♦ "For the first time in my life I beheld a raging forest fire at close quarters, a fearful spectacle! Enormous cedars, gripped by the flame, were blazing like colossal torches. Beneath them, on the ground, was a sea of fire. Everything was burning, grass, fallen leaves, trunks, logs, stumps. We could hear living trees groan and burst from the heat. The yellow smoke rolled upwards in enormous billows. Waves of fire raced over the ground. Tongues of flame wound round the stumps and licked the red-hot rocks... I saw a wild boar make his way across the river, a big snake swim sinuously over, and a woodpecker flew from tree to tree like a mad thing, while a nutcracker never ceased its raucous chatter..." The sentence [for desertion to the enemy] was read and the provost-marshal drew a cap over the man's eyes. Then the officer gave the stern commands: 'Get ready, aim, fire!' Eleven bullets struck the young man; still he was not dead. The provost-marshal was obliged to use his own revolver, to put him out of pain. Scenes like this jarred my nerves much more than a battle. And now, when more than a quarter of a century has passed since this took place, it causes a shuddering sensation to think of it; still more to write all the circumstances of such a dreadful spectacle." ♦ "To strip of blubber or skin: flense a whale. Dutch / Danish / Norwegian.)

♦ "Before oil, there was whale oil."

♦ "We stopped killing whales for oil only when kerosene and finally electric bulbs provided better and cheaper lighting."

♦ "We will make electricity so cheap that only the rich will burn candles." (Thomas Edison, December, 1879.)

♦ "The first great oil fortunes in the United States were established not by Texans poking into the hard-baked earth, but by New England mariners roaming the seas in search of whales... Blacksmiths made whaling irons and harpoons, rivets, and nails; coopers made casks; boatwrights fashioned sturdy whaleboats from local timber; outfitters stocked all manner of goods for voyages that often lasted three or four years; artisans fashioned sails and rigging; managers and clerks tabulated profits and losses, expenses, insurance costs, and wages, and kept track of the ever-changing price per barrel of oil. For the sailors there were boarding houses, saloons that sold delirium and death, dance halls, and brothels. An equally furious and busy industry dedicated itself to converting oil and whalebone into lamp oil, watch oil, candles, hairpins, and corsets. America ran on the by-products of slaughtered whales. Whale oil greased the nation's machines and illuminated its nights. Their oil lubricated watches, clocks and guns. Wealthy young women wore corsets of whalebone and perfume containing ambergris, a waxy substance found in the whale's intestines. At the top of a sperm whale's head was a case containing up to 500 gallons of pure, fine oil, just waiting to be scooped up. At the end of a long voyage, a fortunate ship might groan back toward home port bulging with 4,000 barrels of oil—worth more than $100,000. (Hefty: The Genius and Madness of America's First Female Tycoon by Charles Slack.)

♦ "Throughout the 1870s, American whaling vessels had taken as many as 125,000 walrus from the Bering Strait region. The slaughter had proved to be a lucrative sideline to the whaling business. The whalers cooked the animal's blubber into oil and hacked off the tusks to sell in ivory markets as far away as England and China. In a single season in 1876, more than 35,000 Bering walrus were killed... the whalers could render more than twenty gallons of oil from the blubber of a single mature bull." ... (In The Kingdom of Ice: The Grand and Terrible Polar Voyage of the USS Jeannette by Hampton Sides.)

♦ "The results of Cook's intrusion into Tahiti and Australia had been bad enough for the native peoples: for the Antarctic animals it was a holocaust. His account of his voyage in the Resolution was naturally of intense interest to the whaling and sealing industry in the northern hemisphere, where the catch was already diminishing in the closing years of the eighteenth century. Here now was news of a magnificent hunting ground in the far south: seals and whales by the million, all ready for the taking. From Le Havre in France and Hull in England, and from New Bedford and Nantucket in America, the whaling and the sealing fleets set out. / No one will ever know how many whales and seals were killed in the southern ocean in the ensuing fifty years. Was it ten million or fifty million? Figures become meaningless; the killing went on and on until there was virtually nothing left to kill, nothing at any rate that could be easily and profitably killed. / The sealers came first. With the aid of Cook's charts they found their way down to the desolate islands he had discovered, and then went on to explore many new coasts and islands on their own account. There was a devastating simplicity in their methods: they clubbed the animals to death... / In the South Shetlands a single ship would expect to take as many as 9,000 seals in three weeks, and there is a record of two ships and sixty men demolishing 45,000 in one season. And since every pelt was worth a guinea—in some markets like Canton in China very much more—there was every inducement for the slaughter to go on to the better end. An end, however, there had to be; and by the eighteen-thirties fur seals in the southern ocean were virtually extinct, and sea-lions and sea-elephants were dying out as well. / The main attack was now diverted to the whales, and in an age that needed oil for its candles (not to speak of the whalebone for such articles as umbrellas and women's corsets), this was an even more profitable trade than sealing... The first comers in the South Pacific hardly needed to go to sea at all; the whaler simply set up a shore factory in some estuary where the animals were known to breed and then attacked them from small boats. There were dozens of such places: the Bay of Islands in New Zealand, the Derwent Estuary in Tasmania, all the coves and inlets along the deserted coasts of southern, western and eastern Australia... / In the Derwent River estuary where it had once been dangerous to sail in a small boat because of the numbers of right whales there—mostly pregnant mothers either calving or about to calve—a massacre went on year after year until the animals were wiped out. And so the hunt went on from May to October in all the breeding and mating grounds along the New Zealand and Australian coasts... / In these conditions it was not long before bay whaling—the taking of whales in their off-shore breeding grounds—was practically finished and the hunt was then continued in the open sea. Pelagic whaling—the taking of whales in the ocean—was a more arduous business... / By 1846 America had 735 whalers operating out of the New England coast, and each of them averaged 100 whales, or 300 tons of oil, on every voyage. They came south round the Horn and out into the Pacific where their bases in the tropics were Hawaii and Tahiti, and in the south, the Bay of Islands in New Zealand, Sydney and Hobart town in Tasmania. It was a tremendous killing. Eyre on his walk along the Great Australian Bight found the shore at Fowler's Bay 'literally strewed in all directions with the bones and carcasses of whales', and he estimated that there were 300 American and French vessels operating on that coast alone. For meat they killed the kangaroos on Kangaroo Island, and for women they raided the native tribes ashore." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

she ~ (sole producer, plays many of the instruments)

you ~ (said to a man whose prediction turned out right)

♦ Boasting, bragging, showing off, celebrating, etc. This usage probably refers to bodybuilders and their poses. It seems analogous to the lexicalized "take a bow" or "pat yourself on the back." Some shoot "finger guns" and then pantomime blowing smoke away from the barrel of a pistol. Others kiss the back of their hand or their fingertips to express admiration for themselves—the Bruno Mars' "Uptown Girls" "Gotta kiss myself, so pretty" flex. The great boxer Naseem Hamed would kiss his bicep after a knockout.

♦ Sometimes Flexing and a "power move" are synonymous: "Fame is so powerful that renouncing it can seem like the supreme power move."

♦ "This is not a flex. This is a waste. Rich people can't read the room." (An online commenter about the influencer Linda Andrade, aka the "Original Dubai Housewife," who spent $2.5 million in a week. She is the wife of a Dubai millionaire.)

♦ "It was not taunting, he was patting himself on the back and rightly so." (A commenter about a play by Allen Lazard of the Green Bay Packers during which he blocked three Miami Dolphins defenders, knocking all three to the ground. Following that, he pointed at each one: one, two, three, for which he was fined $10,609 for taunting, even though none of the 3 defenders saw him.)

♦ "Some observers wondered if the All-Star guard was using finger guns." (The NBA player Ja Morant, celebrating himself after scoring an ally-oop basket in overtime. He had just been reinstated to play following a long suspension for brandishing real guns in online videos.)

♦ "'Mama's boy' is a flex, not an insult." (According to NPR's Neda Ulaby.)

♦ A grinning Black Dad tugs at his too tight yellowish retro Tee shirt, which reads "Spring Break 93." He says, "Your father knows about saving. Everything I'm wearing, I've had since boot camp." A loud buzzer sounds for "wrong answer." The words appear on the screen, WEIRD FLEX. / The Black Dad's cute daughter says, "And I just saved on my car insurance for driving safe with USAA." An ecstatic voice sings. The words appear on the screen, GOOD FLEX. / The Black Dad shouts about his Tee shirt, "And it still fits! (It doesn't.) A voice says, "Weird flex. Good flex. Flex with our annual mileage discount. Insurance that flexes with you." (A cute online advertisement for USAA Auto Insurance. The web site address to contact includes "autoflex.")

♦ “In the end, we settled on ‘A free people demand to know’ (subject to a grammar check by our copy desk, which gave its assent). Success was short-lived—mercifully, no doubt. Late that evening, Bezos dispatched an email in the ‘not what you’re hoping for category,’ as he put it. He had run our consensus pick by his then wife, MacKenzie Scott, a novelist and ‘my in-house wordsmith,’ who had pronounced the phrase clunky. ‘Frankenslogan’ was the word she used.” (How The Washington Post got its motto, “Democracy Dies In Darkness.” From “Eight Years at The Washington Post by Martin Baron, The Atlantic, September 2023. A much better motto would be, “Democracy Dies Behind A Paywall.”)

♦ “Are we frogs? Are we being boiled and don’t know it yet?” (A Californian, discouraged by fires, drought, and record temperatures.)

♦ “Like many concerned keepers of the game and its traditions, Sword will often explain the creeping dispassion for baseball in terms of that overcooked analogy about the boiling frog in the pot. ‘Part of what made this so tricky was that the games were getting two or three minutes slower every year rather than half an hour slower, so there was never a point where it felt like a real emergency,’ he told me. I offered an alternative analogy, comparing baseball’s predicament to a slow-growing tumor that the new rules would surgically excise. ‘I’d prefer to go back to the frog,’ Sword said. / How did America’s beloved old frog find itself in such mortal danger...?’ (“How Baseball Saved Itself” by Mark Leibovich, The Atlantic, July / August 2023.)

♦ There were great husky men crying with the pain of gaping wounds and dreadfully swollen, discolored trench feet, who sank down exhausted the moment they stopped. There were strings of from eight to twenty blind boys filing up the road, clinging tightly and pitifully to each other's hands, and led by some bedraggled limping youngster who could still see... I wonder if I'll ever be able to look at marching men anywhere again without seeing those blinded boys, with five and six wound stripes on their sleeves, struggling painfully along the road." Gamification in ESL thinking goes, the activity in question is made more engaging and enjoyable. Everyone is a winner! Yet the very essence of a game is that it's voluntarily undertaken, and that it confers satisfaction through a mixture of luck, skill and meaningful choice. None of these things are much in evidence in the context of an Amazon warehouse, no matter how many virtual dragon races take place within it." ("Why your life could be part of someone else's game" by Tom Chatfield, BBC, 21 September 2022. Every word used metaphorically will have similarities and differences to the literal word. ♦ Gargantua, a kindly giant in French folklore, was the giant prince with a huge appetite and loud voice in Rabelais's 16-century satiric novel.

♦ "The word 'gamification' is a curious one. Superficially, its meaning is clear enough. To gamify something is to make it like a game, usually by wrapping game-like elements around it: points, missions, in-game rewards; a profile, avatar or fantastical environment. By doing this, the

♦ "That morning, Paul's fellow lumberjacks were astonished to see him eat only a smallish breakfast of a dainty dozen eggs, a simple side of ham, a poor pound of bacon, a finicky foot of bear sausage, a small skillet of hash browns, a tiny trough of grits, but ten or so breakfast Burraidos, barely a half barrel of gravy poured over his biscuits, a paltry fifty or so cartwheel-size apple granola pancakes, and a tiny tub of bread pudding topped with a piddling pond of warm cream and hardly a half-acre of wild huckleberries. / 'Why, for God's sake! What has happened to your appetite, Paul!' his fellow-lumberjacks cried out in consternation and concern. 'Is the grub no good? Shall we run off the cooks, and kidnap a new bunch? Are you feeling poorly?' / 'By God! My appetite seems to have deserted me,' Paul said grimly. 'No doubt during the night. But it can't have got far, and I'll track it down and get it back or my name's not Paul Bunyan!'" ("When Paul Bunyan Lost His Appetite But Recovered It" by Samuel Langhorne Clemmons.)

(Rachel Dolezal, an academic who claimed "identities of color," including Black Caribbean, North African Blackness, US rooted Blackness, Caribbean rooted Bronx Blackness, Boricua...)

♦ Gas Light was a 1938 English play by Patrick Hamilton. It is about an abusive and criminal husband who tries to convince his wife that she is crazy. The word has come to mean a certain sort of psychological manipulation. It can appear in a series like, "gaslighting, lying, and manipulation."

♦ "He was sharing a hotel room [in Fort Worth] with his father-in-law Yellow Bear. Before retiring, Yellow Bear 'blew out' the gaslight before going to bed, a mistake that Indians often made. Before the night was over, he was dead of asphyxiation, and Quanah, who remained unconscious for two days, barely survived." (Circa 1900. From Empire of the Summer Moon: Quanah Parker and the Rise and Fall of the Comanches by S.C. Gwynne.)

♦ "I keep my work together, all in order to help me to pass the examinations; I consult Mendes in everything and arrange my studies according to what he has done, for I should like to do it in the same way. The study of Latin and Greek is very difficult, but still it makes me feel happy, and I am doing what I longed to do. I may not sit up so late in the evening any more, Uncle has strictly forbidden it, still I keep in mind what is written under the etching by Rembrandt, 'In the middle of the night the light diffuses its radiance,' and I keep a small gaslight burning low all night. I often lie looking at it, planning my work for the next day." (Dear Theo: The Autobiography of Vincent Van Gogh, Edited by Irving and Jean Stone.)

♦ "There was some weird gaslighting shit that went on where people equated freedom and saying the word "freedom" to like right-wing bigotry and hate is so strange." (Joe Rogan about vaccines and the pandemic.)

♦ 'Ghostlighting' is the sadistic new dating trend creating trust issues. The dreaded combo of manipulation and a disappearing act is a one-two punch for singles in the market for love." (The New York Post. A combination of "gaslighting" and "ghosting.")

 analysis

♦ Incredibly, the Merriam-Webster word of the year (WOTY) for 2022 was gaslighting. That word was "uber-trendy" at least 10 years ago, and thankfully it seems to be used less and less nowadays, and hopefully it is on its way out. Merriam-Webster's word of the year for 2022 should have been "mental health." (See the entry for "mental health" in this dictionary.)

♦ "When I jog through upscale white neighborhoods near my home in Connecticut, white people tense up—unless I wear my Yale or University of Pennsylvania sweatshirts. When my jogging outfit associates me with an Ivy League university it identifies me as a certain kind of Black person: a less scary one who has passed inspection under the 'white gaze.'" ("Black Success, White Backlash" by Elijah Anderson, The Atlantic, November 2023. The Sterling Professor of Sociology and of African American Studies at Yale was born in Pemiscot County, Missouri, in 1943.)

♦ Straight men look at and judge women and others. They criticize women and others who do not conform to their notion of what they should be or how they should act. Women feel objectified by this attention, and shamed if they don't "give men what they want to see." Women and others are increasingly and unapologetically acting and making art in ways that defy this "male gaze."

♦ "It is really important to remember that we have very limited representation and presence isn't the same thing as representation centered around the Black American person the Black American community and it does not take into account constantly the white gaze." (Bethany C. Morrow, author of So Many Beginnings: A Little Women Remix, speaking with Lulu Garcia-Navarro on NPR.)

♦ "White-centering can be thought of as a system that prioritizes white dominant culture to the detriment of non-white groups and cultures.../ White-centering has been given many names including the white gaze and whiteness as the default." ("3 Ways To Transform Your Workplace To Be More Equitable" by Janice Gassam Asare, Senior contributor, Forbes, October 25, 2023.)

♦ "The 'female gaze,' a term often invoked by and about Sciamma, is an analogue of the 'male gaze,' popularized in the nineteen-seventies to describe the implied perspective of Hollywood movies—the way they encouraged a viewer to see women as desirable objects... For Sciamma, the female gaze operates on a cinematographic level..." ("Now You See Me: Celine Sciamma's feminist quest for a new grammar of cinema" by Elif Batuman, The New Yorker, February 7, 2022.)

♦ "For Anders, although his newly brown skin is a constant physical reminder that he's no longer who he used to be, the greatest change may be in his psyche. He's now acutely aware of otherness and being observed, how he moves in the world and how he takes up space. When he returns to work...he's both drawn to and repulsed by the only other dark-skinned employee, who, unlike him, has always known what it's like to be treated as both invisible and hypervisible." (Cady Lang's Time review of The Last White Man by Mohsin Hamid, New York Times bestselling author of Exit West. This paragraph deftly weaves together several tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion.)

♦ "In 'Women Painting Women,' the female gaze is front and center," Susan Stamberg, NPR, May 12, 2022.

♦ "The way they work is, it's very femme-forward, very female-positive. They have an amazing female photographer, Vanessa Beecroft, and you just feel like a million dollars on their set. It just feels very modern and very 'female gaze.'" (Nelly Furtado, about her participation in the Best Of Skims advertising campaign.)

♦ "How Olivia Dunne turned the male gaze into a gymnastic empire" by Lauren Mechling, The Guardian, Feb 28, 2023.)

♦ "You've probably heard the 'male gaze' or the 'white gaze,' but what about the 'coded gaze'? Computer scientist Joy Buolamwini coined the term while in grad school at MIT..." ("If you have a face, you have a place in the conversation about AI," expert says," NPR, Fresh Air (Tonya Mosley), November 28, 2023. An entire academic career can be made by coining a term that catches on.)

(Often a woman nowadays.)

♦ "There was a time when to name a girl Amber was like naming her Isabella or Chloe today. It had a hint of novelty and panache...Starting in the late 1940s, the name Amber was a novelty because of a best-selling novel (Forever Amber)... / Yet today, scenes like that are ordinary not only in the movies but on much of television; to make an impression, things must get even more creative." (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter.)

♦ "Kim O'Grady, an experienced management consultant in Perth, Australia, couldn't figure out why his resume was generating no job leads for more than four months, said Susanna Kim in ABCNews.com. He finally realized that companies were turning him down because his gender-neutral first name led them to assume he was a woman. 'I pictured all the managers I had over the years and, forming an amalgam of them in my mind, I read through the document as I imagined they would have,' he wrote on his blog. The truth became immediately apparent. 'It was like being hit on the head with a big sheet of unbreakable glass ceiling,' he said. After putting 'Mr.' before his name on his resume, he quickly landed a job. 'The sad reality is this shows we all know how real and invasive sexism is,' O'Grady wrote this week." ("A name exposed a familiar truth," The Week Magazine.)

♦ Joyce Kilmer, the author of the beloved poem "Trees," was a man, not a woman. He was born in New Jersey. During World War I, he was deployed to France with the "Fighting 69th" and killed in action. The Joyce Kilmer Memorial Forest in Graham County, western North Carolina, is the largest tract of old-growth forest east of the Mississippi—minus the chestnut trees, of course, destroyed by a blight. Also, many of the great stands of Hemlocks have been destroyed by the woolly adelgid. Joyce is ordinarily a female name nowadays.

♦ "Doris Miller earned the Navy Cross for his actions during the Japanese attack on Hawaii's Pearl Harbor in 1941. / He was named Doris, as his mother had thought she was having a girl, but often went by the nickname 'Dorie.'" ("Doris Miller: US Navy aircraft carrier to honour black sailor," BBC, 19 January 2020. Dorie was on the West Virginia during the attack on Pearl, and he was killed when a Jap sub sank the aircraft carrier he was serving on, the Liscombe Bay, at the Battle of Makin in November 1943.)

♦ Ashley Williams is a man. He is a Black or mixed man, of Jamaican descent through his father. His mother is Welsh. He was born in England, but qualified to play for the Welsh national soccer team through his maternal grandfather. Alex (Alexandra) Scott, on the other hand, is a female English sports presenter, pundit, and former pro soccer player. Her mother is British and her father Jamaican.)

♦ Domonique Davis is a female basketball player for Arkansas State. Both Dominique Davis and Domenique Davis are male U.S. football players. Notice the differences in spelling: o, i, e.

♦ "Listen hockey doesn't give a flying F about pronouns... It's physical." (A commenter about an odd case that created a minor online controversy. A very large trans female knocked a much smaller trans male down. The latter slid head first into the boards and was concussed. This happened at "the Team Trans Draft Tournament" in Middleton, Wisconsin.)

♦ "She felt a gay biographer might colonize Chatwin into the gay world." (Bruce Chatwin's widow.)

♦ "Wasn't 'Reality Winner' a man in real life?" (A online commenter about Sydney Sweeney's role in Tina Satter's film Reality Winner. It is possible he is confusing Reality Winner with Chelsea Manning. Or maybe he is just trolling. Maybe "he" is a "she" or binary. Who knows nowadays?)

♦ "A lot of readers, both trans and cis, really want you to say, in the first sentence of the story, 'As a trans person...' But by saying as a trans person, it cedes ground to the idea that I need disclaimers about my point of view. There's a little bit of sick and twisted pleasure I get from saying, 'I'm not going to do that...' / That said, there are certain claims that I can make as a trans writer..." ("Jamie Lauren Keiles Follows the Surgical and Philosophical Journey of Phalloplasty" by Celia Ford, July 26, 2022.)

♦ "S M* Trans D." (Vile sexualized abuse directed towards J.K. Rowling by a trans woman. From the podcast, "The Witch Trials of J.K. Rowling.")

♦ NSF grant EEC-1764103, for $349,311.00.

♦ "I predict on 1st Feb the Gypsy Queen will break a toe nail and the fight will be off." (An online commenter about Oleksandr Usyk versus Tyson Fury, aka the "Gypsy King." Boxing snark. The fight has been postponed, however, after Tyson Fury suffered a cut over his eye during training camp.)

♦ "Dump Rodgers, she's a prima donna, and doesn't get the TEAM culture." (Shade against the great future Hall of Famer Aaron Rodgers of the NFL Green Bay Packers, using a female pronoun!)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A young man out on the town looking to pick up a pretty girl found himself in a jazz club, even though he knew absolutely nothing about jazz and didn't really even like it. He finally found a pretty girl to chat up, and at a certain point in their conversation—which seemed to be going very well, from his point of view—the pretty young woman said, "Do you like Billie Holliday?" To which the young man enthused, "I love him!" (Wrong answer!)

“General Winter”

he found himself up against ~ (Napoleon)

♦ Weather helped cause the famine (drought), and weather helped delay the relief (thaw), and a return to cold weather helped the relief. (The Great Famine of 1921-22 in Russia. From “America’s Gift to Famine Stricken Russia,” PBS, American Experience. American A.R.A. relief to Russia.)

♦ “No Finnish unit, however small, went into battle without sufficient artificial warmth for every man. Frontline dugouts were equipped with small, efficient stoves that burned with a hot, steady flame and gave off the merest whisper of smoke. Just behind the front lines the Finns lived and worked in shellproof dugouts roofed over with layers of logs and earth and completely camouflaged. Inside these dugouts the walls were lined with furs and skins. Men could rest in snug comfort when they returned from patrol duty or a period of combat. When a Finnish soldier was wounded, he was usually back in the comfort of a warm aid-station bunker within the hour... / For many of the encircled Soviet troops, just staying alive, for one more hour or one more day, was an ordeal comparable to combat. Freezing, hungry, crusted with their own filth... for them the central forest was truly a snow-white hell... In the forest the Russian soldiers had to face what they called Belaya Smert: the White Death. It came silently, when men became so numb with cold and fatigue that they just lay down in the snow and went to sleep, or it came violently, in the form of a sniper round fired from an invisible Finn hundreds of meters away... Aside from the field kitchens, the invaders’ only source of warmth was campfires... [When a Russian soldier was wounded he] knew only an intensification of misery, cold, and pain.” (Frozen Hell: The Russo-Finnish Winter War of 1939-40 by William R. Trotter.)

