ABSTRACT

In 1997 an online survey of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender youth was conducted. The survey, which was available only on the Internet, was promoted through magazines and the World Wide Web. It contained more than 150 questions and took about half an hour to complete. Although all people accessing the web site were allowed to complete the survey, only surveys from respondents under 25 years old were used in the study. The questionnaire was designed to explore many areas of interest in the lives of homosexual, bisexual, and transgender youth, and included sections on: (1) general background; (2) about being queer; (3) the Internet; (4) school policies; (5) school groups; (6) school life; (6) sexual activity; (7) sexual health; (8) the media; (9) harassment; (10) suicide; (11) religion and spirituality; (12) "who I am"; (13) relationships; (14) community; and (15) the future. The Internet survey method allowed for possible sources of error, including falsification, the bias caused by Internet access, and bias introduced by the length of the survey. Although two-thirds of those who started it did not complete the survey, 3,061 complete surveys form the database. Survey data is now available to qualified scholars researching issues surrounding queer youth, social service, and government agencies working to set policy and determine priorities, and to authors who wish to make their needs more well-known. Data are available in a variety of formats. The survey and a summary of responses for each item are presented. (SLD)

Early in 1997 !OutProud!, The National Coalition for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Youth and Oasis Magazine embarked on an ambitious project with the goal of understanding more about the queer youth communities we both serve. We believed that the organizations were uniquely positioned to reach queer youth – !OutProud! is visited by hundreds of youth each day at its home on the World Wide Web and its forum in America Online, and Oasis by more than 35,000 readers each month who read what is the oldest and most widely-read publication by and for queer youth.

The result of this collaboration was the !OutProud!/Oasis Internet Survey of Queer and Questioning Youth, an online project which ran from August 15 through October 31, 1997 and attracted several thousand participants. The survey results are now available in packaged form for qualified researchers, and this document is intended to provide the public with a summary of the results, opening a window on the lives of these youth.

Goals

We embarked upon this survey as a means of better addressing the target communities we were formed to serve. But our goals go much beyond this:

- We hoped to provide an in-depth look at the lives of queer and questioning youth, in a way that no other organization or research body has yet attempted. For far too long this community has been an “invisible minority” and we hoped to give a voice and shape to these youth so that they cannot be overlooked.
- We saw a unique opportunity to reach in-the-closet queer youth, a population unreachable by most other means, but who have found a vital and supportive home on the Internet and online services.
- We hoped to provide information which will be valuable to community service organizations in their outreach efforts, to social service agencies providing services to at-risk youth, to those organizing queer youth in the community and at school, and to those who set government policy, so that they may be accurately informed about the issues these youth face, and the needs which must be met.

We encourage broad use of this survey data and its results, and it is our fervent hope that many organizations and many people will find it a tool to do good works.

Methodology

The survey was conducted from August 15 through October 31, 1997. The survey was available only on the Internet, and was promoted through several vehicles, including:

- Front-page banner on Oasis magazine (www.oasismag.com)
- Advertisement in XY Magazine, a print publication oriented towards young gay men
- Banner ad in !OutProud! resource Web site (www.outproud.org)
- Banner ad in QueerAmerica referral Web site (www.queeramerica.com)

- Front-page button in the !OutProud! forum on America Online (keyword OUTPROUD)
- Mentions in several periodicals, including The Advocate
- Extensive online promotion and probable cross-linking from newsgroups and other Web sites

These vehicles were useful in that they had a strong reach into the target audience. Ultimately, Oasis Magazine proved to generate the most traffic, with more than 60% of survey respondents taking the survey after coming from reading Oasis, and another 30% from the !OutProud! AOL forum and Web areas.

Once at the site, potential respondents were presented with a welcome letter that described the scope of the survey, included a list of advisors and sponsors to establish credibility, and clearly set forth what would be required of the participant. We felt it was necessary to adequately set expectations up-front – with more than 150 questions, many of which were multi-part, we believed that the survey was likely to take about one-half hour to complete (beta testing of the survey assisted in adjusting content to achieve this goal). Actual results were on-track, with a mean completion time of 29 minutes.

When the participant agreed to participate by selecting the “Start” button, they were then presented with the first page of the survey. At this time, they were assigned a unique ID number (unknown to them, it was transparently attached to all of the dynamically-served Web pages). This ID number was active for approximately two hours, after which time they could not go back to the specific copy of the survey with which they were working. A timestamp-based check string was also assigned. Once a page was completed and submitted, it was logged into the database. Once a survey was completed, it could no longer be accessed and it was “locked down” to prevent further access by anyone other than the survey administrator. This was believed to be necessary for several reasons:

- We did not want potential saboteurs to find a way to destroy any survey data that had already been collected.
- We did not want people to modify their survey responses once they had completed it. It was designed to be completed at one sitting, and in a particular order.

