

The third and latest (2022) edition of this dictionary and thesaurus of contemporary figurative language and metaphor has been updated to better reflect the language of groups, social media, and social change. The work seeks to identify language used figuratively in everyday contemporary English, along with its distinguishing collocates. The first entry is ablaze, and the last entry is Zuckerberg (the Russian Mark Zuckerberg, etc.). Each entry is tagged by what cognitive linguists sometimes describe as target and source; in general, each entry seeks to highlight a physical basis. Tags include ones like shape; direction; weight; trips & journeys; past & present; feeling & emotion, etc. The compiler is a lifelong EFL teacher of adult military students in Saudi Arabia, and his interest in figurative language arose during his work. The result reinforces that language used figuratively based on our lives and experiences is common and important in all types of communication. For example, a “tug-of-war” from the experience of our childhood can describe a struggle with radar on a plane that results in hundreds of fatalities, and a “conversation” nowadays often suggests much more than simply a talk between two people. The work has implications for ESL / EFL teaching, which tends to focus on the literal meanings of words, usually the first sense in a dictionary. Clearly, more attention should be paid to other senses of words, and this work will help to identify and classify them. This is a reference for ESL / EFL teachers, curriculum developers, materials writers, and teacher trainers. However, it has also been found useful as a dataset by linguists and computer experts interested in metaphor detection, natural language processing (NLP), artificial intelligence (AI), and social-media analysis. Preliminary short discussions based on the work include (1) 60 + common metaphors (2) Collocation (3) Epithets (4) Persons (5) The “container” metaphor (6) Grammatical metaphor, fictive verbs, etc. (7) Past, present and future (8) Allusions (9) Euphemisms (10) Gestures and bodily reactions (11) Shapes and parts-whole (12) Animacy (13) Persistence, survival and endurance (14) Quotations (15) Synonyms and opposites (16) Lessons and exercises (17) To the ESL / EFL teacher, which focuses on how the dictionary and thesaurus impacts the knowledge and experience base of the ESL / EFL teacher and (18) An alphabetized list of the thesaurus categories.

Dedication

To my father—a teacher and a theater man. I thought of you every time I added a word or expression to the category of theater in the thesaurus.

And to my students—Emiratis, Hondurans, Mexicans, Moldovans, Ukrainians, Kosovars—past, present and future.

But this work is especially dedicated to the adult military students I taught in Saudi Arabia, starting in 1983 and ending in 2017.

The lyric from Mutanabbi that you taught me will beat in my heart as long as my heart beats.

I know the desert well,
The night, the mounted men.
The battle and the sword,
The paper and the pen.

Joseph Gagen Stockdale III

Introduction

I compiled this work with my adult Saudi Arabian military EFL students in mind. The third entry in this dictionary—about-face—is something I've seen my students do many times on the maidan, or parade ground, in Dhahran, in the Eastern Province of Saudi Arabia. A literal about-face, not a figurative one. The literal tends to come first in English language teaching and learning, and in our dictionaries, but the figurative usage can be right behind, if only taught. Of course, the figurative meaning of about-face relates to reversal: a government can do an about-face on something such as a policy.

In my classroom, when I would casually mention that a hurricane had an eye (resemblance), or a bed had a foot and a head (orientation), and not only the earth but also a school had an atmosphere (environment), my students would often react with astonishment and dismay.

"English is crazy," one of my students said, memorably. A Harbi. Or a Mutairi, maybe.

And yet, those same students had no problem exemplifying figurative uses of words. When I taught a group of students the figurative use of magnet, and gave them a little time to think about it, one student shot his hand into the air and pronounced, "Makkah is a magnet for Muslims."

I highly praised him—a Zahrani, I recall...

The key for such exemplifications lies with collocation. With magnet, the important collocating preposition is for: X (be) a magnet for Y. This little formula with its collocating preposition allows students to create their own, novel exemplifications.

I remember once teaching basic English in a dusty classroom overlooking a parade ground ringed by date palms, in the early days of personal computers. The vocabulary item I was teaching was window. I introduced the word in the usual, literal way, but I also mentioned that TV shows could be a window (portal) to other countries and cultures. This was in the old days before smartphones.

And a bearded naval officer—a Qahtani?—shot his hand into the air and said, slyly, "Windows."

It took me just a second to get it. Well, of course! Microsoft Windows!

Another time, I remember teaching a lesson on shopping that included the word mall. This provided me the opportunity to speak for a brief moment about mall rats, girls and boys who go to malls to flirt. Saudi Arabia has malls, girls, and boys, of course, but flirting is not supposed to occur, and premarital sex can be a death sentence. Not only that, but in Saudi Arabia comparing a man to an animal of any type is potentially a deadly insult.

After the lesson, a cadet approached me and confided in a whisper, "My brother is a big mall rat!"

I loved how he modified the phrase with big!

In fact, it was my Saudi students that got me interested in the figurative and metaphorical use of language in the first place. They would talk to me of Islam as a path, refer to the character of a person or nationality as being straight and crooked, insult people as snakes, devils, dogs, and pigs, and compliment me on my "white" heart. In Riyadh, the center of the country, I taught in view of a prominent ridge called "The Camel's Nose" in Arabic. When I taught in Jeddah, in the western part of the country, I learned from my students that the city was known as "The Bride of the Red Sea," and it was from Arabic poetry that I learned expressions like, "Her face gleamed like the moon on the 14th of the month."

I have not thought of pigs, hearts, geographical place names, cities, and the moon in the same way since.

It's interesting to reflect that there are no actual pigs in Saudi Arabia, the cradle of Islam where the Qur'an forbids the eating of pork. And yet, you hear the word all the time there, not in its literal sense as the animal, but as an insult. And that is how it is entered and categorized in this work. Animals are commonly related to insults, just as they are commonly related to character and personality and many other things, including predation and epithets.

I'm sure you can think of many examples.

"If you are not a wolf, a wolf will eat you," is a proverb I learned in Saudi Arabia.

I like the figurative world because it is connected to the natural world, a world I admire, and not just through the window of an automobile. It includes creatures from childhood like monsters and witches, as well as words that come from "grown up" subjects like astronomy, history, physics, and medicine. In the figurative world, words still refer to older technologies and practices like sailing, mills, farming, and hunting, and somehow I understand them. The figurative world maintains allusions to literature, to the Iliad and the Odyssey, Dickens, Mary Shelley, and the Bible. In the figurative world, drumbeats still carry a message, a simple object such as a coin or a chain can express a fundamental relationship, a pancake can express a shape or configuration, and a "tug of war" between an aircraft and its crew can have real consequences, resulting in hundreds of fatalities. Troop buildups on a border can be described as a "geopolitical game of chicken.” A bubble can symbolize a pandemic. Layers of Swiss cheese can symbolize protection from a pandemic. Waves sloshing in a bathtub can symbolize transmission during a pandemic.

Figurative language offers synonyms, antonyms, and makes connections. You can be up to your neck or up to your eyeballs in something. Take your pick! If you have a problem, you can tackle it or punt. Both those words come from American football. Or, you can kick the can down the road, something I often did as a boy. You can stroll / coast / waltz / or sail to success. You can say, “That ship has sailed,” or you can say, “That train has left the station,” depending on whether you are into ships or trains. When it comes to resolution and conclusion, you can bury the ghosts, or put something to rest. If you wish to avoid or separate yourself from something, nautically you can steer clear of it, or give it a wide berth.

And the figurative world makes just makes sense. Is it any surprise that words and expressions from the field of education often relate to assessment? Alcohol to restraint and lack of restraint? The family to relationship? A crutch to help and assistance? The theater to attention? Gambling to fate, fortune and chance? A boat or a horse to control? Religion to messages? Sleep to consciousness and awareness? The tongue to speech? Health and medicine to condition and status? Targets to weapons? Weight to substance? Clothing to concealment? Chess to strategy? A table to negotiation, or inclusion? A door to access? Affliction to wounds and scars? Love and marriage... to pursuit, capture and escape?

That last tends to surprise and delight those who haven't thought of it before.

The figurative world is a great way to organize words and phrases to produce language that really sounds natural, the type of language that we seldom if ever teach from our textbooks, and that our students often surprise us with by acquiring on their own, outside our classrooms. It is the difference between “I understand” which we teach and “I see” or “I get it” which we don't. As English language teachers, we tend to think of the future as a grammar lesson. But the future can also be thought of as movement, direction and even as a container. The future is forward. And if the future is forward, then the past is... behind! The same for progress. Achievement is up, decline is down. The same for proper conduct. Direction is very relevant to numbers. Sales are up! Down! Soaring! Plummeting! Sky-high! Rock-bottom! Through the roof!

Not to mention that the future may relate to the horizon.

Saudis will spend the night out in the desert on full-moon nights, and spend a night out around a bonfire in the winter. Like Russians, they enjoy searching for mushrooms in season, except in their case they are hunting for desert truffles. In Saudi Arabia a young man might walk miles to get from one place to another. While walking, he will notice the ashes of old campfires, and the footprints of those who have walked the path before him. He will pay attention to the weather, and to the light. If he is out past sunset and has planned ahead and carried some wood, he might light a fire for warmth or companionship, and notice other such lights on the horizon, or across a valley, and he will notice the stars in the sky. Such a person will already know the physical bases of words like trail, fire, footprint, beacon, weather, and star and will feel the shock of recognition in their figurative and metaphorical usages.

The figurative and the literal can become controversial, as the following examples attest:

- A few days after 9/11, President George W. Bush’s use of the word crusade was widely questioned when he said to the nation: “This crusade, this war on terrorism, is going to take a while...”
- In 2011 in the US, the elected politician Gabrielle Giffords and others were shot after Giffords' district had been targeted on a map with cross-hairs by an ideological opponent. In a coda, in 2019, Roger Stone apologized to Judge Amy Berman Jackson for posting an Instagram photo of her next to a rifle scope’s crosshair. She said, “Roger Stone fully understands the power of words and the power of symbols... There’s nothing ambiguous about a crosshairs.” And in a coda to that coda, in 2022 a court heard a case involving that original cross-hairs symbol and The New York Times.
- In 2020, after the Trump campaign called on volunteers to monitor the vote, Sheryl Sandberg, the COO of Facebook, said, “I think what people are worried about in this ad is that he says ‘army of supporters’... We believe the language ‘army of supporters’ is not really calling for an army but is calling on people who are normal campaign volunteers.”
- In 2021, President Trump, after losing his bid for reelection, said, “And they’re not taking the White House, we’re going to fight like hell...” His supporters would later storm the U.S. Capitol, resulting in his second impeachment and trial, with much debate about political speech. “Are we going to put every politician in jail, are we going to impeach every politician who has used the words fight figuratively in a speech? Shame!” said Senator Rand Paul. Said Michael Van Der Veen, from the floor of the Senate at the impeachment trial, “The reality is, Mr. Trump was not in any way, shape or form instructing these people to fight, or to use physical violence. What he was instructing them to do was to challenge their opponents...”

Figurative usage is not just important in politics. Wall Street "mines" newspaper articles and tweets for the figurative usage of words like abyss—as in "Greece is at the edge of a financial abyss"—which can spark declines in the market. In language, the idea of substance can be associated with weight, and cognitive linguists have conducted experiments based on the idea that the actual thickness and weight of something, like a paper file, can influence people's attitudes about the substance of a person.

Metaphor is nothing new: the ancient Greeks discussed it. Wilfred Funk, Litt. D., in his book Word Origins (published by Grosset & Dunlap, New York, 1950), wrote, “Up and down are two other strange words that tie into the mysteries of space and even of religion and our human ideas of values,” in the chapter entitled “word oddities,” and he goes on to explain and give good examples. In 1836, Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote, “Light and darkness are our familiar expression for knowledge and ignorance... Visible distance behind and before us, is respectively our image of memory and hope.” (Nature, Chapter 4, “Language”). Cognitive linguists speak of metaphors like these as BAD IS DOWN, GOOD IS UP, KNOWLEDGE IS VISION, PAST IS BEHIND EGO, and FUTURE IS IN FRONT OF EGO.

For students learning English, this dictionary should help them learn the figurative uses of words. The entry word is, in most cases, a basic one. The collocations are rarely more than two or three words, slightly harder, and the exemplary fragments and sentences are a bit harder yet. This basic English (to include figurative language) is the foundation for all those other Englishes: academic English, aviation English, business English, medical English, military English, scientific English, technical English, English for Peace and Conflict Studies, etc.

It took decades for the fruits of research on collocation to get into our curriculums, materials, and dictionaries. The Oxford Collocations Dictionary finally appeared in 2002, and the revised and updated version of the military curriculum I taught for so many years in Saudi Arabia—the American Language Course (ALC) created by the Defense Language Institute (DLI)—currently contains many excellent exercises based on collocation. Both were a long time coming. It is my hope that the next big effort for the ALC/DLI and in language teaching in general will be to incorporate the figurative uses of words into curriculums, textbook exercises, and learner’s dictionaries.

60+ common metaphors

These metaphors are based on the work and represent a lot of language. The bolded words are categories in the thesaurus and the italicized words have entries in the dictionary. The first metaphor relates the hand to attainment and possession. A hand, of course, can relate to many other things: see the category hand in the thesaurus for the many things a hand can relate to. But the hand relating to attainment and possession is a common metaphor.

1. The hand can relate to attainment and also to possession: “It was in my hands, but it slipped through my fingers and now it is forever out of my grasp / reach.”
2. Sleep can relate to consciousness & awareness: “The government is sleeping, and our politicians need to wake up.” So can the eye: “A minority of clear-eyed scientists saw it coming. Still, non-scientists were blindsided, and, when the catastrophe occurred, it was a real eye-opener.”
3. Royalty often relates to the superlative: Burger King; Mattress King; Aretha, the Queen of Soul; “aristocratic wine at democratic prices” (an advertisement); “Banff, the Canadian National Park, is the crown jewel of the system.”
4. A name relates to reputation: “Life is for one generation; a good name is forever.” “You have blackened our name.” “That company has a good name.”
5. A horse can relate to control & lack of control: “We need to rein in galloping / runaway inflation.” “Hydroelectric dams harness the power of rivers.”
6. Mining can relate to searching & discovery: “I began to dig into the old case and uncovered some interesting facts. Not all the leads panned out. It was in the old police case file, however, that I struck gold.”
7. The family commonly relates to relationship and to division & connection: “Intelligence officers have always held an orphan / stepchild position in the military compared to the favorite son status of tacticians and logistics officers.”
8. Language from the military and weapon categories is often linked to conflict and accusation & criticism: “Facing sniping from his own party and a fusillade of criticism from the opposition, he has fired a broadside in his defense.”
9. The theater often relates to development, and also attention, scrutiny & promotion, and performance: “It is only the first act of the legal drama, but already the spotlight has focused on jury selection. The trial promises to be quite a show.”
10. Chess often relates to strategy: “It’s a geopolitical chess game and the pawns in the struggle have no idea what the endgame will be.”
11. A table can relate to position, policy & negotiation: sit down at the table; on the table; off the table; come back to the table; turn the tables. Also inclusion & exclusion: a seat at the table.
12. Movement and direction can relate to action, inaction & delay and progress & lack of progress: “We’ve got to move, and we’ve got to move forward, not sideways or backwards.”
13. The center & periphery often relate to society: mainstream; center; fringe, on the margins.
14. Height can relate to importance & significance and primacy, currency, decline & obsolescence and superiority & inferiority: “LeBron James is literally and figuratively a towering figure at the height of his career, at the very pinnacle of success, head and shoulders above his rivals. And while his star may now be at its zenith, it must be that every star will set.”

15. Journeys & trips can represent life. After college, you set out / embark on a course. You encounter crossroads or forks in the road and choose your direction. You might follow in someone else’s footsteps or blaze your own trail. You will cross that bridge when you come to it, encounter obstacles in your path and take shortcuts and detours. Milestones along the way might include marriage, children, and promotions. Life can be a hard slog, and some fall by the wayside. But hopefully you will be happy and content when you reach the end of the road, especially if you are one of those who took “the [road] less travelled by.”
16. A line often relates to behavior: “You are out of line. You have crossed the line. You are over the line. You have crossed a red line.”
17. An animal can relate to predation, especially a lion, wolf or shark: “Famine still stalks the inhabitants of the Sahel.” “If you are not a wolf, a wolf will eat you.” “His critics are circling, they can smell blood in the water, and they are out for blood.”
18. Smell often relates to evidence and corruption: “I began sniffing out government corruption. And when I got wind of the business deal, I immediately detected something fishy. Something stank, and by the time I had finished my investigation, the stench filled my nostrils.”
19. Affliction can relate to a creature (like a ghost) and health & medicine and to a mark (like a scar): “He was never able to exorcise the ghosts of Afghanistan, heal his emotional wounds, and the mental scars of his service are still livid, raw and itchy.”
20. A weight or a burden can relate to oppression: “I was weighed down by a heavy load of debt that I knew I would never be able to get out from under, and the repossession of my car was the last straw.”
21. Health & medicine can relate to the condition & status of something: The economy is on life support / moribund / weak / recovering / healthy / robust, etc.
22. Ruins can relate to destruction. “Even though my company had collapsed, and my reputation was in ruins, I began to rebuild.”
23. Water can relate to the size and force of movement: “The number of asylum seekers began as a trickle or stream and is now a flood. A groundswell of immigration is threatening to inundate the border, and those opposed to migration are characterizing it as a tsunami.”
24. Rain, a storm, a wind, or natural disasters like an avalanche, a landslide, an earthquake, or tsunami, and great forces like a volcano, a river, the sea, a fire, a wave and water often relate to amount and effect: an avalanche / blizzard / firestorm / flood / deluge / landslide / tidal wave / tsunami / storm / surge of criticism, protest, etc.
25. Direction and height can relate to behavior and character & personality: “An upright man always takes the high road and does not get down in the gutter or in the mud with his enemies of low repute. To such a man, morality is straightforward, and his opposite is a snake, taking a twisted path.”
26. Astronomy can relate to the idea of primacy, currency, decline & obsolescence: “One boxer’s star is rising, the current champion’s star is at its zenith, while the former champ’s star is setting.”