♦ “Under ordinary wintertime conditions, by late February, the ice over the gulf would have become too unstable and too dotted with thin spots, to support heavy vehicle traffic. But this year, it remained frozen as solid as ever, capable of bearing the weight of trucks, light tanks, and up-to-medium-caliber field artillery. ‘General Winter’ had turned traitor.” (The Gulf of Viipuri. From Frozen Hell: The Russo-Finnish Winter War of 1939-40 by William R. Trotter. This was to the Russian’s advantage.)

Barkley’s left arm is consolingly draped over Godzilla’s shoulder, and Barkley is saying, “Have you ever thought about wearing shoes?” In another version, the line goes, “The Lakers are looking for a big man.”

♦ “We did all sorts of studies and finally accepted the fact that every once in a while Godzilla arrives and fills the channel up to the edge with water. We just did the research and stuck to the facts, and the facts were that communities along the river were suffering, they needed parks and open space and they also need to be protected from floods.” (Tensho Takemori, working with Frank Gehry to find ways to revitalize the Los Angeles River. Quoted in “Remaking The River That Remade L.A.” by Michael Kimmelman, The New York Times Magazine, November 13, 2022. In the first paragraph of that article, Kimmelman mentions an incredible fact: At Long Beach, the 1938 flood exceeded the flow of the Mississippi at St. Louis. Eighty-seven people died. good girl

I'd been the ~ for years, I was tired of it (Britney Spears)

played the good girl

Hunt usually ~ in comedies and dramas (Hollywood)

♦ "The good girls who love bad boys..." (A trope in romance fiction for women. On the other hand, being a "good girl" is denounced by feminists.)

♦ "This is that ice cold, the Michelle Pfeiffer, that white gold, them good girls..." (Mark Ronson, Bruno Mars, and "Uptown Funk.")

♦ "But together 'Blurred Lines' and 'Hold On, We're Going Home' play out an old crisis—the crisis of the compromised good girl—by the book." ("Drake And Pop Music's Good Girl Problem" by Ann Powers, NPR, September 18, 2013. An excellent analysis that focuses on race.)

♦ In the movie musical Grease, Olivia Newton-John starred as good girl Sandy Olson, who fell for a bad boy played by John Travolta. (Both white.)

♦ "Even in Hawaii, Mazie Hirono is viewed as the quote 'good girl' of politics, polite, never in-your-face, not a boat-rocker. But in the last year and a half, as one Hawaii columnist put it, she's become quote, 'a badass.' / 'I always was. I just wasn't very noisy about it. I've been a fighter all my life. I just don't look like that.'" ("The Quiet Rage Of Mazie Hirono" by Nina Totenberg, NPR, Morning Edition, June 7, 2018.)

♦ FBoy Island is a dating reality TV series hosted by the comedian Nikki Glaser. A spinoff called FGIRL Island is in the works. A man is either a nice guy or a F-boy. In slang, a "fuck boy" is a male womanizer, a playboy, a Lothario. See the Wikipedia article "FBOY Island," which has the following caveat: "This article may have been created or edited in return for undisclosed payments, a violation of Wikipedia's content policies, particularly neutral point of view."

♦ "The father defended his daughters as 'good girls.'" (Palestinian activists.)

♦ "She thinks a princess in a pink gown is kid stuff. 'I want to be Britney Spears, no more princess or angel.'" (A young girl about her Halloween costume.)

♦ "Self-proclaimed 'bad girl' Drea de Matteo..." (The New York Post. No. Not. Really.)

we as a society refuse to address the ~ in the room (guns)

♦ A lawyer said, "We refuse as a society to address the 9,000-pound gorilla in the room." I supposed the next gorilla will be nine million tons. This is a good example of linguistic supersizing.

♦ "So I would say the takeaway from the recent Republican primaries is that Trump is no longer the 800-pound gorilla in the room, he's probably the 600-pound gorilla." (Elite punditry / snark from Mara Liasson, a national political correspondent for NPR.)

♦ "Whale" as an epithet for an establishment figure is not used nowadays; the modern term might be "old white men." But in the New York Magazine, a writer recently referred to two competing Hollywood and Broadway producers as "silverbacks." A silverback is a mature male mountain gorilla.

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. In The New Yorker Magazine of 2 / 14 / 2011, there is a cartoon by Mick Stevens. It shows the back of an 800-pound gorilla, who is being interviewed for a job by a petite human personnel officer. She is saying to him, "We already have an eight-hundred-pound gorilla."

♦ "It was a softball, not a gotcha." (Laurence Tribe about the question, "Do calls for the killing of people violate policies at Harvard, the University of Pennsylvania, and MIT?" For "context," see "Holding Campus Leaders Accountable and Confronting Antisemitism," the House Committee on Education and the Workforce, December 5, 2023.)

♦ "Well, first of all, this is one of the things that keeps getting distorted. When I said we don't need to do anything different right at his moment, please don't forget that was followed by a semicolon, and then a 'however,' and then by 'This could change rapidly, and we better be prepared for that.' I said that every single time. And the people who want to do gotchas on me only show the first part." (Anthony Fauci, one hero in a great line of American heroes of public health.)

♦ “The ability to perform so many tests on just a drop or two of blood was something of a Holy Grail in the field of microfluidics. Thousands of researchers around the world in universities and industry had been pursuing this goal for more than two decades, ever since the Swiss scientist Andreas Manz had shown that microfabrication techniques developed by the computer chip industry could be repurposed to make small channels that moved tiny volumes of fluids.” (Bad Blood: Secrets and Lies in a Silicon Valley Startup by John Carreyrou.)

♦ “We have grown up in a society that has always pursued the Holy Grail, the fountain of youth.” (Madeline Di Nonno, president of the Geena Davis Institute on Gender in Media, about ageism, particularly towards older female actors.)

♦ “The transhumanist holy grail is artificial general intelligence.”

♦ This refers to a cup or plate used by Christ at the Last Supper.

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. Two medieval knights in armor are crossing a bridge, each one on horseback. The one knight is saying to the other, “Wait, the Grail is a cup? We’re looking for a cup?” (The New Yorker, October 11, 2021.)

♦ "There's a lot of morons." (True that!)

♦ "This is the best school I've ever taught at." (The character Dewey Finn in School of Rock, addressing his fellow teachers in the lunch room. The line is clearly meant to provoke a laugh. Nowadays, however, I suspect it would simply pass over the heads of most listeners.)

♦ "This espionage charges are ridiculous." (White House spokesperson Karine Jean-Pierre.)

♦ "iPhone 15 set to promises upgrades at steeper prices, analysts say." (ABC.)

♦ The grammar of embedded questions has changed. The following is quite fascinating: "He's always crying. He needs to remember who is his coach is?" Another odd one like that comes from Michele Martin of NPR: "Do we have any sense of how much longer are these mud slides are going to be a risk for people?" A more typical example follows: "It's an arms race to define what is antisemitism." Luckily, academic analysis exists. ♦ The "time when" and "place where" distinction no longer seems to apply.

♦ "Want" and "like" are not ordinarily used in the continuous. At least, that's how we teach it...

♦ "Are you his teacher or wot? I would of thought (sic) that the grammar police had better things to do." (An online commenter on a BBC HYS about a soccer match. The target of his comment had criticised a poster's use of "would of" versus "would have." The (sic) was ironic and funny!)

♦ Commenter A: it doesn't seem to matter who the referee's are. / Commenter B: Referees, no apostrophe. / Commenter A: Really doesn't matter. / Commenter C: Well maybe it should / Commenter ?: Removed comment. (A BBC sports HYS.)

♦ The principal parts of verbs are simply beyond most Americans, including lie / lay / lain versus lay / laid / laid; broadcast / broadcast / broadcast; and hang / hung / hung versus hang / hanged / hanged, etc.

♦ Can you imagine a recitation of "Requiem" by Robert Louis Stevenson with the "lie" and "lay" verbs all screwed up? I can. "Under the wide and starry sky / Dig the grave and let me lay / And I lied me down with a will / Here he lays where he longed to be." Hilarious!

♦ "I mean about 9,000 people were just hung, or executed, shot..." (NPR's Weekend Edition Saturday host talking with Burkhard Bilger. In a completely different story, the same host spoke about the Jewish musicians and composers who "either fled, or they died, tragically..." during and after the period of Weimar Germany.)

♦ "Man found hanging in subway tunnel near Grand Central Station: cops." (The New York Post. The man was dead. He had committed suicide. He had hanged himself. Cops say no criminality suspected.)

"Blanchette and three fellow researchers recently received a $384,272 National Science Foundation collaborative research grant to fund their study, 'A Microcomparative Study of Negation in Dialectal Variation,' a continuation of Blanchette's longtime research on linguistic diversity among American English dialects."

♦ "Cause of death revealed: How did he died." (Such clickbait is often foreign and unsecured. Americans are constantly reminded to be on the lookout for such sites, with one tipoff being "ungrammatical" language or spelling "mistakes." In this single area of life, it seems, it is perfectly okay for Americans and linguists to be judgmental about language use. See the quote directly below.)

♦ "Throng of tourists came to see the men and their iron leviathans at work. They held their children up to see and hear the dynamite blasts. They came day by day to watch the limestone walls appear, running straight and true for miles, and to see great new canyons form in front of them, like one of the huge chasms out west that excited travelers were reporting having seen. This was becoming Chicago's Grand Canyon, and it was made by man. (The Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal. From The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "When someone under the ice shines a flashlight, you see the flashlight in his hand and the spot where the light hits something, but you don't physically see the beam. There's nothing in the water to backscatter light. It's like you put a layer of ice seven feet thick across the top of the Grand Canyon and stepped through it. That's how you feel under Antarctic ice. As if you were hanging in space." (An ice diver.)

♦ If you are interested in kayaking, see the Wikipedia entry for "Grand Canyon of the Stikine." A whole book might be written comparing it to the Rhondu Gorge of the Indus in Northern Pakistan.

♦ "You may have heard of tightrope walking, but have you heard of a slackline? Well, here it is, it's pretty much what you would expect, a rope that's not tight, but slack. Unsurprisingly, this is American Dean Potter. He is crossing this canyon in central China. It is 1,800 meters above sea level and you may have noticed he does not have a safety line." ("US slackline walker Dean Potter crosses China canyon," BBC video, 23 April 2012. Potter walked 40 meters across the Enshi Grand Canyon in China's Hubei Province on a slackline in just over two minutes. Slacklining is much more difficult than tightrope walking. See the Wikipedia article "Enshi Grand Canyon." Another spectacular Chinese canyon has a Wikipedia entry, "Yarlung Tsangpo Grand Canyon.")

♦ "1869. "Powell's men slid their four boats into the Green River on Monday, May 24, 1869... and would not emerge from their own unprecedented epic for ninety-eight days of nearly perpetual terror, hunger, cold, and wonder." (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester. Powell was one-armed. He had lost his arm at the Battle of Shiloh, but that did not stop him from serving in battles right to the end of the Civil War.)

♦ "And five years after leaving the waters [the Colorado River] behind, in 1876, John Wesley Powell first wrote out the name Grand Canyon. He appears to have concluded that Big Canyon simply didn't do justice to the almighty crevasse he had seen and journeyed through, so he replaced it with a pair of words soon to be on every American's lips and not much later on the lips of most sentient English-speaking beings on the planet, as one of the great natural wonders of the world." As one of the era's few Black female chefs, Lewis quickly became famous in the city, and the café became a haunt for the likes of Gloria Vanderbilt, Tennessee Williams, Paul Robeson and Salvador Dalí. Lewis blended French and Southern cuisine, preparing fried oysters, Virginia ham, filet mignon and chocolate soufflés. The novelist William Faulkner once asked Lewis if she had trained in Paris and was shocked to learn she had never left the United States." ("Food: The Grande Dame of Southern Cooking" by Taryn White, Smithsonian, June 2023. Edna led an extraordinary life, and Taryn White's comprehensive article is accompanied by wonderful photos. The article mentions, "Lewis was officially named a 'Grande Dame' by Les Dames d'Escoffier International." She is not simply a figurative "Grande Dame," but an actual one!)

♦ Viva voce is Medieval Latin for "with a living mouth." If you hear something viva voce it means somebody told you. It has come to mean "word of mouth."

♦ Hawaii has the "coconut wireless" or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via "the talking drum." From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Sahrawis: "I heard it on the wind." Americans can "hear it through the grapevine," or hear a report or account through the rumor mill or catch wind of something. Italians say "per sentito dire" which basically means, "heard it said," and they hear gossip "voci di corridoio" which means "hall voice" or "voices in the hall." These systems operate by word-of-mouth, and, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ "From time immemorial, it has been said that desert winds carry with them all kinds of rumor and report—especially stories of scandal and outrage." (Gold Dust by Ibrahim al-Koni.)

♦ "They've got a gallows-bad reputation, but, you know what a place the beach is for talking." / "The beach, if you don't know is the name of the gossip mill of white derelicts and rough customers that hang around your South Sea island ports. You'll find captains and traders too fond of their grog and properly down on their luck. I'll admit, I was fond of the gin myself back then..." (The Beach of Falesa by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

◆ "You may take it for a fact that anything of this kind is not only noticed and discussed by a man's own race but by some hundred and fifty natives as well... [T]he news flew, in the usual mysterious fashion, from mouth to mouth, till Bisesa's duenna heard of it and told Bisesa." (The affecting and horrible story "Beyond the Pale" by Rudyard Kipling.)

◆ "'You're sure you've took no 'arm?'" cried Mrs. Cloke, who had heard the news by farm-telegraphy, which is older but swifter than Marconi's. / 'No. I'm perfectly well,' Sophie protested." ("An Habitation Enforced" by Rudyard Kipling.)

◆ "But I ain't one to gossip, so if anyone ask you ain't heard it from me. No, you haven't. Oh, oh, look, there go Miss Jenkins...!" (Kim Wayans as the character Benita Buttrel from the 1990s "In Living Color" TV Series. Hilarious!)

◆ "Word around the campfire for me was...that there was at least speculation, maybe informed speculation, that..." (A sports analyst.)

◆ "The talk around town [italics mine] was that Pacino..." (Film celebrity gossip. New York City.)

◆ "When a professional golfer wants to pass along a rumor, he'll tell you that he heard it 'on the range'... The range, the one location where everyone in the sport gathers, is also golf's back room. Pre-round chat may concern course conditions, or who is sleeping with whose wife. Recently, the range has been preoccupied by one topic..." ("Sand Trap: Saudi money and Donald Trump roil 'the gentleman's game'" by Zach Helfand, The New Yorker, October 24, 2022.)

◆ "[The internet] is the modern world's equivalent of those bars in Donegal where rumors about the case used to circulate." (No Body Recovered, BBC Sounds, Episode 6. A missing child.)

◆ "The coffee-cup critics down at the local drug store..." (People discussing "Oklahoma Girl Scout murders." From The New York Times, 1977.)

◆ "Washington is a small town." (Washington, D.C. and the federal government, politics, etc.)

◆ Thomas: Hey, Victor! I'm sorry about your dad. Victor: How'd you hear about it? Thomas: I heard it on the wind. I heard it from the birds. I felt it in the sunlight. And your mom was just in here cryin'. (The affecting 1998 film Smoke Signals, based on the book by the great poet and writer Sherman Alexie. "He went to Reardan, a white high school, where he played on the basketball team and was the only real Indian on the Reardan Indians.")

◆ "'Gossip is a fearful thing'—this phrase was found in the note left by the film star Ruan Langyu after she took her own life." ("On 'Gossip Is a Fearful Thing' by Lu Xun, from Jottings under Lamplight, edited by Eileen J. Cheng and Kirk A. Denton.)

◆ He who gossips to you will gossip about you!

They were transported to collection points, known as Glockenfriedhofe, or bell cemeteries, the biggest of them in Hamburg. ("The seizing of Europe's bells" by Stephen J. Thorne, in Legion: Canada's Military History Magazine, November 21, 2018.)

♦ Cars, crushed flat and stacked on one another, were used to shore up sections of the riverbank. They can be seen to this day. (On the Tuckaseegee River upstream of Bryson City, North Carolina. And unusual kind of "auto graveyard.")

♦ "Lying on the beach beyond the glacier was wreckage that told of many ill-fated ships. We noticed stanchions of teakwood, liberally carved, that must have come from ships of the older type; iron-bound timbers with the iron almost rusted through; battered barrels and all the usual debris of the ocean. We had difficulties and anxieties of our own, but as we passed that graveyard of the sea we thought of the many tragedies written in the wave-worn fragments of lost vessels. We did not pause, and soon we were ascending a snow-slope heading due east on the last lap of our long trail." (South!: The Story of Shackleton's Last Expedition, 1914-1917 by Ernest Shackleton.)

♦ The great old-style sports writer Phil Mushnick wrote that the NBA Commissioner Adam Silver was "whistling past the dump" by ignoring the thuggish behavior of NBA athletes. In the same article, he wrote, "Don't rain on his charade." At one time, sportswriters were real writers and masters of the language. This is no longer the case. The internet, which has ruined so many industries with its proud "disruption," has spelled the end of journalism in general and the golden era of sports writers in particular. Nowadays, much sports talk simply relates to sports betting, which seems to have been de-regulated, like drugs. The current zeitgeist seems to be just about money, fame, and diversity. The simple query, "How old is Phil Mushnick?" reveals nothing, nor does his Wikipedia entry, which has problems, answer that basic question. Odd indeed.)

♦ "We're pulling the pin out of the grenade, but we haven't got the guts to throw it." (Former Immigration Minister Robert Jenrick, a hardliner, who supports sending illegal migrants to Rwanda.)

♦ "But I was getting too soft, and so I had to throw one [italics mine] at the quartermasters and the French and everybody else except Ordnance. The ordnance men were too busy patching up the vehicles these gasoline cowboys had wrecked." (Up Front by Bill Mauldin. By "throw one" he meant not a grenade but four funny cartoons about the crazy truck and jeep drivers who would frighten soldiers walking along the roads, make them jump into ditches, and splash mud on them. The captions of the four cartoons are (1) "You'd hurry home too if you lived in a ration dump!" (2) "Some of you may not come back. A French convoy has been reported on the road" (3) "I'll be darned! Here's one wot wuz wrecked in combat" and (4) "Damn fine road, men!")

♦ "One day, Klimov and Shaposhnikov had to go right up to the German lines. They climbed over the railway embankment and crept up to a bomb-crater that sheltered a heavy-machine-gun crew and an artillery officer. Pressed flat against the ground, they watched the Germans go about their tasks. One young man unbuttoned his jacket, tucked a red checked handkerchief under his collar and began shaving; Seryozha could hear the scrape of the razor against his wiry, dust-covered stubble. Another German was eating something out of a small flat tin; for a brief moment Seryozha saw his face take on a look of concentrated, lasting pleasure. The officer was winding up his watch. Seryozha felt like asking very quietly, so as not to frighten him: 'Hey! What time is it?' / Klimov took the pin out of a grenade and dropped it into the crater... / 'You're not a Baptist, are you?' Old Polyakov once asked this man who had killed a hundred and ten people... / Once Seryozha saw Klimov after he had drunk a captured bottle of schnapps; then he had been quite terrifying—even Grekov had seemed wary of him." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman.)

people in the ER for days ~ for new patients

♦ This term relates to vehicles caught in a traffic jam.

♦ "More than 10,000 vehicles are stuck in a 120 km (75-mile) traffic jam on China's Beijing to Tibet motorway. The gridlocked section of road is in the north-eastern region of Inner Mongolia. The majority of the vehicles stuck in the jam are coal trucks heading for the capital. A 100 km traffic jam that had lasted nine days on the same motorway was cleared just over a week ago. The authorities say roadworks are to blame for the latest gridlock. The motorway is among China's busiest, as Beijing's population of more than 20 million requires massive quantities of goods." ♦ “Psychologists have come up with a term—solastalgia—for the feeling that occurs with the disappearance of what’s perceived as the normal, stable, healthy, natural world. The Australian philosopher Glenn Albrecht, who coined the term, identifies it as a suffering at the loss of solace, ‘a deep emotional response to the desolation of a loved home environment.’ The condition of solastalgia, then, is primarily one of grief, environmental grief, mourning for the death of home, which is the place of solace. (“Stephen McRae seems to be a man who refused to ignore such emotion,” Albrecht told me.) (“The Machine Breaker: Inside the mind of an ‘ecoterrorist’” by Christopher Ketcham, Harper’s Magazine, November, 2023. There is a Wikipedia entry, “Solastalgia.”)

♦ “For a certain group of people it is hitting particularly hard. She’s a...” (“For Latinos, the Uvalde shooting has an extra layer of grief and trauma,” Mary Louise Kelly, NPR, All Things Considered, June 3, 2022.)

♦ A plan by four churches on the Cherokee Indian Reservation to apologize to the tribe for a historical failure to recognize traditional Cherokee religion or culture has been greeted with surprise by tribal leaders. / “I don’t see what they need to apologize for,” said Tribal Council Chairman Bob Blankenship. “But if they feel they’ve offended us in any way, we’ll accept it.” / The majority of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians’ 13,000 members belong to mainstream Christian churches... / As far as I’m concerned, it’s a waste of time,” said the Rev. Bo Parris of Big Cove Baptist Church. “There’s nothing to apologize for.” / Patty Grant, a member of the Eastern Band and one of the event organizers, said understanding intergenerational grief and trauma is an important part of what the churches are trying to do by making the apology. She said trauma from centuries of oppression often manifests itself in drug abuse, domestic violence and depression. / Pastor Steven Phillip...said, “From my perspective as a white male, I see a need for the white church to apologize for the oppression by Christian missionaries of Native American people,” he said. “We thought we had to Europeanize them to evangelize. I am not apologizing for the Gospel. But I do apologize for how we perverted the Gospel in the name of Jesus and oppressed God’s people. / Principal Chief Leon Jones, the top elected leader of the Eastern Band, doesn’t think an apology is necessary. / “Personally, I think the past is history and I don’t hold present-day people responsible,” he said. “All we can do is live today’s life and do the best we can today.” (“Churches to offer apology to Cherokee” by Jon Ostendorff and Quintin Ellison in the Asheville Citizen-Times, July 22, 2002 A1.)

♦ “I remember saying in Sunday school, not that long ago, ‘Who am I without Mormonism?’” said Osborne. “This is a feeling of grief and just the pain of change, and the pain of not being naïve anymore. It’s hard to know the truth.” (“Hulu special ‘Mormon No More’ offers rare look of two former Mormons exploring faith and LGBTQ+ identity” by Haley Yamada, June 23, 2022. “Two Mormon moms who fell in love.” Trendy!)

("Elemental Need: Phosphorus helped saved our way of life—and now threatens to end it" by Elizabeth Kolbert, The New Yorker, March 6, 2023. "Gung ho" is very much a Chinese word relating to World War II (first entry 1941), so of course American farmers weren't "gung ho" for guano in the mid-eighteen-forties. The word might have been put in quotation marks, but it wasn't. On the other hand, the essay is breezy: Elizabeth refers to guano as "yellowish clay," "bird shit," and simply "shit." The use of "gung ho" is a form of presentism.)

♦ "I know America loves its bad guys. But I'm a great guy. I just won a Super Bowl. I'm an American hero." (The NFL player Antonio Brown, on being cut from his team.)

