ABSTRACT

This catalogue, which is intended as a resource for literacy practitioners, contains information about program-based literacy materials produced by Ontario's (Canada) four desktop publishing centers for literacy programs. A total of 148 instructional materials (including materials developed by literacy learners), tutor/practitioner tools, and reading materials for adult literacy learners are profiled. Among the tutor/practitioner tools described are curriculum guides, training manuals, workbooks, and other materials designed for use with learners. Many of the reading materials designed for adult students include life skills information. Each entry includes some or all of the following: title; author; brief description; reading level; date of publication; ordering information (distributor, address, price, phone/fax, ISBN number); sample page; and an icon identifying the material as learner written, a tutor/practitioner tool, or interesting reading. A main index listing all titles in alphabetical order and an author index are provided. (MN)

About the Program Based Materials Catalogue

There are four desktop publishing centres for literacy programs in Ontario. These centres are located in Kingston, Kitchener, Sarnia and Thunder Bay. The centres produce a wide range of learning materials and other materials for Ontario literacy programs. In the spring of 1992, Harold Alden of the Literacy Branch met with the four regional desktop publishers. At the meeting we discussed ways that the four projects could work together.

We recognized that there was a wealth of learning material being produced not only by the four centres, but also by individual literacy programs. We also recognized that most literacy programs had neither the time nor the resources to market and distribute the materials that they produced. We agreed that it would be valuable to collect this material and produce and distribute a catalogue that would showcase the materials and give programs a marketing vehicle for the materials they were creating. The data collection was planned in cooperation with Alpha Ontario, the Literacy and Language Training Centre and George Brown College, CoSy Network in the summer of 1993. Surveys were mailed to all Ontario literacy providers.

Thanks to all literacy programs that participated in this project, we hope that this catalogue will prove to be a useful resource. We hope to update the catalogue regularly, and have provided collection forms for programs that are creating new materials. Please return the forms, along with a sample of the material created, to:

In conclusion, we have tried to be accurate and thorough in the collection of materials for this catalogue, but if we have missed anyone, we will include omissions in future updates to the catalogue.

How to use the catalogue

The body of the catalogue is organized so that materials are grouped by publisher. For example, all materials produced by Core Literacy of Kitchener would be grouped together in alphabetical order.

There are two indexes. The main index lists all titles in alphabetical order, and a second index lists all authors in alphabetical order.

Sample Pages: On the page facing each item in the catalogue, a sample page, at actual size has been included so that the viewer may see the type style and size, illustration style etc., for that item.

Symbols have been used in the catalogue to break materials loosely into three groups. Use these symbols to identify the following types of materials within the catalogue:

Learner Written: Materials written by literacy learners.

Tutor/Practitioner Tools: Includes curriculum guides as well as training manuals, etc. Also includes workbooks and other materials for use with learners.

Interest Reading: Includes reading materials designed for adult literacy learners. May include life skills information, etc.

GENERAL INFORMATION

TITLE Reflections

AUTHOR Various

DESCRIPTION The literacy program has put together a collection of short stories from 12 students, depicting their experiences at the CNIB Lake Joseph Centre. The Centre is a holiday resort in northern Ontario (the Muskokas) that provides recreation and leisure activities for visually impaired and deaf-blind persons. In honour of the many memories the CNIB Lake Joseph Centre has provided the students, the book is titled "Reflections". Large print.

Suntan
by Pierre Champagne

Next summer, I will go to camp at Lake Joe. I will deliver my suitcase to the room. I will change my clothes then get my towel. I will go out to walk on the walkway in the sunshine. I will get a chair and relax quietly in the sun. I like it when it's 25-27 degrees. I love getting a suntan.

The Canadian flag was first raised on top of the Peace Tower on Parliament Hill in Ottawa, on February 15, 1965. More than 2,600 designs for a flag had been sent in to the Canadian government! We had other flags before this one, but they all looked like the British flag. Our red and white flag with the Maple Leaf in the middle is our first distinctly Canadian flag. Red and white have been Canada's official colours since 1921. The Maple Leaf has been a symbol of Canada since the 1700's.

The Governor General and the Queen each have their own personal Canadian flags. Wherever they are in Canada, their flags fly over the buildings that they stay in. The Queen is the Canadian Head of State. The Governor General is her representative in Canada.

The Discovery of North America

by H. Kovacs

There was a time in the past when no people lived in North America. The first people to discover North America were Asians. They came to North America over a land bridge between Siberia and Alaska. This was more than 10,000 years ago. There is no land bridge now. At first, these people were hunters. They moved all over North and South America. A few thousand years ago, a civilization began to develop. The native people of the far north are the Inuit. The other native people are the Indians. Indians live in all parts of North and South America. They live in every province in Canada.

vocabulary

- bridge A bridge is something people can walk on to cross a river or road.
- civilization Civilization describes a state of order, including culture, education, rules and laws of behavior.
- native Native means to be born in the country you now live in. Native people also means the first people to live in a place.

The vowel sounds

The vowels are very important letters. We need them to say words. Every word has at least one vowel in it.

Coming Up

Wizards of the Court: The Harlem Globetrotters bring their basketball magic to the Ottawa Civic Center this weekend. To find out what they're all about, and for more weekend suggestions, see Thursday's City Lights section.

Circle all the vowels in the above article.
Did you find any words without vowels?

Every vowel has two possible sounds. There are some rules to help you know if you use the small sound (short), like the a in apple or the long sound like the a in cake. We say a vowel has the long sound when we say its name in a word.

Vowels usually have a long sound in words when

1) The word ends in silent e. (Silent means you don't say it.)

Chapter Two

When I was five years old I went to Infant School in a nearby village. I was a very handsome boy and became everyone's pet.

I started elementary school in the village of Bouford, Westmoreland in Jamaica. I went to that school for five years but didn't learn very much. Anything I did was alright! My parents' house was near the school and sometimes the teacher, Mr. McLeod and his wife would come to visit. We, the kids, would disappear.

It would be alright with my mom if I didn't want to go to school. I spent my days in the bushes listening to the birds and other forest sounds.

Hand in Hand

Introduction:

The performance was over. The audience was clapping. "Learner Link - A Travelling Theatre Troupe." appeared on the stage. They were holding hands as they bowed.

