ABSTRACT

This comprehensive resource guide describes programs and services for young children (prenatal to age 8) and their families in Alaska. Information for the resource guide was collected from state departmental budget documents, program guides, annual reports, and program personnel. In compiling this information, certain trends concerning children's programs and services in the state became apparent: reliance on federal funding; interdependence of programs and services within and between departments; and the program-specific or service-specific nature of available databases, which are not linked statewide. The guide is divided into six parts: (1) an introduction; (2) an index of program categories, the services available in those categories, and the department responsible for each service; (3) descriptions of the specific programs and services provided by each state department; (4) a list of relevant boards and commissions appointed by the governor; (5) other state-supported committees and organizations that provide services to children and their families; and (6) descriptions of 71 relevant databases in state agencies, reports generated from the databases, and contact information. Categories of programs and services include: child care; child protection; comprehensive child development programs; data; economic development; education (bilingual, early childhood, HIV/AIDS, homeless, migrant, special, and vocational); family support; general health; mental health; nutrition; parenting and family education; public assistance; safety; sanitation; and special needs and developmental disabilities. Dear Reader:

In the Fall of 1993, the Alaska Head Start State Collaboration Project and the Alaska Interdepartmental Committee for Young Children (AICYC) began a major collaborative project to develop a RESOURCE GUIDE OF CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS AND SERVICES. This project was undertaken because centralized, comprehensive information about all of the various state programs and services for children and families was not readily available. The lack of comprehensive information made it difficult to identify the various programs and services, to understand their interrelatedness, and to develop collaborative plans and policies for children and their families.

Information for the RESOURCE GUIDE was collected from Departmental budget documents, program guides, annual reports and program personnel. Because of the constant changes in federal/state program funding and personnel/staffing priorities, detailed budget and personnel information is not presented. Program/services descriptions are limited to summary information.

In compiling this information, certain trends concerning children's programs and services in the state became apparent. For example:

- The majority of programs/services are funded, at varying levels, with federal dollars and/or grants. Cuts in federal programs would severely impact the state's ability to provide necessary services.
- Individual programs/services do not stand alone but rely on other resources within their own Departments and/or the resources in other Departments for full implementation. Changes to one program/service would have definite impacts on other programs/services.
- Databases are program/service specific and not linked statewide on a computer database. Even though the program/service may overlap with another one, the data is not interchangeable.

The Collaboration Project and the AICYC sincerely hopes that the information presented here will be useful for those who work with, or are concerned about, young children and their families in Alaska and will help foster stronger, meaningful planning and collaboration on behalf of children.

INTRODUCTION

The State of Alaska provides a variety of programs and services for young children (prenatal to age 8) and their families. Five Departments with the state government are responsible for the administration and delivery of the majority of these programs and services. The areas of responsibility for the Departments are not always clear cut and easily defined.

Several different departments may have some responsibility for the same program or service. For example: The Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) is responsible for environmental health and sanitation inspections for child care centers. The Department of Health and Social Services (DHSS) issues licenses for the operation of child care facilities. The Department of Community and Regional Affairs (DCRA) administers grant funds for child care providers, child care subsidies for parents, and resource/referral services for parents and providers. The DCRA and DHSS also provide funds and coordination for child care for children and families who are enrolled in social service and public assistance programs. Many child care facilities are subject to fire safety regulations administered by the Department of Public Safety. The Department of Education administers the child care food reimbursement program and certifies preschool programs. All of these programs are represented on the Alaska Interdepartmental Committee for Young Children (AICYC)

Another major issue to be addressed is the shifting of a service or program responsibility from one department to another. For example: services for children with physical or developmental special needs ages 0-3 are served by the Infant Learning Program in the DHSS; from age 3-5 they are served by Head Start programs in DCRA or school district preschool programs; from age 5 and up, they are served by local school programs.

The interrelated nature of children's services and programs in the state call for collaboration to overcome numerous challenges and problems. Services for children may be interrupted at crucial times, they may be subject to duplicate testing and evaluations, program administrators may spend valuable time doing one task that has already been done by another, budget cuts or program changes for one program can have serious consequences for another program. In order to provide continuous, meaningful services for children and families and to help eliminate duplicative efforts; it is essential that administrators, program managers, legislators and service providers seek ways to interact or "collaborate."

To help foster more meaningful collaboration between all those who work with children and families, the Alaska Head Start State Collaboration Grant in conjunction with the AICYC agreed to develop a RESOURCE GUIDE of PROGRAMS AND SERVICES FOR YOUNG CHILDREN AND THEIR FAMILIES.

