FOREWORD

THE OFFICE OF EDUCATION publishes at approximately year intervals a compilation of lists of institutions of higher education accredited by nationally recognized regional and professional accrediting agencies and by State agencies responsible for accrediting within the various States. This bulletin is the eleventh in the series, replacing the 1956 edition.

The purpose in issuing periodic revisions of the bulletin is to record the changes that occur among and to provide information about accredited higher institutions to college and university officers, State department of education officials, and college and high-school students. Governmental and nongovernmental agencies and ministries of education in other countries are making increasing use of the publication in various phases of their work.

Lists furnished by regional, professional, and State accrediting agencies as of the spring of 1960 are reproduced in this bulletin.

ACCREDITED HIGHER INSTITUTIONS

INTRODUCTION

IN THE UNITED STATES there is no single agency having jurisdiction over institutions of higher education. Such governmental control as exists is lodged in the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and outlying possessions. It may range from close supervision over the chartering and establishing of new institutions and periodic review to determine their eligibility for continued approval to little, if any, supervision, particularly in the case of privately controlled institutions. State departments of education in most of the States, and state universities in a number of them, engage in some form of approval of institutions within their borders. Wide variation in practices among the States has led to the development of voluntary agencies which have assumed responsibility for establishing criteria and identifying those institutions which have been found to meet and maintain announced standards in the educational activities in which they are engaged. The institutions thus identified are said to be "accredited," and the process, unique to the United States, is known as "accreditation."

NATIONALLY RECOGNIZED ACCREDITING AGENCIES

The Commissioner of Education is required under the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1952 (Public Law 550, 82d Congress), the War Orphans' Educational Assistance Act of 1956 (Public Law 84, 84th Congress), and the National Defense Education Act of 1958 (Public Law 85-864), to "publish a list of nationally recognized accrediting agencies and associations which he determines to be reliable authority as to the quality of training offered by an educational institution." In pursuance of this mandate the following criteria for determining nationally recognized accrediting agencies and associations were evolved and published in the October 4, 1952, Federal Register:

CRITERIA

The agency or association—

1. Is regional or national in the scope of its operations (regional as here used means several States);
2. Serves a definite need for accreditation in the field in which it operates;
3. Performs no functions that might prejudice its independent judgment of the quality of an educational program;

4. Makes available to the public current information covering (a) criteria or standards for accreditation, (b) report of its operations, (c) a list of accredited institutions, courses or educational programs:

5. Has an adequate organization and effective procedures to maintain its operations on a professional basis. Among the factors to be considered in this connection are that the agency or association:

(a) Secures sufficient and pertinent data concerning the qualitative and quantitative aspects of the work of an institution, including data on such items as the educational objectives, educational programs, admission practices, training and experience of teachers, financial stability, laboratory and library resources.

(b) Uses qualified examiners to visit institutions and inspect courses, programs and facilities and to prepare written reports and recommendations for the use of the reviewing body—and causes such examination to be conducted under conditions that assure an impartial and objective judgment.

(c) Re-evaluates at reasonable intervals the accredited institutions, programs and courses of study.

(d) Has financial resources, as shown by its current financial statements, necessary to maintain accrediting operations in accordance with published policies and procedures.

6. Accredits only institutions which are found upon such examination to meet specific standards for accreditation, established in advance in terms that include the factors above described:

7. Has had not less than two years' experience as an accrediting agency, or in the alternative demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that it has been organized under conditions that reasonably assure stability and permanence and that it has gained the acceptance required under § below during such shorter period:

8. Has gained acceptance of its criteria, methods of evaluation, and decisions, by educational institutions, practitioners, licensing bodies and employers throughout the United States;

9. Assurance is given that accreditation for the purposes of the act will not be conditioned on the payment of any sums of money: Provided, however That a reasonable charge may be made by the agency or association for its services hereunder not exceeding the actual cost of the accreditation.

The Commissioner's list of nationally recognized accrediting agencies and associations includes six regional associations and 25 professional agencies and associations having responsibility for accrediting postsecondary institutions. The lists furnished by these agencies are reproduced in Parts I and II of this bulletin.