This image stays in my mind as a snapshot of a very special literacy moment. Everything had come together; the two years of hard work in preparation for this presentation had definitely paid off. Not only was performing a play a worthwhile goal and a great accomplishment for the group, but the journey to that point was a real adventure, one that included both personal growth and the development of some very important literacy skills.

Introduction

This audio tape and booklet on the growing role of students in the literacy movement, are part of a series. We developed this series because we believe that audio has an important role to play in literacy learning. This work was made possible by a grant from the Secretary of State of Canada.

We have used the tape and booklet with adult literacy students in our learning centre. Of all the tapes that we have made, this tape is the one our students respond to most. They tell us that it brings up memories of their past.

We have also asked a number of people involved in literacy and audio across Canada to tell us what they think of this material. Many of them have suggested that it would be useful in training literacy practitioners and orienting Boards of Directors as well as with students. Some have said that it should produce lively discussions about how far their program is willing to go with student rights.

Choosing the Right Bo

FOCUS

Parents can be selective when picking books for their children.

Goal

For parents to choose books suitable for their child.

Points to Discuss

- Babies are learning about the world around them. Give books that are safe for them to touch and feel.
- Try cloth books or rubber books. Let babies play with th books.
- Some books for babies and toddlers are made so that children can feel different kinds of materials and texture
- Toddlers like pictures books. Try books that show pictur every day things.
- Board books are great for toddlers. Show the toddler ho pages turn!
- Children two or three years old are learning about colour and shapes. Look for books that show about these thing
- They are also learning simple concepts, like UP and DO or OVER and UNDER. Look for books that help the you child understand these things.

What Does 'Learner Involvement' Mean?

"Active learner participation¹ in adult literacy programs enables learners to take higher degrees of control, responsibility, and reward vis-à-vis program activities. Students' knowledge, skills, and experience are valued, respected, and provide the foundation upon which learning is built."

(Jurmo)

Getting learners involved in managing a literacy program is different things to different people. Such factors as orientation, past experience working with other groups or organizations, level of self-esteem and personal development, social needs, and skill level account for a wide variety of interpretations.

During his research on participatory literacy education (1989) Jurmo discovered that "there is no one simple definition of participation." It varies from "simple attendance to active participation in one or more program activities" (17-18). He organized learner involvement into several levels based on the degree of control, reward, and responsibility.

Literacy programs that advocate participatory literacy education aim at the highest levels of participation. These programs provide learners "ongoing opportunities to plan and implement instructional and management activities within the program" (Jurmo, 1989, 18).

43 Reaching In

Violent crimes accounted for only 10% of the 2.4 million Criminal Code offences in 1989. Property crimes were 60% of the total. The prevalent stereotype of a "criminal" as someone who is violent does not apply to many in conflict with the law. Neither is it true that those in conflict with the law represent a small segment of our society. Many of us are involved, and this cannot be ignored.⁴

Reintegration Experts talk about the importance of a smooth transition to the community for those released from jail. Experience and common sense tell us that people who have trouble fitting into society increase their chances of ending up behind bars once again.

Reintegration into society is often viewed as a one-way street. This street leads from the jail to the community. But the street can also lead the other way. The community needs to reach "in" to those behind bars before they find themselves out of jail and unsure where to turn.

Literacy training works behind bars for all the same reasons that it works on the street. Learners gain an improvement in self-esteem. They are able to function more effectively in ways defined by themselves to be important. Opportunities increase. Literacy gives people skills to participate in their world in new ways.

A Need for Literacy Behind Bars Just as in other places in our society, the human side of illiteracy shows itself in jail. The written word becomes paramount for a person transferred to an institution away from family and friends. Letters serve to keep intact ties that bind relationships together.⁵

FOR THE TRAINER

Activity 1

Invite a guest speaker to talk to the group about the issues, concerns and needs that are important to people in prison. Ask the speaker to relate this information to topics and materials which may be suitable for tutors to use in literacy sessions.

Possible guest speakers include:

- parole and probation officer
- an Elizabeth Fry Society representative
- a John Howard Society representative
- a Life Skills teacher from the institution.

Give participants the opportunity to prepare questions in advance. Divide participants into small groups. Ask them to devise a list of topics they would like the speaker to explore. Emphasize those topics and information that would prepare tutors to better meet the needs of their learners.

Bring the group back together. Make a master list of suggestions. If time permits, pass the information along to the speaker so that he or she can prepare accordingly.

Activity 2

As an alternative, organize a panel presentation. Include in your panel a person who has been in jail, and can talk to the group from experience. Ask him or her to relate the practical skills needed for transition back into the community after release. What can tutors do in literacy sessions to help make this transition smoother? What topics and materials may be useful?

To Mom
By John Lambert

You know in time I needed you
And now that you're gone I miss you

Years of fun we had, Now years of pain it's Very Sad, but time still
Trickles, and your Treasured memories are So
Rich In so little time you taught
This Heart of mine, Now for every day
The Sun may shine, You mother are In my mind

You see if tears could have saved you,
Then we would have seen you through
But countless tears and lost hours of sleep
that's how much we miss you mother Dear
But as I think of you,
Dreading hours without you, it's a Total life gone knowing we're apart fills this heart ever So Cold, As each moment Passes the loss to grasp

Though tears of you we had, how tears of Pain its Very Sad yet Treasured memories keep you near as I unfold another Tear

P.S. I love my Mother

I Miss Her

by Mahnaz Vani

She was born in 1930, and died in 1985. She was married for 38 years. She had 5 children - three boys and two girls. She was my mother.

Seven years ago today I lost the best thing in my world, and I will never find it again - my mother died.

She always comes to visit me in my dreams and she gives me advice. However, I wish she was here with me, not in my dreams. If she was alive I could have a perfect life.

She was a perfect mother to me and my family, a best friend not just for me, but for all other family friends. She always helped us to be the best.

I miss her because she was everything to me.

Then the cook came out and beat a tattoo on the bottom of a dish-pan. Baptiste answered with a yell; but though keenly hungry, no man would demand himself to do other than walk with apparent reluctance to his place at the table. At the further end of the camp was a big fireplace, and from the door to the fireplace extended the long board tables, covered with platters of turkey not too scientifically carved, dishes of potatoes, bowls of apple sauce, plates of butter, pies, and smaller dishes distributed at regular intervals. Two lanterns hanging from the roof, and a row of candles stuck into the wall on either side by means of slit sticks, cast a dim, weird light over the scene.

