ABSTRACT

This booklet for parents of young children with special needs provides a variety of child-rearing suggestions as well as an updated listing of resources. After an introduction which defines special needs and summarizes basic principles, the following chapters address: (1) the family as the most important support for a child; (2) the evaluation process; (3) relevant laws such the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Americans with Disabilities Act, and Parent Training and Information Centers; (4) services and supports available to children ages birth through 2 and beginning at age 3; (5) setting goals for the child; (6) the Individualized Family Service Plan and the Individualized Education Program; (7) fostering a child's social inclusion; (8) reaching out to others for support; and (9) helpful hints. A developmental progress chart is appended. Also appended is a resource list which includes 19 associations and organizations, 9 government agencies, 10 government-supported organizations, 4 hotlines and information lines, 2 Internet sites, 17 minority family groups, 12 regional offices of the Office for Civil Rights, 79 Parent Training and Information Centers, and 61 sources of state or territorial information. Introduction

All children can succeed with the right support. Being a parent of any child is not always easy. You can often feel overwhelmed and confused. If your child has special needs, these feelings may seem even stronger. You have many questions and you may not always know where to go for answers. Sometimes vou might not even know what to ask. This booklet may lead you to people who can help.

Special Needsthe areas where your child needs individualized supports and services to help develop, learn, be happy, and be included with children of the same age.
Sometimes these special needs are called disabilites.

This booklet covers the first eight years of your child's life. It gives information that may answer some of your questions. There are no answers that will work for everyone. There are different answers for each family. You will have to decide what is best for you, your family, and your child.

Before you get started, here are a few things to remember:

★ A family is the most important support a child an have.

- ★ Every family and every child has strengths.
- ★ In the early years, help and support are very important.
- ★ Your child may need special services and supports to learn.
- ★ There are laws that can work for you and your child.
- * You should have a dream for your child.
- ★ It is important to have a plan that will help the dream come true.
- ★ Include your child in activities with all children in the community.
- ★ You are not alone. Reach out—others have been there and can help.

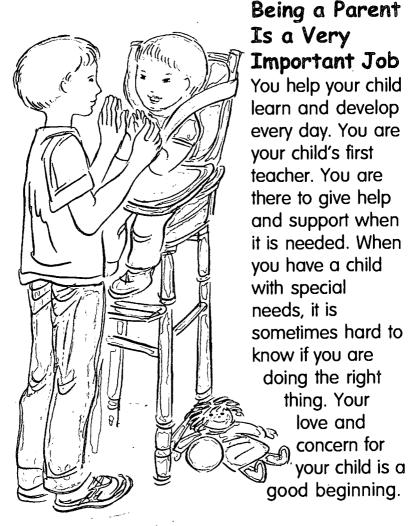

Remember this booklet is only a guide. You know best what information will be useful. One thing is sure, you can make a positive difference in your child's life! We hope that this booklet will help support your dreams and lead you to people who can get you started.

Chapter 1

A Family Is the Most Important Support a Child Can Have

As the parent of a child with special needs, you may be making decisions for your child that other parents don't face. You may meet with many different people who will provide the services needed by your child. You will need to know what kinds of services are available so you can make decisions that you think are best for your child and your family. This booklet is a good place to start

All Families and All Children Have Strengths

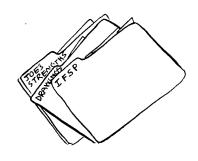

People with different strong points can help each other. Discovering your child's strengths and interests is important. Knowing them will help as you plan for your child's education and development.

Parent – in this guide is anyone responsible for the care and well being of a child. Included are single parents,
parents by birth
or adoption,
guardians,
grandparents,
foster parents,
surrogate parents,
and caregivers.

Familya group of people close to you and your child. This may include parents, husband or wife, grandparents, in-laws, aunts and uncles, brothers or sisters, legal guardians, caregivers, or friends.

Make a list of your child's strengths and successes. Keep a file with photos, videos, notes, artwork, and school work to show what your child likes to do. Let others know what your child can do.

Make a list of your child's needs and what can be done to meet these needs. You play an important role in getting the services that can be provided for you and your child.