♦ "He's a nice fella... A guy don't need no sense to be a nice fella." (Of Mice and Men.)

♦ "Guys like us, they don't got nobody in the world who gives a hoot in hell about them." (George speaking to Lennie. From the brilliant 1992 film Of Mice and Men, with Gary Sinise and John Malkovich, screenplay by Horton Foote, based on the novella by John Steinbeck.)

♦ "Sure, I know the type, he don't rile easily, but when he blows, look out." (YouTube, "Gomer Pyle Learns a Bully")

♦ "Hey, what a great guy." "Yeah, good, good, good bloke..." (Two commentators at The Day of Reckoning fight event in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, having just interviewed the New Zealand boxer Junior Fa. No doubt viewers around the world had a similar reaction to the boxer's smile, personality, and speech. He ended up losing his bout, but he put up a good fight.)

♦ Cinnamon rolls; golden retrievers... (Romance novels publisher-speak for men. Cinnamon rolls are men who are sweet, supportive and kind. Golden retrievers are men sporting floppy energy and positive energy.)

♦ "He's not a sad sack, this guy, you know, I mean he's a bit of a disaster of a human being in some ways, but he's not a sad sack and he's this kind of very aggressive guy." (The actor Paul Giamatti about his character Chuck Rhoades in Billions.)

♦ "Government ministers, newspaper columnists, ordinary people—they're all asking why the BBC doesn't say the Hamas gunmen who carried out appalling atrocities in southern Israel are terrorists. / The answer goes right back to the BBC's founding principles. / Terrorism is a loaded word, which people use about an outfit they disapprove of morally. It's simply not the BBC's to tell people who to support and who to condemn—who are the good guys and who are the bad guys... / And it's always been like this in the BBC. During World War Two, BBC broadcasters were expressly told not to call the Nazis evil or wicked, even though we did call them 'the enemy'. / 'Above all,' said a BBC document about all this, 'there must be no room for ranting'. Our tone had to be calm and collected. / It was hard to keep that principle going when the IRA was bombing Britain... / But we held the line. And we still do, to this day." ("Why BBC doesn't call Hamas militants 'terrorists'—John Simpson" by John Simpson, BBC, Israel Gaza War, October 11, 2023.)

♦ "We don't wanna stop at just simply saying this is the bad guy this is the good guy you know and then just stop right there." (Dartmouth professor Tarek El-Ariss, about the forums he and Professor Susannah Heschel held for Dartmouth students in the wake of the Saturday, October 7, 2023 attack by Hamas on Israel.)

♦ "Nobody is acting out of anger. He's the bad guy, we're the good guy. It's just the way it is." (Special Forces operative in Afghanistan, after the completion of a successful mission that ended with all the enemy dead.)

♦ "Neck tattoo guy catches him outside and beats him savagely leaving Jules naked, bloody, traumatized..." (Bob Mondello's review of the 2024 film Femme on NPR, All Things Considered.)

♦ "The clothing Allen admitted wearing to police matches the outfit worn by a man—known as 'Bridge Guy'—who was captured on video by Libby walking towards the two girls, instructing them to go 'down the hill' moments before their deaths." (Murders of Abigail Williams and Liberty German.)

♦ "It's weird that all these professors look alike. There is a 'type'—still dressing like a turn of the last century intellectual, Granny Clampett wire frames and all." (An online commenter about "Stanford professor who vanished in hike ahead of domestic violence court date is found" by Emily Crane, The New York Post, June 12, 2023.)

the sheer audacity won Arnold the title of the ~ (Quebec)

♦ According to historian John Julius Norwich, Hannibal led 37 elephants over the Alps, and Norwich notes that the Carthaginians must have had some secret way with elephants, as African elephants are generally considered to be untamable, unlike their Indian counterparts.

♦ David's painting, "Napoleon Crossing the Alps," shows a rock with Hannibal's name inscribed on it.

♦ Hannibal is also associated with his great military victory over the Romans at the Battle of Cannae, a double envelopment that is still taught at military schools. However, he failed to follow up on his victory, which has become at least one definition of a "Hannibalic victory."

♦ Hannibal learned of the defeat of his brother's relief force when the Romans delivered his brother's head to his camp. Carthage, of course, would end up being razed to the ground.

♦ The military man praised as the "American Hannibal" for his heroism at Quebec, on Lake Champlain, in the Mohawk River valley, and particularly at the Battle of Saratoga, was none other than Benedict Arnold, who, as the supervisor of West Point, schemed to deliver that strongpoint on the Hudson to the British. Unlike other notorious traitors, he lived out his days in relative peace and prosperity, in Canada, and then London, where he died.

♦ The use of the word “harm” often suggests, threatens, or lays the basis for a legal case.

♦ “The assertions are strident, and the vocabulary is esoteric (‘harm,’ ‘insurrection’) as if it were translated from a foreign language. In a sense, it is. The language is legalese, and it is designed to build a foundation upon which a company can be held liable under civil-rights law in an American court. This activist tactic has been widely misunderstood... The word ‘safe’ is carefully chosen. It gestures at certain specific kinds of negligence for which a university could pay dearly in a court of law.” (“The Inequality of ‘Equity,’” by Christopher Caldwell, National Review, May 17, 2021.)

♦ “In 2016, the writer Sarah Schulman published a book called Conflict Is Not Abuse, elaborating on [Catherine] Hodes’s work. She argues that overstatement of harm can itself cause more harm. The person seen as good will be supported and the person seen as bad will be shunned. On social media, Hodes said, these binaries become even more entrenched, because people are encouraged to take sides. This was the case with Ford’s tweet, and thousands of other ephemeral dramas.” (“That’s It. You’re Dead To Me. Suddenly everyone is ‘toxic’” by Kaitlyn Tiffany, The Atlantic, September, 2022.)

♦ “Family sues Meta alleging teen daughter suffered harm due to Instagram addiction” by Katie Kindelan, GMA, June 9, 2022.)

♦ “You know, we have a situation where a handful of people are crying wolf, about social media. But we don’t actually have the data, we don’t have the materials we need to build a wolf detector.” (Professor Andrew Przybylski of the Oxford Internet Institute (OII). From “Facebook’s growth not linked to psychological harm, study finds” by Chris Vallance, BBC, August 9, 2023.)

♦ INJURY, n. An enmity next in degree of enormity to a slight. (The Devil’s Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

But like any nickname, the ‘Harvard of the Midwest’ label has probably been used before by other schools. So the only question to ask now is how many other schools refer to themselves as the ‘Harvard of the Midwest.’ The answer? Dozens.” (“So which school is the real ‘Harvard of the Midwest?’” by Nathan Everly, Student Life (the independent newspaper of Washington University in St. Louis since eighteen seventy-eight), December 6, 2006.)

♦ “The ‘Harvard of the Midwest’ editorial in The Daily Eastern News on Sept. 7 was the best editorial the paper has had in quite some time. / The editorial strongly rebuked Eastern’s administration for proclaiming on its Web site that the university has been called ‘The Harvard of the Midwest.’ / As the editorial indicated, the statement is absurd and ridiculous. The editorial was headlined: ‘The Harvard of untrue boasts.’” (“The truth behind ‘The Harvard of the Midwest’” by Allan H. Keith, The Daily Eastern News, September 12, 2005. The newspaper’s motto is, ‘Tell The Truth And Don’t Be Afraid.’)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A father accidentally ran over the family cat while backing out of the garage. His little daughter cried and cried and was inconsolable. "Don't be sad," he said, and told her to get an empty shoebox from the house. He put the dead cat in the shoebox, and then he led her out into the yard, where he dug a hole. All the while, he explained to her how the cat had gone to cat heaven, and how happy the cat was there. In cat heaven, he explained, it rained cream, and the cats licked the cream off the leaves. Cat nip and cat treats grew on all the bushes. All the dogs were in zoos, and the cat mothers and fathers took their kittens to look at them. He went on and on in a soothing voice, and gradually his little daughter calmed down. She stopped crying, and even helped to fill in the little grave with clods of dirt from her little hands. When the funeral was over, she said, "Daddy? Can we kill another cat?"

♦ “The fox knows many tricks, the hedgehog, one good one.”
(Archilochus.)

♦ A hedgehog defense involves an isolated stronghold or strongpoint which can be surrounded yet still survive, in modern times, by aerial resupply. The strongpoints are capable of all-around (perimeter) defense. The Battle of Khe Sanh (1968) was such a defense. Hedgehogs or strongpoints can be bypassed but will slow an attacker down and expose the enemy’s rear to attack. Problems include the fact that strongpoints can simply be bypassed (as happened to the French at the start of World War II) or that the enemy can prevent aerial resupply, as happened to the 6th Army under Paulus at Stalingrad in 1943 and the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. In Vietnam, the hedgehog concept had worked at the Battle of Na San but proved to be a decisive catastrophe for the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. Many wondered if the Battle of Khe Sanh in 1968 would be a Dien Bien Phu for the US, but the U.S. Marines somehow managed to hang on.

She also seems to do a lot of paid content articles.)

♦ "The language a writer uses to create a world is that world, and Franzen's strenuously contemporary and therefore juvenile language is a world in which nothing important can happen. Madame Bovary's marriage sucked, Heathcliff was into Catherine: these words fail the context not just because they are of our own time. There is no import in things that 'suck,' no drama in someone's being 'into' someone else. A writer like Franzen, who describes two lovers as 'fucking,' trivializes their relationship. The result is boredom." ("Smaller Than Life," by B. R. Myers, The Atlantic, October, 2010.)

♦ "It stars Emma Stone, Willem Dafoe and Mark Ruffalo, and it has a story that critic Bob Mondello says is what you might expect if Mary Shelley had written Frankenstein as a sex comedy." (The 2023 film Poor Things.)

♦ "It's a little bit like, say, Spitting Image has done in the past doing "fur" the present moment... On the eve of Good Friday, a man on the run from life finds himself in a deep dark wood, and he spends Easter weekend on a rollercoaster...Let's have a quick listen to Canto 26 here." ("Dante's Divine Comedy mined for 21st-century meaning," BBC, 11 Jan 2021, with BBC Europe Editor Katya Adler.)

♦ "The short-list for this year's Turner prize doesn't feature any individual artists for the first time. Instead, the contenders are all collectives, which created artwork ranging from a 24-hour fundraising rave to the use of food to help understand the workings of the world... There's a strong political thread. The raves... are part of what is described as queer, trans and intersex black and people of color radical activism." (BBC Six O'clock News, 07/05/2021. J.M.W. Turner was born 1775 and died 1851. Many people know him for his painting, "The Fighting Temeraire.")

♦ "Holocaust remembrance Day is a time to remember more than one atrocity." (The Louisville Courier-Journal, Opinion, Jan 27, 2023. The opinion includes references to Black people, Asians, Hispanics, Muslims, LGBTQ+ and trans-gender people, Native Americans, skin color, religion, gender identity, ethnic background, hate speech, current "autocratic" leaders, and "polite racism" versus outright bigotry.)

♦ According to the Wikipedia article "Maafa," that term "is derived from a Swahili term for 'disaster, terrible occurrence or great tragedy.'" Palestinians speak of the "Nakba," or "Catastrophe."

♦ "The use of 'holocaust' by Mr. Castro demonstrates his ignorance of history and disdain towards its victims. Such words are unacceptable." (French foreign ministry spokesman Bernard Valero, responding to comments by Fidel Castro that France's deportation of Roma in 2010 amounted to a 'racial holocaust'.")

♦ "So I just wanted to come here today and say that I'm truly sorry for offending people with remarks about the Holocaust. There's no comparison." (Marjorie Taylor Greene, U.S. Congresswoman.)

♦ Nick Robinson: Do you when you hear people making comparisons with the thirties pause or do you in stark contrast as some people do say, 'How dare you make that comparison?'" / Suella Braverman: To throw out those flippant analogies diminishes the unspeakable tragedy that millions of people went through. And I don't think anything that is happening in the UK today can come close to what happened in the Holocaust. So I find it a lazy and unhelpful comparison to make." ("Gary Lineker tweet 'diminishes' tragedy of Holocaust—Suella Braverman," BBC, Political Thinking with Nick Robinson, March 9, 2023.)

♦ Russia versus the Ukraine. Both sides are referring to the Holocaust.

♦ "Petrovsky-Shtern told me, 'From a purely historical standpoint, there is no comparison' between the Holocaust and the Russian invasion of Ukraine... But, he added, 'from the point of view of rhetoric, the comparison makes sense. [Zelensky] is saying, 'They are coming to erase us.'" ("The Memorial: A Holocaust atrocity was about to be commemorated. Then came another war" by Masha Gessen, The New Yorker, April 18, 2022.)

♦ "It would be good generally if people could stop using Nazi Germany as a kind of bad things emoji. Better to explain and use detail. Save Nazi Germany. Keep it in your back pocket for those occasions when only Nazi Germany will do." ("Why there are no winners after the BBC's two-footed tackle on Gary Lineker" by Barney Ronay, The Guardian, 10 March 2023.)

♦ "In the United States, Holocaust deniers have had more success than any other country." (Linguist Deborah Tannen.)

♦ "A circle is closing. For the first time in 20 or 30 years, the Jewish congregations commemorate Kristallnacht for themselves... It's a change that indicates that specific period of coming to terms with the criminal deeds of a forerunner government in Germany is itself becoming history. It will not be forgotten, but it is not anymore an issue of major emotional importance for the population." (Cilly Kugelmann, deputy director of the Jewish Museum in Berlin, on the celebration of the fall of the Berlin Wall and the remembrance of Kristallnacht, both of which occurred on November 9. From "Recalling History on a Day of Light and Darkness," by Michael Slackman, The New York Times, November 9, 2010.)

♦ "For several days now Sofya [Osipovna Levinton] hadn't wanted to sleep. She sat there, wide awake, in the stinking darkness... As she listened to people's cries and mutterings, she realized that their heads were filled with painfully vivid images that no words could ever convey... 'Golda! Golda!' cried a man's voice, racked with sobs. // Rozenberg the accountant was still counting as he helped dig the pit for himself and the other brenners... And then suddenly, while he was dreaming, his tears had come gushing out, burning him, breaking through the crust that had formed over his brain and his heart. 'Golda! Golda!' he cried out." // [Sofya Osipovna Levinton's] eyes—which had read Homer, Izvestia, Huckleberry Finn and Mayne Reid, that had looked at good people and bad people, that had seen the geese in the green meadows of Kursk, the stars above the observatory at Pulkovo, the glitter of surgical steel, the Mona Lisa in the Louvre, tomatoes and turnips in the bins at market, the blue water of Issyk-Kul—her eyes were no longer of any use to her... She was still breathing, but breathing was hard work..." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part 1, Chapter 43 and 44 and Part 2, Chapter 48.)

♦ Many older people are uncomfortable hearing comparisons like the ones above to the Jewish Holocaust of World War II.

From Le Havre in France and Hull in England, and from New Bedford and Nantucket in America, the whaling and the sealing fleets set out." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ "The battle that followed began at 1400 hours on December 6 and ended on December 15, barely a mile north of where it had begun. It was a ten-day blood bath that cost the Regiment over a hundred and fifty battle casualties. / The opening attack was made in broad daylight by Charley Company under cover of the strongest artillery support Division could muster. It was a devastating barrage...but the enemy replied with equal violence and within minutes Charley was being pounded into the saturated valley floor under a titanic upheaval of mud and steel. Dog, coming up behind, tried to avoid the worst of that holocaust..." (And No Birds Sang by Farley Mowat. World War II. Italy.)

♦ “Christendom too had been changed by the Fourth Crusade. Long divided, it was now polarised. For centuries before and after the Great Schism of 1054, relations between the Eastern and Western Churches had fluctuated between the politely distant and the bitterly acrimonious; their differences, however, had been essentially theological. After the sack of Constantinople (1204) by the Western Crusaders, this was no longer true. In the eyes of the Greeks, these barbarians who had desecrated their altars, plundered their homes and violated their women could no longer be considered, in any real sense of the word, Christians at all. How now could they ever agree to the idea of union with Rome? ‘Better the Sultan’s turban than the cardinal’s hat,’ they used to say; and they meant it.” (John Julius Norwich, A History of the Mediterranean.)

♦ 1572. August. The Catholic party annihilated between 30,000 and 100,000 Huguenots (Protestants) across France.

♦ The Thirty Years’ War, 1618-1648. The deadliest European religious war in history. “The ur-trauma of the German people, when the German character was formed,” according to Curt Hondrich.

♦ “All during Florence Nightingale’s crushing labors in the Crimean War, her work was hampered by bickering among religious groups. / Today we may still see occasional examples of religious prejudice. But fortunately we have nothing that can compare with the violent religious feelings of nineteenth-century England. / Murmurs had already been heard because ten of Florence’s party were Roman Catholic nuns. Mary Stanley’s party included fifteen more nuns, led by a fiery Irish woman named Mother Bridgeman. There were also Florence’s fourteen Anglican Sister to be considered. The religious feeling was by no means limited to a simple case of Protestant versus Catholic. Within the established Church of England, there was distrust between ‘high church’ and ‘low church’ groups. Protestants outside the Church of England distrusted all of them. / ... And all this petty bickering was going on during the ghastly winter days, when dying men were pouring into the hospital by the thousands and the remnant of the British army was freezing in the trenches before Sebastopol.” (Florence Nightingale by Ruth Fox Hume.)

♦ “The day after the surrender of Fort Sumter the entire land, both North and South, blazed with an ardent and confident patriotism, although the patriotism of the South was precisely opposite to that of the North... The churches were kept open all day for the saying of bloodthirsty prayers. God, as usual, was on both sides.” (“A New American History,” by W. E. Woodward.)

what had gone before were ~...

♦ "Here [in Marble Canyon] the men started to grow restless: the trip was taking too long and was bruising, cold, and dangerous. Major Powell, they complained, was interested only in science—in taking observations, in collecting, in writing. He seemed less concerned with getting the team down to calm waters, to safety, and to home. / There were mutinous rumblings, and they were scarcely mitigated when their leader realized—and promptly told his men—that it was going to get worse and take still longer. For with the cliffs fast rising around them and the outflow of a known river named by the old conquistador explorers the Colorado Chiquita bursting in on their left side, it was clear that the main part of the huge cleft, the hitherto untraveled Big Canyon, as it was then vaguely known—lay now directly in front of them. What had gone before were mere hors d'oeuvres. The main dish lay just ahead. / 'We are three quarters of a mile in the depths of the earth,' Powell would later write in his diary." ♦ "Hunger was now torturing us. The Cossacks sat gloomily round the fire and hardly spoke. Hoping to forget their hunger a little, the men tried to sleep. I lay down too, but could not sleep. Anxiety and doubt tormented me. If we did not manage to kill something tomorrow, or reach the Iman, things would be desperate indeed. In the summer a man can carry on without food for several days, but in the winter hunger kills quickly." (Dersu by V. K. Arseniev.)

♦ "The mental adjustment took longer. It was a continual surprise to encounter no queues at food shops—'like a man who braces himself to pick up a heavy suitcase,' wrote Ginzburg, 'and finds it empty.' The words 'I'm hungry,' recently so charged with desperation and despair, only slowly reverted to their old function of expressing an ordinary desire for lunch." (Leningrad by the great writer Anna Reid.)

♦ "Man, you eat all the goddamn oranges and all the goddamn bananas you want." (An American merchant-marine sailor in 1947, to Tom Lantos (1928-2008), who was traveling from Europe to the US on a converted troop ship. Lantos, a Holocaust survivor, had discovered a big basket of oranges and a big basket of bananas in the mess and had asked the sailor, 'Should I take an orange or a banana?') On hearing the sailor, Lantos thought, "Then I knew I was in paradise." He went on to become the lone Holocaust survivor to serve in the US Congress. He was admitted to the US because he had been awarded an academic scholarship to study in the US on the basis of an essay he had written about the US president Franklin D. Roosevelt.)

♦ "There is always trouble if meat is not divided by lot. Someone immediately says that he has been given more than his share, and tries to hand a piece to someone else. Then there is much arguing and swearing 'by God!' with everyone insisting that he has been given too much, and finally a deadlock ensues which can only be settled by casting lots for the meat—as should have been done in the first place. I have never heard a man grumble that he has received less than his share. Such behaviour would be inconceivable to the Bedu, for they are careful never to appear greedy, and quick to notice anyone who is. I remember the story of a destitute Bedu boy, who told his mother that he liked dining when there was no moon, for then his companions could not see how much food he took. His mother said, 'Sit with them in the dark and cut at a piece of rope with your knife turned the wrong way round.' The boy did so that very night. There was no moon and it was very dark, but as he picked up the knife a dozen voices called out, 'You have got it the wrong way round!'" (Wilfred Thesiger, Arabian Sands.)

♦ Bedouins will appoint a man to divide the food into portions. Each man will take a portion, but never one he thinks is larger than the other portions. And so, the last portion goes to the man who divided the food, and if his portion is larger, he will eat shame. And so he is very careful to divide the portions equally.

♦ One third food. One third water. One third empty. (What the stomach is for, according to a Bedouin.)

♦ It is said a Tuareg can survive in the desert for nine days on just three dates, if it is necessary. On the first day, he will eat the skin of one date. On the second day, he will consume the meat of that one date. And on the third day he will suck the stone of that one date. And so on for nine days. On the tenth day, however, he will die.

♦ "He who eats his fill while his neighbor goes without food is not a believer."

♦ "The significance of sex and food is reversed between the Siriono and us Westerners: the Sirionos' strongest anxieties are about food, they have sex virtually whenever they want, and sex compensates for food hunger, while our strongest anxieties are about sex, we have food virtually whenever we want, and eating compensates for sexual frustration." (The Siriono Indians live in Bolivia. From The World Until Yesterday by Jared Diamond.)

♦ "Then started again, and, coming to a small log cabin, entered and asked for something to eat. The poor people seemed to be alarmed and said they had nothing. 'Oh,' we said, 'we do not wish to deprive you, and we are willing to pay.' Then they took courage and gave us some fat pork, corn bread, and a kind of coffee, made, I think, out of burned peas. But it was warm. There were three of us, the two doctors and myself. We gave our hosts five dollars, and they were delighted, and so were we. Hunger made that breakfast the most delicious we had in six months." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. Corby served during the Civil War.)

♦ "It is a fact that if you are hungry and you see somebody eating something you would like to have your teeth in too, spit will flood to your mouth and you will swallow to make a noise. That noise Shani made as I watched her. Then I saw her eyes, and they were on my can. / 'Why no home for dinner to-day?' I asked her... / Next morning I went to school with my can packed tight... Not a word from my mother, only a little smile. / So Shani and me sat together to have dinner every day in my mother's smile..." (How Green Was My Valley by Richard Llewellyn.)

♦ “Keep it in mind during the days ahead that war does inexplicable things to people, and no man can guess how it is going to affect him until he has had a really stiff dose of it... The most unfortunate ones after any war are not those with missing limbs; they are the ones who have had their spiritual feet knocked out from under them. The beer halls and gutters are still full of such poor bastards from my war, and nobody understands or cares what happened to them...I remember two striking examples from my old Company in the 4th Battalion. Both damn fine fellows, yet both committed suicide in the Line. They did not shoot themselves—they let the Germans do it because they had reached the end of the tether. But they never knew what was the matter with them; that they had become empty husks, were spiritually depleted, were burned-out.” (A letter Farley Mowat received from his Dad. ♦ "Byrne's work has long been obsessed with the many ways of being imprisoned—in oneself, in an addiction to things, in a meaningless life—and equally attuned to different forms of escape." ("David Byrne And Spike Lee Conjure Up A Joyous Vision Of 'American Utopia'" by John Powers, NPR, Fresh Air, October 13, 2020.)