The Importance of Clear Language

Who can clear language help?

People with some reading ability...

According to the Statistics Canada survey twenty-two percent of Canadians are able to read only if the material is clearly written and designed. Clear language materials will not directly help people with very limited literacy. However, they can make it easier for them to learn from others if they have clear, readable materials.

People who do not see well...

Older adults who are losing some of their sight often complain about small print and unnecessarily long words.

People who are learning English as their second language...

Newcomers can continue to improve their reading skills if more readable material is available.

People who read well...

Many people who are able to read do not read because the material is too difficult or too long. Clear language encourages people to read.

Introduction

Every city in North America has a population of young people who live on the streets. These youths live on the street for varied reasons. Some argued with their parents all the time and had to get out. Some got into drugs and drinking and moved to where drugs and alcohol were available. Some simply were seeking escape from a boring life. The reasons go on and on. Society meets them as street beggars, as male and female prostitutes, as the unemployed, and as petty criminals.

Street people make society uncomfortable. The reaction of most is to ignore their existence - to pass them by. In this way they are treated as are other groups marginalized in our cities, towns and villages. We see certain people as deficient in some way, label them as such, and extend the unreliable hands of charity and pity. Street people and

Tips On Sharing Books With Your Baby

Books should be part of your baby's everyday world, among the other things in the toy box and easily in reach. If you treat books as special, something that has to be put out of reach and carefully looked at, then you are giving the message that books are mysterious and outside of everyday experiences. Try to think of books for your baby in the same way you think of food for them — nourishing their minds, something to play and have fun with, and helping them grow.

SIMPLE AND BRIGHT Babies enjoy books which have simple, uncluttered pictures, in bright primary colours. Dick Bruna books, for example, show an apple that's bright red, slightly indented where the green stem is attached, and the whole apple outlined in black on a white page. Baby can focus on it easily.

THE MEANING IN WORDS If you occasionally and casually run your fingers along the text as you say "A is for apple," your baby will learn to associate the black marks with your voice, and with meaning in the black marks.

LET ME HAVE IT You will find your baby wanting to grab the book. This doesn't mean that they are not interested, but exactly the opposite. They want to cram this delightful thing into their mouths to experience it fully. Give your baby a favourite toy to suck on while they are listening and watching.

MAKE READING A PERFORMANCE! Move in time to the rhythm, raise your voice, whisper, make animal noises, tickle or cuddle your baby at the right moments, and turn over the page in a grand way. In short, perform with style.

TOO MUCH TO SEE Photographs are too complicated for young babies. There is a lot of detail and the eye has a hard time focusing on the simpler message, like "look at the cow." There is a cow, but there are other things cluttering the picture: a barn, grass, flowers, a fence, the sky.

"JACK AND JILL" Nursery rhymes are loved by babies. They enjoy the repetition and the sing-song rhythm. Later, when your baby is older, nursery rhymes are easily remembered and your child will take great delight in repeating them.

IN SO MANY WORDS... LITERACY IN CANADA

DEFINITIONS OF LITERACY

Literacy isn't very easy to talk about. Although we've come to depend upon the printed word in our daily lives, as a species, we really haven't been "literate" for very long. Still, in that short time, literacy has made possible change and growth of extraordinary proportions. Yet, according to UNESCO—the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization—and other international organizations, as many as one billion adults are not literate. (World Conference, 1990) The truth is that we have not even arrived at one suitable definition of what it means to be literate.

However, as an organizer, you may be called upon to explain your work to others. You may need to promote your project to attract volunteers. You may need to make a "pitch" to get funding from governments, foundations, individuals, or companies. But most importantly, in order to make sure that your best efforts reach people most in need, you will need to understand the complexity of the literacy issue.

This section will look at:

- the current statistical discussions of literacy
- the common myths and misconceptions surrounding literacy
- the current face of literacy practice and the pressing need for new ways to help people meet their literacy needs.

Note:

In this section - and in the sections to follow - we have tried to be careful of the words and phrases we use to describe how well people read, write, and use numbers. We have avoided using words like "illiterates." We have done this because we believe that people should not be defined by how well they read, write, or use numbers. We also believe that people can improve their literacy if they are given the right opportunity. We have therefore chosen words and phrases like "non-reader," "people who can't read," "people who have trouble reading," and so on. While such phrases may be, perhaps, less offensive, there is still a danger that they will be interpreted as life-defining. When you see these phrases, please take them to mean: "People who have not YET learned to read, write or use numbers well enough to meet the literacy demands of everyday life."

Literacy by the Numbers

"Does literacy make people happy? Only highly literate people seem to ask [this] question. And only the well educated seem to say that it does not. They are like the rich who doubt that money makes one happy. Significantly, such doubts come only after they have accumulated enough money and do not have to worry... And so with the highly literate."

— Jeanne Chall

According to the most recent research findings, as many as thirty-eight percent (just under 7 million) of Canadians between the ages of 16 and 69 encounter some difficulty with reading activities in everyday life. The survey findings that follow place literacy on a continuum, rather than saying that X number of people are or are not literate. Canadians' reading abilities were organized into the following levels of proficiency.

Level One: Seven percent (1.2 million) of Canadians polled found dealing with printed materials nearly impossible. According to the survey, people in this group often see themselves as people who don't read.

Level Two: Nine percent (1.6 million) were able to identify only certain familiar printed words in a simple text. Canadians in this group likely see themselves as people who have difficulty with reading.

Level Three: Twenty-two percent (4 million) used print materials productively, provided they were clearly laid out, simply written,

The Helpful St. Bernard

Jeffery Parsons

Once upon a time there was a St. Bernard named Lovable Alex. One day he was running through the ice and snow when he heard a whimper. He went closer and closer to find a bear caught in a hunter's trap. Alex helps to free the bear from his trap. The bear was very thankful to Alex for freeing him.

Many days later Alex was playing and rolling in the snow when he got caught in the trap himself. He was there for a very short time when the bear heard Alex's cries for help. The bear came rushing to help Alex out of his troubles. Alex was very thankful to the bear and glad to see him.