27. Books & reading can relate to development: “When I graduated from university, it was time to close the book on that stage of my life, turn the page, and start a new chapter in my life.”
28. Food & drink often relates to consumption: “I developed a taste for exploration as a young boy. I gorged on the books of explorers, I devoured them, I drank in / lapped up / gobbled up adventure stories and digested their lessons learned, and my appetite for them was insatiable. Soon I began taking little voyages of my own about the neighborhood and developed a taste for freedom. In fact, I became a glutton for it.”
29. Sports & games commonly relate to competition: the contest of measure and countermeasure (warfare); the space race; we are ahead of them; we must not fall behind; they are outpacing us and we will have to do better to keep up; when it comes to global warming, there will be winners and losers; she is jockeying for position; he is the front-runner, etc.
30. A season can relate to growth & development and decline: “I am in the autumn of my life;” nuclear winter; the Arab Spring...
31. The day can relate to past & present and future: in the old days; back in the day; those days; yesterday; these days; nowadays; a new day; in the coming days, “hopes and dreams for a better tomorrow.”
32. Hygiene is related, too often in a sinister way, to violence and concealment & lack of concealment: a military “cleanup” operation; ethnic cleansing; “wash the filthy scum off the streets,” whitewash, sanitize, scrub, launder, etc.
33. Water (swimming and drowning) often relates to survival & endurance: “My first semester at college, I felt like I was out of my depth and drowning. I was just treading water, barely able to keep my head above water and stay afloat. Letters from home were a real lifeline. Things are much better now.”
34. Equilibrium is often related to disruption: “The company has shaken up the industry and rattled the major players by overturning accepted assumptions and norms.” It is also related to fairness: “The idea will tilt the balance and create an unequal playing field.”
35. Temperature can relate to feeling, emotion & effect: “Relations between the two countries, previously frosty, have begun to thaw, but they can in no way be described as warm yet.”
36. Direction up or down can relate to feeling, emotion & effect: “You look downhearted. Cheer up! I can see you need a lift. Let’s do something to raise your spirits.”
37. A clock and the time of day can relate to timeliness & lack of timeliness. So can a window: “We had better hurry. The clock is ticking. It’s no longer early in the morning, it’s late in the day. We’re in a race with the clock now, and the clock is winding down. Our window of opportunity is closing fast.”
38. Natural obstacles can relate figuratively to obstacles & impedance: headwind; shoal; morass; mud; quagmire; quicksand; thicket; logjam; snag, etc.
39. A desert or oasis or jungle or swamp or island or sea and other geographical features are often used figuratively to describe an environment. “Too many urban areas are food deserts with little access to fresh food.” “It’s a jungle out there, be careful.” “The area is an island of affluence in a sea of squalor.” “We must drain the swamp of Congress.” The air, the atmosphere and the climate can be used to talk about environment in general. “There is tension in the air / atmosphere, and a climate of fear.”

40. A plant and farming & agriculture are often related to growth & development: “Christianity found fertile ground in the Philippines, where the seeds the missionaries planted took root and flourished / flowered / bore fruit.”
41. Standing, sitting & lying can relate to many things, including dominance & submission, and resistance, opposition, & defeat, and also action, inaction & delay. These meanings are often combined in a series: “We can’t take this lying down. Why are we just sitting on our hands? We can’t stand by any longer. It’s time to stand up and make a stand.”
42. Health & medicine; addiction; love, courtship & marriage; and religion can all relate to enthusiasm: “I’m crazy about dragonflies”; “Adrenaline junkies risk life and limb at the X games for their sports”; “To meet a walrus is to fall in love with a walrus” (a walrus researcher); “It’s a bit of a disease” (Jay Leno on his vehicle collection); “Mountains are truly cathedrals” (the great “Big” Jim Whittaker, climber). The opening line of Norman Maclean’s book A River Runs Through It reads, “In our family, there was no clear line between religion and fly fishing.”
43. The Galapagos Islands have become an epithet for the biodiversity of endemic species. The fascinating Yemeni island of Socotra has been called the “Galapagos of the Indian Ocean.” Alaska’s Pribilof Islands are known as the Galapagos of the North. In Unesco’s World Heritage Site citation, Lake Baikal in eastern Russia is referred to as the Galapagos of Russia. The Hawaiian Islands Marine National Park has been referred to as the American Galapagos, and the Haida Gwaii have been referred to as the Canadian Galapagos.
44. Allusions from the Iliad & Odyssey relate to the following: attraction (siren); affliction (hector); subterfuge (Trojan horse); journeys & trips (odyssey); message (Cassandra); protection & lack of protection (Achilles’ heel), superlative (epic and Homeric), and alternative & choices and danger (between Scylla and Charybdis). This vocabulary will live in the language long after the details are forgotten.
45. Alcohol can relate to several things: activity (ferment); behavior (binge, drunk, and inebriate); concealment & lack of concealment (bootleg and bootlegger); consciousness and awareness (black out); control and lack of control (drunk); feeling, emotion & effect (hangover, intoxicate, intoxicate, intoxicating, sober, and sobering); mixture (cocktail); and restraint & lack of restraint (binge, drunk, and inebriate). You don’t have to be a drinker to be “drunk on power / success.”
46. Falling can relate to fate, fortune & chance. If you are on thin ice, you might fall through the ice and drown. Likewise, when you go out on a limb, the limb might break and then you will fall to the ground and die. If you are hanging on to your job by a thread, that thread might break. If you are walking a tightrope, you might fall off and die. If you are teetering on the edge of a precipice, you might fall and die. The sky can fall. If your head is on the chopping block, the blade could fall on your neck and your head will roll. That blade might be the Sword of Damocles. Or perhaps you are waiting for a shoe to drop or fall.
47. Cards can relate to fate, fortune & chance: “The cards were stacked against Rubin Carter from birth. He was dealt a hand nobody could play. But by the luck of the draw, a sympathetic judge was selected to try his final case of habeas corpus.”

48. A euphemism is often used for death. Expressions include pass away; the fallen; lose (through death); resting place, etc. A set of sinister euphemisms relate to killing: liquidate; encounter; “He was disappeared”; remove; take down, etc.
49. Money can relate to obligation: “The grateful nation owes a debt of gratitude to the sacrifices of its military. We can never fully repay those who paid the ultimate price for our freedom.”
50. Money is often related to cost & benefit. “I made a costly mistake, I paid a price for my mistake, it took a toll on me, but in the end I profited from it, though it took years and years before I understood what exactly the payoff was.”
51. Society can relate to a person like a leper, castaway, outcast, pariah, and hermit. Such people might find themselves separated from the mainland, on an island, in the wilderness, left out in the cold, outside of the tent, on the fringe, on the far shore, etc.
52. Noise and movement are often related to activity: The factory floor was a beehive of activity, swarming with workers, with machines large and small humming and buzzing.
53. Gesture can relate to feeling, emotion & effect: “The latest college admissions scandal has some people shaking their heads, others rolling their eyes, and a few wringing their hands.”
54. Cloth can relate to division & connection: “We are used to traveling around on an interwoven, tight-knit, seemingly seamless system of highways. But some strands have become frayed.” So can a rope: “A nation is bound / tied together by its system of roads.”
55. Containers can relate to situations: “I got into trouble, I was in a tight spot, trapped, desperate to get out.” However, a situation is more and more considered to be a place: “I was in a tight spot where I couldn’t figure a way out.”
56. Love, courtship & marriage can be connected to attraction & repulsion and to pursuit, capture & escape: “She was the darling of Wall Street, she had no problem wooing and seducing eager investors—including ex-generals, one ex-president, Henry Kissinger, and two nationally important families—and she had the media swooning.”
57. Sound can represent conflict: “His comments caused an uproar and howls of protest, with many clamoring for an apology, and outcries for his resignation.” Actual warfare, past and present, is associated with sound.
58. An explosion or a weapon from the military can represent danger: On a bad day academia can be a minefield full of booby traps, trip wires and hidden landmines.”
59. Verbs of hitting, slamming and lashing are often related to the force of a storm like a hurricane or tornado: “The hurricane battered the island with a horrific storm surge, pummeled inland areas with winds and rain, and knocked out the power grid before moving on to clobber the mainland.”
60. Direction (up and down) can relate to hierarchy. “When I started out in my job, I started out at the bottom. I was low man on the totem pole, and literally everyone in the company was over me. With hard work and perseverance, I began to rise up. I began to climb the career ladder. When my superiors realized I wanted to take care of those under me, and not just please my higher-ups, I rose even higher. Today I am not at the top of the pyramid, but I am very happy where I am, and I am ready to assume additional responsibility.”

61. Religion often relates to message: He has used his bully pulpit to preach the gospel of American exceptionalism, and his crusade has been wildly popular, particularly when he preaches to members of the choir.
62. Sensation can relate to feeling, emotion & effect: “That guy is irritating, he rubs me the wrong way.” “Yeah, he can be abrasive. But you’re too sensitive, you need to develop thicker skin.”
63. An animal often relates to conflict: You can bristle, get your back up, and stand your ground. You might then go head to head and butt heads, or lock horns with someone. You might be out for blood, smell blood, and draw blood. Or you might give ground, turn tail and run, or lie down and roll over.
64. Attention, scrutiny & promotion can relate to explosion, light & dark, and sound. Most Americans, and every child, delight in these three things simultaneously every Fourth of July. Not necessarily dogs, or recent combat veterans. And so our internet influencers skyrocket to success and things blow up on the internet.
65. For the younger generation, situation, time, and development have become a place. This recognizes the ubiquitous use of “where” but in no way explains it.
66. A very contemporary language of justice and activism has arisen in the United States and spread around the world. I have identified the following eight tropes: (1) Raising consciousness, personal affirmation, ways to be positive, to reclaim previously demeaning terms: “Stepping or leaning into one’s own truth,” “lived experience,” “Get woke, stay woke,” agency, “Now that’s what I call fierce!” etc. (2) Physical and mental malaise, pain, and danger: Black pain, the exhaustion and danger of driving while black, “low income and marginalized students will suffer the most,” “the trauma of life that makes one want to fight,” etc. (3) Presence and absence, visibility and invisibility, and erasure: “White people don’t see us,” “They have been rendered invisible,” whitewashing, etc. (4) Like (people like us / groups) and look like (look like me, etc.): “There aren’t a lot of people that look like us that are on the air, there aren’t a lot of people with our voice and our experiences,” etc. (5) Space: occupy space, reclaim or retake space, safe spaces, welcoming spaces, exclusive spaces for women, gay spaces, etc. (6) Attention: “We’re a small minority, we had to make some noise,” “Say it loud and say it proud,” “Say their names,” knee (take a knee), etc. (7) Empowerment and representation: more hip-hop at Coachella, taking control of the narrative, etc. (8) Inclusion and its controversies: questioning others’ Blackness, who gets to use the N word, controversy over the expression of joy, performative allyship, appropriation, tokenism, representation vs. equity, whether or not the fetishization of Black hair trivializes Black people, “the contradictions and problems inherent to the politics of representation,” etc.

This sort of language is collected and categorized in the thesaurus at inclusion & exclusion: society. It acknowledges language like the following:

“I was exhausted with the culture of country music not ever creating space for people who look like me. Both artists and fans are shut out from the industry, so I felt like it was important to create a space where we felt safe and welcome.”

That's Holly G on why she created The Black Opry, an online platform. From "How Black women reclaimed country and Americana music in 2021" by Andrea Williams, Marcus Dowling, and Jewly Hight, NPR, December 14, 2021.

Collocation

Why compile a dictionary of collocations for words used figuratively, and not just a thesaurus? As Susan Hunston noted in a personal communication, “The crucial point that metaphoric uses are distinguished by collocation has...been made, most notably by Prof Alice Deignan of Leeds University.” Of course, every word is characterized by its collocations, and collocation is key for use. But the collocations of words used figuratively and literally can differ.

Pitfall, entered in this work in hunting, and danger, and also walking, running & jumping, is an interesting word and worth discussing in terms of collocation. Like many words, most of us will only encounter this word in its figurative sense. People around the world still hunt and trap for a living, but most of them use more modern methods. I can only imagine that it takes a lot of work and time to dig a pitfall, unlike the fictional pitfall from “The Most Dangerous Game” by Richard Connell, a short story I taught as the ESL co-teacher of a high-school language-arts class. What I know about these old methods of catching animals comes from films like Chang: A Drama of the Wilderness (1927) in which animals were most definitely harmed, or a book like Dersu the Trapper by V.K. Arseniev, when he writes about ludevas, or game fences. As he explains it, instinct impels an animal towards water or a salt lick. A game barrier prevents the animal from going in the direction it wants to go. So the animal walks along the fence, eventually coming to an opening in the fence it can get through. It is there that the trapper has dug the pitfall, and the animal falls in.

The main collocating verbs for a literal pitfall would be dig, cover, fall into and fill in: a hunter must first dig a pitfall and then cover it and hope that an animal falls into it, and when he leaves the area, he should fill in the pitfall so as not to deplete the stock of game in a wasteful manner. Like the word hole, adjectives might be deep or shallow. In a series with and or a comma linking it to similar words, an attested example is “pitfalls, deadfalls, and snares.” Trap, pitfall, and snares are often used figuratively, but deadfall seems to have fallen by the wayside.

For a figurative pitfall, important collocating verbs are: identify, avoid, navigate and skirt. This makes sense as a series. Skate around, an attested example, makes me question the writer’s mental image of an actual pitfall, even if skate is being used figuratively. A figurative pitfall can await the unwary. Common adjectives for a figurative pitfall are almost always classifying: a medical / clinical / diagnostic / constitutional / legal pitfall. (Our curriculums tend to do a horrible job of teaching classifying adjectives.) Or adjectives relate to significance: biggest / greatest / main / major / important pitfall. Or possibility and frequency: a common / possible / potential pitfall. A common preposition for “pitfall + preposition” is in: pitfalls in diagnosis / evaluation / interpretation / management, etc.

Similar words used figuratively to express danger include: bomb, booby trap, landmine, line of fire, minefield, powder keg, and tripwire, all from the military domain. A less used but perfectly apt word is “third rail” which refers to trains, electricity, and electrocution: “Social security reform / gun control is the third rail of US politics.”

Epithets

Most of us learned epithets like “Rosy Fingered Dawn” (The Iliad) and “The Whale Road” and the “The Swan Road” (Beowulf) in high-school literature courses. In the early 1900s, when whaling, walrusing and sealing were still big industries, writers would refer to important and powerful men as the “great whales of their profession.” Times have changed. Nowadays, we use epithets like “Mick (a blue terrier) is the Michael Jordan of the dog-show world” and “We know that Bolivia / Afghanistan can become the Saudi Arabia of lithium” and “Majid Abdullah, the Pele of the desert...” and “The fight against Tamil rebels was Sri Lanka’s Vietnam.” In this work epithets are recorded in the dictionary, and they are collected in the thesaurus in the category epithet.

Epithets commonly occur in the form, “the X of Y.” Mick (a blue terrier) is the Michael Jordan of the dog-show world. The Pribilofs are known as the Galapagos of the North.

Alternatives include “(the) Adj + X.” The adjective might be an adjective of nationality. The Haida Gwaii Islands have been referred to as the Canadian Galapagos. The Hawaiian Islands Marine National Park is the American Galapagos. “He studied counterinsurgency at Duntroon, the Australian West Point.” Or the adjective might be a color. In the early 19th century, in northwestern Illinois, lead was referred to as gray gold. In the 19th century the white gold was guano, in the 21st century it is lithium. Oil is frequently referred to as black gold, and so are the wonderful Khawlani coffee beans, picked red but dried until black, in Saudi Arabia’s Jazan province. And it is possible that the blue gold of the future will be bulk water shipments to arid countries. Cobalt has also been referred to as “blue gold.”

Yet another pattern is “(the) Possessive s + X.” The coral Triangle has been called the Ocean’s Amazon. “Why Eritrea is called Africa’s North Korea.” Hubei Province is China’s new Ruhr Valley. The Bali bombing was Australia’s 9/11.

Epithets are commonly introduced by called: Why Eritrea is called Africa’s North Korea (The Economist magazine); West Virginia has been called the Saudi Arabia of coal; the Great Bear Rain Forest is often called the Amazon of the North; Cerén is sometimes called the Pompeii of the New World (El Salvador); Borneo and its forests are sometimes called the lungs of Southeast Asia.

Or there is the variation with so-called: Kamuzu Academy in Malawi is the so-called “Eaton of Africa.”

Or considered (to be): the Andrea Doria is considered the Mount Everest of wreck diving; Chulachomklao Royal Military Academy is considered to be Thailand’s West Point.

Described as can be used: the campaign is often described as the Stalingrad of the East (Battles of Kohima and Imphal in World War II).

Or dubbed: Northern California’s Salinas Valley is often dubbed America’s salad bowl; Xiyuangualu lychees were dubbed “the king of fruit”; Travis Patriquin has been dubbed the T.E. Lawrence of Iraq.

