ABSTRACT

The text of a November 1995 Slovak Republic law concerning language use in that country is translated and analyzed from the perspective of a recent Linguistic Society of America (LSA) statement on language rights stating that speakers be allowed to express themselves, publicly or privately, in the language of their choice. The law provides that the official language be the Slovak language, but does not legislate use of the languages of national minorities. However, it imposes relatively severe fines for non-use of the official language. The law is criticized for assuming that compulsion, not attraction, is the best way of spreading official language use. It also specifically limits minority language use in certain public contexts. The law is found to be discriminatory and in contradiction with stated LSA principles of language rights. (MSE)

On the right to use the language of one's choice in Slovakia

In less than six years two official Slovak language laws were passed in Slovakia, the first in 1990, the second on 15 November, 1995. The latter, called the law on the State language of the Slovak Republic, has come under considerable international scrutiny. "Slovaks further curb use of the Hungarian language," reported The New York Times (16 November, 1995), and "Language law raises ethnic fears" was the title of a report in The Globe and Mail (6 December, 1995). The Independent (2 December, 1995) told the story of the European Parliament threatening to suspend EU assistance to Slovakia and expressing grave concern at policies which "show insufficient respect for democracy, human and minority rights and the rule of law."

Slovakia is a country with serious economic and social problems in which the language issue seems to be in the center of creating a much belated nation-state whose sovereignty is felt endangered by many. About 15% of the country's population are non-Slovak. 600,000 indigenous ethnic Hungarians comprise over 10% of the population while smaller minorities include Roma, Czechs, Ruthenians, Ukrainians, Germans etc. The Hungarian minority lives in the southern part of the Slovak Republic; in over 400 towns and villages, Hungarians constitute the local majority of the population.

In what follows, I will present an English translation of the new Slovak law and will briefly analyze it from the point of view of a basic requirement in the Linguistic Society of America's recent statement on language rights: that speakers be allowed to express themselves, publicly or privately, in the language of their choice.

As I have no access to an official translation into English, I will present an unofficial translation of the law. The text below is based on two unofficial translations (one of which was released by the ČTK news agency in Prague on December 13, 1995), and has been checked against the official text of the Slovak law by Professor István Lanstyák of Comenius University, Bratislava.

LAW OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE SLOVAK REPUBLIC, OF NOVEMBER 15TH, 1995, ON THE STATE LANGUAGE OF THE SLOVAK REPUBLIC

The National Council of the Slovak Republic, proceeding from the fact that the Slovak language is the most important distinctive feature of the uniqueness of the Slovak nation, the most valuable piece of the cultural heritage and expression of sovereignty of the Slovak Republic and the general means of communication for its citizens, which guarantees them freedom and equality in dignity and rights¹ in the territory of the Slovak Republic, has approved the following law:

SECTION 1

Introductory provisions

(1) The State language in the territory of the Slovak Republic is the Slovak language.²

(2) The State language takes precedence over other languages used in the territory of the Slovak Republic.

(3) The law does not legislate the use of liturgical languages. The use of these languages is determined by the regulations³ of the Church and religious communities.

(4) The law does not legislate the use of languages of national minorities and ethnic groups. The use of these languages is determined in other laws.⁴

SECTION 2

The State language and its protection

(1) The State

a) Provides the necessary conditions in the educational, academic and informational systems to enable each and every citizen of the Slovak Republic to learn and use the State language orally and in writing.

b) Takes care of the scientific study of the State language, its historical development, of the study of regional and social dialects, of the codification of the State language and of the raising of linguistic culture.

(2) The codified form of the State language is decreed by the Culture Ministry of the Slovak Republic (henceforth "the Culture Ministry") on the basis of proposals made by specialist Slovak language institutes.

(3) Any form of interference with the codified form of the State language which is not in line with its rules is inadmissible.

the Church and other religious communities intended for the public.

d) official names of towns and parts of towns, signs denoting the names of streets and other public areas, other geographical names, such as names on State maps including maps of land registries; denoting the names of towns in other languages is legislated by a separate law.⁵

(6) Occasional publications designed for the public, catalogues for galleries, museums and libraries, programs for cinemas, theaters, concerts and other cultural events are issued in the State language. If necessary they may contain translations into other languages.

(7) Cultural and educational events take place in the State language, or in another language which meets the criterion of basic comprehensibility with regard to the State language. SECTION 10

Fines

(1) If an illegal State of affairs is not corrected (section 9), the Culture Ministry can levy a fine of

a) up to 250,000 Slovak crowns for legal entities in breach of obligations in Section 4, Paragraph 4 and Section 8, Paragraphs 1, 3, 5 and 6.

b) up to 500,000 Slovak crowns for legal entities in breach of obligations set down in Section 5, Paragraphs 2 and 4.

c) up to 50,000 Slovak crowns for individuals licensed to carry out private business activities in breach of obligations set down in Section 4, Paragraph 4, Section 5, Paragraphs 2 and 4, and Section 8, Paragraphs 1, 3 and 5.

