songs in both languages on buses and on field trips
- celebrate ethnic holidays and serve ethnic meals in the cafeteria

Equipment

The use of electronic equipment in the instruction of second languages provides enrichment, reinforcement, remediation, variety, and stimulation for the students. The well-equipped dual language immersion classroom includes the following items.

- audio tape recorders
- charts, posters, and maps
- computers
- film and slide projectors
- language laboratories
- overhead projectors
- radios
- record players
- television
- video recorders, players, and cassettes

Materials

In addition to bilingual textbooks, supplementary materials include the following:

- computer software
- costumes
- magnetic illustrations
- manipulatives
- posters
- puppets
- puzzles
- readers
- realia
- records and cassettes
- transparencies
- video films, filmstrips, and movies
- workbooks

Student Enrollment

Applications are accepted from all students who wish to attend the Dual Language Immersion Program. As designated in the Annual Desegregation Review--Part I: Student Assignment, students are enrolled in accordance with the action for the specific school to increase the number of students participating in desegregated learning environments or to stabilize racial composition.

Community Involvement

Community involvement is an integral component of a Dual Language Immersion Program and contributes to its effectiveness and continuation. Students attending the school are recruited citywide; therefore, the community encompasses the city at large as well as the local community. Resources available include parent groups, churches, local businesses, corporations, cultural agencies, neighborhood organizations, and institutions of higher learning.

Communities may advance and support the dual language immersion program in the following ways:

- publicizing and promoting the program and activities
- recruiting students and additional community involvement
- raising and investing funds
- assisting in instruction
- providing tutoring
- providing input to developing curriculum
- participating in staff selection
- providing information on career opportunities
- participating in dual language career-day programs
- providing space for cultural fairs and exhibits of school projects
- sponsoring exchange programs and trips abroad

Parent Involvement

Parental involvement in the elementary magnet Dual Language Immersion Program benefits the students as well as the instructional program. It demonstrates support of the students' efforts, advances an interest in language learning, increases a sensitivity to different cultures, and promotes communication among members of the classroom, school, home, and community.

Effective parental involvement may include

- planning and implementing extracurricular activities
- providing input concerning program design
- providing tutoring and informal counseling
- providing opportunities for career awareness
- serving as resources for language- and culture-related activities
- providing assistance in acquiring supplemental funds
- assisting with program evaluation
- assisting in the implementation of travel and exchange programs
- serving as chaperones for field trips and travel abroad
- hosting children in exchange programs
- participating in PTA, Local School Council, and the Bilingual Advisory Committee
- supporting school procedures and homework policies
- learning the second language with the child

Homework

Homework should be assigned regularly, be reasonable and meaningful, and reflect the objectives of the instructional program. Homework assignments should be based upon classroom instructional activities, be clearly understood by students, and serve as motivation for further learning. Parents should be given an overview of the school's homework policy as well as the homework expectations of the individual classroom teacher.

Generally, the purpose of homework assignments is to provide reinforcement, practice, application, and enrichment of that which is learned in class prepare the students for class participation

develop independent and responsible work and study habits

develop creativity

develop reasoning skills

extend learning activities beyond school hours

provide opportunities for the students to gain experience in utilization of outside resources

foster a closer relationship between home and school

provide for positive parental involvement in the students' education

TEACHING STRATEGIES

Extending the Cultural Island

Signs of the cultures of countries where the second language is spoken abound in the dual language immersion school. This emphasis throughout the school plays a major role in the immersion techniques used to facilitate the students' acquisition of the second language.

The environment assists the students in developing the cultural sensitivity and understanding of the values and traditions of the societies in which the second language is spoken as well as many opportunities for using the language in meaningful situations.

The school is decorated with objects, made commercially or by teachers or students, such as the following:

- pictures, posters, and signs
- calendars
- folk art
- displays, models, and dioramas
- art objects
- mobiles
- murals
- greeting cards
- flags
- maps
- clothing
- bulletin boards in both languages

Within the school, additional exposure to the language is provided through content-area instruction in the second language, announcements made over the public address system in both languages, assemblies featuring the music, poetry, drama, and dance of countries where the second language is spoken, immersion days on which only the second language is used, and group work with native speakers of the second language.