REGIONAL ACCREDITING AGENCIES

The six nationally recognized regional accrediting associations together cover every section of the country. These admit to membership only those institutions that meet and maintain certain announced standards. For many years the regional accrediting associations limited their accreditation to undergraduate programs of the general and liberal arts type. Gradually, however, they are assuming responsibility, with the assistance of representatives of appropriate professional agencies, for accrediting institutions as a whole.

The six regional accrediting associations have established a National Committee of Regional Accrediting Agencies for the purpose of coordinating the activities of regional accrediting agencies; and of cooperating with similar national agencies. Annually, in September, the Committee issues a list of Accredited Institutions of Higher Education. An institution is eligible for inclusion in this list, after satisfactory evaluation by the regional association, if it—is a state, municipal, or incorporated private institution, devoted to and offering at least 2 years of higher education at the undergraduate level or 1 year at the graduate level, with an enrollment sufficiently large to make possible the continuance of a cohesive and well-planned program; operating under legal authority granted by the state or national government, granting its degrees or diplomas by virtue of that authority, having already granted degrees or diplomas to one or more graduating classes.

PROFESSIONAL ACCREDITING AGENCIES

For each of the following there is at least one active, nationally recognized professional accrediting organization: Anesthesia, architecture, Bible, business, chemistry, dentistry, engineering, forestry, journalism, law, library science, medicine, music, nursing, optometry, osteopathy, pharmacy, podiatry, public health, religious education, social work, teacher education, theology, and veterinary medicine.<sup>2</sup> These organizations formulate criteria for professional education and publish lists of those institutions whose programs are adjudged to be worthy of approval. Since the publication of the 1956 edition of Accredited Higher Institutions the Accrediting Commission for Business Schools has been added to the list of nationally recognized professional accrediting agencies having responsibility for accrediting higher institutions.

The voluntary accrediting organizations, regional and nationwide, have no legal control over institutions of higher education. They merely promulgate standards of quality or criteria of institutional excellence and approve or admit to membership the institutions that meet those standards or criteria. The only power that the accrediting organizations have is that of giving publicity to the lists of institutions they have accredited. Inclusion on the approved list of a nationally recognized accrediting organization is generally accepted as the most significant available indication of institutional quality.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ACCREDITING

With the growth in number and in influence of accrediting agencies, institutions of higher education have found themselves increasingly subject to a variety of external pressures, conflicting demands, and disproportionate expenditures. Efforts to eliminate the objectionable practices and policies of the accrediting agencies, and at the same time to preserve their contributions to higher education, have led to the establishment of the National Commission on Accrediting. The Commission has constituent members consisting of the American Association of Junior Colleges, the Association of American Colleges, the Association of American Universities, the American Association of Land-Grant Colleges and State Universities, the Association of Teacher Education Institutions, the Association of Urban Universities, and the National Association of State Universities. Colleges and universities belonging to any of the associations named as constituent members are eligible for institutional membership.

<sup>2</sup> The full name of each organization and the name and address of its secretary appear in Part II preceding the list of the institutions accredited by the association.

The Commission does not accredit institutions of higher education but it does recommend to member institutions those accrediting bodies which it considers worthy of recognition. Its responsibilities as set forth in its constitution (adopted March 4, 1950) are: (1) to study and investigate present accrediting practices with a view to establishing satisfactory standards, procedures, and principles of accrediting, to correct abuses, and to support the freedom and integrity of member institutions; (2) to define the accrediting responsibility of the several agencies; (3) to prepare and distribute a list of accrediting agencies whose policies and procedures are acceptable to the Commission; (4) to coordinate the activities of the approved accrediting agencies in order to avoid duplication and overlapping of functions and to reduce costs; (5) to cooperate with foundations, agencies of government, and educational organizations in matters of joint interest in the field of accrediting; (6) to establish, promote, or direct research programs for the purpose of improving methods and techniques of accrediting; (7) to collect and publish information on higher education pertinent to accrediting; (8) to establish a method or procedure whereby member institutions may present grievances with respect to actions of accrediting agencies; and (9) to study, review, and make recommendations with respect to State and Federal legislation and rulings involving accrediting as well as the legal status and powers of accrediting agencies.

