♦ "Enjoy [your unbeaten streak]—the emotion of getting to the top of the mountain—because you can't duplicate that. It's a lot tougher to stay on the mountain than it is to climb it." (Ara Parseghian's advice to Tyrone Willingham.)

*** "Don't take a camera and don't post about it on Facebook..."

♦ "After the Roc Noir, I had the feeling of closing a door behind me. I was entering another world. I was far from the world of the living. I had never had this feeling on any other mountain." (Jean-Christophe Lafaille on the east ridge of Annapurna in 2002.)

♦ "We can control our heartbeat, which in cold, drawn-out bivouacs is preferably as slow as possible. It is necessary to disconnect the arms and the legs and draw most of one's blood into the core of the body and the head. We switch to other dimensions. We become insensitive to pain, cold, wind, homesickness, thirst, hunger. Instead of having dinner we separate from the physical world. But the further you go into the world where there are no reasons or consequences, points of the compass, time points like yesterday or today, where you only are—the harder it is to return. The reentry into the body is usually accompanied by pain." (No Impossible Ways by the great Slovenian climber Tomaz Humar.)

♦ "Don't take a camera, and don't post about it on Facebook—just climb a hill or do a walk, and keep the experience for yourself." (Stein P Aasheim, Norway. In 1985 he climbed with Sir Chris Bonington to the top of Everest. From "Finding 'friluftsliv' in Norway, by Tim Moore, BBC, 23 August 2011. One in a great line of exceptional Norwegians.)

♦ "Burn your TV, fill your pockets with chocolate and ham, and go for a big walk." (A Norwegian.)

♦ "Evenings spent in a mountain hut are among the most sublime and intense that life holds." ("Bear Meat" by Primo Levi.)

♦ "There are two kinds of climbers. Those who climb because their heart sings when they're in the mountains, and all the rest." (Alex Lowe.)

*** "The Erie Canal Song" ...

♦ "I've got an old mule and her name is Sal, / Fifteen years on the Erie Canal..." (A song all American children once learned in music-appreciation class in grade school. Nowadays they have Young Adult Literature.)

♦ "The organization was on the same lines as the previous expedition, only I took mules instead of horses. They stand the mountain tracks better, as they are harder in the hoof and not so particular about their feed, but are easily bogged in swamps..." (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ "Making our way through the submerged forest was no easy job. The mules sank up to their knees in the mud, fell into deep holes, and exhausted themselves. / It was not till dusk that we managed to reach the hills on the right side of the valley. The mules were dead beat, but the men were still more tired." (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "A certain driver, who was driving six mules with a single line, was whipping and cursing away 'like sixty,' as the saying is, when a lean, long-necked minister came along, on a horse covered with cooking utensils and stores. The minister, feeling it his duty, called out: / 'Young man, do you know who made you?' / 'What?' said the driver, stopping a moment from his whipping and cursing. / 'Do you know who made you?' repeated the minister, this time in a very loud voice. / 'Oh!' said the driver, 'this is no time for conundrums!' / And lifting his great army whip, he struck the leading mule on the ear with a snap that sent the blood flying. / 'Go on there!' he cried, 'you cursed descendant of Pluto!' / He had heard some one say Pluto, and he thought it must mean some very bad beast—bad enough to be the origin of mules. Anyhow, the minister retired." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. The U.S. Civil War.)

♦ "When the mountain fighting in Italy first started to get tough, and it was impossible for trucks or jeeps to bring food, water, and ammo up the mountain trails, mule companies were mustered and calls for experienced mule skinnners went out through the divisions. Mules were sought out and bought from farmers. They carried supplies to army soldiers who hadn't seen a jeep for weeks. Many of them were undoubtedly blood relatives of the beloved Maggie of World War I who had been left overseas after she kicked hell out of her regimental commander to the delight on one and all. / It would have gladdened the hearts of those old soldiers at home, who were convinced that this new army was going crazy with newfangled inventions, to see long columns of balky mules being cajoled and threatened up the trails by their bearded, swearing, sweating skinnners." (Up Front by Bill Mauldin, World War II.)