There are places to go for help and support. Some of them are given in the next chapter.

Chapter 2

Help and Support Are Important in the Early Years

Trust Your Feelings

Trust your feelings about your child. If you have a concern, get advice and help as soon as you can. The sooner your child's special needs are met, the better off your child and family will be.

The chart in this book lists signs of development for children between one month and five years of age. Remember, each child is different and may learn and develop at a different pace. However, if you notice that your child's development is very different from other children of the same age, you may want to talk with someone about your concern.

Where Should You Start?

Your doctor or public health agency can be a good place to begin. Most doctors and nurses have a lot of experience with children. They may send your child to special doctors for tests. Or they may ask you to wait a month or more to see how your child develops. Social service agencies or your local school system might also be able to help. Many states, local public school systems, and social service agencies have people to help you and your child. Try to call them as soon as you can. One place to begin is the resource guide in the back of this book. This guide lists places to find help in your state and elsewhere.

No one knows your child as well as you do. Before you meet with a doctor or teacher, make a list of the things you notice about your child that concern you. If you do not want to write things down, ask a friend to write them down for you, or use a tape recorder. The notes and lists you keep over time will help you talk about your concerns. Also, your notes will tell you and the doctor or teacher of any changes you have noticed. Your notes will help you remember little things you might forget to say during the meeting.

They may test your child and ask you questions:

- ★ How does your child move? For example, does your child turn over?
- ★ How does your child see? For example, does your child follow moving things with his or her eyes?
- * How does your child hear? For example, does your child react to loud noises?
- ★ Does your child make sounds or words? For example, how many words does your child use?

* How does your child act around others? For example, does your child play well with other children?

Information and findings about your child's needs will be made based on what you say, test findings, your child's health record, and what doctors, teachers, or others see when they watch your child play or do special tasks. Because your child is a unique person, it is important that the people testing your child get to know and understand him or her as a whole person. The result will be a good picture of your child, which is often called an evaluation.

Evaluationinformation collected by testing and watching a child, and by talking to a parent. This information is usually collected by doctors, teachers, and others who work with your child, and who help you have a clearer picture of your child's abilities and needs.

The information you get from your child's evaluation should help you focus on what to do next. Ask questions. The more you know about your child's special needs, the better you can meet them. Once you know what your child needs, you can begin making an action plan.

Find the Support You Need needs. Sometimes you may feel alone, angry, and stressed in your search to find the help or care that your child needs. This is natural, but you shouldn't ignore your feelings. To help your child, you must also help yourself by getting the support you need. Ask your child's teacher or doctor, or check the resource guide in this book, for information about a support group in your area. There are many support groups for families of children with special needs. Find a group that makes you feel comfortable. Surround yourself with people you can trust.

It is important that you find help for your child as soon as you feel there is a problem. Finding help for your young child may prevent further developmental delays and may also improve the quality of your family life. Don't give up when you know you are right! Chapter 3

Find Services and Supports Under the Law

When you learn about your child's special needs, you may ask yourself, "How can I help my child get the services and supports he or she needs?" The best place to begin is within your community and state. Laws have been passed to help you get the supports and services your child may need. It is important for you to know your rights and responsibilities under the law.

The Individuals With Disabilities Education Act

All states get federal money under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act, also known as IDEA, and must provide a free appropriate public education to all eligible children with disabilities. No child can be found eligible for special education until an evaluation has been done. Your state and local school district are responsible for evaluating your child. You may need to ask for an evaluation.

Children from ages birth to 3 years may be eligible for early intervention services.

Beginning at age 3, children may be eligible for a free appropriate public education.

The IDEA provides support for special education and related services to children in all kinds of settings—childcare, preschool, kindergarten, elementary, middle, and high schools. Special education is a way for your child to have the supports and services he or she needs in order to learn. Special education is not a "place" but a way for your child to be educated, as much as possible, with children who do not have disabilities. You can get more information about the IDEA from Parent Training and Information (PTI) centers and from the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education Programs. (See appendix B.)