Known is quite common: he is known as Korea's Great Gatsby for his lavish lifestyle (Big Bang's Seungri); the Pribilofs are known as the Galapagos of the North; Ibrahim Rugova was known as the Gandhi of the Balkans; Bhutan, once known as the hermit kingdom of the Himalayas; the crash landing became known as the Miracle on the Hudson (Flight 1549).

Or refer to can be used: Unesco's citation refers to Lake Baikal as the "Galapagos of Russia"; El Paso is often referred to as the Ellis Island of the Southwest.

Finally, said to be: the Palestinians are sometimes said to be the Jews of the Arab world.

Note the tendency for the use of the passive, and the various adverbs of frequency.

Epithets often relate / compare (1) people to people (Ibrahim Rugova was known as the Gandhi of the Balkans) (2) geographical places and areas to geographical places and areas (Pipeline on the North Shore of Oahu is the Mount Everest of surfing waves) (3) institutions to institutions (Kamuzu Academy in Malawi is the so-called "Eaton of Africa") and (4) events to events (the Kuta Beach bombing was Australia's 9/11).

Epithets can be quite thought provoking and the points of similarity (and dissimilarity) are always open for discussion and debate.

Consider Vietnam used as an epithet. That war has been compared to Egypt's intervention in Yemen, which occurred at the same time; Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in the 1980s; British involvement in that same country in 2006; and the Sri Lankan Civil War (1983-2009).

Both Colin Kaepernick and Meghan Rapinoe have been described as their generation's Muhammed Ali.

Such diverse peoples as Indo-Caribbean immigrants, Palestinians, Chinese, and Latinos have all been characterized as Jews, respectively of the Caribbean, the Arab world, the Far East, and of the 21st century. While the primary meaning relates to diaspora, nuances are certainly involved in every case.

Epithets for geographical places are quite common. Beautiful cities are often compared to a pearl: Manila, the Pearl of the Orient; Dubrovnik, the Pearl of the Adriatic, etc. One of my favorite epithets is the one for Lake Baikal, "the Blue Eye of Siberia." On the BBC news world map, you can just see it to the east of the larger Black and Caspian Seas and the smaller Lake Balkhash. My eye never fails to note it due to its beautiful epithet. In every respect it is an amazing lake. It even has archipelagoes. I would love to visit the Blue Eye of Siberia one day.

Finally, epithets often relate to royalty: Aretha Franklin, the Queen of Soul; Pat's King of Steaks; John George Bartholomew, the Prince of Cartography. Or to the family: Mohammad Ali Jinnah, the father of Pakistan; James Brown, the Godfather of Soul.

Persons

A name for a person can figuratively relate to many things, especially a role. These names come from a number of domains.

A person might relate to an occupation. A butcher is associated with oppression, warfare, and slaughter, even though the friendly butchers at the supermarket where I buy my meat seem to be perfectly normal, friendly and helpful folks. We should all be a good steward of the land, even if we don't work on ships, trains, or airplanes. You can be an ambassador without being a member of the State Department, as Mike Tyson was when he visited China to promote boxing.

“Adjuncts are the field hands of education” doesn't mean that adjuncts literally labor in the fields and pick crops. It means that they stoop to gain employment, get their hands dirty teaching actual classes, do all the heavy lifting, have little control over what they are paid, work seasonally, and usually have to travel a lot.

The names for members of a family used figuratively is a large category, no surprise, as the family is basic to every society. Some of the connotations seem as if they came from 19th century England as written about by Dickens, or from fairy tales. An orphan is bereft: “We need to develop orphan drugs for orphan diseases.” A stepchild is neglected: “Intelligence officers have always held a stepchild position.” The favorite son is favored: “Obama was welcomed to Ireland like a favorite son.” The stepmother is evil and hates the poor stepdaughter: “The EU is a heartless stepmother trying to drive Greece out of the family.” Mother and father commonly relate to creation: “Cokie Roberts, a founding mother of NPR” and “Ibrahim Rugova, the father of Kosovo...” Is it any surprise that twin represents connection? “The South's familiar twins, temperature and humidity...”

When we talk about society, we often use the words outcast, leper or pariah for those who are shunned and marginalized. Or castaway, like those poor unfortunates on Tromelin Island in the Indian Ocean. Or hermit, for those who voluntarily or involuntarily withdraw, like the Japanese hikikomori, or modern-day hermits.

Persons who are mentioned in regards to the future and making predictions include fortuneteller, oracle, prophet, soothsayer, and seer.

From the experience many of us had in our grade school and tweens and teens come babysitter, bully, coach, chaperon, cheerleader, den mother, golden girl / boy and grownup.

And many persons come from the domain of religion: acolyte, choirboy, convert, crusader, devotee, disciple, evangelist, guru, heretic, iconoclast, martyr, missionary, oracle, prophet, and soothsayer. A subset of these persons relate to message, no surprise, as every religion has its message.

All of the italicized words in this section have their entries in the dictionary, along with their collocations and exemplary sentences or fragments.

The “container” metaphor

An expression like, “He has love / hatred in his heart for...” serves to remind us that the heart can be thought of as a container, just like a pitcher or a glass, based on the preposition in.

We have cognitive linguists to thank for identifying the container metaphor, and any ESL / EFL teacher will recognize its explanatory worth for idioms related to the heart, such as “I poured my heart into the job,” “I poured my heart out to her,” “She fills my heart with joy and laughter,” “The government wants to instill / put fear into the people’s hearts,” “They have goodness / hate / joy in their hearts,” “We’re going to hold / keep Lori Piestewa in our hearts forever,” etc. Idioms like these do not seem so arbitrary, random or odd when we think of the heart as being a container.

A situation is often thought of as a container: I got in / into trouble and I don’t know how to get out. I’m in the doghouse at work. I got in hot water with the boss. We’re in a tight spot.

Feelings and emotions can be thought of as being inside a container: Don’t hold it in. Don’t bottle it up. Pent-up frustrations can lead to violence. Open up. Let it out. I felt drained / empty. I felt a sense of emptiness (depression).

The container metaphor, while extremely interesting and useful, is not perfect. For example, the mind is a container in an expression like, “What do you have in mind?” or “He is close-minded,” or “Try to keep an open mind.” But the mind can be more like a platform in an expression like “What’s on your mind?” This can be discussed with students.

Grammatical metaphor, fictive verbs, etc.

Angela Downing, in English Grammar: A University Course (Third Edition), devotes Chapter 27 to grammatical metaphor. She explains what that is, and gives good explanations for restatements that are not “typical.” She also gives excellent examples in that chapter, such as “Our evening walk along the river took us to Henley” and “August 12 found the travellers in Rome” (her examples) in which take and find are not used in their normal senses. Based on her work, I have included the following categories:

Fictive communication verbs include: say, tell, read, and telegraph. “The sign said, “Do not enter.” “The data told us there was a problem.” “His watch read 2 PM” “The film telegraphs to the audience that...” Read especially collocates with gauges and dials. There are many more verbs like these.

Fictive motion. These verbs include go, run, and follow and are used for things like paths, trails, rivers, roads, ropes, etc. that are essentially lines. Of course, there are many more such verbs. In her wonderful article, “Fictive motion in the context of mountaineering,” Ekaterina Egorova identifies over 70 fictive motion verbs from the world of mountaineering.

Fictive position. These are verbs that relate to position: stand, sit and lie. “The house sat on a hill,” “A lamp stood in the corner,” “The city lies in a valley.” They make a nice teaching set and can be taught as alternatives when we teach the “there” construction lesson.

Fictive meeting & seeing includes verbs like meet, encounter, find, see, and witness. This takes care of Downing’s examples, “August 12 found the travellers in Rome,” and “The last decade has witnessed an unprecedented rise in agricultural technology.” An attested example included in this work is, “23 May saw over 250 climbers trying to summit Mount Everest.” Clearly, the use of find, see, and witness collocates with a date or period of time at the subject position.

Fictive possession includes verbs like capture, grab, grip, hold, possess, and seize. “Now that we have captured your imagination, don’t make us come after the rest of you” is a clever TV advertisement from the Eastern Band of the Cherokee Indian Nation promoting tourism.

Fictive transportation verbs include ones like take, carry, transport, bring, etc. This is how I have categorized “Our evening walk along the river took us to Henley.”

The Part of speech category collects words not used in their traditional part of speech, including nominalizations of verbs, a very important feature of grammatical metaphor, according to Downing. Five contemporary and popular examples include “It looks bad” / “That’s not a good look”; “When will she reveal her secret?” / “When will she make the big reveal?”; “What you request will be difficult to fulfill” / “That’s a big ask,” ; “Chris Boswell doesn’t panic” / “Chris Boswell doesn’t do panic” ; and “The company failed” / “It was a stunning fail (aeronautical software).”

The idea of grammatical metaphor helps us notice, explain and teach these usages.

Past, present and future

We tend to think of the past & present and the future as lessons on grammar. But there are plenty of figurative and metaphorical ways to express the past, present and future, and they are all worth thinking about and mentioning to students.

A day can represent past, present and future. When we speak of the present, we can speak of these days and nowadays. And when we speak of the past, we can say those days, or the old days, or back in the day. When we speak of the future, we can say, “Tomorrow...”

The past, present and future is often thought of as movement based on a point of view. The statements, “Winter is approaching / coming / on the way” and “the big day has arrived” imply that things in the future come towards us. And that might be along a road: “When you don’t know what’s coming down the pike, you worry.” We commonly use this idea for scheduled events like deadlines, holidays, anniversaries, birthdays, seasons, etc. The idea is also expressed in statements like “We will have to stay here for a time to come” and “There might be problems in the coming months.”

But it can also seem like it is we who are moving toward the future: “We are approaching / coming up on the fifth anniversary of...,” etc. And “we” can be extended to inanimate things we would ordinarily never think of moving: “The region is heading towards war.”

Sometimes our forward movement makes it seem like we have all embarked on journeys & trips: “Nobody knows what is on the road ahead.” “Your job will get easier down the road.”

And time can relate to things, like the horizon: “War is on the horizon.” Or a crystal ball and fortune teller, especially in relation to predictions. The past can relate to a clock: “We don’t want to turn back the clock.” Or a time capsule. Or a fossil or dinosaur for something or someone old-fashioned.

Like the idea of heart mentioned above, we can think of the future as a container: “Nobody knows what is in the future.” “I wonder what the future holds.”

Way back in 1836 Emerson wrote, “Visible distance behind and before us, is respectively our image of memory and hope.” (Nature, Chapter 4, “Language.”) No doubt he was thinking of expressions like “Looking back on my life...” or “I’m looking forward to the wedding...” This sounds very much like the PAST IS BEHIND EGO and FUTURE IS IN FRONT OF EGO metaphors of today’s cognitive linguists.

I developed a special interest in Saudi Arabia in teaching language relating to the past, present and future. That is because, like many places in the world, Saudi Arabia is modernizing swiftly but unevenly. The past, present and future can all seem to exist in the same place at the same time. Generations, tribes, areas of the country, and even young men of the same age who grew up in the same place and tribe may be more modern, or less modern. As a teacher I donned the role of an elder, and would often make my students laugh by referring to myself as a fossil, or a dinosaur.

Allusions

In this work a list of allusions in contemporary use can be found at allusion, allusions to history can be found at history, and allusions can also be noticed in the epithet category.

Adjectives that we often use for size are allusions: behemoth, Brobdingnagian, colossal, gargantuan, Goliath, leviathan, Lilliputian, Olympian, Pharaonic, jumbo, etc. On National Public Radio, I recently heard a commentator refer to Joe Biden as a political behemoth, which created an image in my mind that made me laugh. The word jumbo comes from the name of an Ethiopian elephant exhibited in the US and Canada by P.T. Barnum.

Other allusions come from old stories and children's stories. The Goldilocks fairytale has given us the modifier Goldilocks with the meaning of "just right" or "the sweet spot": the Goldilocks economy / place / principle / zone, etc. Cinderella relates to success in a phrase like "The school has become a viral Cinderella story."

Several allusions to Homer and the Iliad and the Odyssey can be found in this work in the category Iliad & Odyssey. Five of them are very common: odyssey (the Mars Odyssey); Trojan horse (viruses, worms and Trojan Horses in computing); Achilles' heel (the knees are the skiers' Achilles' heel); epic (an epic day of surfing at Waimea Bay); and siren (seduced by the siren call of technology). These allusions will be remembered long after the details are forgotten of where each ship came from and who slew whom in what order.

In these strange times of fake news and the internet, it is interesting to consider contemporary allusions to fantasy & reality: curiouser and curiouser; El Dorado; heffalump (creature); Kafkaesque (adj), never-never land; quixotic (adj); rabbit hole; Twilight Zone; and Walter Mitty. Three of these allude to Alice in Wonderland.

And contemporary allusions to oppression include: draconian; Gestapo; inquisition; Lord of the Flies; McCarthy; McCarthyism, McCarthyite; Orwellian; pitchfork (oppression); procrustean; reign of terror / fear; and witch-hunt.

Allusions reflect our more-or-less shared knowledge, memory, history, culture, and education. Explaining allusions gives us a chance to teach and talk about many things besides just grammar and vocabulary, including the biography and history of Jumbo the elephant.

In a North Carolina teacher-training class, an old biddy exhorted us to "go out and be the Johnny Appleseed of books!" I took her exhortation to heart and am grateful to her for her advice.

In Saudi Arabia I was constantly amazed at what my Saudi military students knew and didn't know when it came to allusions.

Euphemisms

In this work a list of current euphemisms can be found in the category euphemism. We commonly use euphemisms for death, sex, the body and bodily functions, and mental illness. Euphemism is part and parcel of the technology we now cannot live without: “cookies,” “The marketing industry calls them beacons or tags, critics describe them as being spy pixels,” etc. And in US politics: “The Affordable Care Act,” even if many can’t afford it, and the cheery sounding “Build Back Better Act”—would anyone build back worse? Of course in the military and policing. The old political correctness movement is responsible for a whole host of euphemisms: “crippled,” perfectly acceptable back in the day, has morphed to handicapped, challenged, inconvenienced, and differently abled, along with the attendant discussion and controversy along the way. People rail against the use of “retarded,” except, perhaps, at the Supreme Court, where a legal determination of retardation will save a murderer from execution.

The photographer Thomas Joshua Cooper has noted, “The cardinal points are always, historically, metaphors...” In the early part of the 20th century, “to go West” meant the destruction of a thing or the death of a person. A member of a tank crew in World War I wrote, “It’s a mile to your objective now, but it’s a mile of thrills... A one-pounder in a hedge scares you with several well-placed shots before it ‘goes west’ [is destroyed].” Paul De Kruif, in his book about public health titled Men Against Death, published in 1932, wrote about two doctors who had died: “In 1912 it [Rocky Mountain spotted fever] had sneaked into [Dr. Thomas B.] McClintic ... The Montana doctor, McCray...woke up with bloodshot eyes and an ache in his bones. In ten days McCray had gone West to join McClintic.”

Why west? What was the origin of this euphemism? I am speculating, but I think it might have to do with the idea of migration in its most broadest sense, of moving on. In the 19th century, America was on the move, settling the continent to the Pacific. There were many dangers, including disease, weather, violence, and accidents, especially drownings at river crossings. In Ordeal of the Union, Allan Nevins tells of the son of John James Audubon comforting a dying cholera victim on a wagon train in the Rio Grande Valley. “What hurts you, Ham?” Audubon asked. “My wife and children hurt me, Mr. John,” the man replied. Even if the pioneers survived, they might never be seen or heard from again back East. It would have been like they went West and died.

Nowadays, nobody uses the euphemism “to go West” to mean that somebody has died or something as been destroyed. “South” and “north,” however, continue to be used figuratively: each one with numbers, and the former in respect to failure, accident & impairment and decline. In this work, interesting quotations relating to the cardinal directions as metaphors can be found at direction (symbol).

Contemporary euphemisms for death include: “He has passed (on).” “We mourn his passing.” “He is no longer with us.” “He has gone away (too soon).” “He is gone.” “We salute the fallen.” “He gave his life.” “He lost his life.” “The suspect is deceased.” “He succumbed to the injuries on the way to the hospital,” “He was pronounced,” etc. That last is astonishing, as it simply drops the predicate adjective dead, as though mentioning that word would be impolite.

Very sinister euphemisms relate to hygiene. I taught English in Kosovo, and the phrase, “Ethnic cleansing” always makes me shiver. If you make the trek to Ibrahim Rugova’s grave—a beautiful, peaceful spot high up on a hill overlooking Pristina on one side and the countryside on the other, where there is a park where mothers bring their babies and children to play and where the elderly sit—on the walk up you will notice a plaque commemorating the victims of a massacre. Such plaques are ubiquitous across Kosovo. And on a street alongside that park, there is a villa with a plaque identifying the villa as a place for the rehabilitation of torture victims... While looking up at a window, I thought I saw a curtain move, and my hair turned greyer. Once, on the walk down, I noticed a parked UN van and stopped to examine the sign on its side. The van belonged to a forensic team that located the graves of executed Kosovars and tried to identify the victims. The U.S. Fulbright Scholar at the university once said to me, “Why is there a statue of a KLA guy with a Kalashnikov downtown? Why can’t they just get over it and move on?” All I could think was, “Back home we’re still fighting the Civil War.”

The military is well known for euphemisms. When a military airplane crashed through the roof of a civilian warehouse here in the U.S., a military spokesman said, “We have secured the armaments package, which will be properly disposed of. Safety is our utmost priority.” An aggressive reporter got him to belligerently admit that the “armaments package” consisted of live rounds and missiles, which thankfully had not gone off in the fire. It is worth noting that American troops have not been bombed from the air by enemy airplanes since the Korean War. We have been very very lucky.