♦ Compilers note: My grandfather was scouted by the Detroit Tigers as a very good, strong left-handed pitcher. But that was before World War I began and my grandfather enlisted in the Army. A think that struck him when his troopship landed in France was seeing Vietnamese coolies unloading ships. During the war, he served as a muleteer, driving the mules that hauled the artillery to the front. He was gassed and sent home. Back home, he suffered the health problems that veterans of World War I combat typically suffered, including circulatory problems that affected his feet for the rest of his life. Somehow, he managed to convince the local draft board to sign him up for World War II. He actually met his son—my father—in New York City. Grandpa was in an Army uniform; my Dad wore a Navy uniform. They had a drink together at some bar in New York City. Before my grandpa could go overseas, however, he was caught out for his age and his health and discharged. This might have been a mistake on the part of the Army for, as things turned out, the Army needed muleskinners during the long, tough slog up the Italian Peninsula. I learned about World War II and geography in the 1960s from scrapbooks he had in his shack. And Grandpa always listened to Detroit Tigers games on the radio—generally cursing under his breath so as not to corrupt me or my little brother Dave—right up to the time of his death.

family dynamics and political opinions can be ~

*** "navigating" holidays, sidewalks, etc.

♦ "Family dynamics and political opinions can be hard to navigate during Thanksgiving."

♦ "How people are navigating this New Year's Eve amid this variant." (Omicron. NPR.)

♦ "A Black family in Maryland is navigating the economic strain." (NPR. By Alana Wise.)

♦ "Clever comedians can navigate cancel culture."

♦ "Pedestrians navigate a snow-covered sidewalk in Chicago." (The caption of a picture, showing two people walking side-by-side down a sidewalk that is covered by a light dusting of snow. The picture was underwhelming, to say the least. The caption might just have well as been captioned, "Two people walk along a sidewalk in Chicago.")

♦ "To survive, to navigate this incredibly bleak environment, a small but important part of me had to die. I'll never resurrect the full sensitivity that I would have had in a more reasonable and sensible place." (Charles Spencer talking to NPR's Scott Simon about the former's memoir, A Very Private School.)

*** GPS, Lechal Insoles, etc.

♦ "Two Swedish tourists headed for the Italian resort of Capri misspelled the name in the GPS device and ended up in the industrial town of Carpi, 400 miles away, where they were very puzzled by the absence of a beach." (The Week, August 7, 2009.)

♦ "Triple A suggested that drivers who use GPS still carry a good old-fashioned map."

♦ "Tired of stumbling off curbs or bumping into other pedestrians while consulting a map on your smartphone? When you wear Lechal Insoles, a gentle vibration in one shoe or the other will tell you when and in which direction to turn. Just enter your destination into Lechal's GPS app, and let your phone do the navigating. The batteries for the vibrating pads last about 15 days on a charge. Besides steering you from place to place, the insoles can also act as activity trackers, monitoring distances traveled, steps taken, calories burned, and more. $150, amazon.com."

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. A gridlocked 5-lane urban highway. In the very center of the mass of anonymous cars, two people can be seen behind their windshield. The driver is saying to his passenger, "The navigation says that we're wasting our time and should never have left home." (The New Yorker, July 4, 2022.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A rich city man stopped his limousine next to a field in the countryside and waved a farmer over. "Where's Centerville?" the rich man demanded. "Never heard of it," said the farmer. "Well, where is Nearville?" the rich man spluttered. "Couldn't say," said the farmer. "Well, you're pretty goddamn stupid, ain't you, boy," the rich man said. "I ain't lost," said the farmer.

*** Cook, Bligh, Flinders, Mau Pailug, etc.

♦ The great captain James Cook learned cartographic trigonometry from Lt. Samuel Holland in the year prior to the 1759 Siege of Quebec. Cook, in turn, transmitted his knowledge of navigation to Captain William Bligh, who taught Captain Matthew Flinders. Cook, Bligh, and Flinders were famous for their voyages of exploration and discovery.

♦ William Bligh, Ernest Shackleton... (Two men associated with extraordinary feats of open-boat navigation.)

♦ "...the Englishmen were treated to an astonishing spectacle, a review in which no fewer than 330 canoes took part, some of them almost as long as the Resolution herself... The painting by Hodges now in Admiralty House gives one an idea of the scope of this display..." (The Resolution's second visit to Tahiti. From The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ Pacific Islanders performed great feats of navigation. See the Wikipedia article "Mau Pailug." Wikipedians are wonderful.

♦ Navigate is one of the most popular clichés in "contempo-speak." It is a marker of a contempo-speaker. Literally anything can be navigated and is, nowadays. Oftentimes, it can be replaced with the old but less trendy "deal with."

♦ Refers to nothing real.

