ABSTRACT

            This document is progress report on the U.S. Department of Education's Student Financial Assistance (SFA) programs. Regarding its customer satisfaction objective, SFA notes that it looks to private sector leaders in e-commerce and promotes electronic services; offers electronic filing of the Free Application For Student Aid (FAFSA); offers most school and student publications on the SFA Web site; and makes SFA software available online. An interagency Web site available to students provides information about planning and financing college. Regarding SFA's objective of reducing the overall cost of delivering student aid, the report notes that nearly 1.6 million FAFSAs were filed electronically; students now can receive Personal Identification Numbers which allow them to sign their online FAFSAs electronically; the Y2K transition went smoothly; and SFA received four qualified opinions and one disclaimer of opinion on its fiscal year 1999 financial statements. Regarding SFA's employee satisfaction objective, the report notes that an employee satisfaction survey was conducted, and appropriate action was taken to improve satisfaction; and that SFA University pilot-tested a new course which offers front-line employees a common understanding about performance-based objectives. The report concludes with a performance indicator at-a-glance chart and a table describing student aid awards. (SM)

❖ Student Financial Assistance (SFA) continues to look to the private sector leaders in e-commerce and to follow the electronic services example set by the industry it most resembles. In addition to the electronic filing of the Free Application for Student Aid (FAFSA), virtually all SFA publications for schools and students are now posted on SFA's Web site. In addition, all SFA software is now available on www.sfadownload.ed.gov.

❖ Students.gov is an interagency Web site developed under the leadership of the U.S. Department of Education. It provides one-stop shopping for students wishing to take care of their government business online. The site provides information about planning and paying for higher education and even allows the user to apply for federal aid right over the Web!
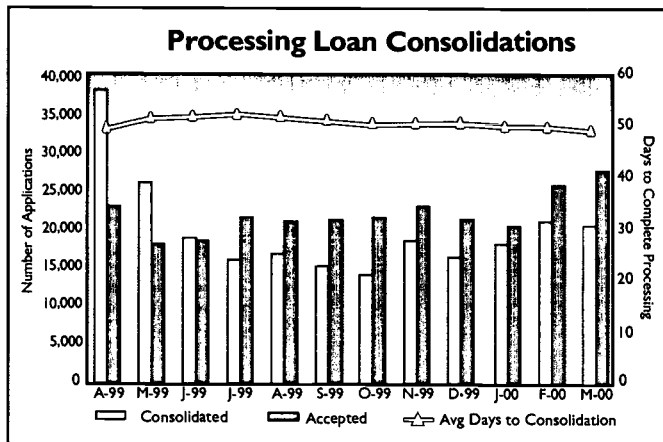

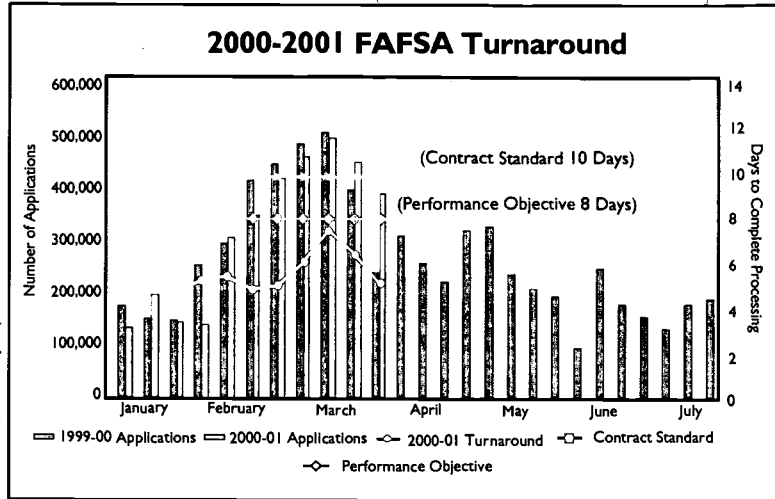

www.students.gov

In March this site was awarded the prestigious "Hammer Award" by the National Partnership for Reinventing Government! The Hammer Award is presented to teams of federal employees whose work creates a government that works better, costs less and delivers results the American people care about. By providing online, immediate access to the government, students.gov makes it as easy as possible for students to do business with the government.

❖ The information in National Student Loan Data System (NSLDS) continues to be updated and improved. NSLDS now provides schools with downloadable information on borrowers that have entered repayment. Schools now have the ability to self-monitor and confirm information in their systems throughout the year.

