ABSTRACT

This resource guide contains guidelines and information (much of which is specific to Florida) on organizing and implementing literacy programs to reach and teach functionally illiterate older adults. Section 1 presents a profile of illiterate older adults and guidelines for linking existing programs and services and lists organizations involved in adult literacy programs in Florida. Section 2 outlines outreach strategies, explains and provides examples of communication tools proven effective in literacy program expansion and publicity campaigns, and lists 17 Floridians available to speak on literacy education. Included in section 3 are the following: suggestions for motivating older adults, a discussion of the rationale behind literacy programs for older adults, and discussions of the curricula of three literacy programs (the Laubach Way to Reading, Literacy Volunteers of America, and the Florida Department of Adult and Community Education's Life Skills Curriculum for Senior Adult Learners). Section 4 contains the following: lists of 27 sources of technical assistance on literacy education and 50 resources on aging and working with older adults, a reprint of "Standard Periodical Directory" entries under the category "senior citizens," reviews of videos on older adults and literacy education, and a list of major publishers of large-print books. ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Throughout the development of the project, "Reaching & Teaching Older Persons," we have been generously assisted by many individuals and groups. We thank the Florida Literacy Coalition, and the project site directors and tutors who participated in our research surveys, interviews, and site visits. We also sincerely thank all the national and state projects for the informative materials they sent us.

We greatly appreciate the financial support from the Florida Department of Education which enabled the Florida Council on Aging to carry out this project. Their interest in the importance of this issue is evidenced by the role they play in piloting exemplary programs that have potential for national impact.

Finally, we would like to thank David Voss and Associates for the planning, advice, and technical assistance we received with the development of the Communication Tools, without whose expertise these products would not have been created.

This program is in compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1976, and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, age, national origin, sex, or handicap.

"Reaching & Teaching Older Persons is funded by a 353 Grant which is supported 100% by federal funds through the Department of Education, State of Florida, Betty Castor, Commissioner.

INTRODUCTION

Of all adults in the United States, it is the population sixty years of age and older that has the highest percentage of functionally illiterate people (1988, U. S. Senate). aging demographics are staggering: a 144% increase in the 65+ population over the last ten years has created a 60+ population that today numbers 3 million --almost 25% of Florida's total population. And, as part of Florida's total number of illiterate residents, the elderly comprise 58% of the state's functionally illiterate population (FAMU, 1986). However, interviews with literacy program staff across the state indicate that the number of volunteers is generally sufficient to accomodate additional In some cases, programs would appreciate the 60+ students. involvement of older persons as peer tutors. In either case, it is our hope to involve more of the 60+ population in an effort to reduce illiteracy among older people. To effectively accomplish this important goal, existing literacy programs agree on the need for additional resources- materials, tutors, and funding.

Much can be done for the functionally illiterate 60, 65, or 70 year-old to reduce their future need for services and enhance their independence as they increase in age. Recognizing that (1) over half of functionally illiterate persons in Florida are older persons; (2) reading empowers people to help themselves and obtain employment and/or independence; and (3) existing literacy programs have difficulty attracting older students, the objective of "Reaching & Teaching Older Persons" is to identify the issues surrounding the under-service of older persons in literacy programs and in so doing, provide technical assistance; produce a video PSA and PR materials for outreach to older persons; and publish a resource guide for serving older persons in literacy programs. The topics and suggestions in this guide were developed in response to requests across the state regarding special training needs of older adults.

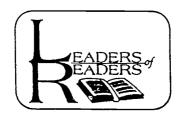

REACHING AND TEACHING OLDER PERSONS provides guidelines and information on communication tools to literacy programs for reaching and teaching older adults. The ideas contained here can be adapted by any literacy organization concerned with the literacy needs of older adults. These organizations can make a meaningful difference in the lives of older persons and share in the joy and empowerment that learning how to read can bring.

"It gives me pleasure to converse with the aged. They have been over the road that all of us travel, and know where it is rough and where it is level and easy."

Plato

SECTION I: ILLITERACY AND THE ELDERLY

Illiteracy has been defined as a lack of the skills required to read or write effectively, and the problem of illiteracy is a complex one. There are different degrees of literacy and a person may not be able to read or write at all or may know enough to function minimally in society. Literacy has important social, cultural, and economic impacts on society as well.

Many people view literacy as a greater priority for the young, but the skill of reading is even more urgent for an aging adult as a basic human survival skill (i.e., being able to read medication labels properly, dealing with increasing amounts of health care and financial paperwork, and remaining independent as family and friends' support decline). The skill of reading can be more important than just a right— for an older adult it can also mean life.

PROFILE OF OLDER ADULTS

Older Floridians age 60+ comprise over half of the state's functionally illiterate population and cannot be easily grouped into one category. They represent all areas of life, but many are minority, low income, and come from backgrounds or life situations which required them to be places other than school at a young age.

An older person may have barriers of physical impairment, embarrassment, fear, or transportation to overcome. In addition, the older person who cannot read or write has often learned coping skills over the years to hide the problem and either adapt to or avoid situations which may require literacy. Some even reject the idea that they even have a problem since they have "gotten along just fine" for so many years without reading. But, the skill of reading can suddenly become a survival skill to even the most intelligent aging adult who cannot read.

For example, an older adult may suddenly lose his or her "reader" —the family member or friend who had helped them for years by reading the mail, paying bills, or filling out medical forms. Or, the older adult can suddenly become physically disabled and more socially isolated, making it harder for them to cope. And, an older adult living in a world full of constantly changing technology can quickly become lost. Literacy problems can end up having a greater effect on the self esteem of an older adult as the intergenerational impact becomes more apparent to them and others.

AGING: WHAT DO YOU KNOW, OR THINK YOU KNOW?

1.	TRUE	FALSE	Florida's median age is 37 - 38.
2.	TRUE	FALSE	Generally speaking, older people are all very similar.
3.	TRUE	FALSE	About half of older persons suffer from serious health problems.
4.	TRUE	FALSE	About 15% of older persons have visual impairment.
5.	TRUE	FALSE	Almost a third of older persons have a hearing impairment.
6.	TRUE	FALSE	Fifty percent of older people are forgetful and absent-minded.
7.	TRUE	FALSE	At any given time, at least 20% of the senior population are living in nursing homes.
8.	TRUE	FALSE	Older workers are not as productive as younger workers.
9.	TRUE	FALSE	The most important variable in shopper satisfaction among seniors is cost.