ORGANIZATION OF THIS BULLETIN

The material presented in this bulletin is divided into three parts. Part I consists of a compilation of institutions accredited by the six regional associations. Part II reproduces lists of professional and technical schools, some or all the units of which are accredited by or hold membership in the appropriate organizations. Part III reports information about accreditation and institutions approved or accredited by State agencies.

INSTITUTIONS BY STATES

Following the listing of each institution, the date of its initial accreditation is given. Where this date is enclosed in parentheses, it represents accreditation prior to that reported by the agency now responsible for accrediting in the area in which the institution is located. The Western College Association, for example, assumed an accrediting function in 1948 and included on its original list institutions already accredited by the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools and institutions which were either members of or approved by the Association of American Universities.

The single date does not reflect changes in the accredited status of an institution but merely the date of initial accrediting. The North Central Association and the Northwest Association supply the date of initial accreditation and the date of accreditation for the present status of an institution. The Middle States Association and the New England Association report the date of original accreditation and the date of the most recent reaffirmation of accreditation as a result of reevaluation of the institution concerned. The Southern Association furnishes a single date for each institution. The Western Association does not report the initial date of accreditation for the institutions it accredits.

Explanation of Symbols:

- (j)—Institution offers a 4-year curriculum, but is accredited as a 2-year institution.
 (date)—Date of accreditation prior to that reported by agency now accrediting in area.

TECHNICAL INSTITUTE CURRICULA

Institutions Offering Curricula of Technical Institute Type Approved by Engineers' Council for Professional Development

November 1959 (see p. 41)

The curricula of technical institute type in the following list have a wide range of objectives and content but have the common purpose of preparing students for immediate usefulness in industrial employment at levels intermediate between those served by the engineering college and by the vocational or secondary school.

Curricula designated as of technical institute type are offered by institutions falling within a number of categories: Technical institutes—endowed, proprietary, or publicly supported; junior colleges; division of colleges and universities; educational divisions or institutions associated with industries; and divisions of State and Federal Government.

Accreditation denotes that the curriculum has been examined and that it has been found satisfactory for the stated purpose it is designed to serve. Accreditation does not necessarily imply that a curriculum is essentially equivalent in content or purpose to other curricula bearing the same or similar titles. Users of the list are urged to refer to catalogs of the institutions concerned for detailed descriptions of the programs offered.

Institutions of Higher Education Accredited and Approved by State Departments of Education, State Accrediting Commissions, and State Universities

ACCREDITATION of institutions of higher education within the States is a function of State boards and State departments of education, State universities, and State commissions and agencies which may be voluntary, quasi-official, or legally authorized. The primary purpose for which State departments accredit is teacher education, but in some States accrediting covers institutions as a whole.

All State departments of education and State universities were asked to furnish a statement of the policies followed in performing the accrediting function and a current list of the institutions accredited. In those States in which commissions are responsible for accrediting higher institutions, information was obtained from appropriate officials.

The term most frequently reported by State agencies to describe their accrediting function is accredit. Other designations reported are: admit to membership, approve, certify, classify, license, recognize, and register. Practices vary even more widely, different labels referring to practices which are very similar, and identical terminology referring to practices lacking in comparability.

In view of the variations in terminology and in procedure, State department of education and State accrediting-commission officials were requested to report as accreditation, regardless of the word used, that procedure which includes the establishment of criteria, the inspection of institutions by competent authorities, the publication of a list of institutions meeting the criteria, and periodic reviews to determine whether institutions continue to qualify as institutions of higher education. Such functions as approval or recognition of an institution for obtaining a charter, for training veterans, or for admitting foreign students were not to be reported as accreditation. Presidents of State universities were instructed not to report as accreditation the practices they follow in the acceptance of transfer credit for work done at colleges and universities within the State.

Many of the universities refer to the Report of Credit Given by Educational Institutions, published annually by the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers, as a document containing their published lists. This Report indicates, State by State, the recognition accorded by the State university or some other designated university to the work done at other institutions, both accredited and unaccredited, in the State. The association and the universities participating in its compilation consider the report an exchange of information about transfer-of-credit practices among institutions, but not a list of accredited institutions.