All survey data was recorded in a Butler SQL database from Everyware Development running on a Power Macintosh system. This allowed for regular access to results throughout the project; although this capability was not extensively used, it did provide for “tweaking” of questions and response gathering mechanisms during its beta period, prior to going “online.”

Survey pages were dynamically created from the database using Tango software (also from Everyware Development). This allowed us to customize presentation based on responses. For example, only those respondents in school were presented with the three pages of questions relating to school. Males received survey pages on sexuality that differed from those of females. This capability holds promise for far greater customization in the future.

We allowed anyone who accessed the Web site to complete a survey, even though they might not be within our target group. This was done specifically to minimize fictitious entries, the thought being that someone older than 25 might want to participate in the survey, or to see what it was all about, and would make up an age that was younger to do so. By allowing them to complete the survey (as, in fact, many people did – the oldest respondent was 68 years old), we were able to simply eliminate those results in the analysis phase.

More than 10,000 individuals began the survey (took at least the first page), and 3,207 completed the survey in its entirety. Dropouts could have any one of a number of reasons, including length of time to complete the survey, boredom, or technical issues such as loss of connection.

Of the 3,207 completed surveys, 3,061 were designated "valid" and represent the totality of the database.

- 7 were removed because the age field had erroneous information (text or the number "0")
- 139 were removed for individuals who reported their age as 30 or older (the highest age was 65 years old).

These 3,061 records are available as an SQL database (as well as in FileMaker Pro, Microsoft Excel, and text formats). For the purposes of this report, we further restricted our sample, to those youth 25 years of age and under, for a total of 1,960 respondents.

Terminology

We used the standard convention for Oasis Magazine in referring to sexual orientation: "Gay," "lesbian," "bisexual," and "transgender" are encompassed in the word "queer," which was used throughout this survey to interchangeably refer to any of these categories.

We provided an explanation of our choice of terms to the readers, particularly for those who might have felt uncomfortable with the word "queer." We believe it to be the most inclusive term applied to the community, however. In addition, we chose to include transgender identification as gender (rather than where it is sometimes grouped, with sexual orientation).

Topics

The survey was designed to explore many different areas of interest in the lives of queer youth. Ultimately it included these sections:

- General Questions - To provide a demographic profile of the respondent.
- About Being Queer - To gain insight into when they discovered they were queer and how their coming out process went.
- The Internet - This survey was unique in its presentation vehicle, and drew from the Internet community of queer youth. We wanted to understand more about their usage patterns and what role it plays in their life.
- School Policies - We hoped to gain a perspective of how the educational system is responding, systematically, to the needs of queer youth.
- School Groups - Queer youth support and organizing is taking off and we hoped to better understand the scope of this expansion.
- School Life - The teen years can be trying for anyone, and often particularly so for queer youth, who typically have many additional elements of "differentness." We wanted to explore how "out" these youth were in school, and what type of environment they lived in day to day.
- Sexual Activity - Sex and affection are at the root of sexual orientation issues, and we hoped to understand exactly what sexual behaviors these youth were involved in, as a means to better understand how they came to label themselves as queer, and to assist with educational and therapeutic efforts with this community.

- Sexual Health - Most queer youth have grown up in a world that has always known HIV and AIDS, in a time where safer sex has become a necessity of life. We wanted to understand the impact, and shortcomings, of educational efforts geared at providing the information these youth need to live well, and in good health.
- The Media - Queer youth's attitudes about themselves and their self-esteem is impacted by many forces in their lives: parents, families, friends, religious institutions, their schools, and more. The media plays a very strong role, and we hoped to better understand how the imagery they are presented with each day impacts their own views of self, and possibility. We also hoped to understand better which media within the queer community they had access to, and read.
- Harassment - Significant numbers of anecdotal reports indicate a high level of harassment and safety issues for queer youth. Hate crimes reporting at the federal level indicates it is an issue for the general queer population. We hoped to add fact to any fiction, and to provide a basis for quantifying the role fear, intimidation and violence play in their lives.
- Suicide - It is widely reported that queer youth face suicide rates three times that of the national average for youth. Additional research over the last couple of years seems to bear that out. We hoped to hear, firsthand, whether this was the case, and to what extent self-esteem issues played a role in the survivability of these youth.
- Religion and Spirituality - In the last ten years there has been a concerted effort by organized religion – Christian fundamentalists, specifically – to narrowly define religion in a way that serves specific goals of power and politics. As a result, many queer youth feel disenfranchised, at best, or worse, condemned to eternal damnation unless they become straight or are forever chaste. We hoped to find out how these youth reconcile their spirituality with their sexual orientation, to provide tools to enlightened churches to help these youth find spiritual comfort.
- Who I Am – We wanted to gather some specific data on the self-esteem of these youth, and their comfort level with being queer.
- Relationships – Past generations of queer men and women living in the closet have grown up differently, the very nature of their relationships colored with shame. We hoped to see how contemporary role models and the dynamics of youth coming out at ever-earlier ages was changing this.
- Community – For perhaps the first time in history this generation of queer youth is growing up in a world where they can ever-more-frequently choose to grow up openly queer, and to join the broader queer community. We wanted to understand how these youth have reached out, where they have found friendship and support, and at some level, their awareness of this community. We were also interested in whether these youth wanted to integrate into the broader queer community, given that more and more teens are becoming accepted within their presumably-straight circle of friends.
- The Future – The issues and pressures facing queer youth are ones that often can put limitations on one's world view, and one's expectations of the life they can achieve.