This guide is divided into three parts:

- an index of program categories and services that are available in those categories;
- a description of the specific programs/services provided by each Department; and
- a listing and brief description of boards, commissions, committees and other programs that provide services to children and their families.

The RESOURCE GUIDE is designed to be easily updated as changes occur within the state. Periodic review and updates will be conducted and revised program descriptions distributed to those receiving copies of the guide. We welcome your suggestions for additions or changes to the RESOURCE GUIDE.

Funding for the development and publication of this guide is provided by the Alaska Head Start State Collaboration Grant, Department of Community and Regional Affairs. The grant is funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Resources. For additional information and updates for the guide, contact the Alaska Head Start Office at 465- 4860.

Child Care Subsidy Programs

Program Goals:

To enable low and moderate income families to afford child care while parents are working or in training.

Services Provided

Financial assistance to parents to help pay the cost of child care. Four subsidy programs are administered under this program: the Day Care Assistance Program (DCAP) and the Child Care Development Block Grant Program (CCDBG) for low to moderate income parents who are working or in training; the Transitional Benefits Program for former AFDC families who have been determined to be eligible for this entitlement program; and the At-Risk Assistance Program for families at risk of becoming AFDC.

Eligibility

Funds are available to families based on income limits for the DCAP, CCDBG, and At-Risk programs. The Transitional Benefits program assists former AFDC families for up to 12 months based on eligibility determination by the Division of Public Assistance. Parents may have from 25% to 97% of their child care costs paid for them. The percent of subsidy depends upon the parents' net income. As the net income level increases, the amount of subsidy decreases. Funds are administered through grants from the state to communities, agencies or other organizations.

Program Status

Funding sources for the programs are: DCAP - state funds; CCDBG - federal funds; Transitional - state (50%), federal (50%); At-Risk - state (50%), federal (50%). The federal portion of the funds for the Transitional and At-Risk programs are granted to the Department of Health and Social Services from the federal government but are administered by the Child Care Programs in the Department of Community and Regional Affairs as required by federal law. Required match for the federal portion of these programs is part of the DCRA's budget.

Comments

Quality child care programs provide an essential element in a community's overall economic development. Child care provides an opportunity for parents to seek employment, work or train and increases jobs in child care facilities.

During the last three months of the fiscal year, adjustments in payments are made to provide each district with its revised entitlement, based on the current year count. The DOE monitors the integrity of school district student count and provides timely estimates of the need for supplemental and subsequent year funding. The amount requested by school districts is based on student count projections submitted by each district. The actual funds needed for this program may vary depending on the FY94 student enrollment, the classification of those students enrolled, the actual local contribution to the school district expenditures and the actual PL-874 (military base contracts) receipts.

Adoption and Guardianship

Program Goals

To provide permanent homes for those children in state custody who are unable to return to their families or become emancipated. Permanent placements are arranged that meet the child's individual needs, are within the child's own culture and are preferably with relatives.

Services Provided

- Adoption is a legal proceeding ordered by the court after the birth parents' parental rights have been terminated. Adoption is the preferred option for providing permanency for a child because it provides a legally permanent family for the child. Guardianship is also a legal proceeding, but parental rights may or may not be terminated. Therefore, guardianship carries some legal risk that the arrangement could be reversed.
- Children with special needs may be eligible for federal or state subsidies to offset the costs associated with adoption or guardianship. Subsidies are individually negotiated depending on the child's needs and the family's circumstances. Post-adoption services may be provided on a limited basis to insure the continuing stability of adoptive placements. Depending on the families needs, direct services may be provided or referrals made to helping agencies or adoption support groups.
- The Division evaluates and approves all adoptive and guardianship families.

Eligibility

Families who wish to provide adoptive and guardianship homes for children with special needs must meet the state's criteria for adoption and guardianship. Financial assistance through the subsidy program is available for children who meet specific state and federal eligibility requirements.

Program Status

Financial subsidies may be funded through a combination of state and federal monies. Guardianship subsidies are entirely funded with state monies and adoption subsidies may be funded with state and/or federal funds. Legal costs for adoption procedures are borne by the adoptive family, but reimbursement may be available through the subsidy program.

Comments

During FY 93, the Division completed 91 adoptions and 129 guardianships. Approximately 80% of these were subsidized.