♦ "Government ministers, newspaper columnists, ordinary people—they're all asking why the BBC doesn't say the Hamas gunmen who carried out appalling atrocities in southern Israel are terrorists. / The answer goes right back to the BBC's founding principles. / Terrorism is a loaded word, which people use about an outfit they disapprove of morally. It's simply not the BBC's to tell people who to support and who to condemn—who are the good guys and who are the bad guys... / And it's always been like this in the BBC. During World War Two, BBC broadcasters were expressly told not to call the Nazis evil or wicked, even though we did call them 'the enemy'. / 'Above all,' said a BBC document about all this, 'there must be no room for ranting'. Our tone had to be calm and collected. / It was hard to keep that principle going when the IRA was bombing Britain... / But we held the line. And we still do, to this day." ("Why BBC doesn't call Hamas militants 'terrorists'—John Simpson" by John Simpson, BBC, Israel Gaza War, October 11, 2023.)

♦ “Finding an animal with a SARS-CoV-2 infection is like looking for a needle in the world’s largest haystack. They may never find a ‘smoking bat.’” (Angela Rasmussen, virologist, Columbia University.)

♦ “In the months before meeting Oppenheimer, [Lawrence] had conceived the notion of building a machine capable of penetrating the so far unassailable nucleus of the atom, which existed, he quipped, ‘like a fly inside a cathedral.’” (An astonishing simile from American Prometheus: The Triumph and Tragedy of J. Robert Oppenheimer by Kai Bird and Martin J. Sherwin. The popular 2023 film Oppenheimer was based on this book.)

♦ “The search is like looking for a needle in a haystack when you don’t know if the needle even exists.” (The search for a rat that may or may be alive on St. Paul Island in the Pribilof Islands. Rats on the island could play havoc with the colonies of nesting seabirds, and the island enforces strict anti-rat measures.)

*** search and rescue, search and recovery...

♦ "Someone said it's kind of like looking for a needle in a haystack—only right now, the haystack is covered with snow." (Winter search for body of missing woman. Her body was found in the spring. She had been murdered.)

♦ "It was not a needle in a haystack but a toddler in the desert, both of which are extremely challenging to find." (The New York Times, in an article about two-year-old Emmett Trapp.)

♦ In August, 2008, two-year-old Emmett Trapp wandered off into the desert. Many wished to look for him, but officials refused offers of help, saying only they were qualified to search, based on their training. After 40 hours, the little boy was found by a citizen who disregarded the officials. The boy was just outside the official search zone, which had been combed over and over. He was only about a mile from his home. He was found dead.

♦ "Knowing that the divers on the scene were not up to this specialized task of entering the cave, and assuming—that Gant might still be alive in an air pocket—[Buddy] Lane pleaded by telephone that trained caver divers be called in..." ("The Bat Cave Miracle," 16 August 1992, Nickajack Lake Cave, New Hope, Tennessee.)

♦ "This isn't a search for a needle in a haystack, it's a tiny flea in a vast carpet, because they keep moving." (General Sanchez. "How children survived 40 days in Colombian jungle" by Matt Murphy in London and Daniel Pardo in Bogota, BBC News, June 11, 2023.)

♦ It's NEVER a body recovery. It's ALWAYS a rescue. No matter WHAT the AUTHORITIES say...

New Deal (Green New Deal, etc.)

Green New Deal

a ~, a sweeping agenda (jobs, energy, infrastructure)

this generation's New Deal

the relief programs could become ~ (politics)

*** President Roosevelt's New Deal...

♦ President Roosevelt's Rural Electrification Administration (REA), founded in 1935, began to bring electricity to the quarter of the population that lived on farmlands. "Sign up and get the REA" was the slogan. At the start, 90 percent of farmers were without electricity. By 1942, half of all American farms were connected to the grid: by 1952, they almost all were. Rural families typically made the radio their second electric purchase, after the clothes iron.

♦ "I wanted to be at my parents' house when the electricity came. It was in 1940. We'd all go around flipping the switch, to make sure it hadn't come on yet. When they finally came on the lights just barely glowed. I remember my mother smiling. When they came on full, tears started to run down her cheeks." (A farm family that got electricity from the Rural Electrification Administration.)

♦ In "A Summer Breather" and "Poverty" by the Russian writer Mikhail Zoshchenko, "early adopters" of technology got electricity in their apartment building for the first time. / The problem was, the electric bill was communal. A man appointed himself to ensure that people didn't waste electricity, and for a while the bill was low and everyone was quite happy. Everyone used the light sparingly, say, only to undress before going to bed. But the enforcer took his job too zealously, stayed up every night checking on people, never slept, and finally went mad. Once he was gone, people started to use the electricity more, say, to heat a room. The communal bill went up, which in turn unleashed an orgy of use: if other people are profligate, than I will be too! People began to do such outlandish things as to re-warm their food on their hotplates, and turn on lights to read at night. The electric bill became astronomical. In the end, the people decided to have the electricity cut off, and went back to kerosene and candles. / Stories like these went against the grain of Soviet pride in their technological accomplishments—huge dams and electrification—and got Zoshchenko denounced personally in the Zhdanov decree of 1946. He died in poverty.