LINKING EXISTING PROGRAMS AND SERVICES

There are over 200 literacy project sites in the state of Florida (Florida Literacy Coalition, 1991) and a variety of senior service provider agencies located in communities statewide. Your local Council on Aging office can be a helpful agency to work with in reaching more older adults in the community and is a good source of information about this population group and its particular needs. For your convenience, a current list of the Councils on Aging within Florida is included at the end of this section (See "Florida Councils on Aging").

Instead of forming a new system, a more logical solution is to bring together those that already have the structure and expertise to serve the literacy needs of older adults in a successful, cost-effective program. The concept of bringing the technical expertise of a community literacy organization to a group or center that older adults already attend is a practical one. This idea could be expanded to include libraries, churches, businesses, civic groups or voluntary action centers who can weld links between literacy and senior programs by providing interaction between different organizations and their areas of expertise. Although many forms of co-sponsorship are possible, the voluntary literacy organization provides:

- Expertise on literacy education
- Teaching materials
- Trainers for the tutors
- Technical assistance in program development
- Volunteer recognition activities

(See "Directory of Local Literacy Providers" at end of this section).

The senior group program provides:

- Expertise on the needs and interests of older adults
- Volunteer tutors
- Volunteers to act as peer supports to help students with their learning activities
- Space for the tutoring
- A structure and support for the successful operation of the program
- Volunteer recognition activities

(See "Florida Councils on Aging" at the end of this section.)

Valuable resources, such as transportation services, usually exist within established aging organizations, and eliminate or minimize start-up costs. For older adults with literacy problems, this kind of program offers a supportive environment designed to meet the needs of their age group. The location is familiar because they go there to participate in other programs or services. Program tutors are also older adults with similar frames of reference.

The opportunity to reach older adults can enhance the scope of a co-sponsoring literacy organization. Besides more participants, co-sponsoring brings more trained tutors. Older adults have proven themselves especially reliable volunteers, an asset to any group that depends on their support. In addition, the literacy organization acquires older adult-tested tutoring materials and will, therefore, be better equipped to meet the needs of other older learners in their own programs.

To the senior service provider, the literacy program offers the opportunity of providing a needed educational service that can improve the functioning capacity of those it serves. The advantage of improving the organization's community image, increasing its members or participants, building its reputation and funding potential. Finally, a literacy program can impel a senior service provider to forge links with other community agencies, links that are the basis for working together on future programs.

One good example of such co-sponsoring efforts is the "One Church, One Tutor" campaign that was developed in order to link religious organizations with literacy providers. Communication materials are available that address churches and include a brochure, poster, logos, and bookmarks. This helpful kit can be ordered by contacting: Leatricia Williams, Florida Department of Education, (904)488-8202. (An order form follows. Please duplicate as necessary. Orders are filled on a first come, first serve basis.)

"I learned that a great leader is a man who has the ability to get other people to do what they don't want to do and like it."

Harry S. Truman

SECTION II: REACHING OLDER PERSONS

It is difficult to identify older adults who cannot read. First, you must identify where older people live, work, and play. To find older adults in your community, you will need a planned outreach campaign—formal or informal. Outreach should be built on word of mouth, personal contacts, and use of non-print media like public service announcements on television and radio. In addition, a number of program promotion strategies and communication tools have been developed (See "Outreach Strategies" and "Communication Tools"). Successfully reaching older people will require patience, creativity, and an awareness of their individuality.

OUTREACH STRATEGIES

In addition to the Communications Tools that are included in this section, the following suggestions may help in your attempt to share information about your program:

(1) Know your community and what works well with different groups.

Every community has its own unique personality, and the better you understand it the more success you will have in reaching older adults. You must learn where to locate the greatest numbers of these adults and can find help in this area from the local senior service provider and/or anyone who is in contact with the elderly on a daily basis. Not only do you need to understand your own community, you will need to understand the particular needs and habits of the older adults in that community.

The best way to learn your community and reach more older persons is by participating in local activities which involve senior citizens and senior service provider agencies. Check with your local Council on Aging to find our where there are pockets of older people meeting for activities, clubs, or congregate (Refer to the Council on Aging List). Ask to be on the program of religious or organizational meetings. Give a brief presentation of what your program can offer as well as any needs you have. You may find that you end up recruiting more tutors If your county has a local Retired Senior than students! Volunteer Program (RSVP), this would be a good place to begin. You may want to visit the senior center, a local nursing home, or senior living facility and start a volunteer reading program to find out more about the interests of local seniors. Request to be added to the mailing lists of all senior service provider agencies to be kept informed of all upcoming activities in your The more you participate in local activities and community.

learn about and interact with your unique senior citizens, the more of their trust and respect you will gain, thus enabling your program to reach more older persons.

(2) Target your outreach efforts where the payoffs will be greatest.

After learning more about your community and interacting more with local senior service providers and older adults, you will be better able to determine where to concentrate your efforts to realize the best results. Strategies for urban or rural communities will be different based on the differing lifestyles and populations of each community. You may want to recruit the assistance of a trusted neighborhood leader who can help introduce your program to the residents there and gain their trust. These contacts can also assist you in locating greater numbers of illiterate adults and how to approach them in each of their unique situations.

(3) Be persistent in your efforts.

Once you have made contacts with the various groups and older adults in your community, don't give up! "One more call" may be all that it takes to get the ball rolling. Remember, the busiest people get the most done. Earning the trust and respect of other agencies may be time consuming, but it is worth the effort. After all, you are both working to achieve the same goal— to improve the lives of older people. In the end, you gain the trust of the older person, as well. After all, familiarity can bring respect.

(4) Visibility is the name of the game -- for both you and your program.

Being persistent in your efforts also includes staying visible by keeping your message out there where the right people and/or organizations can hear it. This can be done with radio, television, speeches, and other publicity materials (See "Communication Tools").

(5) Word of mouth is the most powerful form of outreach, but you may not see its impact until later.