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 prohibits discrimination against qualified individuals with disabilities. Section 504 applies to all programs and activities that get federal money, including local school districts and Head Start programs. School districts that get federal money must provide a free appropriate public education to children with disabilities.

Some children with disabilities who are not eligible for special education programs and related services under the IDEA may be eligible for services under Section 504. Your school district must also make sure that its programs are physically accessible to children with disabilities. If your school district provides after-school-care programs for students, those programs must also be available for students with disabilities.

Section 504 provides legal rights for children with disabilities and their parents. Many states and local school districts also offer mediation services which may be helpful in settling disagreements about whether your child is eligible for services and the kind of services your child should get. Your school system should have a specific person on staff who knows about Section 504 and who can help you with your questions and concerns. You may also want to contact the U.S. Department of Education, Office for Civil Rights' (OCR) office that services your state. PTIs may also be a good source of information. A list of OCR offices and PTIs is included in appendix B.

The Americans With Disabilities Act and Your Civil Rights

The Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA) is another very important law for people with disabilities and their families. It prohibits discrimination in:

- * employment;
- ★ public transportation;
- services provided by state and local governments;
- ★ services and accommodations offered by private businesses; and
- * telecommunications.

The goal of the ADA is to remove the barriers that deny individuals with disabilities an equal opportunity to share in and contribute in American life. The law is about participation and access to the kind of opportunities that persons without disabilities enjoy. For example, under the ADA, restaurants, theaters, childcare centers, and other community resources cannot refuse to serve your child or family solely because your child or a family member has a disability. The ADA also applies to states and local school districts.

There are many booklets and other materials to help families understand their rights under the ADA. The U.S. Department of Justice ADA Information Line and the PTIs in your state are good places to help. (See appendix B, sections on hotlines and information lines, and PTIs.) You can also get information about education programs covered by ADA from OCR.

Parent Training and Information Centers
For more information and training on the IDEA, Section 504, and ADA, contact the Parent Training and Information (PTI) center in your state. (See appendix B for contact information.) PTIs are centers run by parents. They provide education and training to all parents on their rights under these laws.
Parents and families have worked hard to make this happen. They wanted their children to learn as much as possible and they wanted their children to be happy in their neighborhoods with their friends and families.

As a parent, it is important to make sure that your child's rights are being met under the IDEA, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the ADA. Learn as much as you can about your rights and the rights of your child. Don't feel shy about asking for these services or speaking out if you have been refused access to community resources. Your child, your family, and you will benefit.

Chapter 4

Find Services and Supports Based on Your Child's Age

All children, with and without special needs, find some things hard to do. Your child may have needs that require special attention. As a parent, it is important to make sure that your child's education meets her or his special needs, as well as provides opportunities to be with children of all levels of ability. You may be eligible to get services and supports for your child. Under the IDEA, these services and supports are determined by the age of your child.

Birth Through Age 2

Under the IDEA, states have programs for infants and toddlers from birth through age two. These programs may be different from state to state. (See appendix B—State Government Information or Parent Training Information Centers.) These programs may be called "Part H" because that is the part of the IDEA that is for children birth through age 2.

Once you find the right agency, you can learn about the types of programs and services in your community. As soon as you can, contact the person or office in charge of early childhood programs for information. Services for infants and toddlers must include a service coordinator or a family resource coordinator. This person is part of an early intervention team and will help explain what types of services and programs are available for your young child. Depending on what programs and services your child needs, a service coordinator will help link your family with those services.

Beginning at Age 3

Under the IDEA, beginning at age 3 children are served through a special education program that will meet their special needs. This program must include transportation and other support services if they are needed to help your child benefit from special education. These other services may be called related services and may include:

- ⋆ audiology;
- ⋆ physical therapy;
- ⋆ occupational therapy;
- * school health services; and
- * speech pathology.

ERICST COPY AVAILABLE 27

All states have preschool programs for children with disabilities. If your child has been attending a program for infants and toddlers, the local school system must evaluate your child in time so that preschool special education services can begin no later than the third birthday. Make sure your child gets into a program that offers the best chance to learn and play with children of different abilities.

