ABSTRACT

This document reports the results of a survey conducted in the summer of 1998. Community college districts in California was surveyed on their practices regarding local board education and development programs. Approximately 80% of the districts, or 57 districts, responded. The study found that less than one-third of the districts had a written policy regarding trustee education, and that 75% of the districts used the League's Trustee Handbook for local trustee education. All but two boards reported using either study sessions during or in lieu of board meetings and/or retreats for board education. Retreats were the most common approach used, with 75% of boards holding retreats at least once a year. Mentoring is only used in about 30% of the districts surveyed. In addition, in all but one of the districts, trustees attend one or more of the League's conferences. Conferences were identified as the most effective method of trustee education, followed by board retreats (with outside facilitators), study sessions, and local trustee orientation. Based upon these findings, the report offers a number of recommendations to the Community College League of California. Many of the recommendations encouraged the League to support the activities mentioned above, as well as to develop guidelines for mentoring programs and to provide examples of board education policy statements and local trustee handbooks. # LOCAL TRUSTEE EDUCATION PROGRAMS IN CALIFORNIA COMMUNITY COLLEGES

Highlights

In summer 1998, the League surveyed community college districts in California on their practices regarding local board education and development programs. 57 districts (80.3%) returned surveys. Highlights of the results are:

- Less than 1/3 of the districts have a written statement or policy regarding trustee education.
- All but two boards reported using either study sessions during or in lieu of board meetings and/or retreats for board education, with most using at least two of the three approaches. Retreats were the most common approach used, with  $\frac{3}{4}$  of the districts holding board retreats at least once a year.
- Study sessions address a wide variety of issues. Topics at study sessions during board meetings are focused on budget, educational programs, planning, and internal operations of the college. Topics at study sessions held in lieu of board meetings tend to be related to budget, planning, and governance issues.
- Retreats tend to address boardsmanship, board and CEO evaluation, and goal setting. Most districts use an outside facilitator at least occasionally.
- 75% of the districts used the League's Trustee Handbook for local trustee education. Just over a third have a local trustee handbook.
- Mentoring of new trustees, whether formal or informal, occurs in about 30% of the districts.
- In all but one of the districts, trustees attend one or more of the League's conferences. In 60% of the districts, trustees also attend the ACCT convention. The League conferences are rated highly.
- Conferences were identified as the most effective method of trustee education, followed by board retreats (with outside facilitators), study sessions, and local trustee orientation.
- Individual board members, the board as a whole, and the CEO are significantly involved in identifying needs for trustee education. Programs are designed by the CEO and to a lesser extent the board as a whole and the chair. Program implementation is usually the responsibility of the CEO, with some chairs also assuming some responsibility.

Implications

The Community College League of California should:

- continue to offer high quality conferences and workshops.
- continue to provide prepare high quality written materials on topics related to budget, planning, and boardmanship issues.
- encourage boards to hold retreats.
- continue to provide resources and facilitators for those retreats.
- provide CEOs with resources that assist them to implement board education programs.
- develop guidelines for mentoring programs, and provide examples of board education policy statements and local trustee handbooks.