Nile (America's Nile, etc.)

the Colorado River has been referred to as "~"

*** analysis

♦ According to Dr. Jack C. Schmidt of Utah State University, the Colorado River is similar to the Nile River for the following reasons: (1) original development was in its downstream end (lower basin) (2) water comes from distant headwaters (3) while it flows mostly north to south, it is an "upside down version of the Nile" (4) dams and water diversion in its upstream end (upper basin) are greatly affecting its lower reaches (lower basin). Almost needless to say, it also flows at certain points through arid places and its waters are the lifeblood of those places. ("Spring 2022 GES Seminar Series with Dr. Jack Schmidt" on YouTube. His wonderful presentation might make a young person consider a career in hydrography! Of course, there are many ways that the two rivers are completely different.)

they actually call it 26/11, ~ (2008 Mumbai attacks)

♦ "[Indians] actually call it 26/11." (The 2008 Mumbai attacks occurred November 26.)

♦ "I've heard from Israelis saying that this is our 9/11." (A CNN commentator interviewing James Clapper. The commentator says that "it's hard to make comparisons, but..." and she mentions (1) the scope of the attack (2) the surprise (3) and the killing of civilians. She adds that the taking of hostages was different. To which James Clapper added, in terms of the comparison (4) the sense that there was a huge intelligence failure, specifically in two areas: a failure of imagination, of what the enemy was in fact capable of; and a failure to "connect the dots." Clapper said, "Unfortunately, it is an apt comparison." ("Why Clapper says Hamas attacks are an 'apt comparison' to 9/11, CNN.)

♦ Hamas attacked Israel from Gaza on October 7, 2023, killing around 1,300 people. If the same percentage of deaths to population had occurred in the U.S., the casualty toll would have been almost 40,000 people. About 3,000 people died on 9/11. For an excellent comparison of 10/7 and 9/11, read "Why 10/7 Was Worse for Israel Than 9/11 Was for America" by Robert Satloff, The Washington Institute for Near East Policy, Oct 15, 2023. And how many children were affected by the attack? More than 3,000 children lost a parent on America's 9/11, according to CNN. And there are all the other relationships, including fiancées....

♦ "Twenty nine-elevens... in one day." (Netanyahu addresses the U.S. Congress in 2024. The Israel-Hamas war.)

♦ For an excellent description of the 10/7 incursion from a military point of view, listen to the following podcast: Urban Warfare Project Podcast: Studying The October 7 Terrorist Attacks, John Spencer, 03.15.24. Spencer makes the point that the Hamas invasion was essentially a division-level attack, which is certainly different from 9/11. The Urban Warfare Project is part of the Modern War Institute at the United States Military Academy, referred to as West Point. "Duty, Honor, Country."

♦ "Muhammad Deif, the 'Osama Bin Laden of Gaza,' was eliminated on 13.07.24." (Israel.)

♦ "It had seemed impossible that Japan would court destruction by war with Britain and the United States, and probably Russia in the end. A declaration of war by Japan could not be reconciled with reason. I felt sure she would be ruined for a generation by such a plunge, and this proved true. But Governments and peoples do not always take rational decisions. Sometimes they take mad decisions, or one set of people get control who compel all others to obey and aid them in folly. I have not hesitated to record repeatedly my disbelief that Japan would go mad. However sincerely we try to put ourselves in another person's position, we cannot allow for processes of the human mind and imagination to which reason offers no key. / Madness is however an affliction which in war carries with it the advantage of surprise." (The Grand Alliance by Winston S. Churchill, "Book Two, War Comes To America, Japan.")

*** analysis

♦ "Most of us barely even pause to reflect on 9/11 anymore. We've moved on."

♦ "What will archaeologists twenty-five centuries from now make of the ruins of One World Trade Center, currently nearing completion in downtown Manhattan?" (The beginning of "Deep Frieze" by Daniel Mendelsohn. His article is about the Parthenon, another "memorial to a devastating attack...one terrible day in September.")

♦ “Oh boy 2 nobodies hoping to be somebodies.” (A BBC HYS online commenter about the announcement of the Whyte-Joshua rematch, scheduled for August 12, 2023. The fight was ultimately cancelled when Whyte failed a drug test.)