If your child is already in a regular school program and is getting some services, such as a remedial reading program, but those services are not enough to help your child succeed, your child may have a disability that would allow him or her to receive special education services under the IDEA.

Visit the school, talk to your child's teachers, and watch your child in class. If you don't think the program is helping your child, you have the right to ask for changes. You want the best program for your child's needs. Continue to look for other choices. All children deserve educational programs that meet their needs and allow them a chance to develop, learn, and be happy.

It is important to share information with your child's teacher and school. The following information may be helpful for the teacher to know:

- ★ What can your child do without help?
- ★ What can your child do with some help?
- ★ What seems to help your child learn?
- ★ When is it easiest for your child to learn?
- ★ What makes your child happy?
- ★ What makes your child angry?
- What do you do to help you child when he or she gets angry?
- ★ What works for you and your child?
- ★ What would you like your child to learn?

Chapter 5

It Is Important To Have Dreams for Your Child

Every parent has dreams for his or her child. When you find out that your child has special needs, your child will need extra help and support to make these dreams come true. Remember, your child has many strengths. With your help and support, and the appropriate education, your dreams for your child can come true.

Understanding your child's special needs can help you set goals and guide your dreams. Knowing why some goals may be hard to reach can be helpful to you. Look for different ways to help your child learn and develop. Information about how your child learns can also help family, friends, and teachers care for and teach your child. Helping others get to know your child will make it easier for everyone to work together to build on your child's strengths and meet her or his needs.

Your dreams for your child might change over time. This is natural. You and your child will also change. Try to be flexible. Remember that part of making your dreams come true means you may have to work hard to get the right services to meet your child's special needs.

You know your child best. Set goals your child can reach. When a goal is reached, set a new goal and keep trying! Think about what your child can do and build on each success. Remember, even the smallest achievement is something for which your child and your family can be proud! Work to meet your child's special needs. Think about what would help your child do more. Don't let anything stop you along the way.

You will find that others will support you and share your dreams. You can help make your dreams for your child come true. Don't give up! Remember, your child will also have dreams of his or her own that you can share.

Chapter 6

A Plan Will Help That Dream To Come True

Every person is unique and has special abilities. As you think about your dream for your child, it is important to plan how to make the dream come true. This plan should build on your child's strengths. Set goals that your child can reach in a short time. Celebrate each success.

Talk with family members, other parents, doctors, or teachers about your dream. Think about other people who will need to help your child reach each goal. Share your plan with those who can help and use them to plan the next step. Working with your child's teacher is important. Find out if there are booklets, videos, or other materials that would be helpful as you make your plan.

The IDEA says that each eligible child must have a plan that lists program goals and the kinds of services and supports the child will need to reach those goals. Under IDEA there are two different plans: (1) the Individualized Family Service Plan (IFSP) for infants and toddlers (birth to 3-years-of-age) and (2) the Individualized Education Program (IEP). Under the law, states, with your agreement, can choose to the IFSP or the IEP for children between ages 3

A team of people work together to develop this written plan, and you, as a parent, are a very important member of this team. IDEA says you have the right to be part of the team that writes the plan. It is very important that you know about this plan and what rights and safeguards are there to help you. The school can give you information about this plan as well as the Parent Training and Information (PTI) center in your state. (See appendix B for state listings.)

If you disagree with your child's IFSP or IEP, you can request an opportunity to participate in mediation to resolve the disagreement. You also have a right to a due process hearing.

The Individualized Family Service Plan (IFSP)

If your child is between birth and 3 years old and needs early intervention services, there must be a written plan describing the goals for your child, your family, and the resources necessary to meet these goals. This is your family's unique plan for services. You will work with a team of people from health departments, public schools, social services, and other agencies to develop this plan. Be sure to ask for what your child and your family need.

The early intervention services in your child's IFSP must be provided, to maximum extent appropriate, in natural environments, including the home, and community settings in which children without disabilities participate.