Outside of the school, activities such as academic bowls and field trips to movie houses, theaters, and museums featuring performances or exhibits which use the second language further enhance the students' total language experience.

The Interdisciplinary Approach

The dual language immersion school provides a rich environment for the correlation of all other areas of the curriculum. Social studies topics include units which integrate the second language with the study of countries where that language is spoken.

Cultural arts units may be designed to complement the dual language program by providing instruction in the folk arts and customs of countries where the second language is spoken.

To extend the language arts curriculum, literary works from various cultures may be read in the second language or in translation.

In addition, topics which lend themselves to hands-on activities offer a natural opportunity for use of the second language as a means of instruction. Areas such as mathematics, science, and art provide many such opportunities.

Current Approaches and Trends in Second Language Acquisition

This listing of current trends in second language acquisition is included to inform teachers of recent theories in this area.

The Natural Approach and Monitor Theory

Stephen Krashen¹ hypothesizes that language is acquired in natural situations when meaningful communication is taking place. Knowledge of the rules enables the students to monitor language production. An ability to communicate and to monitor language production is attained through relevant, low-anxiety, and real-life activities.

The Total Physical Response

James Asher² proposes that listening and physically responding to commands should precede speaking. In the total physical response (TPR) experiments, Asher concludes that students speak better as a result of prior physical involvement.

Sheltered Instruction

Content-area instruction in which the language of instruction and the methodology are adapted to the student's level of proficiency in a classroom where both home and second language learners are present.

¹ Stephen Krashen and Tracy Terrell, The Natural Approach: Language Acquisition in the Classroom (Hayward, Calif.: Alemany Press, 1983).

² James Asher, Learning Another Language through Actions: The Complete Teacher's Guidebook (Los Gatos, Calif.: Sky Oaks Production, 1983).

Communicative Competence

This theory of language learning defines communication as the ability to interact in a meaningful exchange of information. Sandra Savignon³ outlines four areas of competence.

- grammatical - the ability to learn and use structure
- sociolinguistic - the ability to learn and use acceptable social behavior in a conversational situation
- discourse - the ability to converse
- strategic - the ability to improvise in conversational situations in which language knowledge is lacking

Immersion

The primary goal of the immersion technique is to teach such subject areas as fine arts, mathematics, geography, or science in the target language. The language becomes the means instead of the goal of instruction. The use of this approach is very appropriate for content-area instruction in a dual language program.

Global Education

Global education makes use of the language as means of exploring various cultural and social systems throughout the world and their interconnectedness. The approach supports interdisciplinary studies. It instills a sense of universality and tolerance for all the peoples of the world.

³ Sandra Savignon, Communicative Competence: Theory and Classroom Practice (Reading, Mass.: Addison Wesley Publishing Co., 1989).

Confluent Education

This humanistic approach to language learning stresses the use of personal expression and feeling in the development of language skills. Activities center on the student's personal reactions and opinions in order to integrate both cognitive and affective aspects of language learning.

Cooperative Learning

David W. Johnson, Roger T. Johnson, and Edythe Johnson Holubec⁴ hypothesize that all students are assured of mastering an assigned task when they work collaboratively in small groups. The five basic elements included in small cooperative group learning are:

- positive interdependence
- face-to-face interaction
- individual accountability
- collaborative and interpersonal skills processing

The objective of having students communicate with each other can be realized through the cooperative group method. The groups usually consist of three or four students and may be formed on the basis of ability, interest, language ability, or type of activity. Group learning allows students maximum interaction and new ways of expression. The students are actively able to teach and help each other, to learn from their mistakes, to share in their own creativity, and to evaluate themselves.

⁴ David W. Johnson, Roger T. Johnson, and Edythe Johnson Holubec, Circles of Learning: Cooperation in the Classroom (Edina, Minn.: Interaction Book Company, 1986).