Half of the State departments of education reported accreditation or approval of institutions for teacher education purposes. More than two-thirds of the State universities reported no responsibility, either by law or by custom, for accrediting collegiate institutions within the State. A summary of the responsibilities reported is given in the accompanying table.

The scope of this publication does not permit inclusion of the categories of teacher preparation for which institutions are accredited by State departments of education. Lists of institutions accredited or approved for various programs for which the State departments certify personnel are available from the respective departments.

ALABAMA

The State Department of Education in Alabama does not accredit higher institutions. It accepts the accreditation of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools as the basis for its approval of institutions of higher education for teacher preparation. The institutions accredited by the Southern Association which wish to train teachers submit their programs to the Department for approval. Some institutions are approved for the training of teachers in certain fields while other institutions are approved for the training of teachers in other areas. These institutions make various types of reports about their programs and are visited from time to time by members of the Department staff.

ARIZONA

There are seven institutions of higher education in Arizona. These include two junior colleges, one denominational college, an institution for foreign trade, one State college, and two State universities. The denominational college, Grand Canyon College, is accredited by the State Board of Education for the preparation of elementary teachers.

The University of Arizona serves as the accrediting agency for institutions of higher education within the State. The accrediting committee, including representatives of the various instructional areas included in the program of the institution, as well as a representative of the University library, and the University registrar, makes a one- or two-day visit to the new institution and makes a report to the president of the university, recommending either temporary provisional accreditation for one year, or no recognition until certain deficiencies are remedied. Once an institution qualifies for provisional accreditation, it is annually re-inspected for four years. At the end of this period, if the provisional accreditation has been renewed each year, the institution is given full accreditation. The University has accredited the work of the following institutions:

American Institute for Foreign Trade, The, Phoenix.	Eastern Arizona Junior College, Thatcher.
Arizona State College, Flagstaff.	Grand Canyon College, Phoenix.
Arizona State University, Tempe.	Phoenix College, Phoenix.
	University of Arizona, Tucson.

ARKANSAS

The State Board of Education is legally responsible for approving higher institutions for the education of teachers. Institutions of higher education within the State that are accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and/or the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education are listed by the State Board of Education as fully approved. The institutions approved are:

Agricultural, Mechanical, and Normal College, Pine Bluff.	Henderson State Teachers College, Arkadelphia.

COLORADO

The public junior colleges are by statute part of the public schools in Colorado and as such are visited and approved by the State Department of Education for participation under the State Public School Finance Act. The process does not constitute accreditation.

CONNECTICUT

The State Board of Education is legally authorized to license and to accredit institutions of higher learning in Connecticut. Licensure is the initial step required by law of all new educational institutions seeking the authority to confer collegiate degrees. A license is granted only to an institution that can present sufficient evidence that before the expiration of 2 years the minimal standards of the State Board of Education shall be met. The State Board of Education will accredit any Connecticut university, college, junior college, or institution of similar character and purpose that is judged to have institutional excellence according to criteria established by the Board.

During the first 12 years of an institution's existence it is subject to periodic inspection by the duly authorized agents of the State Board of Education for purposes of accreditation. After the expiration of 12 continuous years of "term accreditation," the institution is usually given "continuing accreditation."

Institutions of higher education accredited by the Connecticut State Board of Education are:

IDAHO

The State Board of Education recognizes the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools as the accrediting agency for the purposes of transfer of credits between institutions of higher education and teacher certification. Short term approval for specific purposes may be given by State Board action to institutions not yet accredited by that association. The teacher training program at Magic Valley Christian College, Albion, was recently approved until the end of the 1960-61 regular school year by special action of the State Board.

The University of Idaho has, as one of its derived powers, the accrediting responsibility for other collegiate institutions of the State. The Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools is the accepted accrediting agency for the region and if it visits colleges in the State, and accredits them, the University takes no further action. When new colleges start, the University assumes accrediting responsibilities until the Northwest Association has an opportunity to make its official evaluation.