In the extraordinary documentary film A Sniper’s War the following exchange occurs: “What does it mean ‘to do your job’?” / “To get rid of their snipers and gunners, so that our infantry can move ahead.” / “What does it mean ‘get rid of them’?” / “To eliminate. To kill.” In a report about an ISIS cell, a reporter said, “The other two suspected members of this ISIS cell, by the way, they are already off the board. Uh, the ringleader... was killed in a drone strike in 2015, and the other was captured in Turkey, where he was tried, convicted and sentenced to prison...”

In the U.S., the police are a paramilitary organization, with corresponding language, as exemplified by an extract from a press release: “The officer involved in this particular OIS was wearing his BWC, which captured the OIS as it occurred... In the coming days, the... Department will be releasing our second Critical Incident Community Briefing, explaining what occurred during the OIS on July 5, 2019.” From such language you would never guess that the press release concerned the case of a 17-year-old girl who was shot to death after being pulled over for speeding. (An OIS is an officer-involved shooting and a BWC is a body-worn camera.)

Similarly, a police spokesman recently told reporters, “Our special assignments unit, also known as the SWAT Team, responded and attempted to work towards a tactical resolution of the incident...” During this “incident,” nine cops were shot or hit by shrapnel in an ambush, two people died, and a baby was rescued from a doorstep.

Even public officials grow sick and tired of their euphemisms. Police Chief James Cervera of the Virginia Beach Police Department said the following at a press conference, after a mass shooting on May 31, 2019.

“Right now we have a lot of questions. The whys, they will come later. Right now, we have more questions really than we have answers. We are a little more than two hours into this event. And we use the word event, that’s a cop term, this devastating incident that happened, that none of us want to be here talking about, this devastating incident which is going to change the lives of a number of families from our city.”

Gestures and bodily reactions

In 1836 Emerson wrote, “supercilious [means] the raising of the eyebrow (Nature, Chapter 4, “Language”). Using his pattern, we could say that attention means the turning of the head, confusion the scratching of the head, surprise the popping of the eyes, etc.

Every culture has its gestures, and gestures are an important nonverbal way to communicate. Gestures can relate to such basic meanings as signaling yes and no, or signaling a moving car to stop for you. I once noticed a book at a yard sale with the interesting title How To Speak Italian. Curious because it was so thin and one of my brothers lives in Italy, I picked it up and opened it up. It simply consisted of photographs of Italians making gestures, with text explaining what those gestures meant. I laughed, because it does seem to me that the Italians have a lot of unique gestures.

But gestures, and the meaning of those gestures that are lexicalized in language, are not shared in every country. A person who reads, “He received the thumbs up on his proposal” must know that “thumbs up” refers to a positive judgment to understand the message. A person who reads, “His statement left a lot of people scratching their heads” must know that the gesture relates to incomprehension, even though no one actually does it. A person who hears, “I’ll keep my fingers crossed,” must know that that gesture relates to hope and fate. Or that “to roll up one’s sleeves” means to get to work (not every culture wears clothing similar to ours.) Language associated with gestures or a bodily reaction can confuse even those within the same country. For example, a Northerner in the US might take a second to process the meaning of a statement like, “When I heard what happened, I got chill bumps,” as said by a person from the southern Appalachians.

And gestures and particularly bodily reactions are often used to express emotional effect. If the performance of a person in a play was wonderful, I might say it was brehtaking or it took my breath away. If it was boring, I might say it was a big yawn. If it was horrible for some reason, I might say it made me retch.

The importance of gesture in communication is an important part of the online experience. In text language, smh stands for “shaking my head,” and in 2015 a face-with-rolling-eyes Emoji became available. LMAO is an example of hyperbole.

Everyone nowadays should be knowledgeable about gestures. The thumbs-up symbol does not mean the same thing in every culture. In recent years the okay sign—the sign formed by making a circle with the thumb and index finger, has become an Alt-right meme. Using it in certain contexts nowadays can have repercussions. In academia, eye-rolling can be considered a sign of patriarchy and a micro-aggression, which causes some to roll their eyes. In different cultures, winking can have a meaning you might not suspect. Pointing at a person or snapping your fingers may or may not be appropriate.

For a listing of gestures and bodily reactions that have been lexicalized in American English, see gesture and bodily reaction in the thesaurus. It is quite a large category and a rather important one, I think.

Shapes and parts-whole

How is a graph like the landscape? Well, both have peaks and valleys and plateaus. In addition, a graph can have a spike, and the line might be in the shape of a bell curve, or characterized as carrying a long tail. Peaks, valleys, plateaus, spikes, bells and tails are not just things, but shapes.

In the dictionary I use, the horn of an animal is the first sense. “Shaped like or suggesting” is the seventh sense. The tenth sense is geological: a horn is a geological feature. The Matterhorn, geologically speaking, is a horn. In case you are wondering, the musical instrument is the eighth sense. And that is the sense that we always teach.

Many simple words we teach have the meaning of “resembling or having the shape of” or “suggesting” or “regarded as like.” Examples are everywhere.

The alphabet: A-frame; T-bone; T-bar; V-neck; Z-drag.

Traffic and roads: bottleneck; dogleg; hairpin, T-intersection, U-turn, washboard (road).

Body shapes: heart (heart-shaped face); hourglass figure / waist; pear (pear-shaped body).

Parts of the body: A plane has a nose, tail, and belly. A bed has a foot and a head. A chair can have legs, a back and arms. Needles, potatoes, coconuts, and hurricanes all have eyes. A mountain range has foothills.

Words relating to shapes often appear in geographical place names: the banana belt; the Parrot’s Beak (Cambodia and Guinea); the boot of Italy; the Wakhan Corridor; the Eye of the Sun (in Monument Valley, Arizona); the Horn of Africa; the Florida panhandle; Ribbon Reef; Table Mountain (Cape Town); the Coral / Afar Triangle; Wave Rock (western Australia), etc.

Younger teachers might not know what the washboard in a washboard road refers to. But I can remember my mother using one, as well as an electric wringer, and a clothes line.

While I was teaching a high-school ESL lesson based on the map, a Honduran girl told me, “Chile is shaped like a chili.” It was something I had never heard before and have never forgotten. Truly, the students teach the teacher.

In the dictionary I use, the very first main entry is A, and the first sense defines it as a letter. The second main entry is also A, and the first sense defines it as a shape. It is like that for every letter thereafter. The letters are not just letters, they are shapes.

Here’s a wonderful riddle: What has bridges, canals, cavities, clefts, fissures, floors, isthmuses, lakes, mounds, orbits, pipes, pits, roofs, tubes, and walls, but is not anything related to the earth or a building? A hint: the answer is closer than you think. Answer: the human body! This riddle makes us realize that the body has many parts resembling terrain features and infrastructure.

“Long lines of women, bent double like inverted capital Ls, work their way slowly across the fields...” That’s a line from “Marrakech” by Eric Blair. I can see them.

Animacy

Anthropomorphism has been a feature of literature for ages. Anthropomorphic animal stories are as ancient as Aesop and include favorites like White Fang by Jack London and “Rikki-Tikki-Tavi” by Rudyard Kipling. Only once in Saudi Arabia, many years ago, did a very literal-minded student rebuke me for telling an animal story. “An animal can talk?” he said frowning, raising an eyebrow. I am pretty sure his classmates told him to shut up, and I finished telling the story.

Traditionally in English things like a ship could be referred to as she. “Shelf life” is a relatively old term, and products have been referred to as a family and “first generation / second generation” for quite a long time. But the idea that technology is not only alive but sentient used to be relegated to science fiction. One thinks of HAL from the 1968 film 2001: A Space Odyssey.

Well, 2001 has come and gone, and almost anything can be animate and sentient nowadays. The first obituary for a non-human being that I ever read was written by Henry Fountain way back in 2010 and appeared in The New York Times newspaper under the title, “ABE, Pioneering Robotic Undersea Explorer, Is Dead at 16.” I can still remember how surprised and delighted I was by the conceit. Extension? Now inanimate objects, like wheat, can have “biographies.” And nothing prevents a creative writer from writing an autobiography of... a flea (1887). The Island of Missing Trees by Elif Shafak, I read in a review, includes a sentient fig tree that partly narrates the story of two lovers.

Now technology is dumb, smart, or brilliant and can even teach itself (AI). One goal of the Internet companies has been to habituate everyone, especially children, to address machines as though they were people. They have given their virtual assistants names like Siri, Alexa and Cortana and encouraged us to ask them questions, as if that were normal. They have succeeded completely.

“Roaring Meg (an English Civil Wars-era mortar) resides at Goodrich Castle...” “Recent investigation has found that the annual Great Whirl in the southwest Arabian sea has an average life span of 198 days.” “So where did you find this comet, where is it living?” “We climb where the avalanche lives.” “A cave breathes...”

Devotees, enthusiasts and experts, naturally enough, seem more prone to this kind of personification than the rest of us.

- Laird Hamilton has said, “Jaws doesn’t like a north swell,” and he ought to know.
- Colin Tudge wrote, “I met one in full bloom early one sunny July morning in the Cambridge University Botanic Garden.” Tudge was referring to a handkerchief tree.
- In the same way, Linda Mapes wrote, “The tree first came into my life along with John O’Keefe, a biologist...”
- Dr. Jeffrey B. Johnson, a Boise State volcanologist and National Geographic Explorer studying the Masaya Volcano in Nicaragua, explained, “Volcanoes like to speak in low-frequency sounds that humans can’t perceive called infrasound. So we developed sensors that we can deploy to listen to the volcanos talk to us.”

- An official at the Smithsonian’s National Air and Space Museum in Washington, DC, once said, “So the decision was made a number of years ago to take him off display and put him in storage... To have that step forward, just slightly, gives him more of a presence.” He was talking about Neil Armstrong’s spacesuit!
- Dr. Catherine Walker from the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution said the following about an iceberg: “I always watch A23 because we’re the same age. It calved in 1986 and it’s started to wiggle recently.” (“How a colossal block of ice became an obsession” by Jonathan Amos, BBC, 15 Jan 2022.)
- In 1989, after a deranged person tried to kill the Treaty Oak in Austin with poison, Texas, thousands of kids addressed letters to the tree with messages like, “We’re sorry this happened, get well soon.”
- In 2021, an adult homeowner in Kensington, New Hampshire, had to have the largest sugar maple in the state cut down because it had begun to rot and threatened her roof. She said, “She’s just at the end of her life. She is finally being euthanized. It’s unsafe and it’s not fair to her to let her stand out there and not be as beautiful as she always has been. I’m sad to see her go. It’s very emotional.”
- Finally, “Typically a sled dog will tell you, when they’re ready to retire. People always say, well dogs can’t talk, and that never makes sense to me, because I feel like they actually talk very clearly about what they want and what they need if you’re listening.” (Blair Braverman, dogsledder, about her dogs.)

I suspect that I am not the only person in the world to have said, “Thank you” at the automatic bank teller machine after withdrawing a little cash, or to have secretly feel relieved and grateful when “approved” appears on the machine that reads my debit card, or to mutter, “Okay, okay,” when the bossy self-scanner at the store tells me to make sure I have picked up my change, as if I would ever forget! That same scanner, which ends up saying, “Thank you for shopping at X,” might just be responsible for the sad death of “You’re welcome.” Just the other day the supermarket employ scanning my groceries at the checkout counter muttered “Come on, come on” when the scanner was momentarily unable to read a bar code of a particular item. Her tone was both irritated and imploring. I was waiting. There were people behind me.

It is common to give inanimate and non-human objects agency. A common pattern is as follows: “I hadn’t planned to write a book on this topic, but the topic chose me.”

- The extraordinary Bernard Tomic said, “Tennis chose me. It’s something I never fell in love with.”
- The last line of Jim Bouton’s “gripping” baseball book, Ball Four, is: “You see, you spend a good piece of your life gripping a baseball, and in the end it turns out that it was the other way around.”
- Seize has a similar idea, in an expression like, “This idea that math was beautiful seized Paul Dirac.”
- In the film Xiu Xiu, the Sent Down Girl, Xiu Xiu asks Lao Jin, “Are you really going to spend your entire life raising horses?” and Lao Jin replies, “They raise me, too.”

- “Some say that humans domesticated wheat; others that wheat domesticated humans.” (“Flour Fixated” by Bee Wilson, London Review of Books, 24 September 2020.)
- David Benioff and DB Weiss, the writers of Game of Thrones, said, “When George Lucas built [Star Wars], he built us too.”
- In a similar vein, and nicely qualified: “If it’s possible for a place to save a life Sils-Maria saved Nietzsche’s.”
- The great actor Peter O’Toole said, “The part chooses me, I don’t choose it.”
- A Japanese saying has it, “With the first glass a man drinks wine, with the second glass the wine drinks the wine, with the third glass the wine drinks the man.” Many of us have been there before!
- Another proverb like that, common in Saudi Arabia, says, “A miser does not own money; money owns the miser.”
- I like what Winston Churchill said when he urged that the House of Commons, bombed in the war, should be re-created as an exact replica: “We shape our buildings and afterwards our buildings shape us.”
- In New Zealand and Bangladesh, rivers have been recognized as living entities and granted the same legal rights as persons.

There must be a bit of the animist in all of us. Colin Tudge’s quote above about “meeting” a handkerchief tree makes me think of what Fran James, a Lummi Indian, said about gathering bark from a cedar tree for a basket. “We talk to the trees. We say, ‘OK, we need some of your bark to help us; we’ll make something beautiful.’ You have to talk to it and thank it for giving you the bark. You have to go with a good heart. You can’t be cranky and fussy.” V. K. Arseniev once recorded Dersu on an early phonograph and played it back to him. Dersu listened, unsurprised to hear his own voice, and said, “Him talk true, not leave one word.”

See the dictionary entries for born and live and die (non-human).

On NPR, a person was talking recently about his favorite song. He said, “I’ll say I probably listen to this song a few times each week, whether it’s in the car or just telling Alexa to play it. There’s a story...” Suddenly, the voice of Alexa broke in: “Sorry. I don’t know that one.” And the interviewee went on, “I’m sorry, that was Alexa that said that, um...” before continuing to talk about his favorite song. This was not a toddler or a pet humorously upstaging an interviewee. This was Alexa. Interestingly, Alexa’s intrusion seemed to have made the interviewee lose his chain of thought and forget about the story he was about to tell. (“An NPR Listener Shares His Signature Song,” NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, July 20, 2019.)

The first obituary I read for a machine was in 2010. The first time I heard a personal assistant intrude into a nationally broadcast radio show was in 2019. What’s next?

Persistence, survival and endurance

Isn't it interesting that people who have never hunted or trapped and who have never seen an actual pitfall much less dug one or filled one in still use the word? That medical textbooks list "pitfalls" in treatment? The use of a word like pitfall is a perfect example of how older technologies and activities and periods of life have disappeared yet persist in the language.

In 1870, railroading was the second largest occupation in the US, behind farming, and grist mills used to dot our streams and rivers. Things have certainly changed! Even so, the category of figurative language from the category train and farming & agriculture is huge, the term "grist for the mill," is still popular, and "term-paper mills" proliferate on the internet. Few send letters or postcards nowadays, but NPR still has "audio postcards," and a book like Deacon King Kong by the great writer James McBride can be described as a "love letter to New York City." Honestly, who sends love letters nowadays?

At one time in our history the horse was king of the road and bicycles, electric trains and cars shared the road with them, not vice versa. On May 3, 1908, a headline in The New York Times screamed: "J. B. SCHUCHMAN HURT IN A RUNAWAY / Horse He had Just Bought for Speedway Parade Dashes into a Trolley Car. / JUDGE THROUGH A WINDOW / Lands in the Lap of Little Girl Passenger and Both Are Cut by Glass—Horse Breaks His Leg." Nowadays in New York City about the only reminders from that era are fading ghost signs on brick walls with messages like: TO LET / CARRIAGES COUPES HANSOMS VICTORIAS LIGHT WAGONS / HORSES BOARD BY THE MONTH."

Things have changed. Yet everyone still uses and understands language associated with horses. I was lucky as a boy: my grandfather had a horse, and I have fond memories of riding him along country roads and swimming him through the leech-infested pond below my grandpa's shack. You have to cling on tightly to the mane of a horse when riding bareback, especially when the horse arises out of the water up a steep bank. Words like runaway and reins and bridle and saddle and gallop are used figuratively nowadays in a sentence like, "We have got to find a way to rein in galloping inflation," but for me those words will always have a psychological reality. It is not easy to be a small boy in control a very large wayward horse. I know that.

After 1958 more people crossed the Atlantic by plane than boat, yet figurative language related to boats will always persist: the spaceship and spaceport pay homage to sailing ships, and our old space shuttles were named for famous ships associated with great explorers: the Challenger, Discovery, Atlantis, and Endeavour.

Today, when we think of wireless communication we think of the internet, not Marconi and wireless telegraphy. But "Internet communication has its roots in the wireless rooms aboard the great ocean liners," as Kat Long has noted. I used to have a fading yellow and black Western Union telegram I sent my parents from the Queen Elizabeth in a folder I labeled "My favorite things." It may still be there. In January, in 1971, at Fort Knox, Kentucky, I took lessons in Morse Code with many others; the military phased out most training in it long ago, but a boxer can still telegraph a punch, or a movie a plot point. The telegraph lives on in the language, and the SOS—three longs and three shorts, whether pounding a rock on a wall, or blinking your eyes—is still relevant to this very day, for those who still know.