♦ "I wanted to speak up for my rights. And also I didn't want my future to be just sitting in a room and be imprisoned in my four walls and just cooking and giving birth to children. I didn't want to see my life in that way." (Malala Yousafzai. Greta Thunberg was born in 2003. Malala Yousafzai was born 1997. Florence Nightingale was born in 1820. Joan of Arc was born circa 1412.)

coming up to her afterward, confessing their own secret desire to escape. Her story resonates, she says, because so many women wonder if they wouldn't do the same thing. They feel pressure to smile and pretend their life is fine, even when trapped in a bad relationship or a bad job or any number of circumstances that seem beyond their control. Toby thinks these women are inspired by her not only because she had the guts to leave, but also because she tells her story without shame." ("Toby Dorr's Great Escape" by Michael J. Mooney, The Atlantic, October 2020.)

♦ "Then there is the other idle man, who is idle in spite of himself, who is inwardly consumed by a great longing for action, because he seems to be imprisoned in some cage. A just or unjustly ruined reputation, poverty, fatal circumstances, adversity—they are what make men prisoners. And the prison is also called prejudice, misunderstanding, fatal ignorance of one thing or another, distrust, false shame. One cannot always tell what it is that keeps us shut in, confines us, seems to bury us, but nevertheless, one feels certain barriers, certain walls. Such a man does not always know what he can do, but he feels by instinct: Yes, I am good for something; my life has an aim after all; I know that I might be quite a different man! There is something inside of me; what can it be? / Do you know what frees one from this captivity? It is..." (Dear Theo: The Autobiography of Vincent Van Gogh, Edited by Irving and Jean Stone.)

♦ "The word appears to be having its inflection point right now." (The word "bae" in 2014, in popularity. See the excellent Wikipedia entry, "Bae (word).")

♦ "Inflection point" provides a nice statistical sheen to pundits. The Battle of Stalingrad was a turning point in World War II. Nowadays, it might be described by a contempo-speaker as an inflection point.

♦ OLD: turning point... / NEW: pivot point, inflection point, hinge...

♦ "Inflection point" is on the Lake Superior State University 2023 Banished Words List—words banned for "misuse, overuse, and uselessness."

I do not recommend it. As my first turn to speak came up, I was still struggling with what I should apologise for. I was not going to apologise for denying my colleagues' humanity or endangering their lives. I had not done those things. I was not going to apologise for publishing the op-ed. Finally, I came up with something that felt true. I told the meeting that I was sorry for the pain that my leadership of Opinion had caused. What a pathetic thing to say. I did not think to add, because I'd lost track of this truth myself by then, that opinion journalism that never causes pain is not journalism. It can't hope to move society forward." ("When the New York Times lost its way" by James Bennet, 1843 Magazine (The Economist), Dec 14th 2023.)

♦ "One day Savostyanov came into Viktor's office and pleaded with him. / 'Viktor Pavlovich, I entreat you, we all of us entreat you: write a letter, say you repent! I can assure you that will help. to you with hope. Write a letter, admit your errors.' / 'What errors? What do you want me to repent of?' / 'Who cares? It's what everyone does—writers, scientists, political leaders, even your beloved Shostakovich. He admits his errors, writes letters of repentance—and then returns to work. It's like water off a duck's back.' / 'But what do you want me to repent of? And who to?' / 'The director, the Central Committee... It doesn't matter—as long as you repent! Something like this: 'I have committed errors and I admit my guilt. I am now conscious of this and I promise to mend my ways.' That sort of thing—you know what's expected. That's bound to help; it always helps.' / Savostyanov's bright, laughing eyes were for once quite serious. They even seemed to be a different colour. / 'Thank you, thank you, my friend,' said Viktor. 'I'm grateful to you for your concern.'" (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated and with an introduction by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books.)

♦ "We're already out, and it's been, what like, thirtyish minutes." (Riley Sullivan, with high upspeak on "minutes." Riley was passing out free Naloxone and fentanyl testing strips on the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill campus. His goal is for every student to carry Naloxone on his or her person and know how to load and inject it. Three UNC-Chapel Hill students have died of fentanyl in the last two years. From "Naloxone On college campuses saves lives" by Liz Schlemmer, NPR, All Things Considered, October 16, 2023.)

♦ "For the third of singles who reported trying it, consensual nonmonogamy covered a range; polyamory (where relationship partners agree that each may have a romantic relationship with other people); open relationships (a committed primary relationship that openly allows for romantic and/or sexual activity with others); swinging (expanding an exclusive romantic relationship to seek out other sexual partners together); and being monogamish (a committed relationship that allows for sexual variety with others, either together or individually)." ("Where do Americans stand on consensual nonmonogamy?" by Cady Lang, Time, February 26, 2024. "Cady Lang is a staff writer at TIME. She covers

♦ The Gulag Archipelago by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn.

♦ "And I thought, if I was doomed to be sent to this island of punishment, of grief, at least I will try to make it with my own words..." (The Israeli writer David Grossman about his novel Falling Out of Time.)

♦ No man is an island entire of itself; every man / is a piece of the continent, a part of the main; if a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe / is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as / well as any manner of thy friends or of thine / own were; any man's death diminishes me, / because I am involved in mankind. / And therefore never send to know for whom / the bell tolls; it tolls for thee. (John Donne.)

♦ The Atlas of Remote Islands by Judith Schalansky is a wonderfully short, impressionistic, and graphically distinguished book about actual islands that should be on the bookshelf of every household with children.

♦ Islands can be remote, and they are often the source of endemic species. On the other hand, if the island has a port, than it might be a place where people from all parts of the world mingle and mix.

♦ "When I first moved to Manhattan in 1990, it was easy to forget that New York City is a collection of islands (of the five boroughs, only the Bronx is on the mainland) or that it has over 520 miles of coastline, more than either San Francisco or Seattle." ("Wet and Wild" by Tony Perrottet, photographs by Gina LeVay, Smithsonian, May 2017. The map is superb.)

♦ Sir Winston Churchill wrote of the "Niagaras of folly and misstatements" about "the Second Front" that Stalin so insisted on, from 1941 onwards. It is interesting to compare the rivers of Britain and the United States. And while we Americans are honestly surprised by how puny and weak the British Rivers are in comparison to ours, we must not forget Joseph Conrad's description of the Thames from The Heart of Darkness: "The old river in its broad reach rested unruffled at the decline of day, after ages of good service done to the race that peopled its banks, spread out in the tranquil dignity of a waterway leading to the uttermost ends of the earth." The identity and strength of Britain has always been due to its status as an island nation with a great Navy, not a continental one, as Sir Winson knew so well.)

♦ On the 6th of May the Yukon began to rise rapidly, lifting the ice, which, however, remained fast in front of the town... The sight was one to inspire respect. When a big floe, forty feet across, struck the front of the barrier, it half rose out of the water, then dived under, or turned on edge, crunched into the front with a dull roar, and remained there... At four o'clock on the morning of the 8th the cry was raised, "The ice is going out!" and everybody rushed out in time to see the bridge of ice crack, groan, then slowly push together and stop; then slowly, slowly the whole mass began to move, and in a few minutes there was nothing but a swift river, with cakes of ice as big as cabins strewn along the banks..." ♦ "Hey, Joe, what do you know?" (The lifelong burden of being named Joe. My response continues to be, "Potatoes grow in Idaho." And if the question is, "Hey Joe, where you going with that gun in your hand," my response is, as always, "I'm gonna shoot my old lady, I done caught her messin' round with another man.")

♦ If you are curious about “G.I. Joe,” see the Wikipedia entry for “G.I.” and also the Wikipedia entry for “Devil dog.”

♦ See the Wikipedia article, “Willie and Joe,” the two cartoon G.I.s from World War II. My favorite “Willie and Joe” cartoon is the one labeled “The Prince and the Pauper.” In Up Front by Bill Mauldin, the text about the cartoon reads, “It would take a pretty tough guy not to feel his heart go out to the shivering, little six-year-old squeaker who stands barefoot in the mud, holding a big tin bucket so the dogface can empty his mess kit into it... [T]here is a big difference between the ragged, miserable infantryman who waits with his mess kit, and the ragged, miserable civilian who waits with his bucket. The doggie knows where his next meal is coming from. That makes him a very rich man in this land where hunger is so fierce...” I showed this cartoon to our military students in Saudi Arabia, and some wondered who the “Prince” was, but their buddies explained it to them, and they got it and admired it greatly.

♦ O it’s Tommy this, an’ Tommy that, an’ “Tommy, go away”; But it’s “Thank you Mister Atkins,” when the band begins to play. (Rudyard Kipling. His son John was killed at the Battle of Loos, September 1915, age eighteen. President Teddy Roosevelt’s son Quentin was killed in action July 1918, age 20. Both fathers grieved deeply, as any father would, famous or not, over the death of their son in combat.)

 analysis

♦ Geoff Nunberg comprehensively discussed this word, “Joe.” Listen to “Geoff Nunberg Nominates 2008’s Word of The Year,” NPR, Fresh Air, December 24, 2008. A 5-minute Listen. Fresh Air does not seem to have replaced Nunberg as its go-to linguist. A good candidate would be the linguist John McWhorter.

♦ "It may have been a little after midnight when I ran into a bear standing on his hind legs in the middle of my path, growling at me. At this point the sound of the swiftly running waters of the Ganges was so loud that we had neither of us heard the other's approach. Pointing my primitive spear at his heart, I backed step by step so as to keep my eyes fixed on him. Around the first bend of the track I hurriedly lit a fire, and pulling out a burning stick, I brandished it in front of me and moved forward to meet my enemy. But coming around the corner I found the road clear and the bear gone. Tibetan peasants told me later that bears are only aggressive by day. At night they are afraid to attack..." this ~ who led this man astray (a royal socialite)

♦ The play Macbeth is usually thought of in terms of manipulation, ambition, hate and revenge. On the other hand, the 2015 film Macbeth, directed by Justin Kurzel, portrays a love story. (See "Macbeth Without Evil" by Andrew O'Hagan, The New York Review, December 17, 2015.) And more recently, Naveen Andrews, who plays Sunny Balwani in the Hulu series The Dropout, compared his character to Lady Macbeth, and suggested that the story was about how far his character would go for love! (See "The Dropout's Naveen Andrews Saw Sunny Balwani as Lady Macbeth" by Roxana Hadadi, Vulture.) What an epithet traditionally suggested can completely change as the work is interpreted through the generations.

~ on that question scientifically (COVID / = decide)

♦ This is often used with wh-question words: how did it land; where will it land; when will it land... It seems to be connected with the idea of something being "up in the air." It is a natural metaphor for people who are accustomed to flying and airports. In Bhutan, I suspect the equivalent expression is, "So, where does this yak stop?"

♦ HOWEVER. "Titled Porches, the album is slated to make landfall on August 11." In this instance, it is clearly a ship, not a plane, that is landing.

♦ One meaning of land means arrive. Another means "to affect you." Yet another meaning seems to be "decide."

♦ "[Choice] #2 would be admirable, but [choice] #1 is where they'll likely land." (Vivek Ramaswamy, presidential hopeful, about the resignation under fire of UPenn's President Liz Magill. Choice #2 is to "embrace true free speech." Choice #1 is to expand speech codes, or restrictions.)

♦ "Is she alive, is she not, where is she, is she dead, and she couldn't land on any particular... on one of those." (A priest about a bereft mother whose 6-year-old child had vanished.)

♦ "It's become, how do I say customary to say, to thank service members like yourself, for your service. I think that's an acknowledgement that a lot of people who came back from Vietnam in particular that the country did them dirty, you know, did not respect what they had personally sacrificed even if people did not like or agree with the overall mission, right, or the overall conflict, okay, so, I think people want to do better, and, it has been, you know, one thanks people who served like yourself for your service, how does that land with you." (NPR's Michel Martin interviewing Laura Jedeed, author of "Afghanistan Meant Nothing." Jedeed was gentle in her answer.)

♦ "It's disappointing that we've landed in a place where the uniforms are the topic of discussion." (MLB. Contempo-speak can be prolix. "It's disappointing that this is an issue." Maybe that's its whole point.)

♦ "By the conclusion of the '187 minutes' hearing, the question was now whether the committee's last scheduled hearing in October would, in the words of both Time and CNN, 'stick the landing.'" ("Inside the Jan. 6 Committee" by Robert Draper and Luke Broadwater, The New York Times Magazine, January 1, 2023.)

♦ "The really tough thing about landing that scene and really selling it is that..." (Talk about a film. This seems to delete the verb "stick.")

♦ "DOWNSIDE OF SIDEWAYS Although the lander's sideways position is far from ideal..." (The 13-foot-tall "Odysseus" is not upright on the moon, but lies on its side. The IM-1 Nova-C lunar lander tipped over on landing.)

♦ "It was a lovely conversation. They said, 'Oh, darling, I'm so sorry you stepped on a land mine.' I listened to them and they listened to me. It was sweet and it was fun, even." (Gina Carano, about studio-mandated sensitivity train with two transgender representatives from GLAAD. Gina was a MMA fighter before being noticed by Steven Soderbergh and cast in the lead of the 2011 film Haywire. Her next role was in Fast & Furious 6. Read "Gina Carano on Getting Sacked From Star Wars and Her Grudge Match With Disney" by Seth Abramovitch, The Hollywood Reporter, March 14, 2024. It's an excellent article.)

♦ "The S-Mine, a bounding fragmentation device, explodes at a height of 2 metres."

♦ "I can't run any more. I can't play with the other children and I can't go to school at the moment because of the infection." (Eleven-year-old Mawa, in Egypt. She kicked what she thought was a tin can and it blew off her foot. The UXO was a leftover from World War II.)

♦ "It looked like a little can; it was interesting." (Mara al-Miri, 10, from her hospital bed, where she was taken with shrapnel wounds to her leg. She had picked up a metallic grey canister, the size of a battery with a head that looked like a cigarette lighter, not knowing it was a bomblet, more dangerous than a grenade, that had been delivered by an artillery shell and that had failed to explode. She had thrown it to a 10-year-old playmate. The bomblet had exploded, injuring her, her playmate and a third child, her cousin. This all happened in the village of Ayt el Shaab, in southern Lebanon.)

♦ "Throughout the Soviet occupation the only [mine clearing] equipment the guerrillas ever had was the winter hail, dubbed 'Allah's mine sweeper' because the crashing pellets of ice sometimes triggered the mines." (Soldiers of God, With the Mujahidin In Afghanistan, by Robert D. Kaplan.)

♦ "...There appeared glimpses of a landscape now in a state of arboreal undress, much changed from what had gone before. / What Clark glimpsed was a relatively treeless brown-green country, stretching away into a violet horizon that was longer and flatter than any that these hill-born Easterners had ever witnessed or imagined before. It was landscape laid out, flatly undulating, beneath a sky so big it was overwhelming. It was a new kind of prairie, a limitless tableland of grass, a huge grazing-plain, with a wind that souged near-constantly above the vegetation, the temperature of the drifting air the only clue to the season. Its sky was flecked with mare's tails of clouds, where lightning could be seen a hundred miles distant and you could watch the black storms chewing their way toward you, the sky suddenly darkening overhead as the squalls arrived and smashed down wafting curtains of hail until the earth was quite white and crunched underfoot, though within moments the reappearing sun then melted it away, steam suddenly began to rise from the grass, and you could almost hear the plants bursting upward in the newly made and richly damp sauna of heat... / In these prairie parts one finds people and creatures uniquely suited to the conditions: the Comanche and the prairie dog, the Sioux and the rattlesnake, and all of the other Plains Indians—the Blackfoot, the Cheyenne, the Arapaho and the Crow—together with uncountable millions of the single species of animal that once so dominated and symbolized the grass-covered landscapes here, the American bison. / Generally speaking, the Great Plains extend between the 95th and 105th meridians—with the midline... marking 100 degrees west of Greenwich." (The Men Who United The States: America's Explorers, Inventors, Eccentrics, and Mavericks, and the Creation of One Nation, Indivisible by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "It is rough, steep, mountainous country where we were trekking, covered with dense virgin forest, the famous taigá of Siberia, in places almost impenetrable, especially where the ground is littered with fallen giants smashed down by storms." (Dersu the Trapper by V.K. Arseniev. The country Arseniev describes lies between the Amur and Ussuri Rivers and the Sea of Japan, north of Vladivostok, and includes the Sihoté-Alin mountain range.)

♦ "I shall always remember the next day for one of the most beautiful experiences I have ever had. As we marched forward we caught sight, after a while, of the gleaming golden towers of a monastery in the far distance. Above them, shining superbly in the morning sun, were tremendous walls of ice, and we gradually realized that we were looking at the giant trio Dhaulagiri, Annapurna, and Manaslu. As Tradun and the filigree towers of its monastery lay at the far end of the plain we had many hours in which to enjoy the view of these mighty mountains. Not even the necessity of wading through the icy waters of the Tsachu dampened our exuberance. / It was evening when we marched into Tradun. In the last rays of the setting sun the red monastery with its golden roof looked like a fairy palace on the hillside." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter "Into Tibet.")

♦ "They call this plain the Nullabor (Nullarbor). If you want water you have to dig for it among the sand dunes along the shore... In this wilderness everything runs to excess; the excessive noonday heat is followed by outrageous cold by night, rainstorms burst with cyclonic force, and when the rain fails the blown sand is suffocating; even the flies and mosquitoes are in mad abundance. There are moments of grace sometimes in the evenings when extravagant sunsets sweep across the sky and then fade slowly behind enormous stars, but in the main the Nullabor has an implacable sterility and the aborigines used to believe that it was inhabited by demons. They would not chase a kangaroo there. / This then was the terrible region into which Eyre plunged..." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ "That's not their lane to teach my children about sexuality, that's my job." (An upset parent protesting school-library books like The Bluest Eye, All Boys Aren't Blue, and Fun Home.)

♦ "Yes, it feels to me like a moment where people are sort of battering down the hatches and picking the safe lane." (Film producer Dede Gardner.)

♦ "Hey, I stay in my own yard!" (In other words, I mind my own business. From the great John Ford 1940 film Grapes of Wrath.)

♦ "Straying from your lane is reckless in all scenarios."

♦ "You shut up and stay in your lane." ("Passenger taken away by police after racial rant on plane in US," Daily Mail, Sept. 14, 2020. See the video.)

♦ "Beef or barbecue." (A saying in New Orleans, about snitching to the police. If you "beef" or complain to the police, you'll die. Better to kick back, relax, and barbecue.)

 things

♦ Cars have their own language—clunks, clanks, squeals, squeaks, and rattles—which can say a lot about a vehicle's health."

♦ "Chocolate speaks an international language. There is no concern about accents or incorrectly structured sentences. Whether in Tokyo or Madrid, everyone understands chocolate's many culinary dialects." ("Chocolate: A Food Without Borders" by Alejandra Garcia, NPR, Kitchen Window, January 14, 2009.)

♦ "A brand can communicate something, how you wear your pants can communicate something, the portfolio of colors that you choose to adorn yourself with can communicate something..." (Branding and shoes, clothing, pens, politics, authenticity, identity, etc.)

♦ "If you grew up in a black household, Ebonies [copies of Ebony Magazine] were everywhere... It's one of our languages." (Rosa Duffy, bookstore owner and Ebony Magazine collector, about the transformational magazine that was intended to be Life Magazine for Blacks. Once a pillar of the Black community, this great magazine has fallen on hard times, and is now only available online. You would think some US philanthropist would endow a monthly hard-copy version of it in perpetuity. Sadly, not yet.)

♦ "And from being trained, I think it's easier for me to speak a language to producers, and I can speak engineer to the engineers." (The remarkable Lizzo, who is classically trained in music theory and performance, among other things...)

♦ "Crossword puzzles are a way of documenting the language that we share." (Anna Shechtman, crossword constructor.)

 academic language

♦ "There are no native speakers of academic language."

♦ "There is jargon, and then there is jargon." (Academic writing.)

 diplomacy

♦ "Such language risks destabilizing an already complicated situation." (A Russian diplomat.)

♦ "Well, those phrases that you're referring to used by the [US] ambassador ["immediate ceasefire," "UN-facilitated talks"] have become empty cliches, they have been repeated for months and months, you know, if not years. The same phrases were used last year. People thought the elections were going to be organized. Nothing happened, and the people in power are still in power. So I think US diplomacy and other Western diplomacy should be refreshed, should be renewed, and a new technique should be used because Libyans have learned to ignore everything you said. I mean, this discourse by the internationals is absolutely ignored by Libyans, and foreign states as well." (Jalel Harchaoui, a fellow at the Royal United Services Institute which focuses on Libyan security and politics, speaking to David Gura on NPR.)

♦ "Israel is making troubles and problems... they could not be a good neighbor here. We want to liberate the whole Palestine, that's right, because Israel has no right to exist in this region... This war is full of hypocrisy, they are just giving sweet words and some good statements but nothing is done on the ground..." (Hamas spokesman Ghazi Hamad in Gaza talking to Steve Inskip on NPR. From "Hundreds killed in explosion at a crowded Gaza hospital", NPR, Morning Edition, October 17, 2023. In a later interview with Lebanon TV, Ghazi Hamad said, "Israel is a country that has no place on our land...[It] must be finished." He has also been quoted as saying, "We must teach Israel a lesson, and  the law

♦ "Those instructions [from the judge], I'm a lawyer and I couldn't understand them... They've gotten to be too much. They're legalese. And jurors tend to go by the smell test. Does it seem right? Does it seem wrong. And that's what we wanted the jury to do." (Mark Richards, Kyle Rittenhouse's attorney, speaking to Ailsa Chang. From "Kyle Rittenhouse's defense attorney discusses the trial and acquittal," NPR, All Things Considered, Nov. 19, 2021.)

 sports

♦ "There's no 'I' in 'team.'" (An NFL coach.)

♦ "There's an 'I' in 'win.'" (An NFL player.)

♦ "A stream of players were coming over, you know, popping him on the shoulder pads, back patting him on the back, dappling him up..." (The NFL.)

♦ "Man, Brock was balling, put some respect on that man's name, you know, he was runnin', he was throwin'..." (Jesse Washington, ESPN, heard on NPR.)

♦ "Do you know the stigmatism of Alabama education?" (Kayvon Thibodaux, a football player.)

♦ "Bobo got throated." (Surfing.)

♦ NEWER TYPES OF WORKERS: Independent scrutineers (UK); violence interrupters (Baltimore); (seasoned) gallerists (NYC); disinformation analysts / researchers; narrative consultants; script doctors; mental performance coaches; neurodiversity coaches; sleep coaches; showrunners; social theorists; bitcoin miners; public intellectuals; thought leaders; changemakers; creatives; influencers; Minecraft video creators; personal branding experts; shadow consultants (about the shadows that skyscrapers cast); chief experience officers (CXOs); chief remote officers; Chief Wellbeing Officers (CIA, etc.); chief candy officers (Canada); senior managers in generative AI: water sommeliers and advocates; lifestyle impresarios; core brand ambassadors; trend-cycle analysts; trend forecasters; directors of digital strategies (the White House); culture-thinkers; cultural strategists; visual strategists (Nasa's Jet Propulsion Laboratory / JPL); drama therapists; online journalists; investigative data journalists; online safety experts; YouTube investigators and cold case connoisseurs; podcast critics; content coaches (newspapers); social justice reporters; civil resistance experts (NPR); Birding activists; body-image experts; gender educators; queer, non-binary, neurodivergent educators, facilitators, healers and strategists; queer, mad and neurodivergent higher education researchers; childbirth educators specializing in queer birth experiences; ethicists-in-residence; poets-in-residence; data wranglers; documentarians; directors of equity and inclusion; diversity consultants; professional Twitch streamers; play-to-earn gamers; YouTubers; crossword constructors; voter navigators; political spin doctors; youth climate ambassadors; intimacy coordinators; sex workers; professors of television studies; imagineers; healthineers...