INTRODUCTION

There is a lot of good material in this book – stories about people learning and getting to know one another, practical advice on learning and teaching, and an overview of SCIL and what it's all about. The focal point of this collection is a series of brief, informal essays by Marsha Forest, Frontier College's Director of Education. These essays are a vehicle for conveying what we would like everyone to know about SCIL.

Believe me, it's interesting stuff. You'll like it. You'll laugh, cry, learn, think, remember, say "I know that" and scratch your head from time to time.

At the end, we want you to say to yourself – "That makes sense. I can do that. I want to do that."

Just to get you started, we want to answer a few questions you might have –

What's this book all about?
Where does SCIL come from?
Where does it get you?
Do you need a Program to do SCIL?

If you don't have these questions, you might find the answers interesting anyway.

IT'S ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS

INTRODUCTION

The previous message in Alice Walker's beautiful children's book To Hell With Dying speaks volumes to me personally. All I really ever wanted in my own life was a group of people around me and especially one central person in my life who would just love me totally as I am.

For years the people in my own life and family said they loved me, but I felt they never really knew me. The men in my life said they loved me, but all the while they tried to change me, criticize me, or pick at me. I tried and tried to be perfect and I felt worse and worse.

I was successful at work. Nobody knew when my heart was breaking. I thought this was good. I could control my feelings. I'd be tough at work and crack up at home. I, who love life so dearly, thought about death, dying, suicide – I lost weight, I cried in hidden places.

And then at the age of 34 something snapped. I visited another culture in Asia and the distance from home and the strangeness of the land and people opened my heart and soul. I decided I wanted to fly – that is, to be free of the past and I opened myself to love.

At this very time of change I met two people who changed my life both personally and professionally – Jack Pearpoint and Judith Snow. They are both entwined with me on this journey to create a

Reflections on Inclusive Education

Stoic Smiley

She smiled nervously as he introduced her to his parents. The parents smiled, of course, but not smiles of welcome. Rather, polite, stoic smiles that chilled the room. His mother, obviously a woman of culture and impeccable taste, had taken it all in - her "country" accent, her clean but plain dress, even the slightly torn fingernail that she desperately tried to keep hidden in the folds of her skirt. In just the amount of time it took her to say, "Won't you come in, dear?", she had seen all and judged. Her smile covered but did not mask her deep disappointment over her son's intention to marry his choice.

Twenty years of marriage later, he and she are as happy as can be, with three delightful children and a warm and loving home. But his parents' smiles have never changed and the conversations never seem to get beyond "Won't you come in, dear?"

Won't you come in dear? How many children do we consider too "blind", too "lame", too "crippled" to come into our neighbourhood schools and regular classrooms. The virtue of humility opens us to the possibility of seeing all students as good and worthy of belonging. Given this attitude, the creative and imaginative teacher will uncover the barriers that keep children with "inconveniences" out of the mainstream of classroom life and learning.

I am writing about one of my hunting trips in the North east of British Columbia, not too far from Dawson Creek, B.C. Every year in the fall, I hunt moose for our meat supply.

I usually go to an area, where there are salt licks. In this trip my wife and two daughters were with me. We headed out for Pine Pass right at the foot of the mountains. After driving for two hours, I parked the car. The plan was for them to wait in the car for me, while I checked the salt lick for signs of moose, half mile away.

Walking for about ten minutes closer to the salt lick, I noticed a lot of fresh game tracks, mostly moose, a few deer, and bear.

The wind was blowing in the right direction for me. I knew I could get real close. There were game trails coming from all directions: into the lick.

I decided to stop and listen for a while. Standing and listening for about ten minutes, I could hear squirrels dropping cones off the trees, birds singing, chattering, and a warm wind blowing softly through the spruce and pine trees.

Then all of a sudden I heard the crack of a stick, right away I, loaded my gun real slow, so as not to make noise.

Standing still and bracing myself against a pine tree, I could hear light pounding of hooves on the ground.

So I stood real still until I could see a black figure in an opening. I could see a small cow moose coming towards the salt lick, I didn't move because I knew there be a bull moose around shortly.

I watched the small cow go down to lick the salt off the mud.

Watched her for at least five minutes before hearing a grunt from the far end of the opening. I lifted my gun and pointing it towards the south, I could see a large set of horns heading towards the cow. The bull moose was moving fairly fast.

I got pretty excited! I didn't want to make a mistake, lucky enough the bull stopped right close to the cow.

So I quickly aimed for the neck and pulled the trigger, down went the bull moose. The cow moose ran off slowly into the brush. I walked right up to the dying moose, taking out my knife to cut it's throat and letting it bleed from the neck. I knew my work had just begun.

The moose was an average size and dark colour. I knew it was fat, because most of the dark bulls are fat at that time of year!

I tried to turn it over on it's back but couldn't; it was too heavy. The only thing for me to do was open the stomach and go back to the car for help. When I got to the car. The kids asked what I was shooting at and if I'd killed anything.

Beginnings: Rejection, Guilt, and Gangs

I was born in Cornwall, Ontario, on a cold Depression-era morning – 15 January 1935. Six months later my mother tried to kill herself. That event was going to have more impact on my life than anything else that would ever happen. To this day I don't know exactly what was wrong with her. I do know that everyone thought she was crazy, that they locked her in an insane asylum where she died of mysterious causes some thirty-five years later, after spending her whole adult life in an institution. Like mother, like son, I guess. I was sure destined to do more than my share of time locked up.

I wonder why she wanted to die so bad that she made a bunch of suicide attempts? I dunno. Maybe you can figure it out if I tell you what I know about her. First of all, she was only twenty-five when my father married her; he was fifty-five. Besides the age difference, he was English and she was French. Each of them could only speak a few words in the other's language. The old man's first wife had died, and he already had a grown family. The youngest was more than a quarter-century older than me. All his kids, four daughters and one son, was already living on their own. In fact, my father had several grandkids when I come into the world. I remember the old man as a loner type of guy, just like I was going to be.

My father was a real bugger. Although he was far from perfect, he was a real square john, an honest and hard-working labourer

Visiting Canada

by Faustina Dii

I arrived in Canada the 31st of October 1991. I feel cold. This is my first time visiting Canada. In Ghana we get cold but it is not very cold. We do not have snow but we get cold around Christmas time. But now I am use to the cold. I miss my mum. When I was coming to Canada I did not go to my home town. I have not seen her in two years.