*** analysis

♦ In the Odyssey, Odysseus outwits the Cyclops Polyphemus and ends up blinding him, in a great win for the “nobodies.”

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, we are all used to teaching “some,” “any,” and “no” with “body,” “one,” “where,” “thing,” etc. We all know the score. But do we ordinarily teach this usage? Perhaps we should, and perhaps it would actually stick with our students and become a productive part of their vocabulary.

♦ "Nobody's going to help you, you're in no-man's-land." (Outpost Restrepo, Korangal Valley, Afghanistan.)

♦ "But by far the most terrible feature of the present war is the fact that in so many cases it is impossible to bring timely help to the wounded. The trenches face each other at very short distances. An attack is delivered, and a mass of wounded fall on the unsheltered space between the trenches. When the struggle is over this space is carefully watched, and the slightest movement brings a volley from rifles or machine guns. / At night only, when favored by darkness, some of the wounded may be able to crawl back to their trenches. It is a cruel fact that aid reaches the wounded very late, if at all. That accounts chiefly for the high death rate." ♦ "The UN peacekeepers called in last year to monitor a cease-fire helped rebuild the bridge, which connects the Ethiopian village of Rama and the Eritrean town of Adi Qual. They then used it for a celebration that brought together the villagers who had learned to distrust and even despise those on the other side. / But today the bridge is most often used by prisoners of war sent back home by one government or the other, and it serves as a reminder of the tensions that linger. / Indian soldiers, part of the peacekeeping mission of 4,200 troops, guard the bridge with automatic weapons from a watchtower built in a buffer zone on the Eritrea side. Off in the hills on the Ethiopian side, soldiers are posted at lookout points. / There is little traffic across the border these days, except for the cattle that stray across, fueling clashes among the herdsman, or the occasional porcupine, python or wild boar..." ♦ "In my career, I've been told I was too young... I've been told I was too old. Whether young or old, I've always known what endures, I've known our north star." (President Joe Biden's 2024 State of the Union address to Congress.)

♦ "If there's any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that the government may not interfere with an 'uninhibited marketplace of ideas.'" (Supreme Court Justice Neil Gorsuch, writing for the majority.)

♦ (1, 2) "He declared that diversity—on our staff and in our audience—was the overriding mission, the 'North Star' of the organization. Phrases like 'that's part of the North Star' became part of meetings and more casual conversation." (3) "When I suggested we had a diversity problem with a score of 87 Democrats and zero Republicans, the response wasn't hostile. It was worse. It was met with profound indifference. I got a few messages from surprised, curious colleagues. But the messages were of the 'oh wow, that's weird' variety, as if the lopsided tally was a random anomaly rather than a critical failure of our diversity North Star." (4) "Even so, out of frustration, on November 6, 2022, I wrote to the captain of ship North Star—CEO John Lansing—about the lack of viewpoint diversity and asked if we could have a conversation about it." (5) Which is a shame. Because for all the emphasis on our North Star, NPR's news audience in recent years has become less diverse, not more so." (6) "It's a tough job. Her [Katherine Maher, who has replaced John Lansing] first rule could be simple enough: don't tell people how to think. It could even be the new North Star." ("I've Been at NPR for 25 Years. Here's How We Lost America's Trust" by Uri Berliner, The Free Press, April 9, 2024. The author used "North Star" six times in his article.)

♦ "As a leader, I have to be constantly talking about what our North Star is, which is to find students from the broadest swath of society and bring them to Dartmouth, teach them how to think, not what to think..." (Sian Beilock, President of Dartmouth College, which is in New Hampshire.)

*** analysis

♦ A lodestar refers to the North Star, or to stars that help people to find the North Star. As such, it relates to direction and following.

♦ If all the people who utilize the North Star as a metaphor in their rhetoric had ever actually identified Polaris in the night sky, I doubt very much they would use it. But it has become very popular with a certain type of people.

♦ Prosecutor: Can you describe the apartment? / Young female witness, speaking Spanish: It wasn't too big. (A murder trial.)

♦ "I said, 'Oh, that's kind of not good enough...'"

*** analysis

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, we are used to saying that the opposite of "bad" is "good," and the opposite of "good" is "bad." But what about "not good" and "not bad"? Also, nowadays we must be prepared to deal with -ish and -un: see the entry in this dictionary for un (contempo-speak) and ish (androgyny-ish, etc.).

♦ See the definition for "litotes" (LIE-tuh-tease) at Merriam-Webster. It is defined as "understatement in which an affirmative is expressed by the negative of the contrary" and examples include: "not a bad singer (= a good singer)," "not unhappy (= happy)," "not bad! (= good)" and "no mean feat (= quite a feat)."