Religiosity has had its ups and downs in the US and elsewhere, but figurative language relating to religion will never disappear, no matter how secular the world becomes. And this especially relates to topography: in every country there is a Devils Backbone (Espinazo del Diablo), Courthouse (Majlis al Jinn), Falls, Highway, Pulpit, Throne, etc. And every religion has contributed words to English: fetish (West Africa), taboo (South Seas); Delphic, muse, oracle, Pandora's box, soothsayer (pagan); karma, juggernaut, sacred cow, guru, mantra, avatar (Hindu); mecca and hegira (Islam); kowtow (Confucianism); mantra (Buddhism), etc.

We Americans pride ourselves on our anti-monarchical revolution but we still and forever will link the idea of royalty with the superlative in epithets like “Aretha Franklin, the Queen of Soul,” “Burger King,” “Mattress King,” and the prom / 4H king and queen. I once attended a country-themed restaurant in Atlanta with family members. My brother-in-law held his young son up to a portrait of Elvis Presley and told him, “Say hello to the King.” We all laughed. Many persons associated with royalty are used figuratively, less obvious ones including whipping boy and handmaiden. Just because we had a revolution doesn't mean we reject royalty.

At one time spitjack was a job category and there was a dog, Canis vertigus, that was actually bred to turn a spit. Nowadays inserting a spit, once a common task, is a lost art. But the verb skewer will always exist, in the sense, “We skewered him at the comedy roast.” Of course, there are many words used figuratively that come from the category of food & drink. Likewise, there were once hundreds of job categories related to the manufacture of cloth that are anachronistic now in my adopted state of North Carolina. And yet, figurative language associated with cloth persists.

Above, I mentioned my mother using a washboard. A washboard, a tub, and a then-modern electric wringer sat on the porch of a house I once lived in as a boy. Once I got my arm stuck in that wringer and had to be taken to the hospital. The pale scar on the inside of my arm just below my left elbow is a reminder that a part of me went through the wringer...literally! After my mother had scrubbed the laundry on the washboard, and wrung it in the electric wringer, she would hang it on a clothesline to dry. As a boy, I was literally clotheslined once while riding my bicycle, and when I got bigger and older the same thing happened on the football field, and “clothesline injuries” are an important part of emergency medicine. Finally I would watch her iron out the wrinkles with an electric iron. In the very old days before electricity, a clothes iron was filled with coals from a fire, and the woman would moisten a sheet by spitting water on it. Most of us don't go through this process anymore to clean our clothes. But these words associated with laundry and many others persist. And so we try to iron out the wrinkles in a plan and politicians come up with a “laundry list” of reforms to deal with the problems of the day.

In ancient times, when I was a boy, I can remember drinking from a public water cooler when that was a boon, to be able to slake my thirst with free, thirst-quenching, life-giving water. Who drinks from a public watercooler anymore? Nowadays, office people buy their own brands and flavors of water, and everyone from joggers and hikes to athletes and soldiers drink from camelbacks. After the scandal of Flint, Michigan, who would trust water from a watercooler? Not to mention that, in this time of COVID, everyone is working from home, and this will no doubt continue post-pandemic. Who needs a watercooler to as a gathering place to communicate with anyone when we can simply text one another? And yet, cultural critics still talk about “watercooler shows” and “watercooler gossip.” As a practice, meeting for a cold, free cup of water at a watercooler and exchanging gossip is as dead as the dodo. But, like the dodo, it lives on in our language. It lives on. It lives. For all of our acceptance of the new, trendy contemporary language, maybe we should acknowledge and pay a bit of homage to the old language that has persisted.

Quotations

There are many wonderful quotes relating to or utilizing metaphor and figurative language. Following are six that are meaningful to me.

1. “Words are signs of natural facts... Right means straight; wrong means twisted. Spirit primarily means wind; transgression, the crossing of a line; supercilious, the raising of the eyebrow. We say the heart to express emotion, the head to denote thought... / An enraged man is a lion, a cunning man is a fox, a firm man is a rock, a learned man is a torch. A lamb is innocence; a snake is subtle spite; flowers express to us the delicate affections. Light and darkness are our familiar expression for knowledge and ignorance; and heat for love. Visible distance behind and before us, is respectively our image of memory and hope. / Who looks upon a river in a meditative hour and is not reminded of the flux of all things? Throw a stone into the stream, and the circles that propagate themselves are the beautiful type of all influence...” (Nature, Chapter 4 (Language), by Ralph Waldo Emerson, 1836.)

I like the above because in a short space Emerson lists beautifully and concisely so many metaphors. The “circles that propagate themselves” is entered in this dictionary at ripple. A related word is splash. Both words are metaphors for effect that relate to water.

2. “It was doubtless an ingenious idea to call the camel the ship of the desert, but it would hardly lead one far in training that useful beast.” (George Eliot’s The Mill on the Floss.) The above quote reminds me that, while a metaphor identifies something that two things have in common, plenty of things are still different. A ship does not have long eyelashes, has not been branded, does not roar, gurgle, bellow, foam from the mouth to the point of producing airborne balloons of saliva, attract huge spiders, produce delicious and healthy milk and meat, etc. “The camel is a ship?” a Saudi military student remarked to me once, disappointingly.

And people will see things differently, as in the parable of the “Blind men and an elephant.” Data has been compared to a gas (the cloud); water (data stream); and a solid (data mining). Bitcoin servers have been described as both farms and mines. The spread of COVID-19 is often thought of as a wave, and Dr. Roger Shapiro nicely extended that to a wave in a pool that sloshes around, back and forth, leaving and returning. The myth of Sisyphus can mean different things—difficulty, futility, or something that never ends—and the adjectives promethean and quixotic can have quite different connotations: as I get older, my sympathy for Quixote increases, and I think of him as less crazy and more of an inspiration. The title of Dickens’ great book is commonly misappropriated: See “Please, Liberals: Stop Abusing ‘A Tale of Two Cities’” by Reid Cherlin, The New Republic, Jan 2, 2014. It is not always clear which meaning or connotation is meant. Many say we should view the problem of drug addiction as a public health issue, not as a war on drugs, and yet the phrase “public health campaign” has always had a warlike ring, and the metaphor of disease as an enemy has come to the fore in the era of COVID-19.

Should we really single out the donkey for ridicule and use it as an insult? I don't think so. "Without a donkey, my wife and I are forced to be donkeys" is something farmers say in Ethiopia. Does the octopus really deserve its iconic depiction in political cartoons as a global strangler? No. I once floated about one for half an hour on a shallow reef in the Red Sea, and its fascinating shape-shifting and color-changing is something I will never forget. Is a frilled shark, or a sturgeon, really horrific looking? Some think they are beautiful.

But even if the similarities between two different things are not always obvious, or are tenuous, or even upset me, I almost always find them worth thinking about. In my opinion, allusions to Joe McCarthy, Machiavelli, and Hector do little justice to those men. The idiom "to hang somebody out to dry" has come to mean abandon, but nobody hangs up their laundry and abandons it. Gibbeting fits the idea much better. "Yemen was Egypt's Vietnam" makes me think of a host of dissimilarities, but I must admit, upon reflection, that there are plenty of similarities, such as the time period, and the proximity of safe havens across a border.

The title of Leon Talley's memoir, The Chiffon Trenches, shows just how "ingenious" a metaphor can be, how much ground, time and human condition it can cover, from the bloodiest battlefields of Passchendaele and Verdun to...well, to Vogue Magazine. In one popular video cute ten-year-old Nandi Bushell is a "beast" on the drums, while in another a Marine Corps rammer identified only as "Wolf" is a "beast" on a howitzer mission. Both are "beasts." Roland Huntford described the Ross Ice Shelf as "that rolling Sahara of snow," which sounds odd at first, but there are many comparisons that can be made between the Sahara and the Antarctic. For example, hydrating in both environments can be a huge problem: Antarctica is a polar desert. Huntford was writing specifically about the lack of terrain landmarks. The question is always, as Nathaniel Mackey stated, "How different can two things be and still have something in common?"

Steve Inskeep of NPR severely strains the notion with his "Patrons still receive service at flooded riverside restaurant in Thailand," NPR, Morning Edition, October 8, 2021, although I'm sure he had his reasons. Not too many of us are like the divorce-court judge who is interested in "whether a dog is more like a lamp or a human being."

3. "I looked at The Sixteenth Round as puttin' a letter in a bottle and throwin' it out over those 36-foot-high walls into the ocean of life, like a bobbin' bottle, and hoping upon hope that somebody, somehow, someday, will see this bobbin' bottle in the water, take this bottle up, read my message, and come to help me. And that's what happened. That's what happened." (Rubin "Hurricane" Carter. From "The Hurricane Tapes," Ep6. Muhammad Ali and Bob Dylan, BBC Sounds.)

This strikes me as a particularly beautiful, eloquent and heartfelt use of figurative language, using one extended metaphor.

4. “Yeah, I generally think this is a fairly minor deal. At the same time, it could actually backfire on Bill Barr. Because, if he thinks it’s necessary to pre-spin this, that means that there’s something in there that needs to be pre-spun. And if he’s too heavy handed about that, it can actually just throw gasoline on the daily media feeding frenzies that we have [inaudible].” (The commentator Jonah Goldberg on “Before Mueller Report Is Released, Republicans And Democrats Take Sides,” NPR’s Morning Edition, April 18, 2019.)

I love this quote for its contrast to the one above it. To paraphrase a line from Kipling’s short story, “The Phantom ‘Rickshaw’”: “Men occasionally break down and become as mixed as their metaphors.”

5. Elisabeth Moss: I just did it, and just kind of went as big as I could and threw it all at the wall knowing the only mistake we could make was not going far enough. And so we just went for it... / Rachael Martin: Did he ever have to pull you back. I mean did it ever feel too far, or were you like, “Nope...” / Elisabeth Moss: I had turned it up to eleven and then realized I had to go even higher... (“In ‘Her Smell,’ Elisabeth Moss ‘Turned It Up To 11,’ Then Turned It Up Some More,” Morning Edition, NPR, April 19, 2019.)

In the above, Elisabeth Moss is speaking about her performance in the film Her Smell. I like it because it is a good litany of clichés relating to commitment & determination. One has to respect commitment in an actor. But when it comes to such declarations, I like what Alex Lowe said: “There are two kinds of climbers. Those who climb because their heart sings when they’re in the mountains, and all the rest.”

6. “It can’t surprise us that our language began with metaphors. Words are being made today under our own eyes in precisely the same fashion. Witness the terse and vivid terms that the gangsters coin: gun moll, for the racketeer’s girl-friend; hot seat, for the electric chair; stool pigeon, for the traitor who acts as a spy for the police.” (Word Origins and Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt. D., 1950.)

This is a good reminder that language is constantly evolving, and what sounds novel and contemporary today will sound as dated as Funk’s examples in twenty years.

Synonyms and opposites

As teachers, we are accustomed to mentioning synonyms, opposites, and patterns like succeed / fail / give up / try again. We can do the same with figurative language, and this dictionary and thesaurus will help.

1. You can launch, roll out, unveil, take the wraps off a product, or drop it (inauguration).
2. You can leave somebody in your wake. Or in your dust. Or in your slipstream. These are entered at competition: movement. The first relates to boats and water. The second to land and horses. The last to planes and air.
3. The opposite of tone deaf is... pitch perfect. A person can also strike all the right notes, or have a tin ear (music).
4. If you achieve something, people might sing your praises, but more than likely your achievement will be unsung (achievement, recognition & praise).
5. Something can be a stone in one's shoe or a burr in one's saddle (affliction).
6. You can hew to a line or... go against the grain. Both phrases relate to wood (sanctioning, authority & non-conformity / tree).
7. You can be on the cusp of something, or light years away from it (proximity: astronomy).
8. You can face a problem or turn a blind eye to it or look away. You can kick the can down the road or push something (like a decision) down the road. You can tackle a problem or punt or try to run out the clock. Or, you can throw your hands up in the air or engage in handwringing (confronting, dealing with & ignoring things).
9. You can give a hand, lend a hand, or pitch in (help & assistance).
10. You can try to save your neck or your skin or your scalp (survival, persistence & endurance).
11. Socially, you might find a place at the table or under the tent. Or, you might find yourself outside in the cold, frozen out, in the shadows, on the fringes of society, out of the mainstream, in exile, in the wilderness, on the far shore. You might find yourself to be a castaway, hermit, leper, outcast, outsider, pariah, untouchable, a ghost. Good luck with that (social interaction, society, and inclusion & exclusion)!
12. A new job might be a plum position or a poisoned chalice.
13. In bad times your life might be on hold, and you might find yourself in purgatory or in limbo. In a drought or a dry spell. You might feel adrift, in the doldrums, unable to make headway, going in circles, rudderless. Chasing your tail. Standing still. In a blind alley. Or mired, sidetracked, stuck, stalled, in a rut and spinning your wheels. Going nowhere, or backwards and lagging behind. Losing ground. Stumbling or taking a step backward (progress & lack of progress).
14. Or, you can be on a roll with lots of momentum and traction, advancing, getting ahead, going forward, making headway, gaining ground, leaping or vaulting ahead.
15. Somebody can add fuel to a controversy, pour gasoline on it, fan it, or provide oxygen for it. Something can become an accelerant.

16. You can be up to your elbows / neck / eyeballs, in over your head, drowning, buried alive, immersed, enmeshed, entangled, or ensnared in something like debt or some other situation. I hope things get better for you (involvement)!
17. You can hold your employees' feet to the fire or light a fire under them. You can nudge, push, prod, goad, cudgel, hector, or bully them, lean on them, twist their arms, strongarm them, hold a gun to their heads, crack the whip, ride herd over them, etc. Just don't expect them to attend your birthday party (coercion & motivation)!
18. You can stroll, coast, waltz or sail to success (attainment). Something you do might be a cakewalk, a stroll in the park, a picnic. Or a Gallipoli, a long hard slog, a trail of tears (difficulty, easiness & effort).
19. If you are searching for something, you might hit pay dirt or fool's gold (success & failure / mining).
20. A division might be the favorite son or stepchild / stepdaughter / orphan of its parent organization (family).
21. You can say, "That ship has sailed" or "That train has left the station." Both relate to timeliness & lack of timeliness. The two cliches always make me think of that scene from Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery: "Your dad loved her very much. If there was one other cat in this world that could have loved her and treated her as well as your dad, then it was me. But, unfortunately, for yours truly, that train has sailed."
22. You can try and throw somebody off the scent, throw somebody off the trail, or cover your tracks. This language all relates to pursuit, capture & escape, and hunting.
23. The president might try to bypass, go around, sidestep, or make an end run around congress.
24. In terms of interest and responsibility, something can be in your wheelhouse, in your lane, or up your alley. Or not.
25. You can bury or exorcise the ghosts or put something to rest / bed / sleep. Bury the hatchet or close the book on something. Put it behind you, let it go. Move on. Emotional and psychological wounds can heal or scab over. These phrases relate to reconciliation, resolution & conclusion. Just don't forget, a buried hatchet can always be dug up.
26. In terms of sports & games, you can drop the ball, fumble, miscue, drop the baton, strike out, or score an own goal. Or the opposite: hit a home run, hit a grand slam, hit it out of the park, get your project through the uprights or across the goal line. In which case, you might just want to take a victory lap. Or spike the football.
27. If you pull the plug on something like a project, it can go down the drain, pipes, or tubes.
28. You can be the father, godfather, midwife, architect or author of something like a plan or policy or program.
29. Urban warfare (MOU) versus desert warfare can be described as a different animal / a different beast / or a different kettle of fish.
30. The Arctic might be a factory or a kitchen for weather. Both relate to creation & transformation. Many of the new terms people use nowadays to talk about race have been cooked up in the kitchen of sociology.
31. You can "cut corners" or "take a shortcut." Or, the opposite, you can "go the extra mile" or "go out of your way." All relate to journeys & trips. Enjoy your hike!

32. “If you wanna win it, ya gotta bring it.” “I left it all out there on the floor along with my guys.” (This connection is made at commitment & determination: coming, arriving, staying, leaving & returning.)
33. You can grow up in your father’s shadow. Or in his reflected glory. Hopefully the latter, but both are based on light & darkness.
34. You might feel like you are on a slow boat to China, or you are going full speed ahead. Both relate to the speed of a boat.

People often pair conventional language with a cliché, almost like a translation, and will even triple up on clichés, like a boxer peppering his opponent with jabs: “We must oppose him, we must stand up to him.” “This looks like an inflection point, a turning point.” “What’s the next shoe to drop, what happens next?” “What would justice have looked like in your view, what did you want to happen here?” “They want to fill in the blanks, connect the dots, and figure out what’s going on.” “There is a possibility we could see another pandemic in our lifetime. No one can run the odds about what kinds of numbers that looks like, you know, how likely that is...” “The groups close ranks, they circle the wagons...” “Out-of-step, against-the-grain, different-drummer types...” “It’s a race against time, it’s a race against the clock to get these animals (stranded pilot whales) refloated.”