Don't be discouraged if your efforts with community groups produce no immediate response. Once your program and its tutors are well established in the community, its most powerful recruiting tool can be the actual words of one of its students or others who know of the program and its accomplishments.

Word of mouth, in addition to your other efforts, can greatly enhance your program. Make sure to remind everyone of this: word of mouth is free, but it can result in positive gains for the entire community.

PROGRAM EXPANSION AND PUBLICITY: COMMUNICATION TOOLS

Program expansion, or promotion, should involve the members and staff of your own organization as well as cooperating agencies. Consider a community-wide publicity drive to promote all of a sponsor's programs with special emphasis on the older adult literacy program. Organize your own Speaker's Bureau to contact and present information at community clubs, churches, and organizations. (See "Stump Speech" and attached Speaker's Bureau List) Remember that the more personal your promotion, the more successful you will be. Plan a promotion around media public service announcements (Radio and Television) and interviews. Learn about the media people - reporters, columnists, hosts - in your community, and what attracts the largest number of seniors. Decide what's best for your purpose and what kinds of information they're likely to use.

The following sets of Communication Tools were designed exclusively for your use in reaching older adults:

NEWS RELEASE

Attached is a sample news release that can be distributed locally to media for the purpose of notifying your county of this project and the need for participation. Be sure to insert local names where you find the word LOCAL on the release. Deliver your version to the media and insert the date when you are ready to begin the project. (Sample included). For information on writing your own press release, see "Guidelines for Writing a Press Release" at the end of this section.

COMMITMENT FORM

This is the heart of the program. The commitment form should be distributed to potential volunteers and students. The forms ask volunteers to make a commitment to either give a speech, teach someone to read or find at least one potential student. There is a psychological impact in signing the commitment form. It transfers a desire into action and builds on the human spirit and instinct to make the physical move toward getting something done. It makes it happen. The form may also be signed by potential students who will commit to learn how to read. You may adjust the use of this form to suit your local needs. Be sure to place your address and phone number in the lower right-hand corner of the form. (Samples can be found inside notebook front cover.)

SPEAKERS BUREAU

This group of volunteers will attend meetings of local clubs and organizations and deliver a speech, emphasizing points and successes of local interest. We suggest that you contact your local civic groups and find out if you may have a representative give the speech, when, and where. Feel free to add names and organizations to create your own Speaker's Bureau. (See list at the end of this section.)

STUMP SPEECH

The speech is designed to illustrate the need for people to get involved by becoming a tutor or recruiter. The purpose is to help you or your speakers with information, statistics and a persuasive argument for getting tutors and potential speakers. The speech can be adapted to fit the needs of the speaker and the audience. Feel free to include your program's "Success Stories" where appropriate. (Sample of Speech attached.)

RADIO PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT (PSA)

The script for the radio PSA should be distributed to the local media. If you wish, you may order the taped version by contacting the Florida Council on Aging's office at (904)222-8877. You will need to find out whether your local radio station(s) use tapes or scripts. This will require some homework from you. The purpose of this material is to inform the community of the program, recruit volunteers and find illiterate senior citizens. Be sure to tailor the information to your county before you send it out!

TELEVISION PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT (PSA)

A television PSA, with the same theme as the radio PSA, has been produced and can be edited to include your local address and phone number. Tapes can be ordered by contacting the Florida Council on Aging's office at (904)222-8877.

TIP SHEET

The tip sheet is used to provide story ideas for local media. This form will serve as an organizational tool for you to keep track of any success stories you have or will learn about. Inform the media about any story you may find and call them to see if they'd be interested in writing a story. Any successful stories in the media will encourage others to take the step to learn to read. (Sample attached.)

 Remember, the purpose of this program is to compliment and supplement your existing program. Please adapt the materials as you see fit.

HOW TO WRITE A PRESS RELEASE

What is a press release?

A press release is a brief announcement or description of an activity, event, or person which might be of interest to television, radio, newspapers, or magazines. It is a way to inform the public through the media.

What is a public service announcement?

A public service announcement (PSA) is a brief announcement by the media about an activity or event of interest to the community. The media is informed of these happenings through press releases. TSA's serve both the public and non-profit organization. They are not paid announcements (advertisements by businesses or organizations). PSA's are free, and as a result, the sponsor has little, if any, control over their use. PSA's are accepted on a space/time availability basis.

When should you send a press release to the media?

First, determine whether what you are trying to promote is of interest to the general public or just the people in your organization, and whether the information could be better presented through the public media or an internal newsletter.

If you decide to use a press release, send it well in advance of your event:

- (1) 1 to 2 weeks for newspapers, television, and radio;
- (2) 2 to 3 months for magazines.

Invite a reporter or photographer only if there will be something newsworthy happening. Assign a person to be there to answer questions and assist the media, if needed.

What should you include in a press release?

Answer the six basic questions a journalist must address:

- (1) WHO (your organization)
- (2) WHAT (meeting, event, fund-raiser...)
- (3) WHEN (date, day, and time)
- (4) WHERE (location)
- (5) WHY (to raise money, increase awareness, recruit...)
- 6) HOW (explain other matters such as cost or fee)

Include the name, address, and phone number of a contact person and display it at the top of the page. This should be a person who is familiar with every aspect of the program who can answer any questions that may be asked.

You may want to include a black and white photo of an item of interest (i.e., building, key person) if available.

Always type the press release using double or triple spacing. Double check your spelling, especially when it comes to names.

Keep it short and simple -- no more than 1 or 2 pages. Send it to the editor in charge of Public Service Announcements. Call the newspaper and get a name to insure targeting the right person from the beginning.

Literacy Program Focuses on the Needs of Older Citizens

(LOCAL CITY) -- The Florida Council on Aging has joined forces with (insert LOCAL literacy provider or related organization) in an effort to help more elderly citizens learn how to read.

The program, "Reaching and Teaching Older Persons," was unveiled today as part of a statewide effort to assist volunteers in finding people who have not had the opportunity to learn to read. Officials also are searching for volunteers to identify and teach older citizens. The Florida Council on Aging is conducting the project under a grant from the Florida Department of Education.