How I Spent My Weekend

by Lucy Care

On Saturday I went to the Eaton's Centre. I saw Victor Newman, a star from "The Young and the Restless." I bought a poster with his picture on it and he autographed it for me. I talked to him and told him that I watched his show every day. He shook my hand. It was a lot of fun. After that I went from the Eaton's Centre to a friend's house. Her name is Penny Whitfield. We listened to music on her cassette tape player and talked.

On Sunday I got up and went to church in the morning. Then I went home. In the afternoon at 1:00 my brother and sister-in-law and nieces and nephew came to visit. I went to work and had lunch. The mobility service came to pick me up from work at 2:45 to take me to a picnic and bring me back. Action Read for 7:00 o'clock.

I did horrible in writing. Spelling was so so. I learned to spell from my first reading tutor, Sue Merrill. Sue Blair is teaching me how to put words together and how to use a dictionary. We read about rock groups like Rod Stewart and all those other guys. We look at prices and add the GST and the PST and look at how much things are going to cost. We look at how to write a grocery list for people with eating problems and how to pick nutritious foods. We work on newspapers, job applications and job interviews, applications for magazines, letters for London, England and we write to rock singers.

I learn better now than I did then. I have had two tutors that have helped me a lot. They care about what I want as a person. They accept me because I am me. That is the best part of a learning program where I don't have to measure up to my older sister.

My Stay In Manhattan

I was fifteen years old, and I really wanted to see what it was like in Manhattan. I chose Manhattan because my father lived there. I decided to go. I took a bus there; it took me thirteen hours to get there. When I arrived I had no idea where I was. I went to the phone booth to call my dad and he said he would come and pick me up. I was really excited to be in Manhattan and I had always wanted to live there. My first impression of Manhattan was good, but as I travelled through the city I saw some really rough areas. One night, about three months after I had been in Manhattan, a friend and I were supposed to meet some friends in the Bronx. The Bronx is a rough area. We had no way of getting there and we had no money. We decided to hitch-hike; it was our only option if we were going to meet our friends. A nineteen year old guy picked us up and he said he would drop us off in the Bronx. Before I knew what was happening, the cops were behind us with their sirens on.

BREAD

First Steven gets the bread.

Bread is the first ingredient.

There are two kinds of bread - white and brown.

Steven will make sandwiches with both kinds of bread.

Brown bread is good for you.

Brown bread has lots of fiber in it.

Fiber is good for your body.

White bread has a little fiber in it.

White bread is not as good for you.

All bread is good food.

Brown bread is a healthier kind of bread than white bread.

Visiting My Girlfriend

by Josie Ukrainetz

One time

I went to visit my girlfriend.

She lives at Keele and Dundas.

I had to go alone

and felt funny.

I thought I would get lost.

I had to take the bus, the subway, then the bus.

But I went the wrong way.

I didn't find it.

I went home.

I was getting frustrated.

I called her the next day.

She met me.

Once I knew where she lived

it wasn't hard to go there.

APPROACHES TO LITERACY TEACHING

There are a number of approaches or theories about the way adults learn and the best way to help them improve their reading and writing skills. The following is not an attempt to judge which approach is best or to be an all inclusive listing; rather, it is an attempt to give you a brief overview of some of the more commonly used approaches.

Doubtless your program will already have become comfortable with one approach. Take time to talk to some experienced tutors and students about the content of the lessons, the planning and the reasons behind the various activities. Not only will this give you a better understanding of the program, but it will also help identify areas of concern. Talking to current program participants will enable you to discover the philosophy of your program as understood by the present participants.

General Research Process

1. Context, Scope and Methodology

Literacy Northwest encompasses a very large geographic territory. Members of this network range in location from the Manitoba border to Schreiber (east of Thunder Bay) and from the Canada - U.S. border (Fort Frances - Rainy Lake area) to Red Lake and Sioux Lookout. These are just the current communities forming a rough boundary. In terms of Provincial Districts, Literacy Northwest covers most of the Kenora, Rainy River and Thunder Bay Districts^a.

Establishing a project in such a region required close examination of the methods available. With such a large area to cover, the chosen methodology was the mail out survey^b.

The reputational sample method was used², which is unobtrusive and non-reactive. "Reputational sample" refers to a selection procedure. In reputational samples, the choice of respondents depends upon someone's judgment of who are "typical" representatives. People are selected because of their reputations, they are publicly visible, or they hold a position in an organization. The information collected came from a broad range of services, resulting in a wider perspective on the gaps and

LET'S LOOK AT SOME GROUPS

IDEA

Every group is different, and yet all groups have some things in common:

Here are descriptions of two literacy groups.

▼ EXAMPLES OF SMALL GROUPS

The first group is 6 learners who meet twice per week for two hours with a facilitator. They are all women. They knew each other before coming to the program. All are in the same community support program. They each have difficulty learning in formal learning tasks. The community support program hopes that these women will gain social skills and communication skills, as well as improve their reading and writing. The members enjoy coming to the group. They love to talk about their interests, especially movie magazines, and TV soap operas. They have developed their ways of being together. They are not very enthusiastic about any task that uses paper and pencil.

The second group is a group of 14 literacy learners and tutors. It came together out of a drop-in centre at the literacy program's office. This group formed in response to a request from outside for a drama production. It became a students' and tutors' drama club. They produced a radio play for a public performance. They had three months to produce the play. They met for 2 hours, once per week. All were very keen. They studied, rewrote and produced the play. All of the group dynamics revolved around the play. The group took responsibility for attendance.

Editing: For the Writer and the Reader

Vince Greason is a literacy worker at the Metro Labour Education Centre, a project of the Labour Council of Metro Toronto and York Region. He has participated in several learner-written publishing projects since 1988. In this paper Vince uses the words worker and learner interchangeably.

For anyone who has been involved in a support role in the process of publishing learner-written materials, a number of editing questions have probably come up. Who chooses what material is published? Who edits? Why edit? How is it done? This essay tries to look at some of these issues as they relate to the publishing process.

Usually we think of editing as something done to assist the reader: editing makes a piece of writing more readable. In this article I develop an approach to editing that is designed to assist the writer as much as the reader. This approach to editing is consistent with a learner-centred approach to education.

Publishing: an end or a means?