"This has been our most successful disbursement in Office of Financial Aid history. Congratulations to all of you. And a big thank you to the feds for the Multi-Year Promissory Note and its multi-year functionality."

OBJECTIVE TWO: Reduce the Overall Cost of Delivering Student Aid

❖ Through the end of March 2000, nearly 1.6 million FAFSAs were filed electronically. This represents an increase of 46 percent over the same period last year. Only about 2 percent of electronic applications are returned to applicants to correct errors, as opposed to about 14 percent of the paper applications. As a result, students' applications are processed more quickly and SFA saves significant printing, postage and data entry costs.

❖ In January 2000, students began receiving Personal Identification Numbers (PINs) which allow them to sign their online FAFSAs electronically. The PINs can also be used to check account information online. This will speed aid delivery and cut costs. By the end of March, over 7 million PINs had been distributed to potential borrowers.

❖ While the Year 2000 computer problem was one of the most serious and complex management challenges ever faced by SFA and the entire Department of Education, the Y2K project was one of the greatest management successes. Eleven of the Department's 14 mission-critical computer systems are devoted to student financial aid. Virtually every SFA Y2K activity was successful and the transition occurred without problems. In addition to thorough Y2K systems renovations, SFA staff developed top-quality contingency plans, and also engaged in extensive outreach activities and data exchange testing with the higher education community.

❖ SFA received four qualified opinions and one disclaimer of opinion on its FY 1999 financial statements. SFA is working hand-in-hand with the Department-level Chief Financial Officer to address all the issues raised in the audit report. SFA is committed to developing a best-in-business financial management system to support SFA's financial management processes and reporting needs.
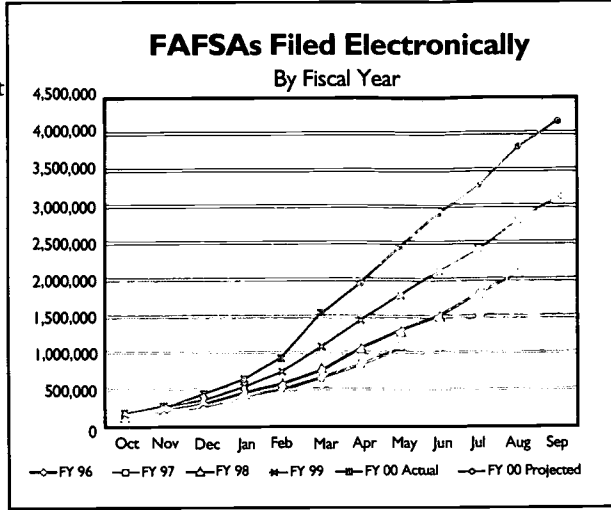

"This is to compliment one of your loan counselors. I had been putting off calling to resolve my late payment because I anticipated being met with no options and no sensitivity. But to my delight, my experience was quite the opposite! Not only did he resolve my payment issues, but he did so in a calm, kind, friendly and cheerful manner. It was an absolute pleasure to talk to him."

OBJECTIVE THREE: Employee Satisfaction

❖ The first internal SFA employee satisfaction survey was conducted in January 2000. After the surveys were tabulated and analyzed, SFA leadership developed a series of action items to improve employee satisfaction. The list of items falls into the categories of giving employees the basic tools they need to do their jobs, stronger two-way communication, and ensuring each SFA member understands how the organization's transformation hes them and affects their jobs. Another employee satisfaction survey will be conducted in late April 2000.

❖ SFA University pilot-tested a new course, "PBO at the Front Lines," for all SFA employees. This training will provide front-line employees with a common understanding about the PBO, how it is different from other government agencies, and the implications and applications of the new PBO at the employees' day-to-day working level.

Dear Customers and Partners:

Take a look inside and I think you'll agree SFA's student customers had a pretty good quarter. They got new, easy-to-use products and services on the Web, the security of PINs, and quick turnaround on aid applications, even during the February and March crunch.

The outlook for the coming quarter is good too. You'll see our Rapid Response teams make Pell Grants easier for schools to administer and FAFSA on the Web applications easier for students to fill out. Students will be able to go back and make corrections online and consolidate loans online. Also check out our updated Modernization Blueprint (at http://sfablueprint.ed.gov). I believe it gives a clearer picture of our e-business strategy to upgrade SFA processes and systems. It features our software release schedule for the next two quarters and our modernization sequencing plan for the next two years.

I know this is supposed to be a status report and here I am talking about the future. But the business of improvement is exciting and we are picking up speed.