"We know that older Floridians would enjoy a more productive life if they could read," said Education Commissioner Betty Castor. "Reading to grandchildren passes the legacy of literacy to future generations. One of our national goals is for every adult to be literate. This will take a major commitment from people of all ages."

A surprising 70 percent of American senior citizens did not finish high school and nearly 25 percent of them are illiterate (insert LOCAL statistics if available). Although some of these seniors are grandparents or community leaders, they cannot read stories to their grandchildren, prescriptions for medicine, a favorite recipe or the Bible.

The 1972 White House Conference on Aging reported that learning is "one of the ways of enabling older people to have a full and meaningful life and a means of helping them develop their potential as a resource for the betterment of society." Florida has an especially tough challenge, ranking 40th among the states in literacy.

Many illiterate seniors have created habits that help them avoid reading so friends, acquaintances and business associates are not even aware of the problem. However, most of them are frustrated and have different motivations to learn how to read. The main reason they don't learn is because they are too embarrassed to admit their "invisible handicap" or they don't know where to go for help.

"Reaching and Teaching Older Persons" is designed to overcome these obstacles. The program focuses around "commitment forms," which a group of people called "Leaders of Readers" distribute to potential volunteers and students to encourage them to become leaders of readers. The forms ask volunteers to commit to doing something -- such as making speeches, appealing to community organizations, teaching someone to read or simply finding one potential student. The form may also be used by potential students who commit to learn how to read.

"We believe the only way to get people to make the commitment is one at a time...from a friend or acquaintance," said Margaret Lynn Duggar, executive director of the Florida Council on Aging. "These forms provide the individual with an opportunity to think about it, sign the pledge and give it to their friend or local literacy provider."

The program also includes radio and television public service announcements, speakers bureaus and press kits.

"We plan to (insert LOCAL quote here)...."

Anyone interested in volunteering or learning to read may call (insert LOCAL agency and phone number) or the Florida Council on Aging, (904) 222-8877.

"Reaching and Teaching Older Persons" stump speech--[To be used only by tutors/volunteers;
to be localized]

I'd like to talk to you today about an opportunity to enrich the life of someone who has waited a lifetime for someone to reach out and show the way. It is my hope that the information I am sharing with you today will empower you to give new meaning to to the life of someone who truly deserves our respect.

Do you know an older Floridian who can't read? Chances are you don't. Or at least you think you don't. That's because illiteracy is known as "the invisible handicap." Elderly adults who can't read often feel ashamed, and they have learned to cover up their problem. At the same time, we know they are bright and determined enough to learn because -- throughout a lifetime -- they have devised survival techniques that don't require reading.

The lack of visibility of older non-readers is largely because so much attention in our nation's literacy effort is focused on youth and young adults.

The media bombard us almost daily with stories about the decline in literacy skills among high-school students and recent graduates. Research about reading reflects a youth culture in which our older citizens are, at best, tolerated, and at worst, ignored.

Yet, 70 percent of Americans 55 and older have not completed high school, and more than a third of those comprising the American illiterate population are elderly. The elderly represent the highest levels of functional illiteracy of any age group. For elderly minorities, the problem may be as much as three to four times worse.

Florida's challenge is especially daunting; we rank in the bottom fifth in the nation for adult literacy, tied for 40th place.

It's not just that the numbers are staggering but that the demands of our Information Age are accelerating so rapidly. For example, while it took 100,000 years for humankind to move from cavedweller to farmer, it has taken just 60 years to move from the Model T to the Macintosh. In the horse-and-buggy days, all you had to do to be considered literate was sign your name. But today, the amount of information is doubling every 20 months.

That means that the knowledge that exists today represents only 5 percent of the knowledge that will be available in the year 2000.

Clearly, those who've reached their later years without the tools they need to function in the Information Age will continue to be left behind -- unless we help.

The illiterate senior pays a high price in our society. Many older folks can't fill out a form, sign their name, or read a notice critical to their survival. They live in an isolated world, dependent on others and highly vulnerable. Unable to communicate, understand essential information, or make informed choices, they are functionally illiterate. The older they are, the more likely they are to experience this sad condition.

Imagine for a moment what life must be like for them.

Imagine you've lived more than six decades, and worked hard all your life. You've raised your family, but now you can't even experience the simple joy of reading a birthday card from one of your children or reading a story to your grandchild.

Imagine you're alone, and you yearn for the comfort and solace of reading the Bible . . . but you can't.

Imagine how much you'd like to write a letter to old friend or find out about community social events. Imagine how frustrating your life would be if you couldn't pass a driver's test, read a bus schedule, understand the prescription label on your medicine, or vote in an election.

Even as we imagine the struggle of the older person isolated by the inability to read, it's only human to wonder if it really matters. After all, if they've gotten by this long without being literate, will it really make a difference if they learn to read now? Haven't they pretty much outlived their usefulness?

Well, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences didn't think George Burns had outlived his usefulness when they awarded him an Oscar at 80 -- and he's still going strong well into his 90s!

At 89, Albert Schweitzer ran a hospital in Africa.

At 91, Eamon de Valera served as president of Ireland.

At 93, George Bernard Shaw wrote the play, "Farfetched Fables."

And at 100, Grandma Moses was still painting and Eubie Blake was still playing the piano.

[Reminder to speaker: Insert your own local sensational senior learner(s) here--local interest anecdotes.]

The fact is that education is a basic right for persons of all ages. As the 1971 White House Conference on Aging stated, learning is "one of the ways of enabling older people to have a full and meaningful life, and a means of helping them develop their potential as a resource for the betterment of society."

But can the older citizen still learn? Contrary to common belief, learning abilities do not decrease with age. Age alone does not prevent learning, but if learning abilities are untapped, they can diminish. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter remarked in a Court decision in 1948 that "Wisdom too often never comes, and so no one ought to reject it just because it comes late."

Even back in 458 B.C., the Greek writer Aeschylus [Es-kill-us] noted that "old people are always young enough to learn -- and with profit."

Our older population is growing at a phenomenal rate — each day 1,600 folks join the 65-and-older group. Remember when you only had to be in your 90s for Willard Scott to wish you a Happy Birthday on the Today Show? Now, there are so many seniors that you have to be at least 100!