♦ Chapter 20: How Metaphor Can Give Meaning to Form. "Closeness Is Strength of Effect." "Karl Zimmer (personal communication) has observed that the same principle governs differences like 'Harry is not happy versus Harry is unhappy.'" (From Metaphors We Live By by George Lakoff And Mark Johnson. 2003. "Not" and "happy" are separated by a space, as opposed to "unhappy." Also, there is a slight difference in meaning.)

♦ A female shark enthusiast in a New Yorker article wrote about our "uncareful encroachments" on sharks' habitat. Merriam-Webster recognizes "uncareful" as a word, but also has the following: "Love words? You must—there are over 200,000 in our free online dictionary, but you are looking for one that's only in the Merriam-Webster Unabridged Dictionary. Start your free trial today and..." "Uncareful" seems to be like "overwhelm," about which the editor Merrill Perlman wrote, "There's no stopping people who want to improve (or improvise) existing words."

*** analysis

♦ "[B]anal statements are given an appearance of profundity by means of the not un- formation... It is easier—even quicker, once you have the habit—to say In my opinion it is not an unjustifiable assumption than to say I think... It should...be possible to laugh the not-un formation out of existence." [3] One can cure oneself of the not un- formation by memorizing this sentence: A not unblack dog was chasing a not unsmall rabbit across a not ungreen field." ("Politics And The English Language" by George Orwell, Horizon, April 1946.)

♦ "Let down? Absolutely not. Not never entered my mind, and I don't think Suni's either." (The astronaut Barry Wilmore, speaking from the ISS. Beside him, Sunita Williams shakes her head in agreement. Wilmore had been asked if he thought that Boeing had let them both down.)

♦ "You cannot possibly be unaware that periodical cicadas are out, because..." (John Cooley, a cicada expert at UConn. Umm, actually...)

♦ "Are you only with him because he's native?" / "And I guess the answer is that it's not not because he's Native. You know?" (Gloss: Okay, it's because he's native (concession). But It's also because of the pedigree of our children, or "blood quantum.")

♦ "Not not did they make our heads look like mushrooms, but they also cost more." (Equestrian hats. Gloss: Not only did they make...)

♦ "Correct me if I'm wrong but isn't there no such thing as a home remedy for..." (= there is no such thing...)

♦ "You couldn't be there and not feel uncomfortable" is interesting. Three negatives to express something like, "I felt uncomfortable there," or "If you had been there you would have felt uncomfortable, too." It seems to be polemical, making some kind of case, based on an "affinity" with the interlocuter. As ESL or EFL teachers, we seldom teach pragmatics.

♦ "always be" = "never not be"

♦ "I think that you just have to keep going and not not be scared of living (= be scared of living)." / "You can't not fall asleep (= you will fall asleep)." / "It's not not a little scary (=it is scary)." / "I am not not sympathetic to you, but..." / "I am not not unhappy that he failed (= happy he failed)." / "It became clear to us that we could not not talk about it anymore." "I am not not unaware that..." (Not + not + un- is interesting and requires analysis I'm not able to give.)

♦ Watch "YouTube The Grammar of Double Negatives, Francis Blanchette TEDxPSU." Talk about ruining a funny cartoon!

*** analysis

♦ Why would anyone say, "It will never not be shocking" instead of "It will always be shocking"? Are we hearing double negatives more? If we are, why? And what groups are doing this?

♦ "Professor leads NSF-funded study of double negative use among American dialects" by Josh McAuliffe, psu.edu, September 21, 2023. "Blanchette and three fellow researchers recently received a

$384,272 National Science Foundation collaborative research grant to fund their study, 'A Microcomparative Study of Negation in Dialectal Variation,' a continuation of Blanchette's longtime research on linguistic diversity among American English dialects."

♦ Contempo-speakers cannot not [italics mine] pronounce a silent t, as in often. It's a sure marker of a contempo-speaker, and everything that a "contempo-speaker" entails. Are contempo-speakers using the negative in unexpected ways? Analysis is needed.

*** Al-Ahsa and Jabal Qara; Dunhuang...

♦ The Al-Ahsa Oasis is the largest date-palm oasis in the world, a lovely place that gurgles paradisaically with springs and wells and rejoices in the songs of water. It includes the city of Al-Hofuf with its gorgeous walled fort, also the remarkable Jabal Qara, hills that resemble rock cauliflowers. The whole area is a UNESCO World Heritage Site, deservedly. Go there and watch the trail of a meteor transect the wall of the fort at night. Spend the rest of the night on Jabal Qara, listening to the howls of desert dogs. Just be careful where you step at Jabal Qara.

