ABSTRACT

This guide provides resource suggestions for Washington, D.C. teachers who are preparing units on African American art and artists. The listings include hours of operation, address, and phone number of community resources under six distinct headings: (1) "Museums"; (2) "Art Galleries and Organizations"; (3) "Other Educational Resources"; (4) "Libraries and Archives"; (5) "History and Culture Resources"; and (6) "Selected Museum and Book Stores." When possible or pertinent, additional information for each resource is given regarding contact person, admission charges, school programs, teacher services, and a brief description of the resource's scope and content. A 40-item bibliography lists selected books and exhibition catalogues for teachers and students. (DQE)

Our Children, Our Future, a 1989 report on educational goals for the District of Columbia Public Schools, proposed the development of a new multicultural curriculum that would take advantage of local resources in addition to standard textbooks. To further these goals, the D.C. school system and the Smithsonian Institution Office of Elementary and Secondary Education have collaborated in a series of teacher development programs and museum internship opportunities for teachers from select schools. Smithsonian staff and participating teachers have worked to produce materials, including this guide, that will help other teachers to benefit from the large variety of institutions and community resources in the Washington, D.C., area.

The guide aims to provide ample suggestions for local teachers who are studying African American art and artists. If you discover resources that are missing from this text, please send your findings to Michelle Smith, Publications Director, Office of Elementary and Secondary Education, A&I Room 1163 MRC 402, Washington, D.C. 20560.

The following individuals and museums made this project possible:

District of Columbia Public Schools

Maurice R. Sykes, Deputy Superintendent, Center for Systematic Educational Change

John Sparrow, Principal, Marie Reed Learning Center

National Gallery of Art

Linda Downs, Head, Education Division

Kathy Walsh-Piper, Head, Department of Teacher and School Programs

Janna Eggebeen, Coordinator of Teacher Workshops and Materials

National Museum of American Art

Nora Panzer, Chief, Office of Educational Programs

Margaret (Peg) Cogswell, Coordinator, Special Audience Programs

Office of Elementary and Secondary Education, Smithsonian Institution

Ann Bay, Director

R. Maria Marable, Program Manager, D.C. Public Schools Relations

Cathy Mahmud and Joan Holleman served as consultants and editors in the compiling and preparation of this publication. The original research on which the guide is based was carried out by Ursula Sherard, a participating teacher from the Marie Reed Learning Center, District of Columbia Public Schools.

SUMNER SCHOOL MUSEUM AND ARCHIVES

District of Columbia Public Schools
1201 17th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

Contact Person: Ruby Herring
(202) 727-3419

Sumner School became the first permanent school for blacks in the District of Columbia in 1872, graduating the nation's first black high school class five years later. Named for Charles Sumner, a leading spokesman for African American emancipation and civil rights in the 19th century, it has been completely restored and is on the National Register of Historic Places. Sumner School now serves as the official museum and archives of the District of Columbia Public Schools. It also houses Sumner memorabilia and a collection of photocopies of his letters. Some of the rooms have been converted to gallery space for the display of contemporary artists of the Washington, D.C., area.

Metro: Red Line to the Farragut North stop (L Street exit).

Hours: 10:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m., Monday - Friday
Follows schedule of D.C. Public Schools, closed July and August

Admission: No charge.

School Programs: The museum holds art exhibitions, concerts, and African American history tours for students in elementary grades through college. In addition, a hands-on District of Columbia history program is offered to grades 4 - 12. Catch a Rising Star, an annual performance showcase, provides an opportunity for students to display their musical and singing talents. The museum's galleries host an annual art exhibition of DCPS students' works.

Teacher Services: The Sumner Bell, a free monthly publication put out the first of every month from September through June, lists event and exhibit schedules. Call Ms. Herring at the above phone number for more information or to be added to the mailing list. Contact Bobby Kidd, Exhibit Curator, for information on a teacher outreach program that offers technical and professional advice for establishing an exhibition space within school. Contact Anatol R. Steck, Archival Assistant, for historical information about the public school buildings in the District of Columbia.

Lunch Facilities: None. Food may be brought in for special events with the approval of Sumner School officials.

The Library of Congress houses a vast collection of books, manuscripts, periodicals, photographs, illustrations, films, sound recordings, and original documents pertaining to the African American experience. The African American Mosaic: A Library of Congress Resource Guide for the Study of Black History and Culture provides an in-depth survey of the Library's holdings beginning with slavery and the antebellum period and ending with television documentaries on the civil rights era. This useful new publication directs researchers where to find, for example, documents on the mutiny of Africans aboard the Amistad and tells of Frederick Remington's 1889 illustrations of "Buffalo Soldiers" - the name Plains Indians gave the African American soldiers who served on the Great Plains after 1865. The Library also collects such things as first edition copies of numerous literary works by African American authors, and its sound archives includes eleven thousand recordings of jazz musician Duke Ellington.

The Library of Congress is not a lending library, but it does welcome researchers over high school age (access to some collections may be restricted). Among the Library's many sections that may be of interest are an African Reading Room, a Microform Reading Room, a Prints and Photographs Division, and a Music Division.

Please call the general information number above for details.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

7th Street and Independence Avenue, S.W.

Washington, D.C. 20408

(202) 501-5402

The National Archives and Records Administration serves the national government and the American people who established it by: 1) physically safeguarding the documents created by the federal government, 2) promoting effective and efficient administering of those records in order to facilitate research, and 3) advancing society's general knowledge of our nation's history. As this nation grew, so did the federal government's involvement in the affairs of its people, a population made up of various ethnic groups including African Americans. Many of the civilian and military records stored within the National Archives system extensively document African American life, history, and culture. Special lists, guides, and other research finding aids indicate the diversity of record forms - textual documents, photographs, motion picture and sound recordings, cartographic charts, architectural drawings, and records in electronic form. Black History: A Guide to Civilian Records in the National Archives provides comprehensive descriptive listings of pertinent records dating from the colonial period to contemporary times. One notable group of materials it identifies is the large collection of photographs, motion pictures, and sound recordings donated by the Harmon Foundation, a private group that collected and cataloged African American and African art objects between 1928 and 1967.