The spotlight will soon be on the aging Baby Boom generation, the members of which, in all likelihood, will need employment to supplement inadequate retirement incomes. And as their Baby Bust counterparts move into their prime working years, the workforce will shrink. These trends mean that more older people will need to remain in the labor pool — and they'll need to be skilled. Clearly, literacy is an economic issue, not just for young people, but for all Floridians.

Thanks to modern medicine, our elder citizens are healthier than ever, living and working longer.

They're retiring with plenty of leisure time in which to learn new skills. They're a powerful political force and a growing target for the marketing of consumer goods. We need them!

But for many, learning to read for the first time represents far more than a leisure-time activity or a way to become a wiser consumer. Becoming a reader is like opening a door, switching on a light, and removing a blindfold — all at once. Yet, as much as these folks are aware of how much more fulfilling and satisfying their lives could be if they learned to read, taking that first step can be absolutely terrifying.

It takes monumental courage to admit you can't read and you've been fooling the world all these years. It takes real guts to acknowledge that you need help and to seek out a way to learn. It takes great strength to rise above your lack of confidence, your feelings of helplessness, and the obstacles you believe stand in your way.

Elderly non-readers don't need us to admire their courage nearly as much as they need us to help them to take the first step toward reaching their full potential -- toward independence. Dependency is a spirit-crusher. But knowledge is power.

Just listen to the words of some older learners who've taken the plunge:

- "Reading is a source of self-renewal."
- "It gave me a new lease on life."
- "I came out of the corner and developed new friendships and improved my self-confidence."
- "It's nice to find out I can still learn."
- "I can cope. I can make it!"

Learning to read made a huge difference for 64-year old Sam Smith. Sam dropped out of school in the third grade and went to work in a textile plant. He married, raised seven children and was active in his church. Yet Sam was saddened by his inability to read the Bible. "I was chairman of the church deacons," he relates, "and I thought deacons should know how to read the Scriptures."

After Sam's retirement, a woman who hired him to do yard work discovered he couldn't read the label on a medicine bottle. She put him in touch with a literacy program.

Sam came into the program in November with specific goal. He wanted to learn to read the 23rd Psalm by Christmas. Sam met his goal, and now he encourages others like him to learn to read. He tells them how he "loves every minute" of his new literate life.

Wouldn't it be wonderful if all of us could bring fulfillment and meaning into the life of someone who has paid his or her dues?

The fact is that every one of us can have that rewarding experience.

Each of us has the opportunity to light up someone's life by sharing our time and talents.

After all, reading is something we already know; all it takes is the dedication and patience to use that knowledge to open the door for someone who has waited a lifetime to emerge from the shadows.

It's also a national imperative. One of the six national education goals established by President Bush and the nation's governors is that "By the year 2000, every adult American will be literate and will possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship."

President John F. Kennedy told Congress in 1963: "The increase in the life span and in the number of our senior citizens presents this nation with increased oppoprtunities: the opportunity to draw upon their skill and [wisdom] -- and the opportunity to provide the respect and recognition they have earned. It is not not enough for a great nation merely to have added new years to life -- our objective must also be to add new life to those years."

And, indeed, teaching our elder citizens to read is all about adding life to their years.

It's about reaching and teaching.

It's about becoming "leaders of readers."

It's about becoming partners in learning with our older citizen; for as much as we can teach them about reading, so can they teach us about life.

I'm asking you to begin this partnership today. I'm asking you to make the commitment to changing one person's life.

I'm asking you to complete a commitment form pledging to help an older person learn to read.

Make the commitment. Get an older person to make the commitment. You'll both be glad you did.

Thank you.

SECTION III: TEACHING OLDER FERSONS

The most popular teaching methods utilized by literacy projects for teaching older persons in Florida are the Laubach, LVA (Literacy Volunteers of America), and ABE (Adult Basic Education) programs (See attachments and "Resources"). In addition, the Bible and other materials of personal interest to seniors are integrated into many learning programs. The national literacy curriculums in use are well established, but do not distinguish "adults" of varying ages.

Although there is plenty of curriculum available to literacy projects, the majority of adults are grouped into one general "age sixteen and over" category with very little curriculum available that is specifically designed for the age 60+ student. As a result, the majority of literacy projects are not reaching older learners as effectively as they would like to.

MOTIVATING OLDER STUDENTS

In order to better teach the older students, it must be remembered that they are individuals with many different interests and needs. And, and older persons can often teach us as much, if not more, than we can teach them. But, like people of all ages they require motivation in order to succeed. Consider recruitment events like an introductory tutoring session or an open meeting or reception. These situations present opportunities to stress the program feature; for example, alleviating fears of confidentiality issues.

Another factor to keep in mind is that some of the older generation may have negative memories of schools from their childhood. Some may have had learning disabilities that went unrecognized and they were criticized for not keeping up with the other students. It is important that the less of a schooling atmosphere you can create, the more comfortable your students will be. They need to be reminded that learning is a gift they are giving themselves, not a chore or punishment. They have earned the right to learn. It's a payment that has been long overdue to them.

One of the best motivators of all can be the words of another older student who has improved his or her skills through a program and is able to write about the experience. A wonderful example of this is the handwritten letter by student Lucy Marse who attended the New Beginnings reading program in DeFuniak Springs and then wrote about her accomplishment (See Lucy Marse's letter attached). Teachers could ask students to write or record on tape their own experiences in a learning program to be shared with potential new students and to inspire them to join a learning program. Lucy contributed her letter to this resource guide in the hope of inspiring other seniors across the state to improve their skills.

Clearly, the motivations of older people enrolled in literacy programs are varied. Some older adults have entered to gain survival skills in a sometimes hostile environment, for example, seeking the ability to read health-care-related materials or to complete social service application forms. Especially for older women, entry may be triggered by the illness or death of a literate spouse or relative who provided the needed skill. Others have enrolled to explore new paths toward personal growth. Often these persons are seeking to enrich their environment, exploring new avenues through which to share with others. Still others approach literacy as a means of empowerment, seeking the ability to pursue political issues and interests, often on community levels, or wanting to read product instructions and labels, thereby sharpening consumer skills. ("Lifelong Education and Needs," Harootyan and Feldman, 1990).