We wanted to better understand exactly to what these youth aspired, and the obstacles they saw their sexual orientation as presenting.

Sources of Error

Like any survey of this type, there are several opportunities for error to be introduced into the data. These include:

- People could falsify their age. However, by allowing the respondents to enter any age, we believe this helped to minimize the number of individuals that would do so (e.g. someone interested in seeing the survey would have to falsify their age if we prevented responses outside of the target age range.
- People could falsify any of the demographic data. There were no controls on this, as one might have in a face to face interview. However, there were fewer reasons to do so then if this were not an anonymous survey where a youth might perceive themselves at risk of exposure if they were in the closet.
- Bias introduced by the means of administration. This survey was administered over the Internet and therefore, all respondents necessarily had to have access to a computer that was connected to the Internet. Further, frequent use of computers and the Internet still appears to have relationship to gender, and that may have prevented access to a larger base of female respondents. Also, while available in libraries and schools, access to computers may self-select a base of respondents that are somewhat more affluent, although anecdotal data suggests that this is lessening over time.
- Bias introduced by length of the survey. The survey took approximately thirty minutes to complete. More than two-thirds of the respondents who began the survey did not complete it.

Survey Analysis Package

Survey data is available to qualified scholars researching issues surrounding today's queer youth, social service and government agencies working to set policy and determine priorities, and to authors who wish to make their needs more well-known. The data is available in a variety of formats that can be imported into most other database applications on the Macintosh, Windows and Unix.

The complete package of materials we can provide includes:

- Survey Overview (PDF file)
- Survey (PDF file of questions)
- Data Dictionary (PDF file)
- Database in one of the following formats: FileMaker Pro, dBase IV, tab-delimited text, WKS worksheet (Microsoft Excel), DIF (data interchange format)

An overview of the questionnaire and the contents of the analysis package is available at:

<http://www.outproud.org/survey/overview.html>

If you are interested in using this information in your work, we invite you to submit a brief application of your interest. We ask for the following information:

- Your name, organization (if appropriate), address, phone and email address.
- A brief synopsis of your intended use of the data. Will you be writing an article, is this to be the basis of a scholarly paper, etc.
- Two professional references affiliated with an educational institution or a service organization working for the queer community.

This information should be sent to survey@outproud.org.

About !OutProud!

!OutProud!, The National Coalition for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender Youth was founded in 1993 to provide advocacy, information, resources and support with the goal of helping queer youth to become happy, successful, confident and vital gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender adults. The organization pioneered outreach to in-the-closet and openly queer teens through America Online and the Internet, and today serves more than 100,000 youth each year with referrals and self-help resources, and activists and educators with organizing and training materials. Christopher Kryzan is Executive Director of !OutProud!

!OutProud! is a 501(c)(3) non-profit corporation based in San Rafael, California, and provides services both to individuals and to other agencies working for the benefit of queer youth. The organization can be contacted at !OutProud!, 369 Third Street, Suite B-362, San Rafael, CA 94901-3581; phone: 415-460-5452; fax: 415-460-5451; email: survey@outproud.org.

About Oasis Magazine

Oasis has published monthly since its inception in December 1995. It features over 50 young columnists ranging in age from 13 to their mid 20s. Over 35,000 readers visit Oasis each month at www.oasismag.com to read about their lives as queer and questioning youth. A larger queer youth online service is expected to be launched by Oasis Magazine in early 1998. Jeff Walsh is the founder of Oasis Magazine.

The organization may be contacted at Oasis Magazine, 584 Castro Street, Suite 349, San Francisco, CA 94114; ph: 415-487-9477; survey@oasismag.com.

67%	I will not let my being queer get in the way of my dreams
64%	I hope to set an example for others
51%	I want to be openly queer
51%	I hope to have a same-gender spouse
46%	I want to get involved in the queer community
39%	I hope to raise children of my own genes
30%	I hope to live my life quietly, if people know I'm queer, that's alright, but I don't plan to be very open about it