♦ "What the f is an 'online safety expert'? Do you see how media outlets baptize totally fake expertise industries and titles (like 'disinformation reporter') to launder their highly politicized censorship agenda as scientific, data-based and neutral?" (A thundering Glenn Greenwald.)

♦ "Tuesday. The world of work has changed out of all recognition from the one I inhabited when I last received a paycheck... Now it seems, freebies are distributed with a liberality unknown in my day, in lieu of salaries, which themselves have disappeared along with actual work..." (Ed Reardon's Week, BBC Episode 5, "How did I do? Hilarious and droll!")  groups, social justice, etc.

♦ "If we could claim marriage, we would be claiming an engine of transformation, a vocabulary of shared values—love, commitment, family, inclusion, dignity, respect—that would help non-gay people better understand who gay people really are, and allow us to share equally, not only in marriage, but in everything." ("Radically Normal: How Gay Rights Activists Changed The Minds Of Their Opponents," NPR, Hidden Brain (with Shankar Vedantam), April 8, 2019. Many gays at the time denigrated the tradition of marriage. Many still do.)

♦ "Love is Love." (A slogan from the "Freedom to Marry" Campaign.)

♦ "As it turned out, the word 'homophobia' was exactly the concept that gay men and lesbians needed to achieve liberation." (Psychotherapist George Weinberg, in 2012. He is the author of the 1972 book Society and the Healthy Homosexual and a gay-rights activist. Quoted in "How 'Phobic' Became a Weapon in the Identity Wars" by Amanda Hess, The New York Times Magazine, Jan. 26, 2016. It's a brilliant article.)

♦ "Gay pop stars can be—and have been—subversive about slipping in references that change our language and thoughts about gay sex. The more that happens, the less likely people feel uncomfortable hearing about it." (Culture journalist Brennan Carley on BBC Culture.)

♦ "A lot of readers, both trans and cis, really want you to say, in the first sentence of the story, 'As a trans person...' But by saying as a trans person, it cedes ground to the idea that I need disclaimers about my point of view. There's a little bit of sick and twisted pleasure I get from saying, 'I'm not going to do that...' / That said, there are certain claims that I can make as a trans writer..." ("Jamie Lauren Keiles Follows the Surgical and Philosophical Journey of Phalloplasty" by Celia Ford, July 26, 2022.)

♦ "I call disabled viewing platforms the "cripple pen." (A presumably disabled commenter, reclaiming the word "cripple." From "After the N-word, the P-word" by Rajni Bhatia, BBC, 11 June 2007, which is about reclaiming the word "Paki" in the same way some Blacks have "reclaimed" the N-word. Who has the right to say what when.)

♦ "black power & intersectional feminism & gender self-determination & solidarity with muslims & indigenous sovereignty & decolonization & disability justice & queer kinship & migrant justice & fat freedom & collective liberation" (A black T-shirt with white lettering worn by Stephanie Lyn Kaufman-Mthimkhulu, Director of Project LETS. "Disability and Mad Justice cultural worker. Community Educator. Organizer. Parent. Conflict Intervention. Facilitator. Care Strategist. Writer... Hire me.)

♦ "The attention The Wing generates is, in large part, because it was founded upon a paradox: its brand is steeped in the feminist language of emancipation, empowerment and equality, while its business is based on one of society's more elitist institution: the private members' club." (Investors include Serena Williams, President Obama's friend and former senior adviser Valerie Jarrett, and members of the US women's soccer team. From "The Wing: how an exclusive women's club sparked a thousand arguments" by Linda Kinstler, The Guardian, 18 Oct 2019.)

 political correctness

♦ "Language should be chosen intentionally and not just in a reflexive manner based on how words were used in the past." (Emily Barske, the Office of the Public Editor, NPR.)

♦ "I hope they don't take anything away from me, whoever they are." (Dave Chappelle on SNL.)

 contempo-speak

♦ "[Jake] Paul was fluent in the language of YouTube, where he came across as a familiar type: the high-school jock, popular and gregarious... / His body of work is filled with dubious stunts...and with mind-numbing repetition of the word, 'bro.' / [His videos] have drawn more than seven billion views; that figure, which approaches the population of this planet, does not account for the innumerable videos that summarize or criticize the ones that Paul has posted..." ("Punching Down" by Kelefa Sanneh, The New Yorker, November 8, 2021.)

♦ "Yeah, they have these belts on with like all these extra bullets and they're like dressed for war." (Leah like talking to her Brit producer, Georgia, for their podcast about the militia movement.)

♦ "Alright, let's not fap around here, let's get into it..." (The opening to a Pop Culture Happy Hour episode on NPR.)

♦ "The book was marketed with the language of pop feminism." (A comment by Jill Lepore.)

♦ "He lacks the TED-talk affect of some of his peers." (Extracurricular Kids In High Places," The New Yorker, Jan. 4 & 11, 2021.)

♦ "In the language of the show, this is a very 'Who-y' thing for a Them to have done." ("Guiding Stars: How 'Who Weekly' explains the new celebrity" by Rachel Syme, The New Yorker, June 7, 2021.)

♦ "PEN15, write out the title, you'll get it, has begun its second season on Hulu..." (A well-briefed Scott Simon of NPR. This is an example of leetspeak.)

♦ "Everytime he says something he sounds like he is reading it from a Poundland self-help book." / "He can't think on his feet, relies too heavily on his corner, and just speaks in a series of cliches with very little substance behind them." (Criticism of a contemporary boxer.)

♦ "The language a writer uses to create a world is that world, and Franzen's strenuously contemporary and therefore juvenile language is a world in which nothing important can happen. Madame Bovary's marriage sucked, Heathcliff was into Catherine: these words fail the context not just because they are of our own time. There is no import in things that 'suck,' no drama in someone's being 'into' someone else. A writer like Franzen, who describes two lovers as 'fucking,' trivializes their relationship. The result is boredom." ("Smaller Than Life," by B. R. Myers, The Atlantic, October, 2010.)

 criticism of "woke" language

♦ Bill's Weekly Column. "How to Speak Progressive." (Bill O'Reilly.)

♦ "Fauci Among the Humans: Health officials play language games to make COVID life permanent" by Peter Tonguette, Washington Examiner, January 4, 2022.

♦ "Wokeness is not just a social philosophy, but an elite status marker, a strategy for personal advancement. You have to possess copious amounts of cultural capital to feel comfortable using words like intersectionality, heteronormativity, cisgender, problematize, triggering, and Latinx..." ("How The Bobos Broke America" by David Brooks, The Atlantic, September 2021.)

♦ "Look, I mean voters of color don't talk about voters of color. Who the hell lives in communities of color? The people I know live in neighborhoods. Right, so there's this whole you know sort of rhetorical lexicon the left of the Democratic party has become obsessed with and insists on using. Which basically just alienates normie voters, including normie non-white voters. I mean, we have people in and around the Democratic Party talking about how all white people have white privilege, and how this is a white supremacist society, and so on, and I just don't think this is the way people think about the world, including you know normie non-white voters." (The political scientist Ruy Teixeira. From "Hispanic and minority voters are increasingly shifting to the Republican party," NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, July 23, 2022.)

♦ "I don't know of a single person that thinks of themselves as a 'person of color.' I really don't..." (James Carville, sounding honestly regretful on "Conversations with Bill Kristol.")

♦ "Collaborating with these gentry was a mixed crowd of wide-minded, wide-mouthed Liberals, who darkened council with pious but disintegrating catch-words, and took care to live very well indeed." (Something of Myself by Rudyard Kipling.)

 presentism

♦ "The prose yo-yoed between Academia.edu and a strained casualness that could inadvertently veer into the Borscht Belt... Too often, Briseis sounds like the voice-over from a History Channel special: 'As a woman living in this camp, I was navigating a complex and dangerous world.'" ("The Many Wars of Pat Barker" by Daniel Mendelsohn, The New Yorker, October 18, 2021. Barker's language is a form of presentism, using contempo-speak.)

♦ "Meacham's book, And There Was Light, tells of the anti-slavery politician whose election as president in 1860 triggered the Civil War. Lincoln struck back at the rebel states by ordering freedom for their enslaved workers, the Emancipation Proclamation, but the first Republican president was fiercely criticized by people who wanted less social change." (Steve Inskeep. From "Lincoln prioritized democracy over his political future. A new biography explains why," NPR, Morning Edition, October 18, 2022. Using contempo-speak and clichés to describe historical events is a form of presentism. Notice the use of "enslaved workers" for slaves.)

♦ In Churchill: Walking With Destiny, Andrew Roberts says that Churchill, in 1940, "vigilantly guarded against mission-creep." That phrase struck a very wrong note with me. Luckily, Wikipedia has an entry: "The phrase first appeared in 1993, in articles published in the Washington Post and in the New York Times concerning the United Nations peacekeeping mission during the Somali Civil War." Roberts could have put the phrase in quotation marks, or added "in what is today called X," as he rightly did when he used "groupthink" in another part of his book, but for some reason he didn't. His use of the phrase is a form of presentism.

♦ The concept of "burnout," originally coined to describe the way many drug addicts felt in the late 1960s, has been expanded to Achilles in the Bronze Age. (See "It's Just Too Much" by Jill Lepore, The New Yorker, May 24, 2021. An excellent article by an excellent writer.)

 average people

♦ "There was a lot of language I was unfamiliar with." (A parent about messages he began receiving from his children's elite private school concerning antiracism. He eventually removed his children from the school.)

♦ "It occurred to me that, because the world media establishment had ignored the Balkans for so long..., these people never had to learn, as the Israelis and Arabs did, how to talk in code, so as not to offend Western sensibilities with their racial hatred. In the Balkans, people spoke more honestly than in the Middle East, and therefore more brutally." (Balkan Ghosts: A Journey Through History by the superb writer and correspondent Robert D. Kaplan.)

♦ "A pidgin English field guide would list buk-buks, pakes, buddaheads, katonks, mokes, titas, popolos, yobos, blalabs, haoles and portagees." (Ethnic and racial labels used in Hawaii.)

 military

♦ "EOD handled the bombs. SSTP treated the wounds. PRP processed the bodies. The 08s fired DPICM. The MAW provided CAS. The 03s patrolled the MSRs. Me and PFC handled the money... / I will remember that our HMMWV had 5 PX. That the SITREP was 2 KIA, 3 WIA. That KIA means they gave everything. That WIA means I didn't." (From the short story "OIF" in Redeployment by the brilliant Marine writer Phil Klay. OIF stands for Operation Iraqi Freedom.)

♦ "This was a victory for boxing, AJ and that blood sucker Hearn out of the race..." (A BBC HYS about the second fight between Oleksandr Usyk and Anthony Joshua.)

♦ "During our excursions we found masses of wild strawberries but where we found the best we also found the most leeches. I knew from my reading that these creatures are the plague of many Himalayan valleys, and now learned from personal experience how helpless one is against them. They drop from trees on men and animals and creep through all the openings in one's clothes, even the eyelets in one's shoes. If one tears them off one loses more blood than if one lets them drink their fill, when they fall off by themselves. Some of the valleys are infested to such a degree by leeches that one simply cannot protect oneself against them. The best way of keeping them out is by wearing socks and trousers steeped in salt." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "Our first day's march lay through patches of forest, clearings, and Malay villages, and was pleasant enough... The next day, the country got wilder... We passed through extensive forests, along paths often up to our knees in mud, and were much annoyed by the leeches for which this district is famous. These little creatures infest the leaves and herbage by the side of the paths, and when a passenger comes along they stretch themselves out at full length, and if they touch any part of his dress or body, quit their leaf and adhere to it. They then creep on to his feet, legs, or other part of his body and suck their fill, the first puncture being rarely felt during the excitement of walking. On bathing in the evening we generally found half a dozen or a dozen on each of us, most frequently on our legs, but sometimes on our bodies, and I had one who sucked his fill from the side of my neck, but who luckily missed the jugular vein. There are many species of these forest leeches. All are small, but some are beautifully marked with stripes of bright yellow. They probably attach themselves to deer or other animals which frequent the forest paths, and have thus acquired the singular habit of stretching themselves out at the sound of a footstep or of rustling foliage..." ♦ "[I]f you're Black, even if you are middle class, there is something about the lived experience of being Black in America that weathers the body. And this is the theory of Dr. Arline Geronimus from the University of Michigan. And she believes that the high-effort coping of dealing with racism in America makes the body prematurely aged. And so if your body is older, then you're more susceptible to every kind of health problem." (Linda Villarosa, from "How Systemic Racism Continues To Determine Black Health and Wealth In Chicago," NPR, Fresh Air, May 6, 2021.)

Nelson, a rural boy, had never seen a Black person before.)

♦ [Scientist] "It is quite clear to me that the legend of the mapinguary (pronounced ma-ping-wahr-EE) is based on human contact with the last of the ground sloths. We know that extinct species can survive as legends for hundreds of years. But whether such animal still exists or not is another question, one we can't answer yet." (Dr. David Oren, a former director of research at the Goeldi Institute in Belem, at the mouth of the Amazon River.) [Indigenous person] "The only way you can kill a mapinguary is by shooting at its head. But that is hard to do because it has the power to make you dizzy and turn day into night. So the best way to do if you see one is climb a tree and hide." (Domingos Parintintin, a tribal leader in Amazonas State, on the mapinguary, a legendary Amazonian beast. ♦ "I felt like books were almost in some passive way, judging me for being who I was, simply by erasing me from the idea, like from the canon in and of itself, right? If I'm not shown or if I don't exist in a story, then that means that somebody doesn't find my life valuable enough to talk about, right? So why would I engage in something that's not engaging with me?" (Jason Reynolds, National Ambassador for Young People's Literature, an award which is presented bi-annually by the Library of Congress.)

♦ "Whether it's journalism, fiction or poetry, writing about war is routinely prized for 'combat gnosticism,' which is the notion that the ability to comprehend war requires a special knowledge possessed only by a battle-hardened elite." ("The War of Words" by John Palattella, The Nation, January 2, 2004 issue.)

♦ "The new exclusivity is partly epistemological, claiming that out-group members cannot share in the knowledge possessed by in-group members." ("How America's identity politics went from inclusion to division" by Amy Chua, The Guardian, 1 March 2018.)

♦ "This thinking [identity politics] appeals not to reason or universal values but to the authority of identity, the 'lived experience' of the oppressed... [This has led some] to believe that words can be a form of violence; to close down a general argument with a personal truth ('You wouldn't understand,' or just 'I'm offended'); to keep your mouth shut when identity disqualified you from speaking." ("School Shouldn't Be A Battlefield" by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2022.)

♦ "The movie starts off like a sentimental 'fish out of water' story, about a young woman's search for her roots. It quickly becomes clear we are seeing something stranger, and stronger... Freddy is clearly searching for an identity, yet neither she nor the movie defines identity in terms of race, nationality or family, notions that Chou, himself a cultural outsider, thinks too broad to capture the multiplicity of lived experience." “terrorism” is a ~ (the BBC doesn’t use it)

authenticity is a ~ when it comes to food

loaded, loaded word

the word “victim” is a ~ (Judge Bruce Schroeder)

racially loaded

he tweeted the ~ term on Tuesday (“lynching”)

♦ “Last week, there was widespread outrage when Judge Schroeder set ground rules forbidding prosecutors from referring to the men Rittenhouse shot as victims.” (“A look at Bruce Schroeder, the judge in the Kyle Rittenhouse trial,” NPR, All Things Considered, Nov. 4, 2021.)

♦ “The word ‘victim’ is a loaded, loaded word that can prejudice the jury.” (Judge Bruce Schroeder of Wisconsin.)

♦ “The term ‘microaggression’ in itself is loaded. And this is how words work. Words don’t mean what the dictionary says they mean. Words mean your opinions about people who use that word. So the term ‘microaggression’ in its self—some people will bristle because they’ve seen it applied to things they don’t think are problematic—it just means a use of a word that can be offensive or hurtful and so, when your consciousness is raised, you try to avoid it. And that I think is the status of the word ‘ladies.’ Calling it a microaggression in itself is going to separate people into camps... (Georgetown University linguist Dr. Deborah Tannen. From “Is ‘ladies’ acceptable workplace language?” by Robin Young, wbur, April 18, 2023.)

♦ “Government ministers, newspaper columnists, ordinary people—they’re all asking why the BBC doesn’t say the Hamas gunmen who carried out appalling atrocities in southern Israel are terrorists. / The answer goes right back to the BBC’s founding principles. / Terrorism is a loaded word, which people use about an outfit they disapprove of morally. It’s simply not the BBC’s to tell people who to support and who to condemn—who are the good guys and who are the bad guys... / And it’s always been like this in the BBC. During World War Two, BBC broadcasters were expressly told not to call the Nazis evil or wicked, even though we did call them ‘the enemy’. / ‘Above all,’ said a BBC document about all this, ‘there must be no room for ranting’. Our tone had to be calm and collected. / It was hard to keep that principle going when the IRA was bombing Britain... / But we held the line. And we still do, to this day. / We don’t take sides. We don’t use loaded words like ‘evil’ or ‘cowardly’. We don’t talk about ‘terrorists’. And we’re not the only ones to follow this line. Some of the world’s most respected news organisations have exactly the same policy.” (“Why BBC doesn’t call Hamas militants ‘terrorists’—John Simpson” by John Simpson, BBC, Israel Gaza War, October 11, 2023.)

♦ "All I carried away from the magic town of Auckland was the face and voice of a woman who sold me beer at a little hotel there. They stayed at the back of my head till ten years later when, in a local train of the Cape Town suburbs, I heard a petty officer from Simon's Town telling a companion about a woman in New Zealand who 'never scrupled to help a lame duck or put her foot on a scorpion.' Then, precisely as the removal of the key-log in a timber-jam starts the whole pile—those words gave me the key to the face and voice at Auckland, and a tale called 'Mrs. Bathurst' slid into my mind, smoothly and orderly as floating timber on a bank-high river." (Something of Myself by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "Old man Jinby rode frantically into Grand Rapids, like a second Paul Revere, screaming out that the flood had broken loose. It is impossible to describe the excitement and consternation that reigned in Grand Rapids as the rushing timbers shot down the current past the city. The heavy iron bridges one after the other crumpled up like matchwood and were borne out of sight down stream on the very top of the jam... Five hours later about half of the logs boiled into sight at Grand Haven, fifty miles away... Now [at Grand Haven] for four days and nights ensued a grim struggle for supremacy [to secure its own booms and to keep the logs from floating out into Lake Michigan] that has probably never been equaled in industrial history." ("The Great Log Jam" by Stewart Edward White is a terrific account of an actual log jam. It appeared in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, Vol. LII No. 3 in July, 1901, and it is an account of the Great Log Jam of 1883 on the Grand River in Michigan, perhaps the largest logjam in the history of logging.)

♦ See "Last Log Drive in U.S. Floating to End in Maine" by John Kifner, The New York Times, Sept. 8, 1976. It occurred on the Kennebec River. Logs are transported by trucks and helicopters, even, nowadays, but the old log drive, like so many obsolete practices or technologies, lives on, in the language.

♦ “Lynch mobs against people suspected of crimes against children are not uncommon in Mexico.”

♦ “Social media footage of the lynch mob showed police looking on.”

♦ See “Tracing The Story Of ‘Lynch Mob’” by Lakshmi Gandhi, NPR, Code Switch, September 30, 2013.

♦ “The main body of the citizens’ force, numbering nearly one hundred men, filed into the jail yard. They took Scanland and jailer McKane prisoner and placed them under guard... / Once the citizens were in the cell area, they threw ropes over the braces between a joist and then opened the cells. Joe Tuttle and Len Redfield were quietly taken out into the corridor. Redfield was game, so when the men went into the cell to bring him out he coolly looked around and asked, ‘Who is the leader of this gang?’ As the noose was placed around his neck he remarked, ‘Well, boys, I guess my time has come.’ / Tuttle broke down completely when the men entered his cell. He placed his hands over his face and sobbed, ‘Let me talk; give me time to talk,’ and one of the men replied, ‘You didn’t give poor Collins time to talk, and we will serve you the same way.’ / Both men were drawn up and the loose ends tied off. They did not struggle, even though they slowly strangled to death. After the two men were hanging, young Carpenter was brought out of his cell and told to look at his uncle and at Joe Tuttle and to take warning by their fate—he was young and could still turn from his course and make a man of himself... He was returned to his cell, and the mob guarded the hanging men until a physician pronounced them dead. They then disbanded and went about their business as though nothing happened. / An inquest soon followed, conducted by the local judge, the coroner being absent. The verdict? The two men had been hanged by persons unknown...” (Great Stagecoach Robberies Of The Old West by R. Michael Wilson, Chapter 12, “A Lynchin’ Bee.”)

♦ “The community is well convinced he was disloyal. The city does not miss him. The lesson of his death has had a wholesome effect on the Germanists of Collinsville [Illinois] and the rest of the nation.” (The report in a local paper on the murder of Robert Prager, a German immigrant, who was lynched in Collinsville, Illinois, now a suburb of St. Louis, on April 4, 1918. He was stripped naked and made to walk down Main Street singing patriotic songs. The drunken mob broke beer bottles at his feet, so that he walked barefoot on glass shards to the tree from which he was hanged. The mob believed him to be a German spy. Eleven men were put on trial for his murder, and all were acquitted. From “During World War I, U.S. Government Propaganda Erased German Culture,” NPR, All Things Considered, April 7, 2017.)

♦ “Hey, Mr. Cunningham. I said, ‘Hey, Mr. Cunningham’... Don’t you remember me, Mr. Cunningham? I’m Jean Louise Finch. You brought us some hickory nuts one early morning. Remember? We had a talk... I go to school with your boy... He’s a nice boy, tell him hey for me, won’t you?” (A small girl shames a lynch mob and affects an entire generation. From the beloved novel and film To Kill a Mockingbird by Harper Lee.)

he essentially became ~, plotting and planning...

♦ “I mean, his life basically vanished like an Alka-Seltzer tablet.” (Guy Raz and Stacey Vanek Smith dishing about Machiavelli on NPR to promote Stacey’s book, Machiavelli for Women: Defend your Worth, Grow Your Ambition, and Win the Workplace.)

♦ “‘Italy,’ declared Metternich, ‘is a geographical expression.’ He spoke no more than the truth. Never in all its history had the Italian peninsula constituted a single nation; even in the days of imperial Rome it had been merely a part—and usually quite a small part—of the Roman state. Since the early Middle Ages, however—and perhaps even earlier—the concept of Italian nationhood had existed as a distant ideal: Dante and Petrarch had both dreamed of it, as later had Machiavelli.” (The Middle Sea: A History of the Mediterranean by the historian John Julius Norwich.)

♦ “Niccolo Machiavelli’s cool appreciation of expediency, expressed most famously in his slender book The Prince, has made his name a synonym for double-dealing and cynicism. And yet most modern historians who examine his life and work offer a more balanced perspective... [He] was also an Italian patriot who believed that the well-being of his countrymen could only be ensured by a strong ruler who would unify the country..." (National Geographic Almanac of World History by Patricia S. Daniels and Stephen G. Hyslop.)