SAMPLE CURRICULUM

Due to the lack of curriculum geared specifically to the age 60+ student, a few individual projects have tried to address this need themselves. One example is the curriculum developed by the Leon County Schools Adult & Community Education program titled "Life Skills Curriculum for Senior Adult Learners" which is a two book resource set of curriculum ideas for instructors of older adults (Leon Co. Schools Adult & Comm. Ed., 1989). A sample of this curriculum's table of contents is included. If you would like to obtain copies or further information, contact the Leon County Schools Department of Adult and Community Education (904)922-5343.

WHY TEACH AN OLDER PERSON?

Some people question the importance of literacy for older adults. They tend to categorize people by age, and by doing so, write off older persons as having less to gain from improving literacy skills. So, they ask, "Why bother teaching someone so late in life?" The answer is that the value of a life can never be "depreciated" like a piece of equipment—it should be "appreciated" in value with each new year of life.

The success of literacy programs is often calculated in terms of numbers and statistics. But, the real face of literacy is a human one that can never be measured by statistics or age. It's the determined college educated older woman, robbed of her knowledge by a stroke, who is relearning everything all over again. It's the enthusiastic woman in her 80's who was the first student to join her neighborhood literacy program in order to be able to read her Bible. It's the anxious face of a grandparent who wants to be able to read to his or her grandchild. It's the articulate man in his 60's who served in a world war and worked as a trucker all his life without being able to read. After he decided to learn, he has become an advocate for literacy with Barbara Bush. It's also the devastated faces of the Gadsden County couple who thought they had gotten by with no problem all their lives without knowing how to read, until one day there was no one to check their mail and they almost lost their home permanently because the property taxes were never paid.

Working with older adults offers some unique perks to the literacy worker as well. In contrast to younger students, older persons have actually lived and breathed the history that many of us can only read about, and can offer many different and valuable insights on life and society after living such long and diverse lives. They may possess less than adequate reading and writing skills, but they have never stopped "learning." Just imagine what they can contribute to their families and society when they gain the skills of reading and writing!

In the end, both the tragic consequences of illiteracy and the joyful rewards of literacy can be seen in the faces of many older adults. The intergenerational effects on society are immense as literacy has social, cultural, and economic impacts as well. By turning the light of literacy on in the faces of agewise adults, the reasons for teaching them become very clear.

Consequences of Illiteracy among older people:

_	Loss to Individual	Cost to Community
	-Less independence	-Higher costs to
	-More restricted lifestyle	taxpayers (more
	-Less self esteem	health care, more
	-Reduced personal safety	reliance on

What the literacy program has meant to me.

I am 82 years of age. I graduated from Walton Hi school in 1930, class of 28 students, I was not an A student, I excelled in Math. My hardest subject was reading, spelling and pronouncing big words. I once had a teacher, while giving the class a dressing down said, "Take Lucy McBroom back there if she spelled cat right she would forget to cross the t." and she was right.

When I saw the brousure on this program, I was doing a lot of reading in the Bible. The pronouncition of words was a stumbling block to me. since I live alone, I need compaionship, and a learning process is always welcome. I went to the library and signed up for the program.

I was assigned a tutor, "Marge Stalz," she is a highly educated lady, has done a boil of world travel, and still does. an excellent tutor, and a good friend, I have enjoyed many hour with her. we have covered a multitude of subject concentrating mostly on reading and pronouncing words.

I can see a world of improvement in my skills and how rewarding it has been to me is refresh my memory and learn the changes that has took place in geography, history, government of different nations, and on and on the changes that has come about and to keep abreast of them. I have enjoyed it very much. Marge has been with me 5 years.

I hope every one in this program has enjoyed it as much as I have, it is a great program.

The Laubach Way to Reading

The Laubach Way to Reading is a basic reading and writing series developed primarily for adults with little or no reading ability. The series consists of four skill books and correlated readers for student use. The teacher's manual for each skill book gives detailed instructions and lesson plans.

The series provides a systematic development of basic reading and writing skills. Each lesson includes vocabulary development, phonic or structural analysis of words, the reading of a short story, comprehension checks, and writing practice. The lessons progress from the sounds and regular spellings of basic consonants to those of the short vowels, the long vowels, and finally to irregular spellings and more difficult reading, writing, and grammar skills.

The skill books and correlated readers may be used with both speakers of English and those who are learning English. A separate series of manuals, the Laubach Way to English, provides complete instructions for teaching the skills of listening, speaking, reading, and writing English to the non-English-speaking student.

Although designed primarily for adults, the Laubach Way to Reading may also be used successfully with high school dropouts or students in intermediate grades who need remedial work in basic reading, writing, or spelling. Classroom teachers, teacher aides, and volunteer tutors may all use the books effectively.

Skill Book 1: Sounds and Names of Letters

Beginning on a zero level, Skill Book I lays an essential foundation in word attack and comprehension skills which will be mastered in subsequent skill books. The lessons are arranged so that the student will gain a feeling of confidence and self-help from the beginning.

This skill book contains thirteen lessons. The first five lessons introduce the names and one sound for each letter of the alphabet. The consonant combinations (digraphs) ch, sh, and th, are also introduced. Each of these five lessons contains a picture-association chart to teach the letters, key words, and sounds.

Lessons 6-9 introduce the capital letters by associating them with the small (lowercase) letters. This is done through charts that contain letters and key words but no pictures. Lesson 10 presents the alphabet in sequence. Lessons 11 and 12 introduce the number words. Lesson 13 introduces the correlated reader In the Valley.

Each lesson has a story which uses the chart words and some other words. These other words are first read in context and then added to the sight vocabulary by repetition.

A total of 132 words is introduced in this book. All but a few words are repeated at least five times. Simple sentence patterns encourage fluency of reading. Blending of sounds, punctuation, silent reading, and simple comprehension skills are also introduced in this book.

The writing section for each lesson provides for teaching the formation of letters and numerals, writing the correct letter for the sound it represents in response to dictation, review of previous material, and homework to reinforce skills.