Using the books documented in As Our History Unfolds, we can look at the publishing process in one of two ways. We can see publishing as an end in and of itself. From this point of view, the goal is to publish a book. All activity prior to this goal works at making a piece of writing or a book publishable. Editing happens outside of the writing experience; sometimes editors are completely external to the learning dynamic. Learners are not directly involved, nor are they even necessarily consulted as to editing decisions.

Or, we can look at publishing in a way where the process is just as important as the content. Here the goal still remains the same --to actually publish a book; but the events leading up to the moment of publication are seen as just as meaningful. Editing is a learning experience for both tutor and learner. Therefore, the publishing project enables all people involved to gain and feel comfortable with their new language skills.

DEFINITION

A community-based literacy project is one in which members of a community share responsibility for providing basic education to local adults. In an urban setting, the project might serve a relatively small, densely populated area with high numbers of adults who are functionally illiterate.

The setting for the project reflects its close connection with other community services. It might be located in space provided by a settlement house, a local library, a church, an information post, or a community centre. The best physical location for the project is an open, accessible space with a welcoming, informal atmosphere and easy access to other community services.

Direction for the project comes through a volunteer board of directors, drawn from the local area. The provision of tutoring is also primarily through volunteers, trained by an experienced staff to work in both one-to-one and group settings, depending on the requirements of the learner.

Learner participation in the project is also voluntary: adult learners may have heard about the program through a social service agency, but they are expected to make personal, initial contact with the project's staff, and tend to be highly motivated to learn.

The involvement of adult learners and volunteers extends beyond the tutoring sessions. Both learners and tutors are encouraged to be active in all aspects of the project, whether it be helping with

Guidelines For Assessing Adult Literacy Materials

The following guidelines for assessing the usefulness of adult literacy materials were developed by the Toronto Curriculum Working Group, which is made up of literacy workers who are members of the Metro Toronto Movement for Literacy. We wrote these guidelines to articulate the need we felt, as literacy practitioners, to provide adult learners with materials which reflect their needs, goals and interests. We hope these guidelines will be useful in the following ways: to help those who work with adults cultivate a critical awareness when choosing teaching materials or developing resource materials; to help literacy practitioners who are developing their own learning materials; and to assist commercial publishers in understanding the needs of adult learners. Our guidelines will continue to change as our understanding of literacy grows.

A. Content

1. The material must be relevant and interesting to adults living in Canada.
2. The material should respect the dignity of the adult learner.
3. Materials developed in any language should be relevant to the culture and needs of the learner.
4. Learners, tutors, and programme workers should consider the author's educational philosophy as well as any social assumptions made about the learners and society (e.g. race, sex and class bias).
5. The content should be ordered logically and make sense.
6. A description of how and where the material was developed is useful, especially if literacy program participants took part in its development.

B. Format

1. Visuals and layout should be appealing and attractive to an adult.
2. Graphics should be rendered clearly and provide clues to the text.

How to Use The Voters' Kit

When you vote you help decide who will make decisions that affect your life in Metro Toronto, in Ontario, and in Canada. We wrote this kit to help you vote in municipal, provincial and federal elections. We hope you'll find voting easier when you use this kit.

The Voters' Kit has six parts. They are:

- How to Use the Voters Kit,
- How to Vote in Canada's Federal Elections,
- How to Vote in Ontario's Provincial Elections,
- How to Vote in Metro Toronto's Elections,
- The Election Word List, and
- Election Extras.

This book, How to Use the Voters' Kit, tells you about the other parts of the kit.

How to Vote in Canada's Federal Elections tells you about voting to elect people to Canada's federal government. We elect Members of Parliament (M.P.s) to the federal government. The Prime Minister and the federal cabinet are part of the federal government. These members decide on issues that apply to all the people living in Canada. This government decides things like:

My Successful Trip to the Old Country

After my sister sent a letter about my mother's health, I was worried. My family decided quickly that I should go to visit my mother. I had a short time to get ready. I was scared and excited too.

When I got to Slovakia*, I had many surprises. First of all, I met a nice immigration officer. He treated me very well. People there were very friendly. I visited many people. They asked me a lot of questions about people in Canada.

I went to many tourist places, like castles. My country is small but beautiful. There are many high mountains and beautiful valleys. The air is very fresh. I was very pleased with my successful trip.

Chapter Six

My grandmother was a kind person. I wish my grandmother was still alive. I miss her a lot. I love her with all my heart.

After I left the institution, I finally got a chance to visit my grandmother again. My brothers and I used to take turns on the weekend to visit her out in the country. I like going to the country because it is so peaceful and the fresh air is lovely out there. There is nothing like country life.

"O" Canada

I think Canada is a good place because you have plenty opportunities. Like going back to school. If you have a problem, you could get a counselor to talk with.

I am from the West Indies, which is very hot and Canada is so cold at times, but if I want to live here, I would have to like it.

The only thing I am missing from St. Vincent is my friends and my family, also the sunlight and sea.

I think Canada is better because I can get a job faster, also I learnt a lot of things when I came to Canada.

They told the organiser I was only fifteen and he took me off. You had to be eighteen to enter. The marathon went on for three weeks. I went back a few times to see how they were getting on. I think I had a good chance of winning if I'd stayed. The first prize was $150 which was a lot of money in those days. Mary, my partner, went on to win second prize.

The image shows two systems of musical notation for the song "I Could Have Danced All Night". Each system consists of a vocal line and a piano accompaniment line. The first system has the lyrics "To The Waltz You Saved For Me." with a "C" chord above the first measure and a "G" chord above the last measure. The second system has the lyrics "Ev-er in dreams when I'm a-way," with a "C" chord above the first measure and a "G" chord above the last measure. The piano accompaniment features a steady bass line and chords that support the melody.

The following are some samples of learner-generated work.

The language experience approach can generate such material, as the learner can dictate far more sophisticated thoughts to you than he/she is capable of writing independently in the initial stages of learning to read.

Life

Money is not everything, if you don't have good health.

To the Writer of Life

O, dear! If you say it is like that, what can I say? But I would recommend that you make mention of love. From olden times many philosophers have been talking about this, but no one made their answer clear. Money, love, health, and life; it seems just like an equation! Dear me! What are you doing now? You might want to go to the washroom! That's right! That is also life!