He seemed less concerned with getting the team down to calm waters, to safety, and to home. / There were mutinous rumblings, and they were scarcely mitigated when their leader realized—and promptly told his men—that it was going to get worse and take still longer. For with the cliffs fast rising around them and the outflow of a known river named by the old conquistador explorers the Colorado Chiquita bursting in on their left side, it was clear that the main part of the huge cleft, the hitherto untraveled Big Canyon, as it was then vaguely known—lay now directly in front of them. What had gone before were mere hors d'oeuvres. The main dish lay just ahead. / 'We are three quarters of a mile in the depths of the earth,' Powell would later write in his diary." Mummy's boy
~ Joshua never had any real talent, time to retire (boxing)

♦ "Ya'll is mama's boys. And you don't knowing nothing about me and women. Excuse me!" (The character of David Ruffin in The Temptations: Season 1.)

♦ "Mummy's boy Joshua has finally realised he's not any deal at all, never mind the real deal." (A comment following Joshua's bizarre antics following his second loss to Oleksandr Usyk. This seems to be a nod to the great boxer Evander "the Real Deal" Holyfield.)

♦ "Really tricky situation, FA, Prem and FIFA only had 12 years to prepare. You do wonder who ties shoelaces for those in charge." (A sarcastic commenter about "tired, overworked" soccer players and the Qatar World Cup.)

♦ "Bleating millionaire wimps. How about grow a pair." (An online commenter about "tired, overworked" soccer players and the Qatar World Cup.)

♦ "Brilliant performance by Brighton, I know it was only Liverpool, but you can only spank what's in front of you." (Sureditch on a BBC HYS. 1056 thumbs up.)

♦ "Mommy issues—Gilgo Beach murders suspect Rex Heuermann was 'momma's boy': sources" by Matthew Sedacca and Dean Balsamini, New York Post, July 22, 2023." (Reactions from online commenters ranged from "Wow, a real live Norman Bates" and "All moms are controlling" to "Most boys are mama's boys and most girls are daddy's girls.")

♦ "I was like, 'That's a little bit too much, like why is he crying?' But at the same time I'm like, 'Maybe he's a mama's boy,' and there's nothing wrong with loving your momma." (The great NFL player Ron Gronkowski about the sobbing USC Trojan quarterback Caleb Williams, who had just lost an important game.)

♦ Man up! Grow a pair!

♦ "So, in the eyes of her classmates, Nelle's taking on the job of guardian angel to Truman Streckfus Persons... was further proof of her particularity: Truman, as surely as every kid at Monroeville Elementary knew that night followed day, was a sissy, a crybaby, a mamma's boy, and so on. Moreover, if he had worn a sandwich board to school with the words HATE ME painted on it two feet tall, the advertisement would have been redundant. His clothes extended that invitation from a block away. It was the 1930s, the Great Depression...A girl in a flower-print dress of cotton made from a fifty-pound flour sack had nothing to be ashamed of then... Consequently, when Truman's Aunt Jennie, the owner of a millinery in town, outfitted Truman in Hawaiian shirts, white duck shorts, blue socks, sandals, and Eton caps from the best department stores in Mobile and Montgomery, he looked, as one teacher expressed it, 'like a bird of paradise among a flock of crows.' The implied insult to the other children could not be ignored. Boys gave him his comeuppance by rubbing cockleburs into his fine blond hair and bruising his milky skin." (Mockingbird: A Portrait of Harper Lee by Charles J. Shields. It's a wonderful portrait of an amazing women.)

♦ “On a day in October in 1831, a nine-year-old boy ran frightened away from the edge of a crowd that blocked the door of the blacksmith shop of a village in the mountains of eastern France. Above the awed excited whispers of the people at the door this boy had heard the crackling “s-s-s-z” of a white hot iron on human flesh, and this terrifying sizzling had been followed by a groan of pain. The victim was the farmer Nicole. He had just been mangled by a mad wolf that charged howling, jaws dripping poison foam, through the streets of the village. The boy who ran away was Louis Pasteur, son of a tanner of Arbois and great-grandson of a serf of the Count of Udressier... (Microbe Hunters by Paul De Kruif. ♦ The idea of "mapping" is beloved by academics.

♦ "Not much is happening at the moment according to the war map they have hanging in the classroom. Nothing of any note has happened in Africa or Asia for several weeks. Yesterday, unfortunately, 289 men capitulated in Likuyu in German East Africa, and several Turkish trenches were taken by the British south-west of Kut al-Amara in Mesopotamia. That is all. Things are also quiet in Italy and the Balkans; nor is anything new happening on the Western Front, apart from the occasional raid. It is only the Eastern Front that is providing the newspapers with anything more than the occasional notice, and almost all the fighting there has been concentrated in one area—Romania—for months. That part of the map is now a patchwork of small black, white and red flags and there could well be a major victory there soon. The last was on 6 December when Bucharest fell and the children were given a day off school. Elfriede used that sudden holiday to go for a walk." (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter Englund, writing about World War I.)

♦ "Mrs. McKelvie was my history teacher... She showed me ... that the study of maps and drawing of maps led to ever-greater clarity..." (From the wonderful Climbing The Mango Trees: A Memoir Of A Childhood In India, Chapter 20, by Madhur Jaffrey.)

♦ "This war is a new kind of war. It is different from all other wars of the past, not only in its methods and weapons, but also in its geography... This is warfare in terms of every continent, every island, every sea, every air lane in the world. That is the reason why I have asked you to take out and spread before you a map of the whole Earth, and to follow me in the references which I shall make to the world-encircling battle lines of this war." (President Franklin D. Roosevelt in a radio broadcast to the nation. In advance of the President's talk, Americans had been encouraged to bring a world map to have by their radio, and map sales soared. More than 60 million people tuned in to the broadcast, nearly half the population. FDR used the map to show listeners how big and mighty the Allied nations were. From "The First Family of Radio: Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt's Historic Broadcasts," American RadioWorks, November 2014.)

♦ My knowledge of geography had been expanding... with reports of front movements in the east, of battles for islands in the Pacific between the Japanese and the Americans, of developments in southern Europe." (Gunter Grass, "How I spent the War," New Yorker Magazine.)

♦ "What's this river?" / "I don't know. The Zusha, probably." / "No, that isn't the Zusha." / "Then I don't know what it is." / "It's on the Zusha, you know that it all happened—Christina, I mean." / "Yes, but that would be lower down the river..." Whether or not the phrase “historically marginalized” was to be included became a sticking point, among many other issues. In the end, the draft policy did not include a reference to “historically marginalized groups.” (“Schools find conspiracy theories interfere with making classrooms inclusive” by Zach Hirsch, NPR, Morning Edition, August 16, 2022.)

♦ “I will NO LONGER tolerate ANY racism against me for being a #ProudBrownWoman of #SouthAsian and #Caribbean descent...The fact that I have consistently been made to endure this hateful racism in anti-racist spaces is abhorrently shameful.” (Dr. Vanessa Toolsie, who was born in Trinidad of Indian descent, resigning from her position of elected vice president of the Orange County branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. From “NAACP leader in Florida quits over ‘racist marginalization,’” AP, August 25 2022. Republished on ABC News.)

the ~ applies this love/hate sentiment to research...

marmite thing

it's a real ~, you find it repugnant or you love it (mullet hairstyle)

♦ "Love it or hate it." (Unilever's slogan for Marmite, a "delicious/disgusting" yeast extract spread produced in the UK. Vegemite is a similar product. The "Marmite Test" has come to mean when people have extreme experiences in the same context.)

♦ "If you love me or you hate me, you're gonna watch me fight." (The MMA fighter Paddy "The Baddy" Pimblett, who refuses to get his hair cut. He is a Liverpudlian.)

♦ "I think he's one of those marmite fighters, some people might love the way that he goes about what he does, his trash talk, his, you know, all that stuff, trying to get under people's skin, other people will absolutely hate, it's always been the way, but at the end of the day, people want to hear from him..." (Commentator Stacey Copeland about Jarrell "Big Baby" Miller, who was born and raised in Brooklyn. Stacey was talking with Steve Bunce in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, prior to the Day of Reckoning fight card, part of Riyadh Season. Super!)

♦ A similar food is the durian, which has been described as smelling like garbage, moldy cheese, rotting fish, a dead cat, last season's unwashed gym socks, and a mixture of cheese, onions, sherry, rotting meat and drains.

♦ "Most lutefisk is not edible by normal people. It is reminiscent of the afterbirth of a dog or the world's largest chunk of phlegm." (The beloved American humorist Garrison Keillor.)

♦ "The staple food in this region is tsampa. This is how they prepare it. You heat sand to a high temperature in an iron pan and then pour barley corns onto it. They burst with a slight pop, whereupon you put the corns and the sand in a fine meshed sieve through which the sand runs: after this you grind the corn very small. The resulting meal is stirred up into a paste with butter tea or milk or beer and then eaten. The Tibetans make a special cult of tsampa and have many ways of preparing it. We soon got accustomed to it, but never cared much for butter tea, which is usually made with rancid butter and is generally repugnant to Europeans. It is, however, universally drunk and appreciated by the Tibetans, who often drink as many as sixty cups in a day." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "Kangding is a crossroads town, once a terminus for the brick tea trade, now an important rest stop for anyone bound into or out of Tibet—it is the true beginning of ethnic Tibet or, for someone coming from the far side, the true beginning of the real China. The little cafes here serve Tibetan tea—a powerful decoction brewed from tea dust and twigs, with copious amounts of salt added to impart extra flavor and with large globules of rancid, hairy yak-butter floating on top. It is an acquired taste that I was not to acquire—finding it even less attractive a comestible than tsampa, the principal food of the Tibetan peasantry, which consists merely of flour worked with water and yak-butter, and which is eaten raw and has a taste like rotten dough." (The River at the Center of the World: A Journey Up the Yangtze, and Back in Chinese Time by the wonderful writer Simon Winchester.)

♦ "Walrus flippers with sea cabbage. It's delicious food." (Ludmilla Ainana, a 66-year-old woman, reminiscing about the food she ate at coastal camps as a child.)

♦ "Squirrel soup with a lot of hot peppers is very popular." (A Hmong in the US who maintains the Hmong hunting tradition.)

♦ "We don't call him Marmite for nothing." (A colleague of the irrepressible Piers Morgan of ITV.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. One day Abu Nuas and the Caliph Haroon Rashid were talking about marriage. "Tell me, great Caliph, speaking about the man you rule over, who has the upper hand in the relationship, the man or the woman?" Abu Nuas asked innocently. The Caliph snorted at such a stupid question and became angry. He berated Abu Nuas. He laughed at him and mocked him and abused him! / Abu Nuas just smiled a little smile. He knew that he had netted a great fish. And not just the greatest fish in the Tigris, or the Euphrates, or the Nile, but the greatest fish in all the seas and oceans in the world! And so he made his wager..." (To be continued in tomorrow's class. The bell has rung.)

♦ “O.J. Simpson was an abusive liar who abandoned his community long before he killed two people in cold blood. His acquittal for murder was the correct and necessary result of a racist criminal legal system. But he’s still a monster, not a martyr.” (Marc Lamont Hill, a professor and media commentator.)

♦ “It’s not unusual for people with an extreme devotion to animals to believe that the objects of their affection are equally devoted to them. Animal obsessives routinely portray themselves as martyrs, holy warriors who fight the good and solitary fight on behalf of animals, their shared enemies the billions of stupid, thoughtless humans who can’t know what they know. These same people often claim special powers: that they can commune with animals, talk to them in their own private language...” (From “The Original Tiger Kings: The Improbable Rise And Savage Fall Of Siegfried & Roy” by Chris Jones and Michael J. Mooney, The Atlantic, November 2022.)

- ◆ “I was exhausted with the culture of country music not creating space for people who look like me.” (This short sentence combines three tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion: physical malaise; the idea of spaces; and “look like me.”)
- ◆ “Let’s face it, America is getting bigger, and women want to see themselves instead of the image of what society says they should be.” (Plus-size model Ashley Graham.)
- ◆ “Not everyone feels safe and comfortable in nature. People who didn’t grow up camping or who might not recognize themselves in a hiking-gear catalogue may experience stress or anxiety instead. To make green spaces more inviting to everyone, start by evaluating your own actions and following this advice from Latino Outdoors founder Jose G. Gonzalez.” (“The Nature Antidote” by Jill U. Adams, Audubon magazine, Winter, 2019.)
- ◆ “It does open up a conversation because it’s her using her voice and her platform to really call out systemic change, which she has done before. I think she can show other girls and women who look like her how to empower them to stand up for themselves in ways that I think we haven’t always been able to see.” (C. Vaile Wright, PhD, a clinical psychologist and the American Psychological Association’s Senior Director of Health Care Innovation, about Naomi Osaka and her struggles with mental health.)
- ◆ “Yeah, absolutely. You know, I was a typical sort of nineties alternative person [upspeak] you know like I really prized the clothes I wore sort of my unusual taste in music and when I arrived at Berkeley in 1995 I was seeking out people who were exactly like me [light upspeak]. And Ken was very different. You know, he was really confident, sort of conventionally handsome... He was in a frat.” (The New Yorker writer Hua Hsu, speaking to Scott Simon on NPR. ♦ “When I was first aware that I had been laid low by the disease, I felt a need, among other things, to register a strong protest against the word ‘depression.’ Depression, most people know, used to be termed ‘melancholia,’ a word which appears in English as early as the year 1303 and crops up more than once in Chaucer, who in his usage seemed to be aware of its pathological nuances. ‘Melancholia’ would still appear to be a far more apt and evocative word for the blacker forms of the disorder, but it was usurped by a noun with a bland tonality and lacking any magisterial presence, used indifferently to describe an economic decline or a rut in the ground, a true wimp of a word for such a major illness. It may be that the scientist generally held responsible for its currency in modern times, a Johns Hopkins Medical School faculty member justly venerated—the Swiss-born psychiatrist Adolf Meyer—had a tin ear for the finer rhythms of English and therefore was unaware of the semantic damage he had inflicted by offering ‘depression’ as a descriptive noun for such a dreadful and raging disease. Nonetheless, for over seventy-five years the word has slithered innocuously through the language like a slug, leaving little trace of its intrinsic malevolence and preventing, by its very insipidity, a general awareness of the horrible intensity of the disease when out of control. / As one who has suffered from the malady in extremis yet returned to tell the tale, I would lobby for a truly arresting designation. ‘Brainstorm,’ for instance, has unfortunately been preempted to describe, somewhat jocularly, intellectual inspiration. ◆ "Just admitted a gunner suffering from shock alone—no wound—completely knocked out; he can't tell you his name, or stand, or even sit up, but just shivers and shudders. Now he is warm in bed, he can say 'Thank you.' I wonder what exactly did it." (Diary of a Nursing Sister on the Western Front: 1914-1915 by Kate (Katherine) Evelyn Luard.)

◆ "HYSTERICAL MONOPLÉGIA, Case D5.—FLACCID FOOT DROP / PRIVATE, 21 YEARS OF AGE. DURATION, 9 MONTHS / During the advance on Loos this private was "blown up" with his platoon and taken prisoner. He escaped the same evening and returned to the trenches, but walked with difficulty. The following evening when making an attack he was wounded in the left arm by shrapnel. The arm fell lifeless and he was dazed. An officer gave the warning that the Prussian Guards were advancing; he got up and made his way to a communication trench, where he began shaking; the left leg went "dead" and powerless and he became deaf. Hearing came back in about an hour. A fortnight later he was sent to England, where he received electrical treatment to the left arm and leg. / Nine months later there was no power whatever in the left foot. Anaesthesia was noted over the leg to a line drawn round the knee." (Hysterical Disorders of Warfare by Lewis Ralph Yealland, M.D., Resident Medical Officer, National Hospital for the Paralyzed and

◆ Zhivago: There are three points. First, the court-martial of the vodka brewers; second, the reorganization of the field ambulance and the pharmacy; and third, my proposal for the treatment of mental illnesses. I don't know whether you agree with me, my dear Lajos, but from what I observe we are going mad, and modern forms of insanity spread like an epidemic... / Lajos: ...I am not surprised at your suggestion for preventive psychiatry. I believe in it myself. We are faced with the rise and spread of a form of psychic illness that is typical of our time and is directly related to the contemporary upheavals. We have a case of it in the camp—Pamphil Palykh... / Zhivago: I know Palykh very well... All right, I'll see what I can do about it." (Dr. Zhivago by Boris Pasternak, from "The Forest Brotherhood.")

◆ "Pamphil [Palykh] was devoted to [his wife] and loved his children to distraction... With the arrival of his family he had cheered up and begun to recover... But now the news had got about that... [the families] were going to be sent... to winter quarters... Pamphil's spirits fell and his hallucinations came back... / A bleeding stump of a man [lay] on the ground. His right arm and left leg had been chopped off. It was inconceivable how, with his remaining arm and leg, he had crawled to the camp... Fainting repeatedly from loss of blood, the dying man told him ... of the tortures and atrocities perpetrated by Vitsyn's squads. 'As for the children and women—O God!' / Pamphil had been in the crowd surrounding the dying man. He had seen him, heard his words, and read the threatening inscription on the board. His constant fear for his family in the event of his own death rose to a new climax... In his imagination he saw them handed over to slow torture... / In his desperate anguish he killed them himself, felling his wife and three children with that same, razor-sharp ax that he had used to carve toys for the two small girls and the boy... / The astonishing thing was that he did not kill himself immediately afterward. What could he be thinking of? It was a clear case of insanity... / While Liberius, the doctor, and the members of the army soviet debated what to do with him, he roamed freely about the camp... An obtuse vague grimace of inhuman, unconquerable suffering never left his face. / No one was sorry for him. Everyone avoided him, some people said he should be lynched, but they were not heeded. / There was nothing in the world left for him to do. At dawn he vanished from the camp, fleeing from himself like a dog with rabies." (Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak.)

◆ "One agency that seized upon Freeman's work was the Veterans Administration. Faced with an influx of shell-shocked World War II GIs that flooded its mental wards, the VA issued a directive in 1943 requesting its neurosurgeons to study and use the Freeman and Watts lobotomy technique. By 1951, nearly 3,000 lobotomies had been performed at VA hospitals, according to agency records." ("D.C. Neurosurgeon Pioneered 'Operation Icepick' Technique" by Glenn Frankel, the Washington Post, April 7, 1980.)

 analysis

◆ It is impossible to understand what "mental health" means nowadays. Having a bad day? Female hormones? Bad behavior? A personality disorder? An excuse for bad behavior? An aspect of the for-profit and clicks "wellness" industry? Criminal behavior? An excuse for criminal behavior? Drug addiction or alcoholism? Simple anxiety? Paranoid schizophrenia? All of these things seem to be expressed by the term, "mental health." Mental illness is even considered as a "gift," "wonderful," and the mentally ill person is considered "amazing" and "exceptional" right up until the time he or "they" commits a horrible mass shooting, and then the mentally ill person becomes "a coward" or "pure evil" or "a monster." This phrase is one of the best to illustrate the notion that when something means everything, it means nothing.

♦ See the Wikipedia entry, "Mic drop." This word is a good one to show how dictionaries can define words in different ways, and also how people might use a word in idiosyncratic ways when it becomes trendy. I like the way Stuart Heritage explained it in his short article, "Obama out: a brief history of mic drops" (The Guardian, 2 May 2016). He wrote, "As a gesture, the mic drop signals the end of a statement so definitive that it cannot possibly be followed." The greatest mic drop of all time was not a mic drop, but a "guitar toss" (for which there is not yet a Wikipedia entry). View "Prince, Tom Petty, Steve Winwood, Jeff Lynne, more—"While My Guitar Gently Weeps" 2004 Induction" on YouTube. Prince. Nuff said.

Others there that night describe it differently. They claim, as alcohol was consumed, she crossed a line by airing her views in a hostile way... / One of the company members told the BBC: 'Initially, I was OK with her asking about why we identify as non-binary. It's OK to be a bit curious. But her repeated questions stepped into micro-aggression territory...'" ("Rosie Kay: Dancers write open letter to choreographer after gender row" by Katie Razzall, Culture editor, BBC, December 10, 2021.)

♦ "The term 'microaggression' in itself is loaded. And this is how words work. Words don't mean what the dictionary says they mean. Words mean your opinions about people who use that word. So the term 'microaggression' in its self—some people will bristle because they've seen it applied to things they don't think are problematic—it just means a use of a word that can be offensive or hurtful and so, when your consciousness is raised, you try to avoid it. And that I think is the status of the word 'ladies.' Calling it a microaggression in itself is going to separate people into camps... (Georgetown University linguist Dr. Deborah Tannen. From "Is 'ladies' acceptable workplace language?" by Robin Young, wbur, April 18, 2023.)

♦ "But there was one melancholy part. In the mouth of Loch Aline we found a great seagoing ship at anchor... / Then I understood this was an emigrant ship bound for the American colonies. / We put the ferry-boat alongside, and the exiles leaned over the bulwarks, weeping and reaching out their hands to my fellow-passengers, among whom they counted some near friends... / Thereupon Neil sheered off; and the chief singer in our boat struck into a melancholy air, which was presently taken up both by the emigrants and their friends upon the beach, so that it sounded from all side like a lament for the dying..." (Kidnapped by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ Before 1910, more than 90 percent of blacks lived in the South. In 1940, 77 percent of black Americans still lived in the South—40 percent in the rural South. By the end of the migration, black America was only half Southern, and less than a quarter rural; "urban" had become a euphemism for "black." The black migration was one of the largest and most rapid mass internal movements of people in history—perhaps the greatest not caused by the immediate threat of execution or starvation. In sheer numbers it outranks the migration of any other ethnic group—Italians or Irish or Jews or Poles—to this country." (The Promised Land: The Great Black Migration and How It Changed America by Nicholas Lemann.)

♦ 1947. August 15, 1947. "Months of violence sharpened the divisions, highlighted Jinnah's arguments, achieved partition. On August 15, 1947... a bleeding Pakistan was carved out of the body of a bleeding India." (Halfway to Freedom by Margaret Bourke-White.)

♦ 1939-1946. "Between 1939 and 1946 an unprecedented number of people living between the Baltic and the Black Sea were uprooted from their homes. Over 20 million people were forced by fear, or by compulsion, to leave their homes, and to seek new, and mostly permanent sanctuary elsewhere." (Atlas of Russian History by Martin Gilbert.)

♦ "It is the choice between the coffin or the suitcase." (The Algerian Civil War.)

♦ Viva voce is Medieval Latin for "with a living mouth." If you hear something viva voce it means somebody told you. It has come to mean "word of mouth."

♦ Hawaii has the "coconut wireless" or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via "the talking drum." From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Sahrawis: "I heard it on the wind." Americans can "hear it through the grapevine," or hear a report or account through the rumor mill. Italians say "per sentito dire" which basically means, "heard it said," and they hear gossip "voci di corridoio" which means "hall voice" or "voices in the hall." These systems operate by word-of-mouth, or, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ "The next person I came across was a dapper little man in a beautiful white wig, whom I saw to be a barber on his rounds; and knowing well that barbers were great gossips, I asked him plainly what sort of a man was Mr. Balfour of the Shaws." (Kidnapped by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ "They've got a gallows-bad reputation, but, you know what a place the beach is for talking." / "The beach, if you don't know is the name of the gossip mill of white derelicts and rough customers that hang around your South Sea island ports. You'll find captains and traders too fond of their grog and properly down on their luck. I'll admit, I was fond of the gin myself back then..." (The Beach of Falesa by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ "You may take it for a fact that anything of this kind is not only noticed and discussed by a man's own race but by some hundred and fifty natives as well... [T]he news flew, in the usual mysterious fashion, from mouth to mouth, till Bisesa's duenna heard of it and told Bisesa." (The affecting and horrible "Beyond the Pale" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "You're sure you've took no 'arm?" cried Mrs. Cloke, who had heard the news by farm-telegraphy, which is older but swifter than Marconi's. / "No, I'm perfectly well," Sophie protested." ("An Habitation Enforced" by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "Word around the campfire for me was...that there was at least speculation, maybe informed speculation, that..." (A sports analyst.)