(2) In determining fines, the Culture Ministry considers the seriousness of the breach of legal obligations.

(3) Fines can be levied up to one year at the latest from the day on which the Culture Ministry discovers breach of legal obligations, but up to three years at the latest from when the breach of legal obligations occurred.

(4) Fines levied under this law are payable within 30 days after the decision determining a violation has gone into effect. General public administrative regulations¹⁴ apply to the procedure on levying fines.

(5) Fines levied under this law are revenues of the State culture fund Pro Slovakia.¹⁵

SECTION 11

General and interim provisions

(1) The law does not pertain to the use of commonly used foreign words, specialist terms or new expressions for which there are no equivalent terms in the State language.

(2) The heads of statutory organs and other legal entities and individuals (Section 10, Paragraph 1) are responsible for complying with the provisions of this law.

SECTION 12

Revoking provisions

This law revokes the law of the Slovak National Council (no. 428/1990 Zb.) on the official language of the Slovak Republic.

SECTION 13

This law takes effect on January 1st, 1996, with the exception of section 10 which takes effect on January 1st, 1997.

The President of the Slovak Republic

The Speaker of the National Council of the Slovak Republic

The Prime Minister of the Slovak Republic

To understand the severity of the fines in Section 10 of the above law, readers should note, for instance, that the maximum fine which can be levied on a violator (legal entity) of Section 5, Paragraph 4 for failure to air a minority-language TV or radio program in its entirety in Slovak as well is 500,000 Crowns, which is equivalent to half the maximum fine for endangering Slovakia's nuclear safety (see Paragraph 17 of the law Zb.zak. 28/84 adopted on March 22, 1984). If a private businessman produces an audiovisual program in Hungarian for children under 12 and it is not dubbed into Slovak (violation of 5, 2), the maximum fine for that, 50,000 Crowns, is almost 17 times as much as the maximum fine for desecration of the Slovak national flag, a mere 3,000 Crowns according to law 372/1990. 50,000 Crowns equals about seven times the monthly salary of a tenured associate professor at a university.

According to a critic of the English Language Amendment in the USA, the "real objection is that the amendment assumes that compulsion, not attraction, is the best way of spreading a language and a culture" (quoted by Marshall 1986: 62-3). It is this dichotomy of compulsion vs. attraction that lies at the heart of the very first principle in the Linguistic Society of America's Statement on Language Rights issued in 1996:

At a minimum, all residents of the United States should be guaranteed the following linguistic rights:

A. to be allowed to express themselves, publicly or privately, in the language of their choice.

(LSA Bulletin, No. 151, March 1996)

Under the Slovak State language Law, minority citizens of Slovakia (except Czechs, whose language meets "the criteria of basic comprehensibility with regard to the State language" — see Section 5, Paragraph 1, a of the law) do not have the right to use the language of their choice in the following domains of language use, among others:

- local government (according to Section 3, Paragraph 1);
- a public transport bus driver talking to a fellow driver on the job (3, 2);
- public announcements by local governments (3, 3, a);
- sessions of local government; teachers' meeting in a State school (?) (3, 3, b);
- church bulletins (3, 3, c);
- street signs (3, 3, d);
- written submissions to local governments (3, 5);
- elementary and secondary school-leaving certificates (4, 3);
- the presentation of the program of cultural events such as poetry recitation, concerts etc. (5, 7);
- legal documents relating to employment (8, 2);
- verbal contact between health care workers and patients (8, 4).

Under this law, in certain cases national and ethnic minorities may use a language other than the State language, but only at a cost. The use of a minority language is made costly, in a discriminatory fashion, in, for instance

- foreign audiovisual works aimed at children under 12 years, which must be dubbed into the State language (5, 2);
- broadcasts by regional and local television channels, radio stations and radio facilities, which must be broadcast in their entirety in the State language as well (5, 4);
- occasional publications designed for the public, catalogues for galleries, museums and libraries, programs for cinemas, theaters, concerts and other cultural events, which may contain translations into other languages (5, 6);
- all signs, advertisements and announcements designed to inform the public, especially in shops, sports grounds, restaurants, in the street, on roads, at airports, bus and railway stations, in prisons and in public transport, which may be translated into other languages than the State language (8, 6).

The LSA principle "to be allowed to express oneself, publicly or privately, in the language of one's choice" is endorsed by the overwhelming majority of professional linguists in the USA, but, as far as I know, has not been written into any language rights covenant or charter. It is nevertheless a forceful device to measure language laws with. For instance, one may think that Section 8 (4) of the Slovak law provides for a reasonable degree of linguistic freedom in physician — patient communication, but in light of the the LSA principle it is abundantly clear that this is not the case. The law forbids, at least implicitly, the use of Hungarian between a Hungarian doctor and a Hungarian patient, unless the patient is "unfamiliar with the State language." In other words it does not allow the use of the language which serves the minority speakers' communicative purposes best.