Finding A Host

Choosing a suitable person to host your show is probably the biggest decision of the process. This important person must be very knowledgeable about literacy and the topics you have chosen to focus on. The host will introduce the show and guests, act as a facilitator for the discussions, watch the timing of each speaker and be prepared to close off the show. During production, the TV station producer is in contact with the host through an ear microphone. This can be disconcerting at first, but our host managed very well and she had never been in a studio before! She was very successful and shares her experience with you in Appendix D.

Choosing Your Guests

Invite your learners!

For a half hour show you will want a maximum of four people (with three being the general preference). You may want to choose an expert in the field, a tutor/teacher and a learner. Learners participated in four of our six shows. Letters to each of your guests, asking them to participate, should be mailed at least six weeks prior to the day of the shoot. Directions to the studio and transportation for your out-of-town guests should be arranged by your project coordinator. For two of our shows we had three out-of-town guests. Keep your guests well informed of the progress of your project. If possible meet with guests and the host before the scheduled shoot date. Everyone should be at the studio at least an hour before recording or going live. This will allow the guests to see the studio, cameras, set, lighting

The Kitten

— by Kim Borges

Curious Kitty climbs up to see the shiny gold star at the top of the tree.
Bright-coloured stockings hang by the fire;
Kitty leaps up, climbing higher and higher.
Kitty tries wrapping a gift
she will send to someone who is her very good friend.
If Santa is hungry and wants to eat,
Three cookies with milk are left as a treat.
Then under the mistletoe, Kitty does sneak,
Hoping that Teddy will kiss her soft cheek.
Everyone is sleeping 'cause Santa comes late;
Kitty tries to stay up, but just cannot wait.
Early next morning, Kitty opens her eyes and finds all around her the biggest surprise.
Santa was here! ❀

MY FISHING EXPERIENCE

One summer day I decided to go fishing by the lake. I had never fished before. I went to the store and bought all my supplies for fishing. Then I went out and bought my fishing licence. After I had all my supplies, I went to Lake Erie and tried to fish.

Since I had no experience, I had no idea how to fish and I had no idea how long it might take to catch a fish. After a while, I lay down bored for about fifteen minutes and I still couldn't feel any fish on the hook. I stood up and saw there was a friendly man with a fishing rod. He asked me if I had already caught many fish today.

GROUNDHOG DAY

Groundhog Day is a superstition about a weather prediction that could be a big joke. People believe very strongly that on February 2nd if the groundhog wakes up from his winter sleep and comes out and sees his shadow, we will have a late spring.

When I watched the news on TV, I saw two men dressed in white clothes with a pile of snow. They had a white rabbit. They pretended this was a groundhog. I thought that this was funny, two grown men making fools

On that cold wintery road were farmers in ox-carts and others in wagons and some on bobsleighs. At the last minute, the sentence was brought down to life imprisonment. The people were very unhappy about that. Some were grumbling, saying that they should have stayed home and done their chores. Others took advantage of being in town and went shopping.

THE W.C.

On the first day they were at the farm,
Alie's little sister had to go to the bathroom.
The girls went together and asked their father where it was. He didn't know but he told them to ask the landlord.

He said, "You call it a W.C."

The two little girls knocked on the landlord's door.

Alie said, "W.C." and started lifting her skirt.

He still didn't understand. Finally she lifted her skirt and bent down in a squatting position. Now he understood! He showed them to a little shed and opened the door.

WHAT I THINK ABOUT CANADA

I like Canada because it is a great place to grow and because of the education.

Canada is very supportive of students like me and also for other people.

I think Canada should have more farmlands. We should plant more plants and crops. I am most concerned about our planet because of the forest population and evergreen problem.

I am mostly concerned about the jobs for the future in Canada. Canada should do something for the teenagers that are

When I went to visit you were sad.
I knew something was wrong and I wished I knew.
You truly got me confused.
When I asked you to eat something you refused.
When you're sad I'm sad too.
When you're happy I'm happy too.
I wanted to cry.
But the tears in my eyes were dry.
I kept going into the other room.
I kept looking out the window looking at the moon.
When you're sad I'm sad too.
When you're happy I'm happy too.
When I looked above.
I remembered you wrote something you love.
I wish I could bring all your tomorrows.
And get rid of all your sorrows.

Saturday was a day we children looked forward to having the whole days to ourselves playing on the hill, climbing trees, digging tunnels through the sand even fighting at times. We made a lot of mud pies in our days. We always had something to do but never wanded off too far. Mom was always there keeping her watchful eye upon us.

One day we followed Dad when he went to get our drinking water. It was the best water anyone could ever drink-Spring Water-the best. We got this water below a steep hill. There were many little rabbit holes on the side of the hill. We had to ask about the holes Dad smiled and said, "little wild Indians live in those holes." We took his answer. Today stories are still told about little wild Indians. I also remember all the good trees along this hill. Today I can say it was the best wood. There was a lot of cedar, white ash, white birch, blue birch and an odd maple.

Our Grandpa lived with us there in Stoney Point. The log house was of two rooms. We still had room for Grandpa. He was alone. His wife, our Grandma, died many years ago before we were born. I don't remember her, but I've seen her pictures. Grandpa stayed with us for as long as I can remember. He was one of the greatest Grandpas. I always remember Grandpa keeping us as they would say baby-sitting while Mom and Dad were away peddling their baskets or gone shopping. Some days he would go away to visit his other children but always came back after a good visit. He would always bring home marshmallow candy on a stick or candy sticks that used to have a ring on. Those were special candy because we got a ring for ourselves. Sometime he would bring home apples when he was able to. Grandpa was getting up in age. He was enjoying the good pleasures in life.

What is Love?

I believe this evening is about love. There are many love. The most important love for me is my family. Another important thing in my life is my school. I came to this school years ago. I was scared. But the people were nice and that made a difference. I learned a lot from many different people. Reading is a number one, but I also learned about people. Reading changes your life. It makes work much easier. I can buy my own groceries and I have confidence. But the caring made me stay and love about people.

The Corner Restaurant

"My project is about an old corner restaurant I go to, that has been in the same place for a long time."

Who could you talk to about the history of Barney's Restaurant?

Barney, the owner of the restaurant for 30 years

Maria, a waitress at the restaurant for 22 years

Harold, the dry cleaner next door who remembers the day Barney opened

Carlos, a customer who has eaten there at least once a week for the past 20 years.