Skill Book 2: Short Vowel Sounds

This book has 15 lessons structured mainly around the short vowel sounds introduced in Skill Book 1. In addition, the letter y is introduced as a vowel with its short sound as in lily. Other sounds introduced are the sound for er as in her with its variant spellings ur and ir, the sound for ar as in car, and the sounds for the consonant letter-combinations ng as in ring and wh as in whistle.

Some of the new words have blends such as br, bl, st. When a student comes to such a word, his attention is first directed to the individual sounds that make up the blend. He then learns to use the blend as an aid in word recognition and spelling.

Each of the first 12 lessons has a chart with a key word for the sound to be learned and six or more additional words that contain that sound. In most cases, each word is accompanied by an illustration. In one column of the chart, the word is shown with space between the letter or letters representing a particular sound. This helps the student see the sound-symbol relationship and to pronounce the word. The part of the word which does not follow a regular spelling pattern already taught is respelled, unless it is a pattern which is to be taught at this point.

This self-help device of respelling a word is used both for chart words and for new words in the story. A word is respelled only the first time it it used.

Except for the sight words learned in Skill Book 1 and a few other words needed in the writing sections of the lessons, only words with short vowel sounds are used. Thus the student can with confidence and success apply his knowledge of sound-letter relationships in word recognition. A total of 192 words, not including the variants formed by adding -s or -'s, is introduced in this book.

Simple skills of punctuation, structural analysis, and comprehension are also introduced. The exercises in the writing section of each lesson reinforce the reading skills taught and develop spelling skills. The student also learns to write sentences.

The last three lessons review the short vowel sounds and introduce the correlated reader City Living.

' Skill Book 3: Long Vowel Sounds

This book of 24 lessons presents the long vowel sounds for a, e, i, and o with their regular spellings. Only one regular sound for the long vowel u is taught. It is the long u sound heard in words of more than one syllable, as in music. The sound for or as in York is also introduced, as it is a slight modification of a long sound.

Each lesson has a chart with a format similar to that in Skill Book 2. The first chart introduces all of the vowels that are taught in the book. A straight line (macron) is used over each of the vowels a, e, i, o, u, and y as an aid for the student. From this lesson on, the mark is used over a single vowel in a new word if that vowel represents a long vowel sound. Gradually, the student learns to recognize when a vowel is long from the spelling patterns.

As in previous books, the chart is followed by a story. The stories in this book are longer, with longer sentences and more sentence patterns. Paragraphs are indented. Each story is followed by a written checkup. Comprehension is further developed as the student progresses from noting simple facts to finding main ideas, summarizing content, recognizing implied meaning, developing opinions, and predicting outcome.

A new section called Reading for Living is in each lesson except review lessons. This section includes a short relevant reading selection and related written exercises. Subjects such as reading menus, letters, bills, ads, and other functional materials are included.

The writing lesson is done in a separate notebook. But the skill book has a variety of exercises in which the student uses the writing skills he has developed.

After each group of lessons on a particular vowel sound, a lesson called More Reading is presented. This lesson serves both as a review and an opportunity for independent reading. There are five such lessons in the book. The correlated reader Changes is started in the last two lessons of the skill book.

The skill book introduces a total of 399 words not counting variants formed by adding endings taught in the first two skill books.

Cursive writing is to be taught while the student is in Skill Book 3. The Teacher's Manual for Skill Book 3 will help you decide when the individual student is ready for cursive writing. You will need a separate cursive writing workbook for each student and a book of instructions for yourself.

Skill Book 4: Other Vowel Sounds and Consonant Spellings

This book continues with the regular spellings for the long u sound and goes on to the letter combinations oo. ou. aw. oi, and their variant spellings. The book also covers different sounds represented by the same consonant symbol, such as the s in see and please. and regular spellings for consonant sounds that may be spelled in more than one way, such as the /k/ sound in keep and can.

Word analysis skills are strengthened by more work with contractions and compound words and by the student's becoming familiar with the most common prefixes and suffixes. Practice is given to increase reading speed.

Comprehension skills emphasized include making inferences, identifying cause and effect, drawing conclusions, and understanding the mood and atmosphere of a story. Also, students are helped to interpret the author's opinions and to evaluate their own reactions to what they read.

Correlated Readers

The correlated reader for each skill book is a collection of stories or articles using much of the same vocabulary as the skill book. The correlated readers are an intrinsic part of the series as they provide opportunity for the student to gain confidence and independent reading habits.

Directions for the introduction and use of the readers are given in the lesson plans. The correlated readers are not numbered, but are color coded to the skill book which each follows. The student may complete the correlated reader outside of class. Some check should be made to ensure that he can recognize the new words introduced as they are considered a part of his reading vocabulary when he goes on to the next skill book.

It is hoped that the correlated reader, besides providing interesting reading material in itself, will stimulate the student to read other books independently.

TECHNIQUES USED in the TEACHING OF READING

Sixth Edition

Ruth J. Colvin and Jane H. Root, Ph.D.

Introduction

This book is written for all those who are willing to expend their efforts to help an adult or teenager learn to read. In a modern society, no citizen can feel adequate without the capacity to read the many messages that are constantly directed at him. Education itself has become a lifetime task. To quote Paul Delker, former Director of the Division of Adult Education, Department of Education.

"The United States has moved from a skill oriented society to a knowledge society. Because skills and even knowledge rapidly become obsolete, it is essential for survival that we know how to learn, and how to systematically organize knowledge and its application. Continuous education has become a way of life and reading skills are the heart of this process."

Literacy Volunteers of America grew out of a concern for the millions of people in the United States who cannot read or who read so poorly that it is a real problem in everyday life. Some have never had an opportunity to attend school. Some did not profit from their school experience. Whatever the source of their problem, millions of people of all ages, from sixteen to ninety, are in need of the reading and writing instruction which is the subject of this book.

This book's content comes out of a background of more than two decades of experience in working with volunteer tutors in Literacy Volunteers of America, Inc.(LVA) programs. This handbook arose out of the needs of tutors engaged in instructing these nonreading teenagers and adults. As difficulties were encountered, professional advice was sought. Professional techniques in teaching basic reading were adapted for the use of non-professional as well as professional tutors. From this combination of practical experience and professionally sound advice, the workable techniques explained in this book have emerged.