Learning Modalities

Learning modalities are sensory modes used to receive and process information. The four major modalities are visual, auditory, tactile, and kinesthetic. The teacher determines a student's preferred learning style and directs classroom instruction to all four modalities. The teacher also assesses his/her own preferred learning style because people tend to teach using their dominant modality. An awareness of the different learning styles provides the teacher and the students with a variety of instructional activities. Suggested techniques and materials addressing the four modalities are listed below:

- Visual: charts, pictures, flashcards, overhead transparencies, videos, films, textbooks, and other written materials
- Auditory: tapes, music, poetry, rhymes, dialogues, reading aloud and the lecture method
- Tactile: manipulatives, hand puppets, drawing, puzzles, models, and board games
- Kinesthetic: role-playing, pantomime, skits, tracing, and total physical response (TPR) activities

Individualized Instruction

Students work individually or in small groups, proceeding at their own pace.

In addition to these widely accepted approaches to teaching foreign languages, the following unique approaches emphasize the importance of a nonstressful, almost totally student-centered, and minimally teacher-directed classroom. This list is by no means exhaustive, and all methods included require extensive teacher inservice.

Counseling-Learning

Charles Curran⁵ believes that stress produces barriers to language learning. In a classroom where this approach is being used, the students sit in a circle and raise their hands when they desire to communicate. The teacher listens and translates into the target language.

The Silent Way

Caleb Gattegno⁶ hypothesizes that the teacher's role is to draw knowledge from the students. In the silent way classroom, color-coded objects are used to represent the basic sound of the language. As the students produce sounds, the teacher organizes them into intelligible utterances.

⁶ Caleb Gattegno, Teaching Foreign Languages in Schools: The Silent Way (New York: Educational Solutions, Inc., 1972).

Suggestopedia

The Lozanov⁷ method of suggestopedia involves the learner's unconscious mind. Material is presented orally in cadence with softly played music. The students may listen as long as they wish and may respond individually or collectively. The speed of learning and degrees of retention are greatly improved. This method attempts to reduce anxiety and to create a community of learners.

⁷ Georgi Lozanov, Suggestology and Outlines of Suggestopedia (New York: Gordon and Breach Science Publishers, Inc., 1978).

Techniques for Promoting Oral Proficiency

The goal of teaching for oral proficiency is to develop communicative competence. Communicative competence means functional use of the second language. According to the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages (ACTFL)⁸ guidelines, language proficiency is the ability to function effectively in the language in various real-life contexts.

In teaching for oral proficiency, the following techniques are used in daily lessons:

- maximum use of the second language in classroom activities, such as routine instructions, discussion of familiar topics, role-playing, and dramatizations

- minimum error correction during the communicative process

- grouping to encourage more students to use the second language

- presentation of material in a relevant context

- creation of a learning environment that is nonthreatening and supportive of communication

In addition to building skills in the area of reading and writing, foreign language instruction should include activities requiring the use of language skills through active and communicative experiences such as those previously mentioned.

In the oral proficiency method of teaching a second language, it is imperative that class time be well planned. This calls for well-organized lesson plans.

⁸ American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages (ACTFL) Provisional Proficiency Guidelines (Hastings-on-Hudson, New York: ACTFL Materials Center, 1982).

Assessment

Evaluation serves as a means of appraising student progress as well as a way of monitoring the effectiveness of the teaching methods and techniques used. In a second-language class, testing provides the teacher with information on the student's mastery of recently taught skills and indicates the student's overall language proficiency at a given point in time.

The current focus on communication in second-language acquisition requires testing which will evaluate the student's communicative competence. To do so, test items are designed to measure communicative goals. According to Alice C. Omaggio⁸, such test items require a design that will insert specific items of lexicon, grammar, sociolinguistic and discourse features that have been studied within the context in which they operate naturally. Rather than focusing on isolated sentence items, the emphasis is on inserting the features being studied in a situational context. In this way, the student can infer that it is important to know how and when to use certain features of the language within naturalistic discourse.

In testing the student's communicative ability in the second language, all four skills of language learning should be addressed. Test items should range from discrete-point formats to integrative and global ones. Integrative tests, such as cloze, dictation, and dialogue, assess functional language skills across the four areas.