♦ "And then, rising from between the closer dunes, their vertical spires contrasting dramatically with the desert realm of the horizontal, are green trees by the thousands. There is water somewhere nearby. This truly is an oasis, a place of refuge and settlement—and among the trees there are buildings that glint as the sun catches them, scores of structures, the upswept eaves of a nest of pagodas, the minarets of a mosque or two, a cluster of hotels." (Dunhuang, China. (From The Man Who Loved China by Simon Winchester.)

*** analysis

♦ Joko Widodo, the governor of Jakarta, has been compared to Obama for the following reasons. (1) He is hugely popular with the young and the poor, who consider him a hero. (2) He often visits his supporters, listens to them, shows that he cares about them, and gives them a feeling of positivity and hope. (3) He has helped to subsidize healthcare and education for them. (4) He is humble and his reputation is clean. (5) Finally, he is tall and lanky, just like Obama!

♦ "ABE, a nomadic adventurer that plumbed the world's oceans on its own, forever changing the way scientists explored the seafloor, was lost at sea March 5 off southern Chile... / ABE had been enlisted after a period of semi-retirement to help researchers look for hydrothermal vents at the Chile Triple Junction... / Its last dive was the 222nd of its career, which began in 1994... / Being autonomous, ABE could work faster, cheaper and in more places... / ABE is survived by a new generation of autonomous underwater vehicles... Its most direct descendant is Sentry, developed at Woods Hole... / Dr. Yoerger said he had tried not to become too emotional about the loss of ABE. 'This is aluminum, glass and silicon,' he said. 'We can build a new one.'" ("ABE, Pioneering Robotic Undersea Explorer, Is Dead at 16" by Henry Fountain, The New York Times, 2010.)

♦ "These death notices were always premature, until the nineteen-eighties and nineties, when they finally weren't." (Door-to-door selling. In the 2020s, door-to-door sellers sell pest control, alarms, roofing, and solar panels.)

♦ "When I first set out on this story, I imagined an obituary. Baseball's plodding demise was the hook. The game was mortally ill..." ("How Baseball Saved Itself" by Mark Leibovich, The Atlantic, July / August 2023.)

♦ "That's how the press read the signs, too. 'YUPPIES' LAST RITES READIED' was the headline in the Times after Black Monday. 'SUNSET FOR YUPPIES' was the headline in USA Today. Obituaries for the yuppie began to appear—notably (and strangely unmentioned in McGrath's book), Hendrik Hertzberg's classic 'The Short Happy Life of the American Yuppie,' in Esquire. The yuppie, Hertzberg said, was 'the collective projection of a moral anxiety. We loaded onto him everything we hated about the times we had been living through...

Then we strung the little bastard up.' It was over." ("What Happened To The Yuppie?" by Louis Menand, The New Yorker, July 29, 2024. Great writing.)

♦ "This isn't a column. It's an obituary. / Donald Trump's improbable, historic, decisive victory on Tuesday showed us that the so-called free press is dead and buried. / Outlets from CBS to NBC to ABC to CNN to MSNBC to the Washington Post and The New York Times and countless others like Politico and The Atlantic went all-in on defeating Trump with overwhelmingly negative and oftentimes patently dishonest coverage—and they failed miserably. / Weeks of their electioneering couldn't bring the voters to their side." ("Mainstream media dug its own grave with absurd Trump election coverage" by Joe Concha, The New York Post, Opinion, Nov. 7, 2024. He might have added National Public Radio / NPR to the list.)

*** analysis

♦ Nonhuman and nonliving things can have anniversaries, autobiographies, autopsies, biographies, birthdays, careers, epitaphs, eulogies, obituaries, requiems, and even be characters.

♦ "Obituaries are definitive." (Alex Traub, who works the New York Times obituary desk.)

*** "Man... knows how to fight and win..."

♦ “Man... knows how to fight and win.” (A stirring speech in Olympia, Greece, prior to the 2022 Winter Olympics in Beijing. See YouTube #Beijing2022 Olympic Flame Lighting Ceremony! Eternal, beautiful and inspiring, especially so for taking place during the COVID period. Full credit and respect to Greece and to China. Super!)

*** analysis

♦ According to the Wikipedia article, the term “moral distress” originated in the 1980s in reference to health-care workers. Through “concept inflation” or “co-option,” the construct has since been applied to soldiers, police, firefighters, EMTs, legal defenders and lawyers, people in child and adult protective services, and even to veterinarians, leading inevitably to the construct’s disparagement: “moral injury Olympics.”