♦ "[The internet] is the modern world's equivalent of those bars in Donegal where rumors about the case used to circulate." (No Body Recovered, BBC Sounds, Episode 6. A missing child.)

♦ "Gossip is a fearful thing"—this phrase was found in the note left by the film star Ruan Langyu after she took her own life." ("On 'Gossip Is a Fearful Thing' by Lu Xun, from Jottings under Lamplight, edited by Eileen J. Cheng and Kirk A. Denton.)

One hundred and sixteen children between the ages of seven and ten, and 28 adults, died when a mountain of coal waste collapsed, hitting a school.)

♦ "I have only been down one coal mine so far but hope to go down some more in Yorkshire. It was for me a pretty devastating experience and it is a fearful thought that the labour of crawling as far as the coal face (about a mile in this case but as much as 3 miles in some mines), which was enough to put my legs out of action for four days, is only the beginning and ending of a miner's day's work, and his real work comes in between. Have you ever been down a mine? I don't think I shall ever feel quite the same about coal again." (Eric A. Blair in a letter to Richard Rees, 29 February 1936. Sent from Darlington Street / Wigan, Lancs.)

♦ "The phenomena are always of the same kind. The miners are either immediately destroyed by the explosion, and thrown with the horses and machinery through the shaft into the air, the mine becoming as it were an enormous piece of artillery, from which they are projected..." (On the Safety Lamp for Coal Miners, with Some Researches into Flame by Humphry Davy, 1818.)

♦ "So the idea here is to prioritize tests, localize decision-making, and to be careful that we don't run blindly back into a virus minefield of people that can be sick but don't know it, asymptomatic but infectious... Masks are a really important layer in this effort... The mask...kinda defuses the mine, if you will, in the virus minefield." (ABC News Homeland Security analyst Tom Bossert.)

 "Dysfunctional Veteran Does Not Play Well With Civilians"

♦ "The next day the mines arrived. / Medieval, ugly, they smelled like death. Appropriately, the wooden boxes they came in were marked with a skull and crossbones. We were issued three types: 'Bouncing Bettys' that jumped up and exploded about waist high to maximize casualties, foot jammers that blew feet apart, and swarthy, lethal anti-tank mines. / We dug row upon row of potholes between the concertina-wire loops in front of our positions. The following morning we placed the mines by the holes and marked them on a map. At midday, King, Rome, and I, lying on our stomachs, lifted the mines, one by one, put them in the holes; covered them with dirt; tied our trip lines; and, finally, removed the safety pins. / I had Castro replace me when we finished the first row. I sat on top of Spencer's bunker the rest of the day watching the men as they slowly and carefully laid the minefield. The following afternoon they placed the last mine... A safe lane was marked through the field. If a friendly patrol arrived back at the outer concertina strand, someone from inside would have to go out to escort it into the area. Our safe lane came down right in front of the M-60 machine gun. / There was nothing funny or cute about laying a minefield. It lay like death at our front door." (Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of The Vietnam War by James E. Parker Jr. A battalion basecamp, Phuoc Vinh.)

♦ "What happened?" I asked, my voice breaking. / "Well, one of those things. The trip lines to the mines around the perimeter have got tangled in undergrowth and a couple of days ago one of the mines went off in front of George's positions. Someone said a dog had gotten into the minefield, someone else said they saw some villagers near the concertina. George went out to check. He was walking down the safe lane and he took a little half-step off to one side and a mine went off. He never knew what hit him. No reason. There is no great combat story here. Our friend was just walking along and he took a misstep and he died. Nor moral. Nothing gained. Just one of those things." / George's death was on my mind for days. I could not shake the sense of loss. The only consolation was George's contention that if we die in combat, we're at peace. If others get upset, it's their problem. Even so, my attitudes changed. I did not make friends with the replacements but kept to myself, relaxing only with Dunn, Wooley, and the men in the platoon." (Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of The Vietnam War by James E. Parker Jr.)

♦ "Full autonomy continued to be a receding mirage, always a year or so away." (Self-driving cars. From Elon Musk by Walter Isaacson.)

♦ "In crossing the desert, I perceived, at a distance, immense tracts, which had the appearance of rivers or lakes, with islands of sand rising in the midst of them; they presented themselves to the eye, in the horizon of the desert, as places where one might quench one's thirst... This illusion only rendered my situation more dreadful, when I was consumed with thirst, and saw the sea receding before me as by enchantment. It is impossible to form any correct idea of a mirage without have seen one." (Travels Through Central Africa To Timbuctoo; and Across The Great Desert, to Morocco; Performed in the Years 1824-1828 by Rene Caillie.)

♦ "The mirages in the Antarctic had a clarity that was almost beyond belief, and made it difficult for an explorer to know whether he was seeing land or not. Second ranges of mountains appeared to be built up on top of the real mountains lying below, and these false ranges were immensely high and clear in outline. They hung there in the pale sky for a few minutes and then vanished only to re-form themselves again, so that the sailing ships drifted about in an atmosphere of ghostly fantasy. It was both awe-inspiring and wonderfully beautiful." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ "Some of the things you could see from a Great Lakes steamer were not really there... In certain lights the lakes could produce mirages. A freighter on the skyline would suddenly break up, midships section vanishing altogether, pilothouse and after cabins becoming extremely tall, reaching up like lighthouses in the deep water; then, after a minute or two, the lighthouses would disappear and there would be a steamboat again, prosaic as any other cargo carrier. On the north shore of Lake Superior the Canadian cities of Fort William and Port Arthur lie at the end of a broad bay, and on the seaward side of this bay there are islands; and if you sail from one of these cities late in the day these islands suddenly multiply so that each one is accompanied by a twin, each rock and tree perfectly duplicated, and no matter how hard you look you cannot tell which island is real and which is not... After a while the imitation islands rise into the air, get all streaky and distorted, and then go away entirely, and the lake is clear once more. I feel sorry for people who have never cruised the Great Lakes by steamboat." (Waiting for the Morning Train: An American Boyhood by Bruce Catton.)

♦ "One of...my experiences with the magicians of the air occurred near the forks of the Platte. There had been a tremendous thunder-storm, lasting all night. In the morning my party set forward over the soaked prairie under a cloudless sky intensely blue. I was riding in advance... Looking forward I beheld a truly terrifying spectacle. Immediately in front, at a distance, apparently, of not more than a quarter-mile, was a long line of the most formidable looking monsters that the imagination ever conceived. They were taller than trees...and partook of the triple character of animals, houses and machines. Legs they had, that an army of elephants could have marched among; bodies that ships might have sailed beneath; heads about which eagles might have delighted to soar, and ears—they were singularly well gifted with ears. But wheels also they were endowed with, and vast sides of blank wall; the wheels as large as the ring of a circus, the walls white and high as cliffs of chalk along an English coast. Among them, on them, beneath, in and a part of them, were figures and fragments of figures of gigantic men. All were inextricably interblended and superposed—a man's head and shoulders blazoned on the side of an animal; a wheel with legs for spokes rolling along the creature's back; a vast section of wall, having no contact with the earth, but (with a tail hanging from its rear, like a note of admiration), moving along the line... [O]ur tongues were loosened only when it began rapidly to diminish and recede, and at last was resolved into a train of mules and wagons, barely visible on the horizon. They were miles away and outlined against the blue sky. / This pageant had appeared to move along parallel to the foot of a slope extending upward and backward to an immense height, intersected with rivers and presenting all the features of a prairie landscape. The mirage had in effect contracted the entire space between us and the train to a pistol-shot in breadth, and had made a background...by lifting into view Heaven knows how great an extent of country below our horizon. Does refraction account for all this?" ("Mirage" by Ambrose Bierce. Early Cubism?)

♦ "I don't think I would've been able to look myself in the mirror had I not said anything."

♦ "When we look one another in the face, we're neither of us just looking at a face we hate—no, we're gazing into a mirror. That's the tragedy of our age. Do you really not recognize yourselves in us—yourselves and the strength of your will? Isn't it true that for you too the world is your will?... You may think you hate us, but what you really hate is yourselves—yourselves in us. It's terrible, isn't it? Do you understand me?... Do you think the world looks on us with horror and on you with hope and love? No, the world looks on us both with the same horror!... You and I both know that it's not on battlefields that the future is decided... It was the Roehm purge that gave Stalin the idea for the purge of the Party in 1937... You must believe me. You've kept silent while I've been talking, but I know that I'm like a mirror for you—a surgical mirror." (Liss interrogating Mostovskoy. Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler. Part Two, Chapter 14.)

♦ “Columbusing is a word that can be used to describe the reappropriation or perhaps misappropriation of African-American culture—for instance, various slang terms that get appropriated by a white mainstream audience. We see that happening quite a lot in language and culture, so this is a clever and rather sarcastic term for that phenomenon.” (Ben Zimmer, language columnist for The Wall Street Journal. From “Die-In, Vortex, Selfie Stick: What’s The Word Of 2014?” by NPR Staff, Pop Culture, December 28, 2014. The word refers to discovering something that is not new, and was “popularized in a College Humor video that came out this summer.” The article has a link to that YouTube humor video “Columbusing’: Discovering Things For White People.”)

Kresten Andresen is one of them. / There has been no word of him since. / His fate is unknown. / [Footnote: The paths of one of the forgotten and one of the most famous participants in the war almost crossed at Guillemont. On 24 August Lieutenant Ernst Junger and his 73rd Regiment of Fusiliers were sent into action there. Junger has described it in his superb war memoir The Storm of Steel. By the time of Junger's arrival the village had been completely obliterated: 'only a whitish mark on the field of craters still showed the spot where the chalky stone of the houses had been ground to dust.' There was an all-pervasive stench of putrefaction and millions of fat blowflies filled the air. Even Junger, normally so cool, was shaken by what he saw. 'The ploughed-up battlefield was a scene of horror. The dead lay there among the living defenders. When we dug bunkers we saw how the dead lay in layers one above the other. One company after another had been mown down as they made a stand shoulder to shoulder under the drum fire; then their corpses had been buried under the tons of earth hurled up by the projectiles and new men had taken the place of the fallen.'" (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England.)

♦ 1915 Age 50. His son John killed in the Battle of Loos, age 18, a first lieutenant. Missing. Never found.

Kipling felt guilt, as he had helped John get into the war. He wrote "My Boy Jack" in 1915, after John had been declared missing and was presumed dead: "Have you news of my boy Jack?" / Not this tide. / "When d'you think that he'll come back?" / Not with this wind blowing, and this tide."

Kipling wrote "Gethsemane" (poem), and also "Mesopotamia" (1917), an indictment of the Allied side. Also the "Common Form" poem: "If any question why we died, / Tell them, because our fathers lied."

"After the war, Kipling served on the Imperial War Graves Commission until his death. 'It is one of the great ironies that Kipling should have been the person to select the phrase 'known unto God' for all unknown soldiers, and then not know what happened to his own son,' says Phillip Mallett, author of Kipling: A Literary Life. / Kipling worked with Winston Churchill to ensure that all gravestones were the same shape and size, regardless of military rank. ♦ "What happened?" I asked, my voice breaking. / "Well, one of those things. The trip lines to the mines around the perimeter have got tangled in undergrowth and a couple of days ago one of the mines went off in front of George's positions. Someone said a dog had gotten into the minefield, someone else said they saw some villagers near the concertina. George went out to check. He was walking down the safe lane and he took a little half-step off to one side and a mine went off. He never knew what hit him. No reason. There is no great combat story here. Our friend was just walking along and he took a misstep and he died. Nor moral. Nothing gained. Just one of those things." / George's death was on my mind for days. I could not shake the sense of loss. The only consolation was George's contention that if we die in combat, we're at peace. If others get upset, it's their problem. Even so, my attitudes changed. I did not make friends with the replacements but kept to myself, relaxing only with Dunn, Wooley, and the men in the platoon." (Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of The Vietnam War by James E. ♦ "They were one hole over. They got plumed. They were erased from the Earth. DiLeo watched the round all the way down, and it exploded right in their hole, vaporizing them. One second, they were there, living and breathing and thinking and maybe swearing or even praying just like him. And in the next second, two hale, young men, both of them sergeants in the United States Army, pride of their hometowns—Perryville, Mo., and Willimantic, Conn., respectively—had been turned into a plume of fine pink mist, tiny bits of blood, bone, tissue, flesh and brain that rose and drifted and settled over everyone and everything nearby. It—or they—drifted down on DiLeo, who reached up to wipe the bloody ooze from his eyes and saw that his arms and the rest of him were coated, too. Then there would come another pock and another whoosh." (Mark Bowden, author of Hue 1968, reading from his book. PTSD or moral injury

veterans dealing with ~

♦ According to the Wikipedia entry for "moral injury," the term "moral distress" originated in the 1980s in reference to health-care workers. Through "concept inflation" or "co-option," the construct has since been applied to soldiers, police, firefighters, EMTs, legal defenders and lawyers, people in child and adult protective services, and even to veterinarians, leading inevitably to the construct's disparagement: "moral injury Olympics."

♦ "A lot of these guys and gals are really really hurting, because of what they saw, and what they went through, and then when you add on top of that, the criticism, like I said, the moral injury..." (Andy Carrier, clinical social worker, who counseled Uvalde school shooting officers.)

♦ "With the moral injury, that was going on with the officers, because of the scrutiny from the public, umm, uhh... I'm sure you've heard of the term compassion fatigue and secondary trauma, we felt it..." (Andy Carrier, clinical social worker, who counseled Uvalde school-shooting officers.)

♦ [A quiet card game in the rear was disturbed by the shots of a sniper in a tree. A soldier from the West, a crack shot, dealt with the problem.] "That gray squirrel is pretty frisky, and I must stop his fun to stop him spoiling ours." He drew a bead on the man in the tree and fired. As the Confederate sharpshooter came crashing through the branches to the ground, the Westerner sat down and asked: "What's trumps?" He seemed as unconcerned as if he had killed a mosquito that had been annoying him. / ...[B]ehind all this was constantly present to our eyes and mind the scene of a great stream, a procession, so to speak of human souls on their way to eternity." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. The Civil War.)

♦ "It's the same moral panic that emerges with new forms of media." (A response to criticism of social media.)

♦ "Moral panics are a way of pushing back against change or reform, a way of preserving the status quo." (According to Sandhya Dirks, who covers race and identity for NPR, about US citizens concerned about crime, who tend to vote Republican.)

♦ "I just think the moral panic that has been induced over some horrific moments—the overreach of protest—it is a manufactured panic." (Eddie Glaude Jr., Princeton University. From "Israel-Hamas war provokes some intense responses on U.S. college campuses," NPR, Morning Edition, Nov. 16, 2023.)

♦ Wikipedia has an entry, "Lavender scare."

♦ "In American history there are these irrational outbursts of moralism, and the death of "Kid" Paret was the occasion for one of these epidemics of piety." (Jack Newfield, boxing journalist. From the affecting and emotionally wrenching documentary Ring of Fire: The Emile Griffith Story 2005. He is referring to the calls to ban boxing around the U.S.)

♦ "Moral panic" and "-phobia" are two good examples of language used by proponents to mischaracterize their opponents.

♦ "Normalize" often goes with "moral panic." They are self-supporting.

♦ "Go Ahead! regardless of the consequences and indifferent to the value of human life." (A diarist in the 1840s about science, technology, and the use of steam for power.)

♦ "The 'threat of a jobless future' is, of course, an old one, almost as old as technology. The first, rudimentary knitting machine, known as a 'stocking frame,' was invented in the late sixteenth century by a clergyman named William Lee. Seeking a patent for his invention, Lee demonstrated the machine for Elizabeth I. Concerned about throwing hand-knitters out of work, she refused to grant one. In the early nineteenth century, a more sophisticated version of the stocking frame became the focus of the Luddites' rage; in towns like Liversedge and Middleton, in northern England, textile mills were looted. Parliament responded by declaring 'frame breaking' a capital offense, and the machines kept coming." ("Rage Against the Machine: Will robots take your job?" by Elizabeth Kolbert, The New Yorker, December 19 & 26, 2016.)

♦ In late December 2009 modern electric rail service was disrupted in England by cold and snow which even shut down the Channel Tunnel. A steam locomotive offering "Christmas meal" trips was unaffected, however. On its final trip of the season, it picked up 100 stranded passengers at Victoria Station and carried them to cities in the south for free.

the ~ had command of the lake (Champlain, 1776)

♦ "Most of the 25,000 soldiers that Napoleon sent to Haiti to quash the slave rebellion died of malaria. Napoleon had planned to transfer his army from Haiti to New Orleans but he had to abandon that strategy, and sold the Louisiana Territory to the US instead." (The Invention of Nature: Alexander Von Humboldt's New World by Andrea Wulf.)

♦ "Anopheles claviger! This became the slogan of Battista Grassi. You can see him, shuffling along behind lovers in the dusk, making fists of his fingers to keep himself from pouncing on the zanzarone who made meals off their regardless necks... You can see this Grassi, sitting in a stagecoach with no springs, oblivious to bumps, deaf to the chatter of his fellow-passengers, with absent eyes counting the Anopheles claviger he had discovered—with delight—riding on the ceiling of the wagon in which he journeyed from one utterly terrible little malarious village to another still more cursed." (Grassi did what Ross and Koch couldn't: prove that malaria is passed from man to man by the bite of a mosquito that the locals called zanzarone and that naturalists called Anopheles claviger. From Microbe Hunters by Paul De Kruif.)

Round it admired the Arabs, saying, ‘Indeed and at last they have sent us THE aeroplane, of which these things were foals.’” (Seven Pillars of Wisdom, Book X, Chapter CXIV, by T.E. Lawrence.)

♦ “All were on foot, with the exception of a few gentlemen, about fifty in number; and they possessed but one piece of artillery—an old iron cannon, drawn by a string of ponies. For any military purposes it was useless, and it was only employed as a signal gun; but it accompanied the march in deference to the superstitious ideas of the Highlanders, who, being but little accustomed to cannon, attached great importance to the possession of ‘the musket’s mother,’ as they called it. Many of the Highlanders were armed only with scythes or pitchforks.” (Prestonpans. From British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant.)

♦ "Enjoy [your unbeaten streak]—the emotion of getting to the top of the mountain—because you can't duplicate that. It's a lot tougher to stay on the mountain than it is to climb it." (Ara Parseghian's advice to Tyrone Willingham.)

♦ "After the Roc Noir, I had the feeling of closing a door behind me. I was entering another world. I was far from the world of the living. I had never had this feeling on any other mountain." (Jean-Christophe Lafaille on the east ridge of Annapurna in 2002.)

♦ "We can control our heartbeat, which in cold, drawn-out bivouacs is preferably as slow as possible. It is necessary to disconnect the arms and the legs and draw most of one's blood into the core of the body and the head. We switch to other dimensions. We become insensitive to pain, cold, wind, homesickness, thirst, hunger. Instead of having dinner we separate from the physical world. But the further you go into the world where there are no reasons or consequences, points of the compass, time points like yesterday or today, where you only are—the harder it is to return. The reentry into the body is usually accompanied by pain." (No Impossible Ways by the great Slovenian climber Tomaz Humar.)

♦ "Don't take a camera, and don't post about it on Facebook—just climb a hill or do a walk, and keep the experience for yourself." (Stein P Aasheim, Norway. In 1985 he climbed with Sir Chris Bonington to the top of Everest. From "Finding 'friluftsliv' in Norway, by Tim Moore, BBC, 23 August 2011.)

♦ "Burn your TV, fill your pockets with chocolate and ham, and go for a big walk." (A Norwegian.)

♦ "Evenings spent in a mountain hut are among the most sublime and intense that life holds." ("Bear Meat" by Primo Levi.)

♦ “...it’s tramp, tramp, tramp, / And tighten up your lines, / And watch the playful horseflies / As o’er the mules they climb. / Gidap, gidap, whoa! / Forget it I never shall / When I drove a pair of spavined mules / On the Erie Canal.”

♦ “The organization was on the same lines as the previous expedition, only I took mules instead of horses. They stand the mountain tracks better, as they are harder in the hoof and not so particular about their feed, but are easily bogged in swamps...” (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev.)

♦ “Making our way through the submerged forest was no easy job. The mules sank up to their knees in the mud, fell into deep holes, and exhausted themselves. / It was not till dusk that we managed to reach the hills on the right side of the valley. The mules were dead beat, but the men were still more tired.” (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev.)

♦ Compilers note: Before my grandfather enlisted for World War I, he had been scouted by the Detroit Tigers as a very good left-handed pitcher. One thing that struck him in France was Vietnamese coolies unloading ships. During the war, he served as a muleteer, driving the mules that hauled the artillery to the front, and he was sent home after getting gassed, badly. Back home, he suffered the health problems that veterans of World War I combat typically suffered, including circulatory problems that affected his feet. Somehow or other, he managed to sign up for World War II, but he was eventually caught out down the line for his age and his health and discharged. The war spelt the end of his baseball dreams but he always listened to Detroit Tigers games on the radio—generally muttering under his breath—right up to the time of his death.

♦ “When the mountain fighting in Italy first started to get tough, and it was impossible for trucks or jeeps to bring food, water, and ammo up the mountain trails, mule companies were mustered and calls for experienced mule skimmers went out through the divisions. Mules were sought out and bought from farmers. They carried supplies to army soldiers who hadn’t seen a jeep for weeks. Many of them were undoubtedly blood relatives of the beloved Maggie of World War I who had been left overseas after she kicked hell out of her regimental commander to the delight on one and all. / It would have gladdened the hearts of those old soldiers at home, who were convinced that this new army was going crazy with newfangled inventions, to see long columns of balky mules being cajoled and threatened up the trails by their bearded, swearing, sweating skimmers.” (Up Front by Bill Mauldin, World War II. Yet another case where old technology comes to the rescue of new technology. So much for “early adopters”!)

he is ~ (stubborn)

♦ “He was a mulishly unwilling subject.” (The artist Winslow Homer, known as the ‘Obtuse Bard.’ He refused to talk about art, and wrote little about his life.)

♦ “A certain driver, who was driving six mules with a single line, was whipping and cursing away ‘like sixty,’ as the saying is, when a lean, long-necked minister came along, on a horse covered with cooking utensils and stores. The minister, feeling it his duty, called out: / ‘Young man, do you know who made you?’ / ‘What?’ said the driver, stopping a moment from his whipping and cursing. / ‘Do you know who made you?’ repeated the minister, this time in a very loud voice. / ‘Oh!’ said the driver, ‘this is no time for conundrums!’ / And lifting his great army whip, he struck the leading mule on the ear with a snap that sent the blood flying. / ‘Go on there!’ he cried, ‘you cursed descendant of Pluto!’ / He had heard some one say Pluto, and he thought it must mean some very bad beast—bad enough to be the origin of mules. Anyhow, the minister retired.” (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. The U.S. Civil War.)

♦ About Maggie the World War I Mule, search the internet, and you will find the following note: “On a monument to a wartime mule. / In memory of Maggie who in her time kicked / 2 colonels / 4 majors / 10 captains / 24 lieutenants / 42 sergeants / 423 other ranks / and one mills bomb.”

♦ “Okay, so we can start with Keefe, otherwise known by his government name Duayne Keith Davis...” (Joel Anderson speaking with NPR’s Ayesha Rascoe.)

