ABSTRACT

This paper provides tips and resources that communities can use to reduce substance abuse and gun violence. The names of national organizations, publications, and community leaders with expertise in funding are included. It describes how Join Together Online, a national resource for communities working to reduce substance abuse and gun violence, contains a section on funding and grant information that is updated daily. The Join Together site lists Federal Register grant announcements related to substance abuse and gun violence. The funding forum also contains information on private grants; profiles of foundations; successful stories from communities on how they have raised money; and lists additional resources. (JDM)

Join Together:

A National Resource for Communities Fighting Substance Abuse and Gun Violence

www.jointogether.org

April 2000

Description of the Issue

First check the Resource area for “Funding and Grant Information” on Join Together Online, www.jointogether.org. In this directory, which is updated daily, you’ll find Federal Register grant announcements related to substance abuse and gun violence. The Funding forum also contains information on private grants & foundation profiles, success stories on how others have raised money, and additional resources.

Many federal, state and private organizations offer funds for programs related to substance abuse prevention and treatment, gun violence and for reducing the harms that substance abuse causes in our society. What follows are brief excerpts on selected funding sources, agencies, and/or publications. Additionally, your state may offer funding opportunities. See the State Drug Resources Directory for a comprehensive list of State agencies addressing alcohol and other drug problems. Call the Drugs and Crime Data Clearinghouse at 1-800-666-3332 for a free copy.

You should also note that there are a variety of ways, in addition to federal and private resources, to secure funding for your communities. You may have access to Bureau of Justice Assistance funds, which can be distributed through your local law enforcement agency. You may be able to access funds from your local community development corporation. Think creatively about the work that you are trying to do and figure out who else may be interested in the same issue.

Another way to raise funds is through excise taxes. A number of communities have raised taxes on alcohol and tobacco or raised general sales taxes through elections or through approval by their state legislatures. They earmark the funds for substance abuse services.

Remember that your funding should reflect your community strategy rather than the reverse.

What follows is a list of national organizations, publications, community leaders with an expertise in funding, and community stories.

Community Stories

Stories listed below are reprinted from Join Together Online. Similar stories can be found at www.jointogether.org/.

Little Rock Fighting Back Partnership, Little Rock, AR worked with health care professionals and city leaders in 1992 to pass a half-cent sales tax in the city to fund law enforcement, treatment and prevention services. The tax proposal was called FUTURE-Little Rock. This proposal was approved in November of 1993, with the provision that for every dollar set aside for law enforcement; one dollar would go to treatment and prevention programs. Today, this tax provides over $1,000,000 annually for substance abuse treatment and prevention initiatives. Contact Ernestine Blunt at 501-399-3420.

Charlotte-Mecklenberg Fighting Back, Charlotte, NC has sought a variety of ways to increase funding for its work. They have received financial support from the Mecklenberg County Commission and the County Alcoholic Beverage Control Board. In addition, they have submitted an application to become a member agency of the Central Carolina United Way. United Way affiliation offers a path to institutionalize the strategic efforts to reduce substance abuse developed by Fighting Back. Linking with United Way would expand their community-wide presence and will also enhance their capacity to gain funding to sustain their work. Contact Hattie Anthony at 704-336-4634.

Fighting Back, Inc., Milwaukee, WI received $1 million from the Department of Human Services of Milwaukee County. The problem was that the initiative was running programs with an administrative budget that was half of what they had in the past. The Milwaukee Fighting Back staff developed a two-fold solution. They outsourced some services to consultants, and leaned more heavily on board members with experience in marketing, fundraising, and other valuable services. The strategy saved Fighting Back more than $150,000 annually in salary costs. In addition to the county funding which comprises federal pass-through block grant dollars and some money from a county sales tax levy, and pays for prevention programs in Milwaukee, an RFP initiative, and some administrative costs. Fighting Back also has won a few, small contracts with the state for coordinating prevention activities. The current budget also includes a grant from the federal Drug-Free Communities program, which is used for coalition-building activities. Linking with the country as well as getting support from different entities like the United Way brings the project some additional funding opportunities. Contact Tasha Jenkins at 414-270-2880.

The Whitman Walker Clinic, a nonprofit raised $200,000 through a three-page, pullout holiday season fundraising appeal in the Washington Post. They raised the money in an appeal that cost them nothing. Although the Washington Post charged $30,000 for the ad, it was paid for by the Gay Financial Network. The clinic contacted the Gay Financial Network and asked for support. Gay Financial Network thought it was a great chance to help the clinic and get some national visibility themselves. The Whitman Walker Clinic produced the ad's copy and layout in-house through their communications department. It targeted readers of the Post's business section because business section readers were more likely to be readers who had reaped the benefits of a great year on the stock market. In addition, the appeal reminded readers of the tax benefits of donating. Contact Michael Cover at 202 797-3500.