In the area of listening, Omaggio suggests using test items which require the student to listen

- for specific grammatical or lexical features
- for more specific semantic information
- for directions to understand a map or a diagram
- to be able to choose a picture from a set of pictures

⁸ Alice C. Omaggio, Teaching Language in Context: Proficiency-Oriented Instruction (Boston, Mass. Heinle and Heinle, 1986).

to summarize in writing the content of a message given in the native language, choosing an appropriate title for the summary statement

In the area of speaking, it is essential to regularly assess the student's ability to communicate orally. Within the dual language classroom setting, teachers may use one or a combination of the following formats:

- taped examinations
- monologues
- conversational exchanges
- individual interviews
- paired interviews

Similarly in reading, Omaggio suggests assessing the student's ability to

- read for precise information
- read for facts and make inferences
- understand intentions
- evaluate reading material and understand the main idea

Test formats for evaluating the student's achievement in writing range from items which require modeling of sentences to the writing of compositions in the second language. Writing assessments of beginning level students should be measured holistically to determine how well the students are able to communicate ideas. Simple dictations and model compositions may be used for this purpose. Intermediate and advanced level students should also be able to write as a means of communication. To assess their ability in this area, the following test formats are recommended:

- sentence combining
- variations of dictations
- partial conversations
- writing summaries
- compositions

The measurement of the student's cross-cultural awareness is accomplished through formats such as the following:

- role-playing
- reacting to audio and videotaped interviews
- revising a dialogue to reflect cultural and linguistic characteristics
- responding to Socratic questions

BEGINNER LEVEL

The beginner level in a dual language immersion program spans kindergarten through eighth grade. It provides developmentally appropriate instruction for students beginning the study of a second language. The beginning goals and objectives for acquiring a second language are presented in this chapter.

Students in a dual language immersion program also receive language arts instruction in their home language (either English or Spanish) through the general program of instruction. Students take classes in English Language Arts or Spanish Language Arts at the appropriate grade level. This enables the students to develop communication skills and appreciate the literature of their native language. There are many commercially prepared materials available for language arts in Spanish as well as in English. All students are provided the opportunity to develop and maintain their home language while acquiring a second language. Depending upon the program model, students also receive content-area instruction in one or more subjects in the second language.

The goals, objectives, and activities presented in this chapter may be adapted to meet the needs of the students.

INTERMEDIATE LEVEL

For a student acquiring a language other than English, the intermediate level in a dual language immersion program begins by the third grade. The student's placement in this level is based upon mastery of beginning level goals and objectives as determined by the classroom teacher. Sheltered instruction and the whole language approach are used to provide developmentally appropriate instruction for students who have limited command of the second language. In this chapter, the intermediate level goals and objectives for the student's progress in attaining proficiency in the second language are outlined.

Students in a dual language immersion program also receive language arts instruction in their home language through the general program of instruction. Students take either English Language Arts or Spanish Language Arts at the appropriate grade level to develop communication skills and appreciate the literature of their native language. All students develop and maintain their home language while acquiring a second one.

Depending upon the program model, students receive content-area instruction in the second language in one or more subjects. Through participation in such schoolwide integrated activities as assemblies, oratory contests, and Linguathon*, the students interrelate with students from other levels of language proficiency. Additional cooperation between levels is encouraged through cooperative learning strategies. These strategies permit native and nonnative speakers to work together in integrated language and cultural activities.

The goals, objectives, and activities presented in this chapter may be adapted to meet the needs of the students.

ADVANCED LEVEL

For students acquiring the non-English language, the advanced level in a dual language immersion program begins in the sixth grade. Students whose home language is Spanish may achieve the advanced level at earlier grades. The student's mastery of intermediate goals and objectives as recommended by the classroom teacher determines placement at this level. An advanced-level student participates in content-area instruction in the second language as well as comprehends textbooks and literature written in the second language. The advanced level also places emphasis on enrichment of the home language of each student. Students at this level participate in both English and Spanish Language Arts through the general program of instruction.