Oral History Interviews

When you do oral history interviews, you will be asking questions. Choose and organize our questions before you go. The interview is like a planned conversation.

Oral history interviews are usually done with a tape recorder. This way, you can listen to people's stories again later. It is much easier than trying to remember everything the person said, or trying to write as fast as someone speaks!

The Teller

In this guide, we call the person answering the questions the teller. You interview them because they have experience or knowledge that is important to your oral history project. Remember that the teller is giving you their time. When you talk to someone about something that has happened to them, they are showing you a part of themselves. Treat the teller with respect and patience.

I have two brothers. One went into the Navy, the other went to a mental hospital and was there for a very long time.

When I was about 6, I started wearing a brace which started just above my waist and went all the way down my right leg. It was well-padded, bulky to wear and was fastened with a big buckle.

One day one of my brothers asked me if I would like to play a game so I closed my eyes and started to count. He went away and got a big snake and put it down my back. It wiggled down to my brace and curled into the hole in my back like a ball. I started to scream and cry. It felt wet and slimy. My father came running from the house. He put his hands down my back and pulled out the snake. To this day, I can't have anyone touch my back where that snake was.

When I was 11, my mom tried to put me in the same hospital with my brother, but my dad stopped her. All this time, my parents kept pushing me out of our home into other homes with family and friends to raise me. I was so confused.

One time in my teens, I went to the hospital because of the sores on top of my right foot. The doctor scraped the bone down so that it wouldn't rub

Mama's Absence

The summer after my first year of boarding school was an exciting experience. I can still recall it so clearly in my mind.

Mama wasn't feeling well at the time. Her skin was breaking around her neck and on her arms; the soreness didn't go away even with the treatments. We did many things together like going to the nursing station which was approximately half an hour's walk through the forest along many small trails. Mama and I would sit on the ground or on a log to rest.

A Summer to Remember

*Mac Morsette
Thunder Bay, Ontario*

When I was 16 years old, I worked on a farm milking cows and shovelling sh __ for a dollar a day with room and board.

One Friday night, I went to a dance to kick up my heels and flirt with the girls. I met a fellow who worked for the Great Lake Pulp and Paper Company. He asked me if I'd like to have a job on a road location for $8.15 a day plus room and board. I thought I'd died and gone to heaven.

The next day I was heading for Ignace, Ontario to help locate the road from Ignace to Valora. I was going to be one of two axemen in the party. Our job was to blaze a trail so that the bulldozers could follow the path through the bush. We had two tents: one tent for storing our supplies, and the other for sleeping. We travelled by two freighter canoes from one waterways to another. When we got too far away from the road which we were locating, the Great Lakes company would fly in and transport us to another waterway closer to the proposed road.

There were 4 men in our party at first. Bill was the engineer and the boss of our party, a war vet and the boss. Howard was the compassman, and Jim was an axeman like myself.

All we had to eat was canned food. We had no bread, don't ask me why! We cooked on an open fire. We had lots to eat, but after dining on beans and canned stew and what-have-you, we sure got tired of it!

An uncertain future

Rosaire Cormier

We don't know where we will go from where we are. There is uncertainty in our future. Because of a big lay-off at Domtar Forest Products, we are going to school and collecting U.I.C., but this will not last forever. Our situation is very critical. Sometimes when I wake up in the middle of the night and start thinking of my situation I can't go back to sleep.

I have tried to get a job, first by learning how to prepare a résumé and sending it to different forest companies across the country. I have received a few phone calls from contractors, but some jobs were too far from home and they were not paying good enough to cover the expenses to go to work.

I find those jobs by answering ads in the paper, by getting help from my wife and talking with friends. The more I tried to find a job, the worse the situation seemed to become. I find out by all those phone calls that we are getting very little money for a lot more work. The forest companies are taking advantage of the fact that they don't need as many people to do the work as before. We are being replaced by machinery, which is more economical than using labour. The problem is that the company will not look after us when they don't need us anymore.

C. Basic Skills Needs as Perceived by Employers

In general, employers are not open to discussion of employee basic skills. Employers in food service - the land of low wages, fierce competition and half-hour lunch breaks - are even less inclined.

There are several reasons for this reluctance, among them confidentiality for reasons of competition. But one common reason is that employers cannot see how low basic skills affect employees' performance of duties.

"There are a lot of people at front line level who have low basic skills, but they never have to use them," according to a Human Resources Director for a Food Service Management Company. Responses like this are one reason why food service is such a difficult industry in which to introduce workplace literacy initiatives.

Employers were surveyed for this manual through one-to-one interviews and mail-in questionnaires. These two methods are treated separately below. You'll find the questions asked in the interviews listed in Appendix B and the employer questionnaire in Appendix C.

1. One-to-One Interviews

In this section we look at employers' attitudes, problems and solutions on employee basic skills, as often as possible in the employers' own words.

The one-to-one interviews held for this manual unearthed much more than statements about staff being unable to read or do math. Employers spoke about their efforts to work around employees with low basic skills, and of their frustration at having to explain and re-explain duties involving skills "that should have been learned at age 15."

These candid descriptions of problems faced in day-to-day operation are the real "scoop" provided by the interviews. They offer an insider's view into the realities of today's food service workplace, and provide a clear picture of how workplace literacy fits into the food service environment.

The Learner Centred Approach 2

Adult learners, when given the right environment and the right structure, can and will become involved in, and take responsibility for, their own learning.

In this chapter you will read about...

- What does Learner Centred Mean?
- Empowerment and the Learner Centred Approach
- A Tutor's Role
- Ensuring a Learner Centred Environment

What does Learner Centred Mean?

All too often we give people cut flowers when we should be teaching them to grow their own plants. "Learning and Teaching with Common Sense," Frontier College

In a learner centred approach to literacy, the learner leads the way and is at the centre of the learning. The tutor is the guide. The learner centred approach uses materials that directly reflect the learner's life. The concepts taught pertain directly to the learner's need. The learner centred approach encourages the learner to take control of the learning process. The reason for this approach is two fold:

- People learn best when what is being taught, is of practical use and reflects their own personal needs and interests.
- The learner is encouraged to take control of their learning, giving them the opportunity to transfer their newly acquired learning and literacy skills to other areas of their life.
