ABSTRACT

This catalog brings together literacy related materials in all formats collected by the State Library of Louisiana. Each collection or category of materials that makes up the Adult Literacy Collection is given a separate place in the catalog. For each category of materials there are at least two lists; the primary list gives full bibliographic information, and the secondary list is arranged by subject or class number. Four categories of materials are included: (1) "Professional and Program Development Collection of Printed Materials" is comprised of works that support literacy research and program development and appear in a wide range of formats (440 titles); (2) "Video and Multi-Media Collection" includes a variety of audiocassettes, videos, and multi-media sets available to serve libraries, community organizations, tutors, and individuals (82 titles); (3) "Computer Software Collection" contains materials that range from full instructional programs to simple typing tutorials and educational games and is designed as an examination collection not for general circulation (165 titles); and (4) "Adult New Reader Collection" consists of high interest, low vocabulary reading materials (approximately 1,300 titles). Preface

The Collection

The Catalogue of Adult Literacy Materials at the State Library of Louisiana is the first attempt to bring together literacy related materials in all formats, collected by the State Library over a period of more than two decades. The State Library's involvement in literacy began in the early 1970's with a decision to acquire materials to support programs for the adult new reader. This was the beginning of its Adult New Reader Collection, a collection of high interest, low vocabulary materials that was intended for circulation to public and institution libraries and other literacy providers to help support their tutoring programs. Over the next fifteen years this collection grew steadily. In 1983 a list of the Library's hi/lo books appeared, followed by two supplements. These lists, in classified order, for many years served as the guide to the State Library's Adult Literacy Collection.

After 1986, the Library's literacy collection saw dramatic expansion, thanks largely to a federal grant program under Title VI of the Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA). In 1987 the State Library received an LSCA grant for $25,000 to purchase computer equipment and instructional software programs suitable for adult learners. This established the State Library as a clearinghouse for information on computer-assisted instruction. A second LSCA grant for $25,000 was used in 1990 to expand and strengthen the collection of literacy books, educational software, videocassettes, slides, audiocassettes, magazines, and literacy training materials.

At the present time, the State Library's Adult Literacy Collection numbers just over 2000 titles. About two-thirds of these represent hi/lo books, the Adult New Reader Collection. The next largest category comprises works that support literacy research and program development. These works cover a wide range of literacy related topics (e.g. adult education, dyslexia, literacy policy, theory, program development, evaluation, computer-assisted instruction) and appear in a wide range of formats (e.g. journals, trade books, government documents, technical reports, research studies, conference proceedings, journal articles, curricular materials). The present catalogue lists about 440 titles, which make up the Professional & Program Development Collection of Printed Materials, to distinguish them from works on videotape and other media that may address similar topics.

While our catalogue has tried to include all monographs and selected journal articles expressly devoted to literacy issues, it does not encompass all State Library holdings on all topics related to literacy, such as library services to adults, adult education, or learning disabilities. Only a select number of important and more recent titles on these subjects were given a place in our catalogue. For this reason, the researcher who needs more comprehensive coverage of these topics or who wishes to delve more deeply into them is referred to the State Library's general collection.

The Computer Software Collection of some 165 titles ranges from full instructional programs, such as Project Star, a multi-level reading program, to simple typing tutorials and educational games. Designed as an examination collection, not for general circulation, these software programs are available to literacy program directors throughout the state for purposes of evaluation and review.

The Video & Multi-Media Collection of 82 titles includes a variety of audiocassettes, videos, and multi-media sets, available to serve libraries, community organizations, tutors, and individuals. Some of these materials may be especially attractive to adults who seek self-improvement, but choose to do so in the privacy of their own homes. Others can be very effectively used by libraries and other agencies in their community-based tutorial programs. Included are works on parenting, interviewing for jobs, and grant-writing; works to help with student recruitment and literacy promotion; as well as materials for conducting tutor-training workshops and family literacy projects, such as the highly respected Parents as Partners in Reading program developed in Louisiana by Dr. Patricia Edwards.

Arrangement

Each collection or category of materials that makes up the Adult Literacy Collection is given a separate place in the catalogue. For each category of materials there are at least two lists. The primary list, and the one that offers the fullest bibliographic information, is arranged by author and/or title. A secondary list follows, arranged by subject or class number. Some of these subject lists have abbreviated entries. To obtain the complete citation, therefore, the reader should always consult the appropriate author/title list. The Computer Software Collection has, in addition to the title and subject lists, a third listing by platform, or type of computer required to run the software; so that anyone equipped, for example, with an Apple IIe computer can tell at a glance what software programs in the State Library's collection might be useful to him.

The character of individual entries varies somewhat from collection to collection. Most give author/title information, place of publication, publisher, date, and location or call number. Entries in the Professional & Program Development Collection are fullest and include as well broad subject headings. The Video & Multimedia List omits publishing information, offering instead brief annotations in keeping with the style of the Audiovisual Catalog issued by the Audiovisual Resource Center, where these materials are housed.

Availability

The Office of the State Library, a state agency within the Department of Culture, Recreation and Tourism, serves all citizens of Louisiana through the 64 parish library systems across the state. Virtually every service offered by the State Library is available through these local systems. In addition, the State Library is also a direct public library for persons in state government. Elected or appointed government officials and their staff members can check out books, research materials and other items from the library directly. All others wishing to borrow items from this catalogue or from the general collection should request them through their local public libraries.

Items from the Computer Software Collection, strictly an examination collection not for general circulation, are available to literacy program developers and directors. They may be requested through the local public library. Those who need additional information about these software programs or who wish to schedule a demonstration may call the Library Development Division of the State Library at (504) 342-4931.

This catalogue was produced with the help of the following computer software programs: Galaxy's Datatrieve +, Quattro Pro 4.0, dBase III +, Pro-Cite 1.4, WordStar 6.0, WordPerfect 5.1, and Ventura Publisher 3.0.