Lessons and exercises

1. A lesson and exercise might focus on words related to health & medicine used figuratively with the meaning of condition and status. Write the following on the board: the peace process is dead and buried; the economic recovery has been robust; businesses are ailing; the soccer team is on life support; small businesses are hurting; earnings have been anemic; the economy remains badly wounded; the pace of economic growth is moribund; reform is dead; the economy is healthy. Ask students to identify (or underline) the words relating to health & medicine and also identify or underline the non-human subjects. Discuss. Ask the students to organize the vocabulary on a cline from robust to dead and buried.
2. Create a simple matching exercise to illustrate a simple pattern of figurative usage that links problems (flaws & lack of flaws, etc.) to amelioration & renewal: If there is a wrinkle in the plan, then we must iron it out. If an idea is stale, we need a fresh one. If there is a security hole, we must patch it or fill it in. If our project encounters some bumps in the road, we must try to smooth them out. If an argument is shaky, we had better support or buttress it (or it might completely collapse and lie in ruins). If our skills have grown dull, we need to sharpen or hone them. If a situation is explosive, we must defuse it. If our wheels are spinning, we must find a way to gain traction and get unstuck. If the wheels are turning very slowly, we will want to find a way to grease them. If we are feeling a great burden, then we must find a way to get out from under it. If our society suffers from a particular sickness, we must find a cure or remedy for it, etc.
3. Words and phrases for increase & decrease / number include: rise; explode; shoot up; soar; grow; skyrocket; jump; go / shoot through the roof; peak, and sky-high. Words for decrease include: plummet; dip; slide; drop; plunge; fall; tumble; and sink. We commonly use these words and phrases when we talk about numbers, prices, and rates. These words make a good simple category exercise. Write the words and phrases in alphabetical order on the board and ask students to categorize them as “increase” or “decrease.” If your classroom has a smartboard with “Vortex” software, create two vortices labeled “increase” and “decrease” and call on a student to slide each word into the correct vortex. My students in Saudi Arabia liked Vortex exercises, because if the student standing in front of the classroom at the board slid a word to the wrong vortex, it was spit out to his consternation and the delight of the other students. Ask students about important rates and prices: the crime rate; the price of bread and medicine; the age of first marriage, etc. Are they low, high or sky high / through the roof? How have they changed over time? How do they compare with other countries or geographical areas?
4. We tend to think of comparison of adjectives and adverbs as grammar lessons. But much vocabulary has within it the idea of comparison. So, visit the thesaurus and peruse the entry for increase & decrease. Select words that your students already know and thus can be recycled. In addition, you can select vocabulary you think your students might already know, or might be interested in knowing. Using the vocabulary you have chosen, practice comparing adjectives in the following way: (Teacher) “I stepped on the gas pedal and the car accelerated. What does accelerate mean?” (Student) “To go faster.” (Teacher) “The moon is waxing.” (Student) “It’s getting bigger.” (Teacher) “The moon is waning.”

(Student) “It’s getting smaller.” (Teacher) “The price of bread is dropping.” (Student) “It’s cheaper.” (Student) “It’s not as expensive.” (Student) “It’s less expensive (than it was). Teacher: “What happens when you add fuel to a fire?” (Student) “It gets bigger.” (Student) “It gets hotter.” (Teacher) “Don’t eat too much or your stomach will balloon!” (Student) “Get bigger!” (Teacher) “We need more tanks in the battle, because tanks are a force multiplier. What does a force multiplier do?” (Student) “It makes us stronger.” (Student) “It makes us more powerful.”

5. We tend to think of the superlative as a series of grammar lessons and test questions based on form, but there is plenty of language (including proverbs) that embodies the notion of (comparative) worth and the superlative, and it can be gleaned in the thesaurus in the category worth & lack of worth and superlative. Every monkey is a _____ to its mother. One man’s trash is another man’s _____. Speech is silver but silence is _____. The jackal is a _____ in his own country. Who was or is the Pele of Saudi Arabia? Name a superlative fruit. Which bird sings the most beautifully? What does it mean when I say (pick any sports figure) was or is the GOAT? [Saudi students who know the literal meaning of a goat but who don’t know what the acronym means are always delighted by this, and will use it to make double and even triple entendres to chaff their friends!] Which car is the thoroughbred of cars? Do you think that the lion is the king of beasts? Questions like these enliven routine grammar exercises.
6. To focus on all the ways to talk about the future, including the idea that the future is a container, ask students to select a piece of paper from a container. The container would be analogous to a fortune cookie, and the piece of paper would have a fortune written on it. Each student would get a little message about what lies in his future, what is ahead for him, what is on his horizon, what is down the road, the fate that is approaching him, etc. This exercise can lend itself to humor. Of course, such an exercise might not be appropriate in some contexts and cultures. I personally wouldn’t do this exercise in Saudi Arabia, no matter how comfortable I felt with my students.
7. The following is a simple fill-in-the-blank exercise that focuses on some of the figurative language associated with fire: extinguish (verb); conflagration (noun); die out (verb); spark (noun); die down (verb); ashes (noun). “The region is a tinderbox, and it will only take a _____ to set the whole area on fire. The result will be a _____ that will burn out of control and that no force, not even United Nations Peacekeepers, will be able to _____. The fire will eventually _____, but I doubt it will ever completely _____. We can only hope something positive will eventually arise from the _____.”
8. The following matching exercise focuses on the expressions that can be found in the thesaurus at gesture: “Was the movie boring?” “Yes, it was a big yawn.” / “Did the announcement surprise people?” “Yeah, it raised eyebrows.” / “Did he speak freely about what happened?” “No, he was tightlipped.” / “Is he willing to do it?” “No, he needs a nudge.” / “Did you captain approve your request?” “No, he gave it the thumbs-down.” / “Well, it’s time to get to work.” “Yes, it’s time to roll up our sleeves.”

To the ESL / EFL teacher

1. Because figurative language is such an integral part of common, everyday language, we EFL / ESL teachers should teach the terms literal and figurative at the beginning level and say them at least as often as we say noun, verb, adjective, adverb, and collocation in our classrooms. I don't use the terms metaphor or idiom, because the former is so closely attached to literary studies and cognitive linguistics, and the latter is associated with dictionaries of idioms that include relatively useless and rarely used expressions like "It's raining cats and dogs." A basic question that all teachers can ask about any vocabulary item they teach is, "Can this be used figuratively?" In many cases, it can and (often) is, and this dictionary and thesaurus will help those teachers with that question. Just look up the word.
2. To explain figurative usage to our students, we can use the same language that we teach them in our lessons and that is used to define second and third senses, etc., for words in a conventional dictionary if we only consult it: "like," "as," "similar to," "equal to," "equivalent to," "comparison," "resemble," "suggest," "has the shape of," "has the role of," "acts as," etc.
3. "Extra" senses can provide real communicative utility. For example, a simple word like path can allow us and our students to talk about conduct, easiness and difficulty, and the future, not simply a walk from point A to point B. Figurative language can be oblique and subtle, and in my own experience it has allowed me to mention or discuss things with students that might otherwise have caused controversy and problems.
4. Students (an all of us) will encounter the figurative sense of a word far more often than the literal sense. Consider the word dinosaur. Literal dinosaurs disappeared from the earth long before humans: paleontologists study them. And yet, people nowadays will often encounter the figurative usage of dinosaur that relates to primacy, currency, decline & obsolescence and to past & present. Magnet is another example, and pitfall. I'm sure you can come up with your own examples.
5. Just about every part of speech can be used figuratively: nouns, verbs, adverbs, adjectives, and prepositions, even interjections. Seals are a magnet for sharks. He killed the proposal. She greeted me warmly. It was a sharp / stinging rebuke. I am with you. Her performance wowed me.
6. As English teachers, we all know the importance of collocation in vocabulary teaching, even if we are teaching old-fashioned materials that ignore it. Often there is a collocating preposition: Makkah is a magnet for Muslims. Or the phrase is pre-modified by a classifying adjective: a political firestorm; financial doping in soccer; an astronomical rate, a stellar record, etc. Most curriculums, including the ALC/DLI, do a poor job of teaching classifying modifiers. Collocation can reveal sets of subjects and objects, and it is an especially good way to recycle previously learned vocabulary.

7. Prepositions. In our dictionaries, a preposition's first sense is always spatial, and that is how we always teach it. When we teach in front of, we always teach it spatially: "The car is in front of the bus." But that same preposition can refer to the future: "She has her whole life in front of her." And it can also relate to proximity: "The answer is in front of you." Three prepositions relate to allegiance, support & betrayal: "I am for the measure. We stand behind the new law. I am with you in your attempts to change things." When it comes to hierarchy, a person can be above or below another person. To see a list of prepositions and their non-spatial meanings, look in the thesaurus under prep, adv, adj, particle.
8. We tend to think of the past, present and future as grammar. But the future can also relate to words like fossil, dinosaur, horizon, crystal ball, time capsule, etc. Or to persons like a fortuneteller, oracle or prophet. Time is very interesting. For example, time can seem like a place: "We have been here before" (in the past) and "Where do we go from here?" (in the future). Time can entail distance: "Spring is just around the corner," and "The Paris Olympics are still a long way off." In one conception of time, "the future is forward and the past is behind." See future and past & present and time in the thesaurus for possibilities.
9. Don't be afraid to think about and teach grammatical metaphor and fictive verbs. Grammatical metaphor simply provides alternatives to the structures we already teach. You can say, "There is a lamp in the corner." But you can also say, "A lamp stands in the corner." You can say, "We walked to town along the road" but you can also say, "The road took us to town." You can say, "I got home in early May," but you can also say, "Early May saw me back home." You can say, "I had a lot of problems," but you can also say, "I encountered / met with a lot of problems." "There has been..." can be restated as, "We have seen..." Offer both choices. We tend to teach the former and ignore the latter.
10. When you teach a "bland" verb, try to think of a synonym that is figurative: Can you help me, can you lend a hand? What did you find, what did you dig up? He betrayed me, he stabbed me in the back. Be patient, hold your horses. I support you, I am with you, I stand with you, I stand behind you, I will back you up, I've got your back! I understand, I see, I get it. Don't be afraid, you must resist him, stand up to him, take him on. Students will commonly acquire and productively use the figurative equivalent.
11. Never miss a chance to add value to a word. Is it also a shape? What are its parts? Is it a part of a proper noun? A geographical feature? The name of a company or product? Is there a euphemism for it? Does the word have an interesting origin and history? Can you use the word as a springboard for a bit of content?
12. As English teachers, we know all about teaching parts-wholes. Those parts are often figurative. A chair has legs and a back, a mouth has a roof, a book has a spine. A bed has a head and a foot. A mountain has foothills. Whole-parts like these are the basis of simple riddles we learn as children: What has legs but can't run, a back that can't bend? And you can use the first person pronoun to make such a riddle sound even more opaque and strange: “I have legs but can’t run, I have a back but it can’t bend... What am I?” Of course, your students will “turn the tables on you” and insist on stumping you with the riddles from their culture.

13. Try to think of and include a variety of subjects and objects for the grammar patterns you teach. Ali / the bookcase is standing in the corner. Sugar / Sara is sweet. Open the door / your book / your mind. A car / Winter is approaching. I’m allergic to penicillin / people who think they know it all. A millimeter / life is short. You can arrive at a place. You can arrive at an answer or solution.
14. Clines are always useful for organizing vocabulary in sets. In “Lessons and exercises” above, the first lesson involves organizing words relating to health & medicine on a cline. A similar lesson could be given based on words relating to temperature that relate to emotion. Our curriculums are good at teaching hot, warm, and cold. Less good at teaching tepid, or lukewarm, or combinations like boiling-hot and freezing-cold.
15. Sets and series are always useful for organizing vocabulary. Spring is a season, and we always teach “spring, summer, fall and winter” as a set, but we can also relate that same set to death & life, or to growth & development. In Saudi Arabia, when I introduced this word to my students, following the ALC/DLI curriculum, I used to give my adult military students the following riddle: “A happy dancing young girl in a green dress. A strong young man with yellow hair. A crying lady in a brown dress. A shouting angry old man with white hair... What are they?” Answer: the four seasons! Arab students appreciate such personification and especially appreciate symmetry. The fact that their climate has essentially two seasons does not make them any less interested in the seasons in my country; the goal of many of them is to graduate from the program and then be sent to the U.S. for follow-on training (FOT). Language related to a plant and the life cycle of a fire relate to the same concepts. Sweet, salty, bitter and sour can relate not only to taste but also to character & personality. Again, my military students enjoyed and appreciated the metaphoric extension.
16. An easy lesson is to simply think of something you or your students might be interested in. For example, students studying academic English should be very interested in words and expressions related to analysis, interpretation & explanation. An engineer might be interested in the language associated with infrastructure. Some teachers are interested in the expression of feeling, emotion & effect, and they will find a comprehensive listing of such language in the thesaurus. My adult military students in Saudi Arabia—the home of the Arabian horse—always enjoyed idioms associated with the horse, and I was also pleased to discover many of them shared my enthusiasm for boxing. Of course, they had their favorites! Nothing is so basic to all people as the hand, so try doing a lesson just devoted to that. Idioms range from help & assistance to oppression. And it is easy to pantomime expressions like hand out and give / lend a hand and have the upper / whip hand. Such a lesson would make a nice lesson in a place like Kosovo, where your classroom might be a café, your textbook is you, and where your students—poor as they are—will insist on paying for your coffee. You want to give a good lesson to students like that!

17. Expressions related to gesture and bodily reaction are easy to pantomime. I went to the director to get his approval and he gave me the thumbs up. / I didn't realize that, thank you for opening my eyes. / That film bored me, it was a big yawn. Pairs like these make easy matching exercises.
18. As mentioned above, a name for a person (pioneer, acolyte, steward, leper, butcher, warrior clown, etc.) is often used figuratively. You can find a list at person in this work. All teachers are aware of the sequence of grammar, and in Saudi Arabia, in military environments, a semi-insult like bully is a good way to exemplify it. "You are a bully!" Or, "You are a big bully!" Or, "You are such a bully! Use the negative imperative + noun pattern and you get, "Don't be a bully!" Use stop + being + noun and you have "Stop being a bully!" Or substitute donkey. Donkey is not a vocabulary item in the ALC/DLI, but everyone I taught in Saudi Arabia know it in English, and its connotation.
19. Use analogies; like metaphors, they compare and make connections. I usually introduce them in the following form: Stand up is to resist as _____ is to surrender. The center is to a circle as _____ is to a hurricane. Spring is to a young man as _____ is to an old man. A period of time is to the life of a man as _____ is to a book. Articles can be especially problematical and this is a chance to use them. When students give answers to analogies like these, even when they gave me the anticipated answer, I always ask them to explain their answers using complete sentences. Analogies like these can be used at the most basic level and students find them novel and interesting. A ship is to the sea as _____ is to the desert is one I often gave in Saudi Arabia. Don't forget to ask why.
20. Teachers can incorporate figurative language into routine classroom language. If your students get too noisy, you can say, "Hey, turn down the volume!" or "Lower the temperature!" or "Cool down" or "Keep cool!" or "Let's dial it back!" or "Don't be such a hothead!" If a student becomes too impatient, you can say, "Hold your horses!" Instead of asking if a student understands or not, you might ask, "Are you in the dark?" You can use lexicalized gestures to praise: "I salute you," "I applaud you," "I take my cap off to you." When a student's feelings get hurt, you can say, "A military man needs thick skin!" Students tend to hear, note, and acquire such figurative language, especially if it is repeated day in and day out. More importantly, though, it gives the figurative nature of language its due.
21. Feel free to say a little bit about the literal meaning for those words we use figuratively. If you ever teach or explain the figurative use of castaway, for example, you might spend a few minutes telling your students about those actual poor wretches on Tromelin Island in the Indian Ocean. At the entry for scuttle I mention two instances where entire fleets of ships were scuttled. Below the entry for amok is a quote from The Malay Archipelago by Alfred Russel Wallace about that practice. Below the entry for earthquake (effect) is a rather long entry from the same author, which will make those of us who have never experienced an earthquake think about how incredibly destabilizing it can be. In the entry for whirlwind is an eyewitness account of a black buran experienced in Lop Nur, Xinjiang, by Sven Hedin. At blizzard, I have included a short quote from V.K. Arseniev and Dersu about an actual blizzard, or purga. Below the entry for pioneer (person) in the dictionary, I note Rudyard Kipling's stirring poem "The Explorer." There are always a few students who will find that poem on the internet and read it, based on your recommendation.

22. Take a page from the quote from Emerson above and use the frames he uses to get your students thinking about metaphor. "Right means...; wrong means...; the crossing of a line means...; we say heart to express... ; a cunning man is...; attention is...; an effect is... Words and phrases for that last are entered in the category effect. They remind us that an effect is often thought of as a wave in a medium: ripples as in water, with the related word splash; waves in the air like a shock wave; and sound waves like reverberation and repercussion. That is the reason for expressions like: "His surprise resignation caused ripples / shock waves / reverberations around the world."
23. Get students to notice language use in longer passages of speech or text. Vocabulary choices are often predictable. For example, a crime story or crime podcast is bound to have words used figuratively based on hunting and searching & discovery. Articles about famous people will usually have figurative language relating to importance & significance. It's fun to read an article and identify sets like these.
24. Here's a good idea to make the figurative and the literal real to your students within the four walls of your classroom. First, consult the category of books & reading in the thesaurus of this work. Write "literal" on one side of the board, "figurative" on the other, hold up a book, and go to work. You might start with spine. You can say something like, "Look, do you see this part of the book here? Well, it's called the spine. And I have a spine! This is my spine! And I can break this book's spine, and I can break my own spine if I'm in a bad auto accident!" There will be many literal and figurative pairs for you to talk about with your students. The dictionary of collocations will give you attested examples of use and help you with the collocations. If you have a flair for the dramatic and a perfect sense of timing, as you no doubt do, because you are a teacher and you have read this far in the work, you will save "close the book" with its meaning of reconciliation, resolution & conclusion for the bell, the smiles, and the break.