Individualized Education Plan (IEP)

As your child gets older, his or her needs will change. The plan will need to change, too. When your child reaches the age of 3 (or age 5 in some states), the program plan that is written is called the IEP. This plan talks about the special education needs of your child, and how these needs will be met. As a family member, you will be an important part of the team that works together to plan the educational program for your child. Be ready to work with your child's team. Any time you feel the plan is not helping your child, ask for a review of the plan. If you disagree with the educational program planned for your child, you have a right to a hearing. With a good plan as a map, you, your child, and your school team can work together to make your dream come true.

Chapter 7

Include Your Child in Activities With All Children

All children learn by playing. It is important that children with special needs take part in activities with all children, including those who do not have special needs. All children can learn from one another. Your child has as much to give to others as he or she will receive from others. Good friendships

develop as children learn to work and play together.

If your child has a brother or sister, encourage them to play together. They will learn from one another, building confidence and skills needed for playing and being with others outside of the family.

You can help your child learn by including your child in many different activities. You and others who care for your child may need to think of new ways to make or buy toys, furniture, or other tools to help your child learn.

Think about what your child does well. Try to find an activity where that skill or talent is used. Look for activities or play groups your child will enjoy and that can develop skills and talents. Ask about activities at school and in the community. Your local community center, YMCA, or YWCA may have programs or activities your child may enjoy: swimming, horseback riding, art, day camps, canoeing, dancing, camping, nature programs, and trips. A church or temple group can be helpful. Some offer family or other group activities. There may be a play group or preschool program your child can join.

All children need time to play. By playing, children begin to explore and ask questions. Playing gives children the chance to dream, make choices, try new things, have fun, and learn. Children with special needs should have the same chance to play and meet other children. Children are good at including everyone if we will let them.

Chapter 8

Reach Out to Others

Being a parent or caregiver is not always easy. Raising a child with special needs places many demands on parents and the family. Finding the right help for your child may be hard at first. You and your family need support and understanding. Help is available from many places:

- family members (husband or wife, parents, in-laws, sisters and brothers, grandparents, aunts and uncles, legal guardians, or caregivers);
- * teachers;
- ★ friends, neighbors, or members of churches or temples;
- social workers and others who work with families;
- ★ doctors, nurses, and other health and mental health professionals;
- * support groups; and
- ★ parents of other children with special needs.

Find out if there is a parent-to-parent program in your community. Local parent-to-parent programs provide support to parents of children with special needs. To provide this support, an experienced parent is matched in a 1 to 1 relationship with a parent who has just found out his or her child has a disability. The match is usually based on a similar disability or special concern of the new parent. The experienced parent shares real-life stories of raising a child with special needs and gives the kind of support that only another parent who has been there can. They describe their experiences in everyday language. In some states, there are both local parent-to-parent programs and statewide parent-to-parent networks that provide training and assistance to the local programs. If your community or state does not have a parent-to-parent program, find out if a Parent Training and Information (PTI) center is in your state. Many groups do parent-toparent support. Places to look for this is through the PTIs, the local schools, and organizations that focus on children with special needs.

Brothers and sisters of children with special needs also need support. Brothers and sisters may get together and form support groups or join one. These support groups are a good way for children to talk and share information about special needs.

It is important for you and your child to do things with a lot of different children. Everyone will benefit and learn from you and your child. By getting to know you and your child, others will be better able to help you by sharing their ideas, support, and other assistance.

Remember it is not the size of the support group that is important, but rather how well it works for you. One good friend or supportive relative may be the most helpful to you. Only you can decide what is best for you and your child.

Your love and dream for your child are your greatest strengths. Use these strengths to reach out to others who know what it's like and can give you support.

Helpful Hints

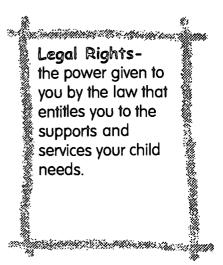

These are helpful hints taken from the previous chapters. They may help in your search to meet your child's special needs.

- ★ Get help and advice right away if you have a concern about your child's development and learning. It may prevent some developmental delays.
- ★ Start by talking to your child's caregiver, doctor, or teacher.
- ★ Make notes and lists of questions for meetings.
- ★ Bring a friend or relative with you to give support when meeting with doctors and teachers.
- ★ Keep good records of shots, tests, letters from doctors and teachers, and notes from meetings, and put them in a file.
- ★ Learn all you can about your child's special needs.