The goals and objectives for the advanced level, presented herein, are consistent with those of the general program of instruction in language arts. In addition, the goals, objectives, and activities reflect the special needs of students in the dual language immersion program in that they are designed for students studying language arts in their first as well as their second language.

This program is unique because it enables students who do not speak the same language to interact with one another. Students are provided numerous opportunities to communicate in the second language through immersion activities and exchanges with native speakers. Communication between students of different levels of language proficiency is made possible through integrated schoolwide activities.

The goals, objectives, and activities presented in this chapter may be adapted to meet the needs of the students.

CULTURE

The development of cultural awareness and sensitivity toward people of differing linguistic, ethnic, and cultural heritages is paramount to the education of today's children who live and will work in a multicultural, international society. In the dual language immersion program, all students from preschool through eighth grade are provided with an education in the cultures of the Americas and the cultures of the world, from ancient times to the present. This instruction will broaden the students' knowledge of their own heritage, foster an in-depth understanding of and appreciation for the cultures of others, and help them understand how cultural differences are related to universal human needs.

The cultural component of the dual language immersion program is offered in Spanish and in English and is organized by grade level. This allows students of varying levels of language proficiency to interact with one another, to receive instruction in both languages, and to share in the richness of their backgrounds as they explore the cultures of the world. To facilitate the location of resources, an annotated bibliography of student texts and teacher reference materials is included in the appendix.

In the primary grades, the students learn about family life in countries around the world. In the intermediate and upper grades, the students study world geography and history and examine the lifestyles of people of various cultures, using both languages as media of instruction. Students of all grade levels participate in cultural arts activities.

DUAL LANGUAGE IMMERSION PROGRAM MODELS*

Model A

This model allows for the implementation of limited Dual Language Immersion Programs in schools currently staffed and organized for transitional or maintenance bilingual models. Spanish as a Second Language and English as a Second Language are provided for all students at levels appropriate to their proficiency.

Bilingual and nonbilingual classroom teachers use grouping and team teaching to provide additional dual language experiences. Students are further encouraged in their second language acquisition through participation in high-interest extracurricular activities offered in both languages. These activities include oratory, chorus, drama, and dance.

Cultural arts and multicultural music are offered to students from kindergarten through eighth grade. At the intermediate and upper grade levels, International Studies is also offered. These classes provide hands-on experiences in the cultural study of four countries each year.

*Further information regarding bilingual programs is available in the Implementation Handbook for Bilingual Education Programs in the Elementary Schools (Chicago, the Board, 1988).

Model B

All students receive content-area instruction in the second language. Students also receive language arts instruction in their home language. From kindergarten through second grade, students receive second language instruction as beginners. This instruction is reinforced and supplemented by content-area instruction in the second language.

Beginning in the third grade, students start reading and writing in the second language. From third grade through fifth grade, students receive second language instruction at the intermediate level.

By the sixth grade, students are receiving instruction in the second language at either the intermediate or advanced level.

For students entering the program in the intermediate or upper grades, age-appropriate, entry-level textbooks, workbooks, audiocassettes, and computer software are used to facilitate their entry into the second language program.

At the intermediate and upper grade levels, entry-level monolingual students receive content-area instruction in their home language.

Model C

In this model, content-area instruction in Spanish and English is offered to all students. For students at the beginner level, content-area instruction is sheltered and supported with contextual clues, dual language explanations, and second language methodology. In preschool through second grade, students receive language instruction as beginners or intermediates in English and in Spanish.

Students in third through fifth grades are grouped for reading and language arts in each language as beginners, intermediates, or advanced.

By sixth grade, most students have progressed to the intermediate or advanced levels. New students are encouraged to enroll if they are proficient in one of the languages and are reading at or above grade level in that language. Provision for beginning students in either of the two languages is made through a program of independent study. Under the supervision of the language coordinator, beginning students learn the second language through the use of the audio-card reader, computer-assisted instruction, texts accompanied by language tapes, and peer tutoring.

All students are provided instruction on the cultures and customs of the Americas from ancient times to the present.