An alphabetized list of the categories in the thesaurus

Consider the category color (2). What can colors relate / refer to? What can colors represent? When you visit that category in the thesaurus, you will see several subcategories that might give you some ideas for when you teach your lesson on colors. One subcategory is “proper name.” On the world map in my classroom in Saudi Arabia, I always enjoyed pointing out the “color” seas to my military students: the Red Sea; the Black Sea; the White Sea; the Yellow Sea. In the subcategory “character & personality” you will see the phrase, black sheep. I never failed to mention my “black-sheep” brother John to my students. In the subcategory “experience” is the word greenhorn. I always mentioned this, because I knew some students would pick the term up and chaff / guy one another with it. In the subcategory “feeling, emotion & effect” is blue, meaning sad. The question, “Are you blue?” never failed to make my students smile. Not because Arabs are literal minded—they talk about teachers having black and white hearts—but because the ALC/DLI is so relentlessly literal. And I can do all this in an introductory class, using the simplest grammar.

Now consider the category feeling, emotion & effect (1). How do we think of feelings, emotions and effects? How do we talk about those things? There are many subcategories in this category, and three of those subcategories are larger than the others: “direction,” “sensation,” and “temperature.” This corresponds exactly to the metaphors cognitive linguists have identified: HAPPY IS UP. SAD IS DOWN. AFFECTION IS WARMTH. EMOTIONAL EFFECT IS PHYSICAL CONTACT. If you combine bodily reaction and gesture, you get a fourth large sub-category. The ALC/DLI includes “to hurt one’s feelings,” which is figurative, based on sensation. I have used many expressions from this category in my classes, including ones like, “Are you down?” “Cheer up!” “I will lift your spirits,” “Cool off,” “Don’t be such a hothead,” “Don’t be so thin-skinned,” “A military man must have thick skin,” “You cut me!” etc.

♦ "Marines don't fight wars, they fight battles." (A Marine captain, Marjah, Afghanistan, 2010.)

♦ "With human corpses, human excrement, and rotting rations scattered across Peleliu's ridges, the blow flies or bluebottle flies underwent a population explosion. Those nasty insects were so large, so gluttonous, and so lazy that some could scarcely fly... It was revolting, to say the least, to watch big fat blowflies leave a corpse and swarm into our C rations... Each morning, just before sunrise, when things were fairly quiet, I could hear a steady humming sound like bees in a hive as the flies became active with the onset of daylight. They rose off the corpses, refuse, rocks, brush, and wherever else they had settled for the night like a swarm of bees. There numbers were incredible." (With the Old Breed by E.B. Sledge.)

A century later such battlefield tourism would flourish even if its more gruesome collecting tastes were suppressed." (The site of the Battle of Waterloo, in Belgium. From The Work of the Dead: A Cultural History of Mortal Remains by Thomas W. Laqueur.)

♦ Years ago they had marched thousands of miles to legendary battlefields... they had once gone to the ends of the earth and seen beyond the farthest horizon... We looked at these men in blue, existing in pensioned security, honored and respected by all... and we were in awe of them. Those terrible names out of the history books—Gettysburg, Shiloh, Stone's River, Cold Harbor—came alive through these men. They had been there... and to watch them was to be deeply moved." ♦ This echoes the title of the great 1977 Richard Attenborough film, about Operation Market Garden during World War II. Its meaning is to overreach. The actual operation was a noble and heroic attempt to end the war early. It nearly succeeded. The unintended consequences were horrible, however, in the parts of Holland that weren't liberated: the Dutch famine of 1944-1945. Market Garden started September 17, 1944. Anne Frank was apprehended by the Gestapo on 4 August 1944, and she died in Bergen-Belsen, perhaps in March, 1945. Allusions like these are a double-edged sword. On the one hand, they memorialize. But as time goes on and people forget, they trivialize.

♦ Florence Nightingale was known as “the Lady with the Lamp.” She was not, in fact, a nurse. She was an administrator, logistician, statistician, advocate, reformer, founder, writer, etc. And beloved by all those to whom she administered “stump pillows.” There’s a collocation for you.

♦ “She became the center and the hope of the sick men’s lives. Their letters home were filled with her, and through these letters her name became a byword in thousands of English homes. ‘What a comfort it was to see her pass even,’ wrote one of her men, in the most famous of all letters about Florence Nightingale. ‘She would speak to one and nod and smile to as many more; but she could not do it to all, you know. We lay there by hundreds. But we could kiss her shadow as it fell, and lay our heads on the pillow again, content.’ / This was the passage that inspired the American poet Longfellow to write the poem on which the popular image of Florence Nightingale is based: Lo! in that hour of misery / A lady with a lamp I see / Pass through the glimmering gloom, / And flit from room to room. / And slow, as in a dream of bliss, / This speechless sufferer turns to kiss / Her shadow as it falls / Upon the darkening walls." (From Florence Nightingale by Ruth Fox Hume.)

♦ "In 1809 [the Maoris] captured the vessel Boyd, further up the coast, and killed and ate its crew..." (The Boyd massacre in New Zealand. From The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead. You would not wish to have been anywhere near this event!)

♦ "I collected here a great many specimens of the beautiful Paradisea Guillelmi, in my opinion one of the most exquisite of all the Paradisea; also a great number of rare and new papilios. After spending a few days here we returned to Simbang in time to catch the Ysabel, which took us back to Stephansort." (Through New Guinea and the Cannibal Countries by Herbert Cayley-Webster, 1898.)

♦ In World War I, the western part of the Island of New Guinea was controlled by the Dutch (neutral), the southeast was controlled by Britain, and the northeast was controlled by Germany. Hermann Philipp Detzner wrote a book about his adventures: "Four Years Among the Cannibals in the Interior of German New Guinea under the Imperial Flag, from 1914 until the Armistice."

The 'sweeper' belongs to the bottom caste; he is the lowest of the low—all other castes despise him and scorn his office. But that does not trouble him. His caste is a caste, and that is sufficient for him, and so he is proud of it, not ashamed... A footnote by Major Sleeman's editor, Mr. Vincent Arthur Smith, says... 'The sweepers cannot be readily coerced, because no Hindoo or Mussulman would do their work to save his life, nor will he pollute himself by beating the refractory scavenger.' They certainly do seem to have the whip-hand... Just like a milk-route; or like a London crossing-sweepership." (Following the Equator: A Journey Around the World by Mark Twain.)

[Delighted laughter and clapping from the audience.] / "It's such a good question. My brief answer is no. [Nervous laughter from audience.] You know, the Peloponnesian war, it was the Spartan mothers who said, 'Come back bearing your shield or on it....' I'm not sure that women are by nature kinder or gentler." (Margaret MacMillan, "War and Humanity," the Reith Lectures, BBC.)

♦ "Wars are almost always begun with gaiety and lightness of spirit, with cheers and songs. The day after the surrender of Fort Sumter the entire land, both North and South, blazed with an ardent and confident patriotism, although the patriotism of the South was precisely opposite to that of the North. The streets of the cities were colorful with flags and smart uniforms. Ladies waved handkerchiefs and threw kisses. The barrooms did the largest day's business in the history of the nation, up to that time... The churches were kept open all day for the saying of bloodthirsty prayers. God, as usual, was on both side." (A New American History by W.E. Woodward.)

♦ The metaphor of a compass is a very trendy cliché in writing and speaking nowadays, and it is obvious that almost everyone utilizing the word has never owned or used one. The compass doesn't waver, the compass needle does. The compass doesn't go off course, the user of the compass does. What in the world does it mean to "realign" a compass "once wires get crossed," or to be "tuned in to" your moral compass? Is there really a compass or something like it inside us? Are compasses ordinarily distinguishable as "strong" or "weak"? How can a compass "waver off true north" when its sole job is to indicate north! Read or listen to "Resetting Your Moral Compass After An 'Ethical Slip,'" NPR, Talk of the Nation, April 8, 2013.

♦ In Churchill: Walking With Destiny, Andrew Roberts says that Churchill, in 1940, "vigilantly guarded against mission-creep." That phrase struck a very wrong note with me. Luckily, Wikipedia has an entry: "The phrase first appeared in 1993, in articles published in the Washington Post and in the New York Times concerning the United Nations peacekeeping mission during the Somali Civil War." Roberts could have put the phrase in quotation marks, or added "in what is today called X," as he rightly did when he used "groupthink" in another part of his book, but for some reason he didn't. This is an example of presentism.

~ are historically metaphors

♦ "The cardinal points are always, historically, metaphors. West is the area of promise for Westerners—follow the sun. The allure of the north—it's the gate to Heaven, as native people say. The fear of the south starts with Captain Cook. The east is always behind you, you know where you came from." (The photographer Thomas Joshua Cooper, from "The Ends of the Earth" by Dana Goodyear, The New Yorker, October 7, 2019.)

♦ "As the sky breaks open its fans around him, and shimmers / And into its northern gates he rises / Snarling, complete, in the joy of a weasel... ("For the Last Wolverine" by James Dickey. A beautiful description of the aurora borealis.)

♦ "Gog and Magog were generally located in the extreme north." (Early maps, based on the Bible.)

♦ "The destination, and the real north of life is that you're here only for a short time." (The Mexican filmmaker Guillermo del Toro.)

♦ "I'm goin' way down south... / Way down to Mexico way... / Ain't no hangman gonna / He ain't gonna put a rope around me..." ("Hey Joe" by Jimmie Hendrix.)

♦ "Why care for these dead bodies? They really have no friends but the worms or fishes. Their owners were coming to the New World, as Columbus and the Pilgrims... I saw their empty hulks that came to land; but they themselves, meanwhile, were cast upon some shore yet further west, toward which we are all tending, and which we shall reach at last..." ("The Shipwreck" by Henry David Thoreau, writing about the Irish immigrant ship St. John.)

♦ "It's a mile to your objective now, but it's a mile of thrills... A one-pounder in a hedge scares you with several well-placed shots before it 'goes west' [is destroyed]." (A member of a tank crew in World War I.)

♦ "The Montana doctor, McCray, had tried to find a serum to guard his fellow citizens and one morning woke up with bloodshot eyes and an ache in his bones. In ten days McCray had gone West to join McClintic..." (McCray died, as had McClintic before him. From Men against Death by Paul De Kruijff.)

♦ "The East signified luck to the ancient soothsayers; the sunrise represented life and the beginning of things. These old time prophets judged the future by the flight of birds. If the sacred birds flew east when the priests released them from their cages, it meant good fortune. This superstition was taken over by the Christians [in the architecture of early churches]. In these ancient Roman augurs, however, if the sacred birds happened to fly west it presaged disaster, for the early fathers associated the setting sun with death and destruction." (Word Origins and their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D.)

♦ "With the morning came the minatory prayers, the hoarse clanging bells and the procession westward along the busiest streets of London, from Newgate to Tyburn, the present site of Marble Arch. Each condemned man sat in the cart facing the rising sun, with a noose bound to his chest." (The Fatal Shore: The Epic of Australia's Founding by Robert Hughes.)

♦ Barbara Dancygier and Eve Sweetser have a wonderful discussion of up-down metaphors for time in Figurative Language, and give "high / low Middle Ages" as a French example. They mention that the metaphor might relate to "reverence for the past" in French and Chinese. But the basis for the metaphor might also relate to topography. Sound travels farther in all directions from a high point like a mountain peak, as people of mountain cultures know, from Tibet through Afghanistan and Switzerland to the Southern Appalachians.

♦ This is an instance of up-down metaphors for time and contrasts with up (up to now, up to date, etc.). Time seems to come down from the past and then up to the present. Perhaps this reflects a cyclical view of time, or simply a hilly topography.

♦ How can downhill mean something easily accomplished and also mean decline and failure? J.P. Postgate, Litt.D., Prof. of Comparative Philology, addressed this question in an Inaugural Address delivered at the opening of the Session 1896-7, at University College, London. He said its relationship to the meaning of easiness was an obvious metaphor. As for decline, he explained that at the time of Plautus, who used the word in both senses, "Roman waggons and carriages had no efficient brakes." In addition, Postgate mentioned that when Plautus used the word for decline or failure, it was always in contrast with a flatter level.

♦ "Winter horseshoes are equipped with little spikes that give a horse traction on snow and ice, and prevent it from slipping. Without them, a horse can neither tow a wagon uphill, nor use them as brakes on the way down. In the Russian winter of 1812, this spelt disaster for Napoleon's reduced force. Horses in summer shoes would have 'fallen down underneath whatever it was they were towing,' in the words of Bernie Tidmarsh, one of Britain's leading farriers. 'They wouldn't have got any grip going downhill any more than they would have going up,' he says. 'The end result would have been broken legs and mutilated limbs.' In some cases the horses were butchered for food while still alive by starving soldiers." ("Napoleon's failure: For the want of a winter horseshoe," by Saul David, BBC, 8 February 2012.)

- ♦ "The sensation produced by an earthquake is never to be forgotten. We feel ourselves in the grasp of a power to which the wildest fury of the winds and waves are as nothing; yet the effect is more a thrill of awe than the terror which the mere boisterous war of the elements produces. There is a mystery and an uncertainty as to the amount of danger we incur, which gives greater play to the imagination, and to the influences of hope and fear. These remarks apply only to a moderate earth-quake. A severe one is the most destructive and the most horrible catastrophe to which human beings can be exposed." the Aha! instant in cognitive science, the ~

♦ This word is Greek and translates as, "I found it!" Its utterance is associated with the scholar Archimedes and hydrostatics. The word is the state motto of California and refers to the discovery of gold and the Californian Gold Rush.

♦ "And then came this crucial moment...a eureka moment, and the light went off in Semmelweis' head... This was the final bit of evidence that he needed... and it was at this point that everything came together...and all of the sudden it made perfect sense and he knew that he had the answer." (The great Ignaz Semmelweis autopsied his good friend Jacob Kolletschka and connected lack of hand hygiene with puerperal (childbed) fever. While today he is known as "the saviour of mothers," at the time his ideas were dismissed by the medical establishment. As John Snow's ideas had been dismissed, and Thomas Aitchison Latta's. From BBC, Sounds, Great Lives, "Ignaz Semmelweis.")

♦ "We were returning to the bungalow for tea and suddenly he shouted, 'That's it! It must be a sphere...large enough to hold two people... It will be made of steel lined with thick glass. It will contain a proper store of solidified air, concentrated food, water... One might go to the moon!' (The First Men on the Moon by H.G. Wells.)

♦ "The [camel] opened his jaws as far as they would go, and froth, mucous and black bile spilled out. Ah, black bile—sign of the evil eye. The soothsayers all agreed on that. So, he had been envied for his [camel]. The evil eye had been behind everything that had happened. According to the teaching of the soothsayers, envy is stronger than poison. And the eye of the envier is deadlier than a poisoned arrow, the blow of a sword, or the thrust of a dagger. It's deadlier than any weapon. So when did the envious thugs cast their eye on him?" (Ukhayyad realizes the source of his camel's sickness. From Gold Dust by Ibrahim al-Koni.)

♦ "King Alfonso of Spain was reported to have the evil eye. In 1923 he paid an official visit to Italy. Several sailors of the fleet sent to greet him were washed overboard; there was an explosion in one of the submarines; an ancient cannon fired in the King's honor blew up, killing its crew; and a naval officer with whom the King shook hands collapsed and died shortly afterward. / During the King's tour of Lake Gleno a dam burst, drowning 50 people and making 500 homeless. / The Italian dictator Benito Mussolini, who was terrified of the evil eye, refused to meet Alfonso personally..." ♦ "Over there, so Myra used to say, the Little People dwell in caves on the mountainsides and under the waterfalls. They are a tiny folk, hardly reaching to a man's knee, but well formed and featured, with long hair reaching nearly to the ground. / They are fond of music and of dancing. Sometimes, on a summer day, when all else was silent about the cab, we would hear a far-off mysterious throbbing somewhere in that glen, and Myra would say to me 'Listen: it is the Little People beating their drums!' / She said they were kind to mortals who think kindly of them; but they play tricks on busybodies and other folk that they do not like. If a man gets too curious and spies on the Little People when they are at their games, or tries to enter their caves without being invited, or pokes behind the small waterfalls with a stick, they will cast a spell upon him so that he loses his way in the woods and goes wandering about in a daze. / When one finds anything pretty in the woods or among the rocks he must say 'Little People, I want to take this,' for it may belong to them, and if he does not ask permission they will stone him away from the place. / Myra used to hint to me that old Grandpa Dale brought most of his bright crystals and colored stones from over there; and so, she said, he must be a great friend of the Little People, or they would not let him find such things, or would make them dissolve and fade away before he could take them out of the glen." (Smoky Mountain Magic by Horace Kephart.)

Beneath them, on the ground, was a sea of fire. Everything was burning, grass, fallen leaves, trunks, logs, stumps. We could hear living trees groan and burst from the heat. The yellow smoke rolled upwards in enormous billows. Waves of fire raced over the ground. Tongues of flame wound round the stumps and licked the red-hot rocks... I saw a wild boar make his way across the river, a big snake swim sinuously over, and a woodpecker flew from tree to tree like a mad thing, while a nutcracker never ceased its raucous chatter..."

* In Krakatoa, Simon Winchester points out that volcanic eruptions are often associated with death and disaster and yet in fact they are one of a number of reasons why the Earth is "just right" for life. The earth is just the right distance from the sun, allowing for water in liquid form. Its size is just right, too, with just the right gravitational pull to maintain an atmosphere. It has just the right number of volcanoes of the right size to create and recycle elements essential "to the making and maintenance of organic life." Finally, the volcanic eruptions are often the result of the movement of great plates, which can't exist on planets that are too hot or too cold.

♦ Viva voce is Medieval Latin for "with a living mouth." If you hear something viva voce it means somebody told you. It has come to mean "word of mouth."

