ABSTRACT

This resource guide is designed to help adults who suspect they have a learning disability gather sufficient information to set realistic goals, achieve those goals, and lead productive lives. The first section, which discusses assessing learning disabilities, includes lists of agencies equipped to help diagnose learning disabilities in adults and questions to ask qualified professionals. A checklist of 28 identified characteristics of adults with learning disabilities is presented along with annotated lists of 13 national resource centers, 9 organizations concerned with general education, 8 learning disability organizations, 3 attention deficit disorder organizations, 4 organizations concerned with employment issues, 5 organizations concerned with technology, 16 organizations concerned with life management issues, and 20 publications of relevance to learning-disabled adults. A list of 16 pertinent toll-free numbers and information on the HEATH Resource Center and National Adult Literacy and Learning Disabilities Center conclude the guide. (MN)

Foreword

In the past ten years, information for and about the adult with learning disabilities has increased significantly. There has been a growing recognition by educational professionals that learning disabilities are real and that they affect adults as well as children. Each of us possesses variations in our learning, but for most of us the things we are not good at do not present major barriers. For many adults, however, difficulties in learning lead to difficulties in employment, education, and the rest of daily life.

Understanding the needs of adults with learning disabilities has become a more pressing issue due to the maturation of individuals who attended school when services for students with learning disabilities were not widely available. As children, these individuals did not receive services or were identified too late in their school careers for effective intervention. Therefore, the need for a variety of services for adults with learning disabilities has received attention from special educators, vocational rehabilitation counselors, higher education professionals, adult and vocational educators, and more recently, literacy program providers. In addition, through legislation such as the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and Americans with Disabilities Act, Congress has mandated that people with disabilities, including those with learning disabilities, are assured basic opportunities.

National Resources for Adults with Learning Disabilities is a publication for adults who suspect or know they have a learning disability, and for family and friends who wish to help. Through a collaborative effort, the HEATH Resource Center, a program of the American Council on Education, and the newly established National Adult Literacy and Learning Disabilities Center (National ALLD Center), a program of the Academy for Educational Development in collaboration with the University of Kansas Institute for Research in Learning Disabilities, have prepared this guide to provide information for an adult who is unsure of where to go for help and information. In addition, the guide provides information on assessing the problem, a learning disabilities checklist, and a selection of resources. The guide is intended to provide a starting point for gaining information that can lead to obtaining services at the state or local level.

It has been my pleasure to work with and learn from students with learning disabilities for the last 20 years. As the former director of an evening program for adults with learning disabilities, I've watched those adults improve their skills, increase their self-esteem, and become more successful individuals. Together with the staff of the HEATH Resource Center and the National Adult Literacy and Learning Disabilities Center, I am hopeful that this resource guide will provide information and support for the millions of adults with learning disabilities who need a starting point in their search for a better life. We appreciate the cooperation of adults with learning disabilities, members of HEATH's Advisory Board and Resource Panel, and members of the National ALLD Center's Advisory Group at the Academy for Educational Development.

Introduction

When adults suspect they have a learning disability, or that someone they care about does, they need information. They often have questions such as, "What can I do?" "Whom can I call?" "How can I obtain information?" "Where are available services?" National Resources for Adults with Learning Disabilities provides a starting point in the search for answers. This publication is designed to help adults who suspect they have a learning disability collect enough information to be able to set realistic goals, attain them, and live productive lives.

This guide contains a selection of national resources to assist individuals who suspect they may have a learning disability. It is not a comprehensive list of resources, but rather a collection of organizations, publications, and programs. Only organizations that operate on a national level and can put inquirers in contact with regional or local resources have been selected. A short description of each organization's activities is provided to help readers identify which resources are best suited to their needs and concerns. Publications listed in this guide provide general information for adults with learning disabilities. Programs listed not only provide the learning component, but also offer residential housing.

Assessing the Problem

Those adults who suspect they may have a learning disability can begin to find assistance by having an assessment conducted by qualified professionals. Qualified professionals are individuals trained to conduct assessments. Often the professionals have been certified to select, administer, and interpret a variety of neurological, psychological, educational, and vocational assessment instruments. Different assessment procedures may be appropriate in various settings such as community colleges, adult basic education programs, and through vocational rehabilitation agencies. It is important for the adult not only to be actively involved in the assessment process, but also to have confidence in the professional with whom he or she is working.

An assessment refers to the gathering of relevant information that can be used to help an adult make decisions, and provides a means for assisting an adult to live more fully. An adult is assessed because of problems in employment, education, and/or life situations. An assessment involves more than just taking tests. An assessment includes an evaluation, a diagnosis, and recommendations.

The first stage of an evaluation is usually a screening. Screening tools use abbreviated, informal methods to determine if an individual is "at risk" for a learning disability. Examples of informal methods include, but are not limited to: an interview; reviews of medical, school, or employment histories; written answers to a few questions; or a brief test. It is important to understand, however, that being screened for a learning disability is different from undergoing a thorough evaluation. When conducting a thorough evaluation, qualified professionals may first refer to the results of the screening in order to plan which tests to administer. Such tests may include, but are not limited to, those that provide information on intelligence, aptitude, achievement, and vocational interest. During the evaluation stage of the assessment process, all relevant information about an individual should be gathered.

