ABSTRACT

This document outlines the partnership that exists between the federal government and the 105 historically black colleges and universities (HBCUs) in the United States. These institutions are credited with fostering the continuation of the growth of this nation and of assuring that no child is left behind. HBCUs have a century-long tradition of responding to the thirst for knowledge of young adults and of preparing them to succeed in the workplace. The White House Initiative on HBCUs is committed to honoring this legacy by helping schools expand opportunities. On February 12, 2002, President George W. Bush signed an executive order establishing a federal program to advance equal opportunity in higher education and to make a structured effort to help HBCUs to access federally funded programs. This Initiative builds on programs first established in 1980. This document describes the scope of HBCUs, lists the 105 institutions, and lists federal agencies supporting HBCUs. (SLD)

As an HBCU graduate, I know the importance of your schools and the programs you offer in our communities. More than ever, education is a national priority, and the Department of Education will make our education system a source of national pride. The historic No Child Left Behind law signed by President George W. Bush is based on the principle that all children, whatever their circumstances, deserve a chance to learn and to succeed. This reform legislation has exciting implications for America's colleges and universities. We can improve the achievement of students and better prepare them to pursue higher education by building a system that educates all children well. The HBCU community can play a key role by holding the highest expectations for its students. I look forward to working with you to meet the challenge of enabling every student in America to be educated to his or her potential.

The White House Initiative on Historically Black Colleges and Universities: An Historical Perspective

On February 12, 2002, President George W. Bush signed Executive Order 13256 establishing a federal program "... to advance equal opportunity in higher education, to strengthen the capacity of historically Black colleges and universities to provide the highest quality education, and to increase opportunities for these institutions to participate in and benefit from Federal programs."<sup>1</sup> This program is designed to provide a structured effort to help historically black colleges and universities (HBCUs) to access federally funded programs.

President Jimmy Carter signed Executive Order 12232 in 1980, first establishing such a federal program. Executive Order 12320 was signed by President Ronald Reagan in 1981, and President George H.W. Bush issued Executive Order 12677 in 1989, establishing a Presidential Advisory Board on Historically Black Colleges and Universities. President Bill Clinton signed Executive Order 12876 in 1993.

President George W. Bush's Executive Order 13256 requires:

1. Federal executive departments and agencies to establish annual goals and plans for entering into appropriate grants, contracts or cooperative agreements with HBCUs;
2. The appointment of a senior level executive by each agency head to serve as a liaison in implementing Executive Order 13256; and
3. The WHI/HBCU Board of Advisors to develop a Private Sector Strategy to assist HBCUs in increasing and enhancing private-sector partnerships to support overall financial stability and academic program development.

The White House Initiative on Historically Black Colleges and Universities

The White House Initiative on Historically Black Colleges and Universities is a vehicle to ensure that historically black colleges and universities are model institutions of teaching, learning, research and service, effectively educating diverse populations of the nation and of the world. The initiative seeks to strengthen the capacity of historically black colleges and universities to provide excellence in education.

The mission of the WHI/HBCUs is to:

1. Serve as a dedicated and as an effective advocate for historically black colleges and universities in the public and private sectors;
2. Ensure that the HBCU perspective is incorporated in all policy-making decisions affecting institutions of higher learning;
3. Identify HBCUs' contributions to American society and enhance opportunities to attract funding from the federal and private sectors;
4. Strengthen the communications linkages between HBCUs and federal agencies, thereby increasing the number of contractual relationships;
5. Enhance current institutional capacities of HBCUs in competing for federal dollars through effective technical assistance and information flow;
6. Encourage collaborations and partnerships among HBCUs and other organizations to increase the leverage of federal and private dollars; and
7. Seek greater alignment between the goals and objectives of federal agencies and those of HBCUs.

Scope of the Nation's Historically Black Colleges and Universities

The historically black colleges and universities are a source of accomplishment and great pride for the black community as well as the entire nation. The Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended, defines an HBCU as: "...any historically black college or university that was established prior to 1964, whose principal mission was, and is, the education of black Americans, and that is accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association determined by the Secretary [of Education] to be a reliable authority as to the quality of training offered or is, according to such an agency or association, making reasonable progress toward accreditation."<sup>2</sup>

The majority of the 105 HBCUs are located in the Southeastern states, the District of Columbia, and the Virgin Islands. They include 40 public four-year, 11 public two-year, 49 private four-year and 5 private two-year institutions. Most are more than 100 years old, with Cheyney University of Pennsylvania, founded in 1837, being the oldest of these institutions.

HBCUs offer all students, regardless of race, an opportunity to develop their skills and talents. These institutions train young people who go on to serve domestically and internationally in the professions and in the public and private sectors.

HBCUs enrolled 14 percent of all black students in higher education in fall 1999, although they constituted only 2 percent of America's 4,182 institutions of higher education. In the 1999-2000 school year, these institutions matriculated 22 percent of all black students enrolled in four-year colleges, awarded master's degrees and first-professional degrees to about one in seven black men and women, and awarded 24 percent of all baccalaureate degrees earned by African Americans nationwide.<sup>3</sup>

The historically black institutions of higher education are a national resource to be treasured, nurtured and developed.

The President's Board of Advisors on HBCUs

The 25-member President's Board of Advisors on Historically Black Colleges and Universities 1) advises the president and the secretary of Education on strengthening HBCUs; 2) issues an annual report to the president on HBCU participation in federal programs; 3) advises the secretary of Education on increasing the federal role in strengthening HBCUs; and 4) advises the president on how to increase the private-sector role in strengthening the financial stability of these institutions and in enhancing academic programs offered at HBCUs.

The board's recommendations to the secretary emphasize ways to support HBCUs' long-term development plans. It also makes recommendations on sources of alternative faculty talent for these institutions, particularly in the science and technology disciplines.

Federal Agencies

Thirty federal agencies participate under Executive Order 13256. These agencies enter into appropriate grants, contracts or cooperative agreements and other arrangements with HBCUs to increase their ability to participate in federally sponsored programs.

Private-Sector Involvement

In addition to active public involvement, the executive order encourages initiatives by the private sector to strengthen HBCUs. The goal of private-sector involvement is to enhance the career prospects of HBCU graduates and to increase the number of those graduates with degrees in science and technology.