♦ Hawaii has the "coconut wireless" or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via "the talking drum." From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Sahrawis: "I heard it on the wind." Americans can "hear it through the grapevine," or hear a report or account through the rumor mill. Italians say "per sentito dire" which basically means, "heard it said," and they hear gossip "voci di corridoio" which means "hall voice" or "voices in the hall." These systems operate by word-of-mouth, and, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ "From time immemorial, it has been said that desert winds carry with them all kinds of rumor and report—especially stories of scandal and outrage." (Gold Dust by Ibrahim al-Koni.)

♦ "They've got a gallows-bad reputation, but, you know what a place the beach is for talking." / "The beach, if you don't know is the name of the gossip mill of white derelicts and rough customers that hang around your South Sea island ports. You'll find captains and traders too fond of their grog and properly down on their luck. I'll admit, I was fond of the gin myself back then..." (The Beach of Falesa by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ "You may take it for a fact that anything of this kind is not only noticed and discussed by a man's own race but by some hundred and fifty natives as well... [T]he news flew, in the usual mysterious fashion, from mouth to mouth, till Bisesa's duenna heard of it and told Bisesa." (The affecting and horrible "Beyond the Pale" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "You're sure you've took no 'arm?" cried Mrs. Cloke, who had heard the news by farm-telegraphy, which is older but swifter than Marconi's. / 'No. I'm perfectly well,' Sophie protested." ("An Habitation Enforced" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "Word around the campfire for me was...that there was at least speculation, maybe informed speculation, that..." (A sports analyst.)

♦ "Gossip is a fearful thing"—this phrase was found in the note left by the film star Ruan Langyu after she took her own life." ("On 'Gossip Is a Fearful Thing' by Lu Xun, from Jottings under Lamplight, edited by Eileen J. Cheng and Kirk A. Denton.)

♦ He who gossips to you will gossip about you!

♦ David's painting, "Napoleon Crossing the Alps," shows a rock with Hannibal's name inscribed on it.

♦ Hannibal is also associated with his great military victory over the Romans at the Battle of Cannae, a double envelopment that is still taught at military schools. However, he failed to follow up on his victory, which has become at least one definition of a "Hannibalic victory."

♦ Hannibal learned of the defeat of his brother's relief force when the Romans delivered his brother's head to his camp. Carthage, of course, would end up being razed to the ground.

♦ The military man praised as the "American Hannibal" for his heroism in Canada and particularly at the Battle of Saratoga was none other than Benedict Arnold, who, as the supervisor of West Point, schemed to deliver that strongpoint on the Hudson to the British. Unlike other notorious traitors, he lived out his days in relative peace and prosperity and died in London.

♦ "The fox knows many tricks, the hedgehog, one good one."
(Archilochus.)

♦ A hedgehog defense involves an isolated stronghold or strongpoint which can be surrounded yet still survive, in modern times, by aerial resupply. The strongpoints are capable of all-around (perimeter) defense. The Battle of Khe Sanh (1968) was such a defense. Hedgehogs or strongpoints can be bypassed but will slow an attacker down and expose the enemy's rear to attack. Problems include the fact that strongpoints can simply be bypassed (as happened to the French at the start of World War II) or that the enemy can prevent aerial resupply, as happened to the 6th Army under Paulus at Stalingrad in 1943 and the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. In Vietnam, the hedgehog concept had worked at the Battle of Na San but proved to be a decisive catastrophe for the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. Many wondered if the Battle of Khe Sanh in 1968 would be a Dien Bien Phu for the US, but the marines managed to hang on.

in the US Shakespeare has the reputation of being ~

♦ "JUNK SHAKESPEARE. A family-friendly version of the hit show "DRUNK "Shakespeare"! This Off-Broadway comedy combines a classic Shakespeare play with extreme food challenges—trying to discover the original intent of William Shakespeare. We don't know what he was eating...maybe it was Doritos?"

♦ "He's not a dignified old greybeard, like you know he's not Sir Laurence Olivier or Liam Neeson, he'd be like you know this 21-year-old surfer dude from California with like sick abs." (The 48-year-old George O'Connor thinking about the Greek God Zeus. From "Graphic novelist O'Connor turns ancient gods and goddesses into modern superheroes," NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, April 16, 2022.)

♦ "It's a little bit like, say, Spitting Image has done in the past doing fur the present moment... On the eve of Good Friday, a man on the run from life finds himself in a deep dark wood, and he spends Easter weekend on a rollercoaster...Let's have a quick listen to Canto 26 here." ("Dante's Divine Comedy mined for 21st-century meaning," BBC, 11 Jan 2021, with BBC Europe Editor Katya Adler.)

♦ "The short-list for this year's Turner prize doesn't feature any individual artists for the first time. Instead, the contenders are all collectives, which created artwork ranging from a 24-hour fundraising rave to the use of food to help understand the workings of the world... There's a strong political thread. The raves... are part of what is described as queer, trans and intersex black and people of color radical activism." (BBC Six O'clock News, 07/05/2021. J.M.W. Turner was born 1775 and died 1851. Many people know him for his painting, "The Fighting Temeraire.")

♦ "[F]or me this is just two lads kissing, fully clothed, what could be more normal than that? If you don't like the picture, you're not going to like the book." (Douglas Stuart about the cover of his second novel Young Mungo. From "Douglas Stuart: Booker Prize-winning author 'feels like an impostor,'" by Rebecca Jones, April 14, 2022.)

♦ "Alex Humphreys asks if video games should be appreciated as a form of art." (BBC.)

♦ "Is the nude selfie a new art form?" (BBC Culture.)

♦ "There is an almost kind of fetishization of street art these days." (Banksy, etc.)

♦ "This is the 70th birthday of one of the most important works of art in American history. (Sound of opening music to the TV show I love Lucy.) Yeah, think of it as a work of art..." (Steve Inskeep, NPR, Morning Edition, Feb 5 2021.)

♦ "Spielberg's Close Encounters of the Third Kind signaled a shift towards broader popcorn sensibilities." (Versus 2001: A Space Odyssey, etc.)

♦ "In the modern United States, food sculpture is the art of the people." ("A Toast To Butter Sculpture, The Art That Melts The Hearts Of The Masses" by Tove Danovich, NPR, The Salt, June 25, 2015.)

♦ He threw a three-hit masterpiece. (Baseball.)

♦ The great Shaquille O'Neal, one of the greatest NBA players of all time, has been referred to as the Big Baryshnikov. And Lynn Swann was canonized as the Baryshnikov of football for his acrobatic receptions at Super Bowl X.

♦ "Maybe I'll lean into the pain narrative, write that and get a good advance, ya'll pay me for that, right." (Fantasy author L.L. McKinney.)

♦ "Our hosts] gave us some fat pork, corn bread, and a kind of coffee, made, I think, out of burned peas. But it was warm... Hunger made that breakfast the most delicious we had in six months." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby, about his service during the Civil War.)

♦ "Hunger was now torturing us. The Cossacks sat gloomily round the fire and hardly spoke. Hoping to forget their hunger a little, the men tried to sleep. I lay down too, but could not sleep. Anxiety and doubt tormented me. If we did not manage to kill something tomorrow, or reach the Iman, things would be desperate indeed. In the summer a man can carry on without food for several days, but in the winter hunger kills quickly." ("Dersu," by V. K. Arseniev.)

♦ "The mental adjustment took longer. It was a continual surprise to encounter no queues at food shops—'like a man who braces himself to pick up a heavy suitcase,' wrote Ginzburg, 'and finds it empty.' The words 'I'm hungry,' recently so charged with desperation and despair, only slowly reverted to their old function of expressing an ordinary desire for lunch." (Leningrad by the great writer Anna Reid.)

♦ "Man, you eat all the goddamn oranges and all the goddamn bananas you want." (An American merchant-marine sailor in 1947, to Tom Lantos (1928-2008), who was traveling from Europe to the US on a converted troop ship. Lantos, a Holocaust survivor, had discovered a big basket of oranges and a big basket of bananas in the mess and had asked the sailor, 'Should I take an orange or a banana?' On hearing the sailor, Lantos thought, "Then I knew I was in paradise." He went on to become the lone Holocaust survivor to serve in the US Congress. He was admitted to the US because he had been awarded an academic scholarship to study in the US on the basis of an essay he had written about the US president Franklin D. Roosevelt.)

♦ "There is always trouble if meat is not divided by lot. Someone immediately says that he has been given more than his share, and tries to hand a piece to someone else. Then there is much arguing and swearing 'by God!' with everyone insisting that he has been given too much, and finally a deadlock ensues which can only be settled by casting lots for the meat—as should have been done in the first place. I have never heard a man grumble that he has received less than his share. Such behaviour would be inconceivable to the Bedu, for they are careful never to appear greedy, and quick to notice anyone who is. I remember the story of a destitute Bedu boy, who told his mother that he liked dining when there was no moon, for then his companions could not see how much food he took. His mother said, 'Sit with them in the dark and cut at a piece of rope with your knife turned the wrong way round.' The boy did so that very night. There was no moon and it was very dark, but as he picked up the knife a dozen voices called out, 'You have got it the wrong way round!'" (Wilfred Thesiger, "Arabian Sands.")

♦ Bedouins will appoint a man to divide the food into portions. Each man will take a portion, but never one he thinks is larger than the other portions. And so, the last portion goes to the man who divided the food, and if his portion is larger, he will eat shame. And so he is very careful to divide the portions equally.

♦ One third food. One third water. One third empty. (What the stomach is for, according to a Bedouin.)

It is said a Tuareg can survive in the desert for nine days on just three dates, if it is necessary. On the first day, he will eat the skin of one date. On the second day, he will consume the meat of that one date. And on the third day he will suck the stone of that one date. And so on for nine days. On the tenth day, however, he will die.

♦ "He who eats his fill while his neighbor goes without food is not a believer."

♦ "It is a fact that if you are hungry and you see somebody eating something you would like to have your teeth in too, spit will flood to your mouth and you will swallow to make a noise. That noise Shani made as I watched her. Then I saw her eyes, and they were on my can. / 'Why no home for dinner to-day?' I asked her... / Next morning I went to school with my can packed tight... Not a word from my mother, only a little smile. / So Shani and me sat together to have dinner every day in my mother's smile..." (How Green Was My Valley by Richard Llewellyn.)

moral injury Olympics

the ~ (disparagement of term)

♦ According to the Wikipedia entry, the term “moral distress” originated in the 1980s in reference to health-care workers. Through “concept inflation” or “co-option,” the construct has since been applied to soldiers, police, firefighters, EMTs, legal defenders and lawyers, people in child and adult protective services, and even to veterinarians, leading inevitably to the construct's disparagement: “moral injury Olympics.”

♦ [A quiet card game in the rear was disturbed by the shots of a sniper in a tree. A soldier from the West, a crack shot, dealt with the problem.] “That gray squirrel is pretty frisky, and I must stop his fun to stop him spoiling ours.” He drew a bead on the man in the tree and fired. As the Confederate sharpshooter came crashing through the branches to the ground, the Westerner sat down and asked: ‘What's trumps?’ He seemed as unconcerned as if he had killed a mosquito that had been annoying him. / ...[B]ehind all this was constantly present to our eyes and mind the scene of a great stream, a procession, so to speak of human souls on their way to eternity.” (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. ♦ On the 6th of May the Yukon began to rise rapidly, lifting the ice, which, however, remained fast in front of the town... The sight was one to inspire respect. When a big floe, forty feet across, struck the front of the barrier, it half rose out of the water, then dived under, or turned on edge, crunched into the front with a dull roar, and remained there... At four o'clock on the morning of the 8th the cry was raised, 'The ice is going out!' and everybody rushed out in time to see the bridge of ice crack, groan, then slowly push together and stop; then slowly, slowly the whole mass began to move, and in a few minutes there was nothing but a swift river, with cakes of ice as big as cabins strewn along the banks...' you have described him as a ~ (Sunny Balwani)
Asaji, the ~... (in Kurosawa's Throne of Blood)

this ~ who led this man astray (a royal socialite)

♦ The play Macbeth is usually thought of in terms of manipulation, ambition, hate and revenge. On the other hand, the 2015 film Macbeth, directed by Justin Kurzel, portrays a love story. (See "Macbeth Without Evil" by Andrew O'Hagan, The New York Review, December 17, 2015.) And more recently, Naveen Andrews, who plays Sunny Balwani in the Hulu series The Dropout, compared his character to Lady Macbeth, and suggested that the story was about how far his character would go for love! (See "The Dropout's Naveen Andrews Saw Sunny Balwani as Lady Macbeth" by Roxana Hadadi, Vulture. In other words, what the epithet suggests can change as the work is interpreted through the generations.)

wherever we land

~ on that question scientifically (COVID / = decide)

♦ This is often used with wh-question words: how did it land; where will it land; when will it land... It seems to be connected with the idea of something being "up in the air." It is a natural metaphor for people who are accustomed to flying and airports. In Bhutan, I suspect the equivalent expression is, "So, where does this yak stop?"

♦ One meaning of land means arrive. Another means "to affect you." Yet another meaning seems to be "decide."

♦ "It's become, how do I say customary to say, to thank service members like yourself, for your service. I think that's an acknowledgement that a lot of people who came back from Vietnam in particular that the country did them dirty, you know, did not respect what they had personally sacrificed even if people did not like or agree with the overall mission, right, or the overall conflict, okay, so, I think people want to do better, and, it has been, you know, one thanks people who served like yourself for your service, how does that land with you." (NPR's Michel Martin interviewing Laura Jeeded, author of "Afghanistan Meant Nothing." Jeeded was gentle in her answer.)

♦ An opening article of The New Yorker's "The Talk of the Town" begins, "The legal landscape of the past weeks and months has prompted questions of..." The cliché is pervasive and sanctioned, even when dully used.

♦ The landscape can change if you move through it, in a car or a bus or on a train, for example. Otherwise, only great periods of time or catastrophic events like volcanic eruptions can alter the landscape. For example, the site of the great battle of Thermopylae between the Spartans and Persians is gone.

◆ Cars have their own language—clunks, clanks, squeals, squeaks, and rattles—which can say a lot about a vehicle's health."

◆ "If you grew up in a black household, Ebonies [copies of Ebony Magazine] were everywhere... It's one of our languages." (Rosa Duffy, bookstore owner and Ebony Magazine collector, about the transformational magazine that was intended to be Life Magazine for Blacks. Once a pillar of the Black community, this great magazine has fallen on hard times, and is now only available online. You would think some US philanthropist would endow a monthly hard-copy version of it in perpetuity. Sadly, not yet.)

◆ "[Jake] Paul was fluent in the language of YouTube, where he came across as a familiar type: the high-school jock, popular and gregarious... / His body of work is filled with dubious stunts...and with mind-numbing repetition of the word, 'bro.' / [His videos] have drawn more than seven billion views; that figure, which approaches the population of this planet, does not account for the innumerable videos that summarize or criticize the ones that Paul has posted..." ("Punching Down" by Kelefa Sanneh, The New Yorker, November 8, 2021.)

◆ "Those instructions [from the judge], I'm a lawyer and I couldn't understand them... They've gotten to be too much. They're legalese. And jurors tend to go by the smell test. Does it seem right? Does it seem wrong. And that's what we wanted the jury to do." (Mark Richards, Kyle Rittenhouse's attorney, speaking to Ailsa Chang. From "Kyle Rittenhouse's defense attorney discusses the trial and acquittal," NPR, All Things Considered, Nov. 19, 2021.)

◆ "The language a writer uses to create a world is that world, and Franzen's strenuously contemporary and therefore juvenile language is a world in which nothing important can happen. Madame Bovary's marriage sucked, Heathcliff was into Catherine: these words fail the context not just because they are of our own time. There is no import in things that 'suck,' no drama in someone's being 'into' someone else. A writer like Franzen, who describes two lovers as 'fucking,' trivializes their relationship. The result is boredom." ("Smaller Than Life," by B. R. Myers, The Atlantic Magazine, October, 2010.)

(An academic who claimed "identities of color," including Black Caribbean, North African Blackness, US rooted Blackness, Caribbean rooted Bronx Blackness, Boricua...)

♦ "Correct; well said. Glazers = leeches" (A disgruntled Man U fan on a BBC HYS after the latest loss to Liverpool. 282 upvotes. 30 downvotes.)

♦ "During our excursions we found masses of wild strawberries but where we found the best we also found the most leeches. I knew from my reading that these creatures are the plague of many Himalayan valleys, and now learned from personal experience how helpless one is against them. They drop from trees on men and animals and creep through all the openings in one's clothes, even the eyelets in one's shoes. If one tears them off one loses more blood than if one lets them drink their fill, when they fall off by themselves. Some of the valleys are infested to such a degree by leeches that one simply cannot protect oneself against them. The best way of keeping them out is by wearing socks and trousers steeped in salt." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "Our first day's march lay through patches of forest, clearings, and Malay villages, and was pleasant enough... The next day, the country got wilder... We passed through extensive forests, along paths often up to our knees in mud, and were much annoyed by the leeches for which this district is famous. These little creatures infest the leaves and herbage by the side of the paths, and when a passenger comes along they stretch themselves out at full length, and if they touch any part of his dress or body, quit their leaf and adhere to it. They then creep on to his feet, legs, or other part of his body and suck their fill, the first puncture being rarely felt during the excitement of walking. On bathing in the evening we generally found half a dozen or a dozen on each of us, most frequently on our legs, but sometimes on our bodies, and I had one who sucked his fill from the side of my neck, but who luckily missed the jugular vein. There are many species of these forest leeches. All are small, but some are beautifully marked with stripes of bright yellow. They probably attach themselves to deer or other animals which frequent the forest paths, and have thus acquired the singular habit of stretching themselves out at the sound of a footstep or of rustling foliage..."