INDIANA

The Teacher Training and Licensing Commission of the Indiana State Board of Education accredits institutions of higher education. The Superintendent of Public Instruction, by law, is a member of this Commission and is its chairman.

An institution is said to have standard accreditation if it has qualified for membership in a nationally recognized accrediting association or maintains standards equal to those of member institutions. The accreditation is annual if the institution fails to meet the requirements for standard accreditation but is approved by the Teacher Training and Licensing Commission of Indiana to offer one or more curricula for the preparation of teachers and administrators.

A junior college may be accredited if it maintains at least the first two years of the course in liberal arts and sciences, and if the number of teachers, size of library, and amount of endowment or supporting income is found to be respectively three-fifths of that prescribed for the standard college. In all other respects the standard junior college should meet fully the requirements of a standard college. The standard junior college may maintain an accredited teacher education department of not to exceed two years' work.

KANSAS

Although the University of Kansas is not legally the agency responsible for accrediting institutions of higher education within the State, the University does serve as an accrediting organization. The situation results from two causes. When there is question outside the State about the standing of graduates of Kansas colleges, the matter is referred to the University, whose practice and evaluations are used to establish any standing in question. The State Department of Public Instruction works closely with the University in deciding matters of accreditation as far as service in the public schools is concerned, and thus the standing of Kansas colleges in this area is, in practice, the concern of the University.

The Senate Committee on Relations with Four-Year Institutions, through which the University deals with accreditation, has long maintained the policy that Kansas colleges approved by the North Central Association are automatically recognized by the University, but that institutions not on the North Central list must be inspected and evaluated by the University annually. One institution, not accredited by a nationally recognized accrediting agency, is accredited by the University of Kansas, subject to annual inspections. This is Saint Mary of the Plains College, Dodge City.

The Kansas State Department of Public Instruction is specifically charged with the responsibility for accrediting institutions of higher education for purposes of teacher education. The Department also administers criteria for accrediting junior colleges which tend to encourage improvement of existing junior college programs and to characterize a minimum program which must be met and maintained by a junior college. Only those institutions which meet the standards and provide reasonable evidence of their ability to maintain such a program over a long period of time are accredited. The colleges accredited by the State Department are:

MISSOURI

The State Department of Education has no legal responsibility relative to the accreditation of institutions of higher learning. The Department does have an implied responsibility for determining which institutions of higher learning may be acceptable with respect to the training of teachers. The Department has the legal responsibility of certifying teachers and, as a part of this responsibility, has the authority to reject applicants from certain institutions not deemed to be satisfactory as far as the training of teachers is concerned.

The University of Missouri, through its faculty Committee on Accredited Schools and Colleges, visits and inspects, on their invitation, colleges and junior colleges within the State seeking formal approval by and accreditation to the University. Appropriate standards for the purposes of accreditation have been established and regular reports are required. Approved institutions are visited periodically. All inspection, accreditation, or approval by the University is on a voluntary basis.

NEW YORK

The accrediting activities of the State Education Department are vested in the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York, established by an act of the legislature in 1784. The Regents have authority to incorporate colleges, are empowered and required to visit and to inspect them, and are responsible for the registration, or approval, of curricula in all institutions of higher education within the State.

The authority of the Regents to register curricula of institutions of higher education is found in the Education Law of the State. This authority is implemented by the Regents Rules and the Regulations of the Commissioner of Education. The registration process is the official system of State approval of curricula offered by higher institutions and is equivalent to accreditation as conducted by other similar agencies.

Minimum standards for the registration of curricula in higher educational institutions are contained in the Regulations of the Commissioner. Although these Regulations set forth in detail the requirements for registration, the Department of Education does not believe that institutions should conform to any standard type or pattern. Curricular experimentation under proper safeguards is encouraged, and institutions are urged to develop programs and facilities which exceed the established minima.

The accrediting activities of the State Education Department, carried on primarily to assure a well-qualified group to provide essential professional services within the State, have formed also the basis for a legal recognition of college credentials and the transfer of credit between institutions.

The University also investigates accredited institutions periodically and recommends to the Superior Council that an institution's certificate of accreditation be cancelled if the institution is failing to comply with the principles and methods recommended by well known accrediting systems.