A diagnosis is a statement of the specific type of learning disability that an individual may have, based on an interpretation of the information gathered during the evaluation. A diagnosis serves a useful purpose if it explains an individual's particular strengths and weaknesses, as well as determines eligibility for resources or support services that have not been otherwise available. Through a careful examination and analysis of all the information gathered during the evaluation, qualified professionals use the diagnostic stage of the assessment process to explain the information gathered and to offer recommendations.

Recommendations should provide direction in employment, education, and daily living. Specific recommendations may be made regarding the instructional strategies which an individual will find most successful, as well as other ways to compensate for and/or overcome some of the effects of the disability. Based on specific strengths and areas for development identified during the evaluation and diagnostic stages of the assessment process, recommendations should also suggest possible accommodations that an individual can use to be more successful and feel less frustrated in everyday life.

Adults should be assessed according to their age, experience, and career objectives. This is the only way appropriate, helpful, and conclusive information can be provided to adults. As a result of an assessment, adults will have new information that can help them plan how to obtain the assistance they need. Regardless of their diagnosis, individuals will know more about themselves, have a greater understanding of their strengths and weaknesses, and feel better about themselves.

Locating a Qualified Professional

In addition to the resources listed in this publication, there are agencies in most areas that can refer inquirers to diagnosticians or professionals qualified to conduct assessments appropriate for adults.

Check your telephone directory for the following:

- adult education in the public school system;
- adult literacy programs or literacy councils;
- community mental health agencies;
- counseling or study skills center at a local college or university;
- educational therapists or learning specialists in private practice;
- guidance counselors in high schools;
- Learning Disability Association of America, often listed with the name of the city or county first;
- Orton Dyslexia Society;
- private schools or institutions specializing in learning disabilities;

- special education departments and/or disability support service offices in colleges or universities;
- State Vocational Rehabilitation Agency; and
- university-affiliated hospitals.

Questions to Ask Qualified Professionals

- Have you tested many adults with learning disabilities?
- How long will the assessment take?
- What will the assessment cover?
- Will there be a written and an oral report of the assessment?
- Will our discussion give me more information regarding why I am having trouble with my job or job training, school, or daily life?
- Will you also give me ideas on how to improve my skills and how to compensate for my disability?
- Will the report make recommendations about where to go for immediate help?
- What is the cost? What does the cost cover?
- What are possibilities and costs for additional consultation?
- Can insurance cover the costs? Are there other funding sources? Can a payment plan be worked out?

A Learning Disabilities Checklist

A checklist is a guide. It is a list of characteristics. It is difficult to provide a checklist of typical characteristics of adults with learning disabilities because their most common characteristics are their unique differences. In addition, most adults exhibit or have exhibited some of these characteristics. In other words, saying yes to any one item on this checklist does not mean you are a person with a learning disability. Even if a number of the following items sound familiar to you, you are not necessarily an individual with a learning disability. However, if you say "that's me" for most of the items, and if you experience these difficulties to such a degree that they cause problems in employment, education, and/or daily living, it might be useful for you to obtain an assessment by qualified professionals experienced in working with adults with learning disabilities.

There are many worthwhile checklists available from a number of organizations. The following checklist was adapted from lists of learning disabilities' characteristics developed by the following organizations: Learning Disabilities Association of America, For Employers... A Look at Learning Disabilities, 1990; ERIC Clearinghouse on Disabilities and Gifted Education, Examples of Learning Disability Characteristics, 1991; The Orton Dyslexia Society's Annals of Dyslexia, Volume XLIII, 1993; and the Council for Learning Disabilities, Infosheet, October 1993.

While individuals with learning disabilities have average or above average intelligence, they do not excel in employment, education, and/or life situations at the same level as their peers. Identified characteristics are as follows:

- May perform similar tasks differently from day to day;
- May read well but not write well, or write well but not read well;
- May be able to learn information presented in one way, but not in another;
- May have a short attention span, be impulsive, and/or be easily distracted;
- May have difficulty telling or understanding jokes;
- May misinterpret language, have poor comprehension of what is said;

- May have difficulty with social skills, may misinterpret social cues;
- May find it difficult to memorize information;
- May have difficulty following a schedule, being on time, or meeting deadlines;
- May get lost easily, either driving and/or in large buildings;
- May have trouble reading maps;
- May often misread or miscopy;
- May confuse similar letters or numbers, reverse them, or confuse their order;
- May have difficulty reading the newspaper, following small print, and/or following columns;
- May be able to explain things orally, but not in writing;
- May have difficulty writing ideas on paper;
- May reverse or omit letters, words, or phrases when writing;
- May have difficulty completing job applications correctly;
- May have persistent problems with sentence structure, writing mechanics, and organizing written work;
- May experience continuous problems with spelling the same word differently in one document;
- May have trouble dialing phone numbers and reading addresses;
- May have difficulty with math, math language, and math concepts;
- May reverse numbers in checkbook and have difficulty balancing a checkbook;
- May confuse right and left, up and down;
- May have difficulty following directions, especially multiple directions;
- May be poorly coordinated;
- May be unable to tell you what has just been said; and
- May hear sounds, words, or sentences imperfectly or incorrectly.

As mentioned previously, an adult with learning disabilities may exhibit some of these characteristics, but not necessarily all of them. If an individual exhibits several or many of these characteristics to such a degree that they cause problems in work, school, or everyday life, he or she might benefit from an assessment by qualified professionals.
