Foreword

THIS DIRECTORY of 16mm film libraries has been compiled for the use of teachers, school administrators, librarians, community leaders, and others who use or wish to use educational and informational motion pictures in their programs. It is a revision and an expansion of the Office of Education publication, A Directory of 3,300 16mm Film Libraries, which was prepared and issued 2 years ago.

This directory is an encyclopedic compilation and includes, as explained on pages vi-x, all companies, institutions, and organizations which (a) lend or rent 16mm films within the United States and (b) assented to their being listed in the directory. The Office of Education does not—indeed, it cannot—endorse all of these film libraries and the many thousands of 16mm films which are available from such sources. Rather, it recommends that schools and colleges and other film users follow the suggestions made on the inside front cover of the directory and make their own choices of film libraries in terms of their own needs.

It is our hope and belief that this annotated directory of film libraries, arranged by States and cities, will be helpful to all groups interested in obtaining and using 16mm films in their informational and educational programs.

Organization, and Services
Branch*

Preparation of the Directory

Background

Ten years ago, the Office of Education compiled and issued its first directory of 16mm film libraries—loan and rental sources of informational and educational motion pictures. The usefulness of this 1948 directory—cautiously titled A Partial List of 16mm Film Libraries—was so immediately apparent that a second edition was issued a year later, entitled more definitely as A Directory of 897 16mm Film Libraries. During the years since 1949, three more editions have been issued and with this sixth edition, the number of film libraries has reached 3,660.

Scope

In the compilation of this directory, a 16mm film library has been defined as any "company, institution, or organization which lends or rents 16mm films within the United States." This is the basic criterion that was used in compiling the directory so that it is a State-by-State and city-by-city list of sources from which 16mm films can be borrowed or rented.

In accordance with the foregoing definition, the directory includes libraries which handle entertainment films and those which handle instructional films; it includes libraries which have only one film and libraries which have thousands of films. It includes commercial dealers, colleges and universities, city and State school systems, public libraries, industrial companies and trade associations, labor unions, civic groups, religious institutions, and Government agencies—any company, institution, or organization which lends or rents 16mm films within the United States.

The second criterion used in compiling the directory is that only those 16mm film libraries which assented to their being listed in the directory have been included. We recognize, of course, that the application of this criterion has eliminated some 16mm film libraries from the directory. Despite our efforts, described below, it is undoubtedly true that we failed to query some libraries. Then, too, some libraries failed to answer our query even though we sent several requests. And in certain instances, libraries answered our query but asked that they not be listed in the directory.

Compilation

A query, in the form of a letter-questionnaire, was sent in January 1958 to all known film libraries and to all companies, institutions, and organizations which we had reasons to believe might be lending or renting 16mm films. Specifically, queries were sent to the 3,300 libraries included in the 1956 Office of Education directory of 16mm film libraries; to the members of the Educational Film Library Association and the National Audio-Visual Association; to those public libraries which, according to the American Library Association, are circulating 16mm films; to State, county, and city school systems which, according to information furnished by State directors of audiovisual education, maintain film libraries for the use of their schools; to the motion-picture libraries listed in the classified sections of the telephone directories of the larger cities in the United States; and to all other possible 16mm film libraries identified in available lists and directories, suggested by friends and advisers, or known by the authors.

In March 1958, a followup questionnaire was sent to nonrespondents who, it was believed, did maintain film libraries. The directory was closed on May 1, 1958.

All in all, the Office of Education queried 4,920 known or possible 16mm film libraries, of which 3,660 stated that they were, in fact, 16mm film libraries and assented to their inclusion in the directory. The following data show, statistically, the results of the Office of Education survey:

Total number of queries made .....	4,920
Total number of nonrespondents .....	664
<hr/>
Total number of respondents .....	4,256
Respondents: "Not a film library" or "Do not include in directory".....	596
Total number of 16mm film libraries.....	3,660

Descriptions of Libraries

From information supplied by the respondents assenting to inclusion in the directory, a brief description has been prepared of the resources and services of each library. These descriptions have been made as brief as possible because of space limitations and, at the same time, as definitive as possible in order that the film users may have sufficient information to know to which libraries they should go for particular kinds of films.

The annotation of each library contains three items of basic information: (1) The number of films (titles) in the library; (2) the nature of these films; and (3) special restrictions, if any, on the distribution and use of these films.

For the most part, the films distributed by a library have been described in the general terms used in our questionnaire, namely, "entertainment," "educational," "religious," and "sponsored"—in accordance with the reply of the library. "Sponsored," as used in these questionnaire replies, refers to public service films distributed "free" by industry. In those instances where we knew that all of the films in a particular library dealt with the same subject—such as forestry or health or religion—the description is more specific.

Generally speaking, only two kinds of restrictions imposed by libraries on the distribution and use of their films have been noted in this directory: (1) Geographical limitations to particular regions, States, or cities; (2) restrictions concerning the users of a library's films, such restrictions in most instances being required by law. (Most public school systems have such a restriction and their films, purchased with tax funds, may be used only by their schools.)

A word about other restrictions on the distribution and use of 16mm films: Many film libraries have special restrictions on the distribution and use of particular films—because of trade agreements, contractual arrangements, or policy considerations. Other film libraries may have restrictions on the bulk of their films but exempt certain films from such restrictions. Such specialized information has not been given in the annotations—because of its complexity and the necessity of keeping the annotations as brief as possible to conform to space limitations. For the same reasons, information about rental rates has not been included in the annotations. Film users can and should determine the specialized restrictions of those libraries which they patronize.

Then, too, certain generalized restrictions imposed by most film libraries have not been given in the annotations—again because of space limitations. Most libraries, for example, limit the distribution of their films to the continental United States. Most libraries limit their films to noncommercial, nontheatrical, educational use, and permit such films to be televised only under certain conditions. Most film libraries require that the borrower or renter assume responsibility for a film and agree to pay for any damage which may occur in its projection. Because of their almost universal applicability, such restrictions have not been noted for individual film libraries in this directory. Again, film users should ascertain the general restrictions of those libraries which they patronize.

With this background, users of this directory can assume that, in the absence of information to the contrary, the libraries included in this directory lend or rent 16mm films to all kinds of groups within the United States for nontheatrical, noncommercial, educational use.