45

★ Learn as much as you can about your legal rights under The Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA).

- Try to learn as much as you can about supports and services that can help you and your child.
- ★ As a parent or caregiver it is important to make sure that your child's education and environment meet his or her special needs.
- ★ Ask for changes if something is not working.
- ★ Imagine goals and dreams for your, child and talk about them with others who know your child.
- ★ Your child has special abilities and talents. Use your child's abilities to create a plan to make the dreams come true.
- ★ You know your child best; set goals your child can reach.
- ★ Keep notes of your child's progress.

- ★ Get the support you need by joining a support group, or by talking to other parents, friends, or family members you can trust.
- ★ Brothers and sisters of children with special needs need support and attention, too.
- Include your child with special needs in activities with all children, both with and without special needs.
- ★ Gather as much information as you can about programs your community offers children your child's age.
- ★ Be sure to look at your whole child: your child's strengths as well as the areas for which your child needs supports and services.
- ★ Do not give up when you know you are right!

Developmental Progress Chart

SEE HOW_____DEVELOPS

Every child is different. This chart gives general milestones in a child's development. The information below lets you know what to expect. It will help you record your child's progress.

As you measure the progress, make notes on the chart. These notes will provide a good record of your child's development.

At 1 month, most children...

- ★ Lift head a little when lying on stomach
- ★ Watch objects for a short time
- ★ Make "noise in throat" sounds
- ★ Stay away from annoying sensations such as cloth or blanket on the face

At 2 months, most children...

- ★ Hold their head up (bobbing when supported in sitting position)
- ★ Sometimes copy or respond to a smiling person
- * Roll part way to side
- ★ Make sounds of discomfort

At 3 months, most children...

- ★ Lift head and chest when lying on stomach
- ★ Recognize bottle or breast
- ★ Smile when talked to
- Show active body movementFollow moving things with their eyes

At 4 months, most children...

- ★ Hold head up for a long time without bobbing
- ★ Laugh out loud
- * Roll from front to back
- ★ Like to play
- ★ Grab an object held near their hand
- ★ Make sounds when talked to

At 6 months, most children...

- ★ Sit with little support
- * Respond to a friendly voice with a smile or coo
- ★ Roll from back to stomach
- ★ Turn and look at sounds
- ★ Change object from hand to hand and from hand to mouth

At 9 months, most children...

- ★ Sit alone and change position
- ★ Say "mama" and "dada"
- ★ Crawl
- * Respond to people they know
- * Respond to their name

At 12 months, most children...

- ★ Pull themselves to stand and may step with support

List of Important Names and Phone Numbers

(This space is for you to write down important names and phone numbers.)

Acknowledgments

We are grateful to all of those inside and outside of the Department of Education who contributed their time, effort, and expertise to help produce this booklet. Development of this publication was encouraged by former Assistant Secretary Sharon P. Robinson. Libby Dogget, Gail Houle, Larry Ringer, and Bobbi Stettner-Eaton from the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services generously read, commented, and advised on the manuscript as did Rebecca Fitch from the Office of Civil Rights. Special thanks go to Donna Fluke and Ann Benjamin for their contributions. Thanks also go to Diane Magarity for editing the final manuscript.

We wish to thank the many parents, practitioners, and researchers who reviewed draft manuscripts in preparation of this booklet. These include: Lori Baker, Sylvia Borges, Barbara Buswell, Gus Estrella, Mona Friedman, Glenn Gabbard, Kaaren Hayes, Thelma Harmes, Katie Kallian, Diana Len, Diane Lewis, Lorraine Lewis, Jane McCommons, Luzanne Pierce, Harvey Pressmen, Pam Reising, Cheri Takemoto, Gail Vollmer, Pam Winton, and Victoria Youcha. We would also like to thank Hope Jacobs, Juanita Moore, and Tony Nelson for facilitating reviews from parents with limited literacy skills.

Particular acknowledgments go to Naomi Karp and Cynthia Dorfman for their valuable insights, detailed critiques, assistance, and constant support RIC ghout the development of this publication.