Step-by-step instructions are provided in this manual so that those who have had no technical training in the teaching of basic reading may use professional approaches.

This book is organized to enable tutors to become competent in the following areas:

- Ability to evaluate for placement, diagnosis, and achievement
- Abilty to plan and evaluate an instructional lesson
- Ability to apply the methods and approaches of Language Experience, Sight Words, Context Clues, Phonics, and Word Patterns to any literary or infor-

- mational resources of adult or teenage interestnewspapers, sports articles, job-related materials, household product labels, drivers' manuals or pleasure reading
- Ability to use assisted reading techniques to lead the learner into material beyond his or her current reading ability
- Ability to integrate writing skills into lessons from the very beginning
- Sensitivity to the needs of the adult new reader

Frequently you will find personal illustrations of points brought out in the text. These stories are drawn from the experiences of real people. From these experiences, techniques for coping with instructional problems have evolved. (NOTE: Although he is used throughout the manual to refer to learners, please keep in mind that we are referring to both men and women.)

Because we have sought to make each point totally clear to readers of widely varying backgrounds, the techniques in this book may, at times, seem overly simple. May we offer a caution, however? Sometimes an explanation is very clear when one reads it in a book, but the application of the information may not be quite so simple. Each step may seem logical and easy. However, producing these steps in proper sequence in an instructional session takes a great deal of practice. We urge you to take time to get this practice by stating the procedures aloud to yourself (it really helps to de this) and by using the techniques on members of your family before trying to use them with a student. Initial care in preparation will pay off in more effective student instruction later.

This book could not have been produced without the help of many who have given abundantly of their time and talents. It is impossible to name them all individually. However, we do want to thank Virginia K. Lawson, Ph.D., LVA Senior Editor for this Sixth Revision; Marilyn Boutwell, LV of New York City, for the material on writing; as well as Susan M. Glazer, Ed.D.; Roy Bartoo, Ph.D.; Arlene Fingeret, Ph.D.; Lester Laminack, Ed.D.; Valery Meyers, Ed.D.; Jolene Olson; Lynn Conley and LVA staff members Jinx Crouch, Chip Carlin, Barbara Jean MacDonald, and Jonathan McKallip for the review and comments they gave to this revision. A special thanks to those thousands of tutors and students who have taught us so much as we learned together. It is to all of them that this book is affectionately dedicated.

Teaching Senior Adults

Tips To Remember

- View the learner/instructor relationship as a partnership.
- Avoid child-oriented procedures such as hand-raising.
- Senior adult learners should be allowed to work at their own pace. They should be encouraged, but not rushed. Let slower learners know that speed does not necessarily reflect ability.
- Be aware of the physical needs of the senior adult learner. Maintain a comfortable temperature and proper lighting.
- The learning environment should be non-threatening and relaxed.
- Lessons should be planned with respect to the speed capabilities of the learners. Generally, senior adult learners like to complete an activity.
- Summarize frequently; senior adult learners have difficulty with recall.
- Always be supportive and reassuring. Assist the learner in overcoming feelings of insecurity.
- Be aware of the learner's individual needs and desires. Remember, he is a voluntary participant. If you do not meet his needs, he will stop coming.
- Identify the experience and talent in your classroom. Utilize this as a resource.
- Instruction should be simple and to the point. Do not get bogged down in lengthy explanations.
- Avoid being judgmental when the opinions and values of the learner are different from yours. Respect the learner's opinions and values.
- Be alert for occasions to use positive reinforcement and praise. Do not over-praise since this damages your credibility as an instructor.
- Do not compare learners. Each has his own value.
- Be alert! The learner that appears over-confident may actually be insecure.
- Introduce new activities by relating them to a previous activity or a learner's past experience.
- Express concern when a learner is absent.
- Watch for facial expressions or body language that indicate a lack of understanding.
- Provide an environment that is relaxed and allows for frequent questioning. Repeat questions that are asked to be sure everyone heard the question.
- Speak only when facing the class. Try to introduce material using both auditory and visual methods.

- Senior adult learners need the security of belonging. Always make the learners feel welcome and value...
- Provide rest breaks. Allow learners to move and stretch. Be alert to signs that the class may be getting restless.
- Focus the learner's attention. You can do this by touching them or calling their name.
- Be tolerant of frequent or abrupt mood changes. Try to find the source of the problem. If you can, be of assistance.
- Display a genuine interest in the individual learner.
- Be flexible! You must be able to respond to the changing environment or needs of your class.
- Use an informal, friendly approach when greeting learners.
- Make an effort to get new learners involved quickly. A new learner must be made to feel a part of the group or he will quickly drop out.
- Encourage the learners to share their successes with the group.
- Be sure the subject is relevant to the daily needs of the learners. Senior adult learners like to be able to apply what they learn immediately.
- Allow the learner to help select his subject and material. The learner will be a more active participant if he had some input into the lesson.
- Use care when asking a learner to read or write. Do not embarrass the learner who may not be able to read or write.
- Make sure learners feel free to leave the room if necessary. Many senior adult learners would perceive this as rude and would not leave without your permission.
- Dispense with grades. Grades are threatening to many senior learners. Make sure the learners are aware they will not be graded.
- Accept the learners as they are. Do not try to change a lifetime of values and ideas.

"The perspective acquired in longevity, the wisdom distilled from experience... these are qualities our complex society cannot afford to discard."

Mary Eldridge

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT MOTHER?

722 F COL 49 min JHA
This film focuses on the hard-working middle class citizens who have only a tiny nest egg, who cannot afford private nursing homes, and who are considered too prosperous for government assistance. All too often their care becomes the burden of the middle age children who suffer resentment as well as guilt. CAROUSEL FILM & VIDEO, 1980

YOUR FUTURE: WHO DECIDES?

6237 V COL 20 min A
This videotape presentation comprises three short depictions of situations in which an older person can potentially lose control over decisions that are important for his or her personal well-being. In each scene, a facilitator enters the story to suggest certain concepts, procedures or areas of inquiry that can help the persons involved begin to plan ahead for later life and reduce their risks of mistreatment or abuse by others. AMERICAN