♦ “At that moment, his life changed. While still stationed in Hawaii, Ice bought a couple of cheap turntables, a mixer, speakers, and learned how to rap. In December seventy-nine [1979] he said goodbye to the military and goodbye to Tracy Marrow. Ice T was born.” (The California Century, “On Ice,” BBC, Sounds, narrated by the brilliant Stanley Tucci.)

♦ In 2023, Merriam-Webster recognized “deadname” as “the name that a transgender person was given at birth and no longer uses upon transitioning.”

♦ “I was a black girl who had jumped fences and fought boys and made them say my name and resisted death.” (Zandria F. Robinson @ New South Negress.)

♦ “NPR’s Ari Shapiro speaks with Marijuana Pepsi Vandycck about her recent PhD completion despite the hardships she’s faced because of her birth name... / The title of her dissertation [is]—‘Black Names in White Classrooms: Teacher Behaviors and Student Perceptions.’” (“Marijuana Pepsi Fends Off The Jokes To Earn Her PhD,” NPR, Race, All Things Considered, June 21, 2019.)

♦ There is a Wikipedia article, “African-American names.” It is interesting and well written, with a wonderful external link. Wikipedians are wonderful!

♦ “Throughout this article Quinn is referred to as ‘they/their’ rather than ‘she/her’ to respect their wishes around use of pronouns. Quinn has also dispensed with what they call their ‘dead’ former first name.” (Rebecca, born 1995. From “Quinn: Canada’s transgender footballer on being ‘visible’ and playing at the Olympics” by Katie Gornall & Katie Falkingham, BBC Sport, 23 September 2020.)

♦ “Y/N” is used with the meaning of “Your Name.” (Fanfiction, fandom.)

♦ “Readers can Mad Lib themselves into the narrative.” (Use their own names for a character.)

♦ “Call me by your name and I’ll call you by mine.” (The film Call Me by Your Name, a “gay coming-of-age film.”)

♦ “Every weekend I use my husband’s phone and he uses mine.” (Chris Dancy, about his husband.)

♦ “Thus I traveled to the easternmost cape of the island, where I visited with a chief, whose name was Ameyro, with whom I swore fraternal friendship, giving him my name and taking his, which is considered a great sign of brotherhood among them. I bought from him a very good canoe, giving him in exchange a very fine brass helmet which I was carrying in a bag, also a coat and one of my two shirts.” (Diego Mendez in Jamaica, 1503. From The Last Voyage Of Columbus, Chapter 21, by Martin Dugard, 2005.)

 social media

♦ “Names come into and fall out of fashion much as clothing styles, musical genres, and haircuts do. None of the top five girls’ names from 1912—Mary, Helen, Dorothy, Margaret, and Ruth—ranked in the top 40 in 2010, when the leaders were Emma, Olivia, Sophia, Isabella, and Ava.” On the other hand, names go in cycles: “Vintage names are making a trendy comeback.”

♦ “She connects the popularity, ten years ago, of four-letter names (Ruby, Luna, Levi) with the rise of such instant-gratification apps as Seamless and Tinder. Now longer names are making a comeback—the result, Humphrey believes, of the lockdown-related return to leisurely pursuits like gardening, cooking, and crafting. Waiting for the sourdough to rise has given people the patience to enunciate multisyllable names like Genevieve, Josephine, and Theodore.” (“Dept. Of Monikers: Would Smell As Sweet?” The Talk Of The Town, The New Yorker, April 18, 2022. A delightful talk with Taylor A. Humphrey, a professional baby namer and doula.)

♦ “Women are flocking to TikTok in droves to complain and commiserate about the perils of dating people named Ben in videos amassing millions of views online.” (“What is the ‘Ben Stage’? Women warned about dating men named Ben” by Ben Cost, Viral Trends, New York Post, February 23, 2023.)

♦ “From an Internet search I learned that boys’ names beginning in N were relatively rare, appearing only once in the top one hundred names of the 1930s and ‘40...” (I’ll Be Gone In The Dark: One Woman’s Obsessive Search For The Golden State Killer by Michelle McNamara.)

(Pen names / pseudonyms / noms de plume.)

 an international perspective

♦ “Nixon Moreno; Stalin González; Taj-Mahal Sánchez; Elvis Presley Gomez Morillo; Darwin Lenin Jimenez, Yesaidú (“Yes I do”); Mao Pino; Irohshima Bravo (from the Japanese city “Hiroshima”); Susej (“Jesus” spelled backwards... (Some Venezuelan names.)

♦ “Roma children are given three names. The first is a secret name, which is whispered by the mother during christening. Its role is to hide the real identity of the child from evil spirits. The second is a Roma name that is used by the community. The third is the official Christian name, for use in relations with those outside the community.” (Delia Grigore, University of Bucharest, on a naming tradition among some groups of Roma.)

♦ “We’re Muslims. Now there’s no limiting. Before, there were no mosques. Now there are many.” (A Tajik mother of three, waiting at the airport for her father to return on a Haj flight. Islam was suppressed under the Soviets. Now Medina has become a popular name for girls.)

 but you can call me...

♦ “My great-grandmother [Queen Victoria] was always very particular about the names of her descendants. When I was born she wrote to my mother, in the rather shaky handwriting of an octogenarian: ‘There is one thing that would give me great pleasure if you and Louis approve of it, viz. if you would add the name Albert to the four others.’ So I was christened Louis Francis Albert Victor Nicholas—but all my life people have called me Dickie.” (Lord Mountbatten on his name, in his forward to The Life and Times of Lord Mountbatten by John Terraine.)

♦ “[My name is] Kittredge McPherson Printer-John Vine Terhune... Kittredge was a senator our folks allers voted for... Then McPherson, he was the preacher married Pa and Ma. Printer-John—well, they was three John Vines: Long-John, Sick-John and Printer-John who run the paper, oncet, in Kittuwa. Vine was Ma’s name afore she married... [But you can call me] Kit.” (Smoky Mountain Magic, by Horace Kephart.)

 issues, problems, controversy, snark...

♦ Muhammad Ali famously taunted Ernie Terrell in the ring with calls of "What's my name?" Before the fight, Terrell had referred to Ali as Cassius Clay, and Ali said, "Why don't you call me my name, man?" Ali made Terrell pay in the ring, which went all 15 rounds. Terrell wasn't the only person who had trouble accepting Ali's name change. Ali's father didn't like it.

♦ "Muslims serving in the US military in Iraq and Afghanistan often use fake names on their uniforms to avoid being singled out by insurgents as traitors and to prevent reprisals against their families back home." (The Week, November 20, 2009.)

♦ "Aiden, Brayden and Grayden all just happen to be trans." (A disparaging online commenter.)

♦ "#Sayhername,' the patriots will tweet, delighting in their appropriation of a campaign created for Black women." (Ashli Babbitt.)

♦ "Jeremy's not a nut. He doesn't make people call him by his name on set." (Playwright, screenwriter and film director Aaron Sorkin about the great actor Jeremy Strong.)

♦ "Reason for Hebrew name in lead sentence? Is there a reason for this?..." ("Talk:Dan Ariely" at Wikipedia.)

 monuments, memorials, lists

♦ The 9/11 memorial features a list of names.

♦ The Vietnam Veterans memorial features a list of names.

♦ "Each year, 335 names are called out, a simple roll call of the dead..." (Ardeatine massacre.)

♦ Long lists of names are often read at memorial services. Reading the names of Holocaust victims can take days and require shifts of people.

♦ "28,788 names are etched in marble on the Honolulu Memorial at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific."

♦ The Menin Gate (of the missing) in Belgium lists the names of 54,305 soldiers.

♦ Chaney, Goodman, Schwerner... (The shocking murders that shamed and united a nation.)

 other...

♦ "You know, I'm embarrassed to say this, but I don't even know your name." / "You really want to know my name? You do?" / "Sure." / "It's Ernie Douglas. But my friends call me Chip." / "Um. Goodbye." (From the funny 1996 film The Cable Guy.)

♦ “The same tired narrative gets thrown out there.” (Disgusted.)

♦ “As Colombia constructs its official narrative of the violence that has torn it apart, one of the core issues is how Mr. [Alvaro] Uribe’s legacy will be remembered. He’s seen as both a victim of the FARC, after the guerrillas assassinated his father, and as a perpetrator, for his alleged ties to paramilitary groups and the false-positives scandal. The future, sadly, looks bleak for Colombia...” (BBC 4, From Our Own Correspondent, “Japan’s Second World War Legacy,” 15 Aug 2020.)

♦ “You know, the media narrative, which they have been lazy and listless about trying to inform or control the media narrative internationally [sic] has gone completely against them.” (A former State Department official on NPR’s Fresh Air, about an international crisis.)

♦ “This is the new breed of ‘sporting achievement.’ The loser reveling in their own narrative of ‘poor me’ and ‘victimhood...’ [A] troubled past, a difficult childhood from nothing, and then of course the trump card: ‘My mental health issues.’ Serena W., Naomi O., Anthony J.” (A BBC HYS comment about Anthony Joshua’s “bizarre post-fight antics” after his second loss to Oleksandr Usyk.)

♦ “Did she say ‘media narrative’? Edward R. Murrow is turning over in this grave.” (A comment about reporting on a scandal involving ethics and sex at CNN.)

♦ “The new newsroom ideology seems idealistic, yet it has grown from cynical roots in academia: from the idea that there is no such thing as objective truth; that there is only narrative, and that therefore whoever controls the narrative—whoever gets to tell the version of the story that the public hears—has the whip hand. What matters, in other words, is not truth and ideas in themselves, but the power to determine both in the public mind.” (“When the New York Times lost its way” by James Bennet, 1843 Magazine (The Economist), Dec 14th 2023.)

♦ “Narratives tend to get generated by various events. And newspapers and television programs and pundits tend to coalesce around these narratives. The main storyline was ‘This is what boxing does. This is the goal of boxing. We’ve got to get rid of boxing.’” (The historian Neal Gabler. From the affecting and emotionally wrenching documentary movie Ring of Fire: The Emile Griffith Story 2005.)

♦ “The story delves deep into what Bret sees as the performance of everyday life; the way everything is a narrative, a ‘pantomime,’ a ‘script.’” (“Bret Easton Ellis’ first novel in more than a decade, ‘The Shards,’ is worth the wait” by Gabino Iglesias, NPR, Review, Books, January 19, 2023.)

♦ "We thought this was a fun way to invite Vol Nation to continue in the celebration. We had heard before and during the game that the fans would support a celebration, no matter the cost, so we leaned into that enthusiasm." (Athletic Director Danny White at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, Tennessee, seeking donations from fans to replace the goalposts that fans tore down after a victory over Alabama. Chase McGrath hit a 40-yard field goal with no time remaining to win the game, and fans stormed the field. The suggested contributions were: (1) $16 (# of years since Vols beat Alabama) (2) $52.49 (the final score) and (3) $1,019.15 (# of sold-out crowd at Neyland Stadium). Members of the Vol Nation donated $50,000 almost immediately, 35% of the goal of about $143,000. In addition, Tennessee faces a $100,000 fine for allowing fans to rush onto the field. ♦ "How people are navigating this New Year's Eve amid this variant." (Omicron. NPR.)

♦ "A Black family in Maryland is navigating the economic strain." (NPR. By Alana Wise.)

♦ "Clever comedians can navigate cancel culture."

♦ "Pedestrians navigate a snow-covered sidewalk in Chicago." (The caption of a picture, showing two people walking side-by-side down a sidewalk that is covered by a light dusting of snow. The picture was underwhelming, to say the least. The caption might just have well as been captioned, "Two people walk along a sidewalk in Chicago.")

♦ Navigate is one of the most popular cliches in "contempo-speak." Literally anything can be navigated and is, nowadays. Oftentimes it can be replaced with the old but less trendy "deal with." Contrast such trivial usages with its usage by Charles Spencer in the quote directly below.

♦ "To survive, to navigate this incredibly bleak environment, a small but important part of me had to die. I'll never resurrect the full sensitivity that I would have had in a more reasonable and sensible place." (Charles Spencer talking to NPR's Scott Simon about the former's memoir, A Very Private School.)

♦ "Two Swedish tourists headed for the Italian resort of Capri misspelled the name in the GPS device and ended up in the industrial town of Carpi, 400 miles away, where they were very puzzled by the absence of a beach." (The Week, August 7, 2009.)

♦ "Triple A suggested that drivers who use GPS still carry a good old-fashioned map."

♦ "Tired of stumbling off curbs or bumping into other pedestrians while consulting a map on your smartphone? When you wear Lechal Insoles, a gentle vibration in one shoe or the other will tell you when and in which direction to turn. Just enter your destination into Lechal's GPS app, and let your phone do the navigating. The batteries for the vibrating pads last about 15 days on a charge. Besides steering you from place to place, the insoles can also act as activity trackers, monitoring distances traveled, steps taken, calories burned, and more. $150, amazon.com."

♦ The great captain James Cook learned cartographic trigonometry from Lt. Samuel Holland in the year prior to the 1759 Siege of Quebec. Cook, in turn, transmitted his knowledge to Captain William Bligh, who taught Captain Matthew Flinders. Cook, Bligh, and Flinders were famous for their voyages of exploration and discovery.

♦ William Bligh, Ernest Shackleton... (Two men associated with extraordinary feats of open-boat navigation.)

♦ "...the Englishmen were treated to an astonishing spectacle, a review in which no fewer than 330 canoes took part, some of them almost as long as the Resolution herself... The painting by Hodges now in Admiralty House gives one an idea of the scope of this display..." (The Resolution's second visit to Tahiti. From The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead. Pacific Islanders performed great feats of navigation. See the Wikipedia entry, "Mau Piailug.")

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. A gridlocked 5-lane urban highway. In the very center of the mass of anonymous cars, two people can be seen behind their windshield. The driver is saying to his passenger, "The navigation says that we're wasting our time and should never have left home." (The New Yorker, July 4, 2022.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A rich city man stopped his limousine next to a field in the countryside and waved a farmer over. "Where's Centerville?" the rich man demanded. "Never heard of it," said the farmer. "Well, where is Nearville?" the rich man spluttered. "Couldn't say," said the farmer. "Well, you're pretty goddamn stupid, ain't you, boy," the rich man said. "I ain't lost," said the farmer.

New Deal (Green New Deal, etc.)

Green New Deal

a ~, a sweeping agenda (jobs, energy, infrastructure)

this generation's New Deal

the relief programs could become ~ (politics)

♦ President Roosevelt's Rural Electrification Administration (REA), founded in 1935, began to bring electricity to the quarter of the population that lived on farmlands. "Sign up and get the REA" was the slogan. At the start, 90 percent of farmers were without electricity. By 1942, half of all American farms were connected to the grid; by 1952, they almost all were. Rural families typically made the radio their second electric purchase, after the clothes iron.

♦ "I wanted to be at my parents' house when the electricity came. It was in 1940. We'd all go around flipping the switch, to make sure it hadn't come on yet. When they finally came on the lights just barely glowed. I remember my mother smiling. When they came on full, tears started to run down her cheeks." (A farm family that got electricity from the Rural Electrification Administration.)

♦ In "A Summer Breather" and "Poverty" by the Russian writer Mikhail Zoshchenko, "early adopters" of technology got electricity in their apartment building for the first time. / The problem was, the electric bill was communal. A man appointed himself to ensure that people didn't waste electricity, and for a while the bill was low and everyone was quite happy. Everyone used the light sparingly, say, only to undress before going to bed. But the enforcer took his job too zealously, stayed up every night checking on people, never slept, and finally went mad. Once he was gone, people started to use the electricity more, say, to heat a room. The communal bill went up, which in turn unleashed an orgy of use: if other people are profligate, than I will be too! People began to do such outlandish things as to re-warm their food on their hotplates, and turn on lights to read at night. The electric bill became astronomical. In the end, the people decided to have the electricity cut off, and went back to kerosene and candles. / Stories like these went against the grain of Soviet pride in their technological accomplishments—huge dams and electrification—and got Zoshchenko denounced personally in the Zhdanov decree of 1946. He died in poverty.

America's Nile

the Colorado River has been referred to as "~"

♦ According to Dr. Jack C. Schmidt of Utah State University, the Colorado River is similar to the Nile River for the following reasons: (1) original development was in its downstream end (lower basin) (2) water comes from distant headwaters (3) while it flows mostly north to south, it is an "upside down version of the Nile" (4) dams and water diversion in its upstream end (upper basin) are greatly affecting its lower reaches (lower basin). Almost needless to say, it also flows at certain points through arid places and its waters are the lifeblood of those places. ("Spring 2022 GES Seminar Series with Dr. Jack Schmidt" on YouTube. His wonderful presentation might make a young person consider a career in hydrography! Of course, there are many ways that the two rivers are completely different.)

She adds that the taking of hostages is different. To which James Clapper adds, in terms of the comparison (4) the sense that there was a huge intelligence failure, specifically in two areas: a failure of imagination, of what the enemy was in fact capable of, and a failure to "connect the dots." Clapper says, "Unfortunately, it is an apt comparison." ("Why Clapper says Hamas attacks are an 'apt comparison' to 9/11, CNN.)

♦ "It had seemed impossible that Japan would court destruction by war with Britain and the United States, and probably Russia in the end. A declaration of war by Japan could not be reconciled with reason. I felt sure she would be ruined for a generation by such a plunge, and this proved true. But Governments and peoples do not always take rational decisions. Sometimes they take mad decisions, or one set of people get control who compel all others to obey and aid them in folly. I have not hesitated to record repeatedly my disbelief that Japan would go mad. However sincerely we try to put ourselves in another person's position, we cannot allow for processes of the human mind and imagination to which reason offers no key. / Madness is however an affliction which in war carries with it the advantage of surprise." ♦ The Al-Ahsa Oasis is the largest date-palm oasis in the world, a lovely place that gurgles paradisaically with springs and wells and rejoices in the songs of water. It includes the city of Al-Hofuf with its gorgeous walled fort, also the remarkable Jabal Qara, hills that resemble rock cauliflowers. The whole area is a UNESCO World Heritage Site, deservedly. Go there and watch the trail of a meteor transect the wall of the fort at night. Spend the rest of the night on Jabal Qara, listening to the howls of desert dogs. Just be careful where you step at Jabal Qara.)

♦ "And then, rising from between the closer dunes, their vertical spires contrasting dramatically with the desert realm of the horizontal, are green trees by the thousands. There is water somewhere nearby. This truly is an oasis, a place of refuge and settlement—and among the trees there are buildings that glint as the sun catches them, scores of structures, the upswept eaves of a nest of pagodas, the minarets of a mosque or two, a cluster of hotels." intersectional Gibberish Olympics she surged past Hillary in the ~ (Katherine)

♦ "If conclusion jumping ever becomes an Olympic sport they're a lot of potential team members here." (An online commenter.)

♦ According to the Wikipedia entry, the term "moral distress" originated in the 1980s in reference to health-care workers. Through "concept inflation" or "co-option," the construct has since been applied to soldiers, police, firefighters, EMTs, legal defenders and lawyers, people in child and adult protective services, and even to veterinarians, leading inevitably to the construct's disparagement: "moral injury Olympics."

♦ "Man... knows how to fight and win." (A stirring speech in Olympia, Greece, prior to the 2022 Winter Olympics in Beijing. See YouTube #Beijing2022 Olympic Flame Lighting Ceremony! Eternal, beautiful and inspiring, especially so for taking place during the COVID period. Full credit and respect to Greece and to China. Super!)

took on
Emma Stone ~ the award (won Oscar / NPR male)

♦ Ordinarily one would "brag about" something or somebody. The "on" of "hate on" seems redundant. "Love on" and "hit on" seem tactile, relating to the body. "Speak on" seems archaic, or dialect. To "take on" an award, versus "win" or "receive" it, just seems wrong. "I am not regretting on" as said by a Kurdish speaker might simply show a non-native-English speaker's lack of "do" support. "On" requires some analysis!

unresolved, atavistic human biases." (A blurb from the Paris Review for Weapons of Math Destruction by Cathy O'Neil. Everyone should read it.)

♦ "The Ministry of Truth is Facebook, Google, and cable news. We have met Big Brother and he is us." ("Doublethink Is Stronger Than Orwell Imagined: What 1984 means today" by George Packer, The Atlantic, July 2019.)

♦ "In Moulmein, in Lower Burma, I was hated by large numbers of people—the only time in my life that I have been important enough for this to happen to me. I was sub-divisional police officer of the town..." (The opening lines of "Shooting an Elephant" by George Orwell.)

♦ "My wound was not much, but it was a miracle it did not kill me. The bullet went clean through my neck but missed everything except one vocal cord, or rather the nerve governing it, which is paralysed. At first I had no voice at all but now the other vocal cord is compensating and the damaged one may or may not recover. My voice is practically normal but I can't shout to any extent. I also can't sing, but people tell me this doesn't matter. I am rather glad to have been hit by a bullet because I think it will happen to us all in the near future..." ♦ The poor horse jerked back, broke the halter-strap, fell on his back, then recovered himself, arose and hobbled away on three legs, dangling the hoof of the fourth leg, which was held suspended by a strip of skin. This strip of skin, about two inches wide, and the hoof were all that remained of the fore-leg. Blood flowed profusely and streaked the ground wherever he passed. He was soon shot and put out of pain." (Chancellorsville. The horse had been hit by a cannon-ball. From Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby.)

♦ "Almost two hundred horses lay on the ground in their death throes, or fled in all possible directions, maddened by pain and with blood spurting from their dangling guts. Any riders whose feet had been caught in the stirrups were dragged with them and any soldiers foolish enough to try to stop them were trampled under their hooves." (Rafael de Nogales at the Second Battle of Gaza in April 1917. His tightly packed cavalry division has been bombed by six or seven British biplanes. (Lor Sabourin in the Patagonia film They / Them: One Climber's Story.)

♦ "Others described the feeling of loneliness as 'painful.'" (Gen Zers, about feeling lonely, in spite of being the most "linked-in" generation in human history. Hmmm...)

♦ "Throughout the Napoleonic Wars, medical science had been spurred on by the immediate bloody demands of the battlefield. It became ever more daring and more ruthless. Larrey, for example, had performed 200 amputations in twenty-four hours after the battle of Borodino, and been awarded the Legion d'Honneur." (The Age of Wonder by Richard Holmes. The Battle of Borodino was fought on 7 September 1812 during the French invasion of Russia.)

♦ "Many standard operations in the early nineteenth century—being cut for kidney stone, having teeth removed, or a wounded limb amputated—were unimaginably painful. The pain also caused shock, which itself could kill. The only known form of painkiller—the soldier's use of alcohol—was largely a method of controlling terror and deadening shock, not true anaesthesia... / Several scholars suggest a 'cultural' as much as a technical inhibition [for the failure of medicine to pursue anaesthesia at the time]. They argue that the late-eighteenth-century attitude to pain, in a surgical context, did not admit to the concept of a 'pain-free' operation. Pain itself was a natural and intrinsic part of the surgical procedure, and a surgeon's ability to handle a patient's pain—through his imposed psychological authority, his dexterity, and above all his sheer speed of amputation and extraction—was an essential part of his profession. In a word, there was the need for 'a paradigm shift' to conceive of pain-free surgery." (The Age of Wonder by Richard Holmes.)

♦ "Over time, in novels and memoirs, a portrait emerged of the terrified soldier—tied to a stretcher, prepared with a shot or two of whiskey, a piece of wood or metal between his teeth (thus the phrase 'bite the bullet'), writhing in pain as an arm or leg is sawed off and tossed into an ever-growing pile of body parts on the floor. Union surgeons performed about thirty thousand amputations during the war..." (Bellevue: Three Centuries of Medicine and Mayhem at America's Most Storied Hospital by David Oshinsky.)