Child Protective Services

Program Goals

To identify and protect children from abuse, neglect, exploitation by investigating reports of harm and providing services to children at risk of harm and their families. To the extent possible, insure that reasonable efforts are made to protect and maintain children in their own homes.

Services Provided

Services include investigating reports of harm, assisting families in diagnosing and resolving problems, referring families to community resources, initiating legal intervention if children are unable to remain safely in their own homes, and providing out of home placements and permanency planning when necessary. Due to the high volume of cases and insufficient numbers of social workers, not all cases reported to DFYS can be investigated. The Division prioritizes cases based on the severity of risk evident in the information received (Priority I, II, III). Reports indicating most serious risk of imminent harm to the child are investigated immediately. Less serious cases are investigated within several days. In offices with excessive work loads, the least serious cases may not be investigated unless subsequent reports are received.

Eligibility

Children at risk of harm in their living situation.

Program Status

Child Protective Services are funded with state funds. In FY 93, there were 14,617 reports/referrals for Child Protective Services involving 10,521 children; an increase of over 25% from the previous year, with no new staff to provide services. Of the reports received, DFYS investigated 9,323; 46% (4,316) were verified. Based on population projections, this represents a rate of 57 per 1,000.

Comments

DFYS has been shifting its service delivery from a rescue based to a family centered approach. Family strengths, not just deficits, are considered and mobilized to protect the child. Also, culturally appropriate, community based services are used to protect and/or rehabilitate children, and strengthen families.

Licensing requirements include: standards for health, safety, nutrition, staff, program, organization and physical facilities. The larger facilities must also have a sanitation and environmental safety inspection by the Department of Environmental Conservation and a fire safety inspection by the Department of Public Safety.

Eligibility

Facilities that are required by Alaska law to be licensed prior to caring for children, such as child foster homes. Facilities that are required by law to be licensed to receive benefits from other state or federal programs such as the Child Nutrition Programs in the Department of Education or Child Care Grant Programs in the Department of Community and Regional Affairs. Some community care facilities that are not required by law to be licensed may be voluntarily licensed.

Program Status

Licensing of child care centers in Anchorage has been delegated to the Municipality of Anchorage. Services are funded by state funds. Federal funds have supported one additional statewide coordinating position for several years.

Comments

The Division licenses 1,945 facilities which can serve a total capacity of over 13,500 persons.

2/94

Family Centered Services

Program Goals

Family centered service delivery is both a method and a philosophical approach to provide services which focus on families rather than on single individuals. Culturally appropriate, community based resources are used to protect and/or rehabilitate children, protect vulnerable adults, strengthen families, promote permanency for children, and reduce the incidence or duration of out-of-home placement. Safety of children, vulnerable adults, and the community is paramount.

Services Provided

The level of services provided by child protective services and youth corrections that are given to the family are based upon the individual needs of the family. Services are also purchased by DFYS from private agencies and private providers of family services. Examples of these services range from intensive home-based services, child protective day care, parenting support groups, family resource and family support programs, counseling services, etc.

Eligibility

Families included in the program are determined eligible by the Division and private agency and/or provider.

Program Status

Programs are presently funded through general funds and federal grants. With the passage of new Family Preservation and Family Support legislation, new funds are anticipated to develop and enhance family support programs in the future.

Comments

Since family centered services is a systems approach, successful implementation requires modeling of the values and principles throughout all levels of the agency, with particular emphasis on flexibility to allow for regional and community differences in need, resources, and creativity. The implementation of a family centered approach in the state represents an increasing recognition that, in order to achieve positive outcomes for children and families, services must build upon the strengths of families and communities.

Foster Care

Program Goals

To arrange for the care of every child committed to the state's custody and pay for the costs necessary to ensure adequate care of the child; and to provide services to children that should be directed to meeting their needs in their own homes whenever possible.

Local Government Revenues and Expenditures in Smaller Rural Alaskan Communities, 1985-1989

Database examines the certified financial statements of 50 second class cities for the five-year period from 1985-1989 and, for purposes of comparison, local government fiscal activities in several rural "hub" communities (Dillingham, Bethel, Nome and Kotzebue) as well as Anchorage. The purpose of the data is to examine the fiscal activities and trends of local government in Alaska's smaller rural communities. The governments in these small cities are coming under increasing financial pressure as outside revenues dry up while expectations of local responsibility for service provision are generally increasing. Data analyses the sources and amounts of local government revenues and how these governments spend the revenues they receive.