Olympus (Mount Olympus)

Olympus of sociological research

omnivorous (adjective)

omnivorous
her interests have been ~ (Jia Tolentino)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ “‘Well,’ said the old man, ‘if you’d been here during collectivization, you’d have kicked the bucket in no time. You know why I stayed alive? Because I know plants. And I’m not talking about things like acorns, linden leaves, goosefoot and nettles. They all went in no time. I know fifty-six plants a man can eat. That’s how I stayed alive. It was barely spring, there wasn’t a leaf on the trees—and there I was digging up roots. I know everything, brother—every root, every grass, every flower, every kind of bark. Cows, sheep and horses can die of hunger—but not me. I’m more herbivorous than any of them.’” (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part Two, Chapter 50.)

on (brag on, etc.)

same dude who ~ my dead teammate...

talk (bad) on
I’m not going to ~ him (about?)

took on
Emma Stone ~ the award (won Oscar / NPR male)

*** analysis

♦ Ordinarily one would “brag about” something or somebody. The “on” of “hate on” or “blast on” seems redundant. “Love on” and “hit on” seem tactile, relating to the body. “Speak on” seems archaic, or dialect. To “take on” an award, versus “win” or “receive” it, just seems wrong. “I am not regretting on” as said by a Kurdish speaker might simply show a non-native-English speaker’s lack of “do” support.

♦ This sort of language has many possible explanations.

on (it’s on you, etc.)

the stress of having to be ~ got to me (actress / eating)

always on

she is ~ (Wendy Williams)

♦ "It was in postwar Paris, Anthony writes, that Jackie perfected a knowledge of 'how to be "on," to make an intentional impression, to invent herself into a character.' She acquired a small Leica camera and brought it on her travels throughout France, subordinating schooling to adventure, though she managed to do fine at both." ("Behind The Lens: The making of Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy" by Thomas Mallon, The New Yorker, May 8, 2023.)

*** analysis

♦ I can be exhausting to be always "on." And it can be exhausting to be in the company of one who is always "on."

peels back yet another layer

a revealing new interview ~ (a politician)

♦ "It's surprising, and shocking, what you learn when you begin to peel back the onion." (Dateline NBC, "Horror at the Lake.")

*** analysis

♦ "ONION: related to a pearl / In Latin there is a word unio which is translated as 'oneness' or 'union.' The word onion is derived from this Latin term. It rates its name because it consists of a number of united layers. There is also another interesting analogy between unio and onion. The rustics about Rome not only used the word unio to mean onion, but also thought it a suitable designation for a pearl. And even today a cook will speak of 'pearl onions' when she means the small, silvery-white variety." (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. From Chapter 10, "Word Stories About Your Dining Table." It's a nice way to think of the word.)

♦ Type in "Republican orthodoxy" at NPR and you get 48 results (and counting). Do that same for "Democratic orthodoxy" and you get 8 results (and counting).

Orwell

and just like that, we are one step closer to ~, wow...

♦ "There's a little Philip K. Dick, a little Orwell, a little Kafka in her portrait of powerful bureaucracies ceding control of the most intimate decisions of our lives to hyperempowered computer models riddled with all of our unresolved, atavistic human biases." (A blurb from the Paris Review for Weapons of Math Destruction by Cathy O'Neil.)

♦ "The Ministry of Truth is Facebook, Google, and cable news. We have met Big Brother and he is us." ("Doublethink Is Stronger Than Orwell Imagined: What 1984 means today" by George Packer, The Atlantic, July 2019.)

*** Eric Blair / George Orwell...

♦ "In Moulmein, in Lower Burma, I was hated by large numbers of people—the only time in my life that I have been important enough for this to happen to me. I was sub-divisional police officer of the town..." (The opening lines of "Shooting an Elephant" by George Orwell.)

♦ "My wound was not much, but it was a miracle it did not kill me. The bullet went clean through my neck but missed everything except one vocal cord, or rather the nerve governing it, which is paralysed. At first I had no voice at all but now the other vocal cord is compensating and the damaged one may or may not recover. My voice is practically normal but I can't shout to any extent. I also can't sing, but people tell me this doesn't matter. I am rather glad to have been hit by a bullet because I think it will happen to us all in the near future..." (Letter to Rayner Heppenstall, 31 July 1937. Signed "Eric.")

*** analysis

♦ As W.H. Auden acknowledged, Orwell gave us the terminology to talk about totalitarian society: 1984; doublethink; Big Brother. Those allusions to his work are used to this day.

♦ Doublethink; memory hole; unperson; thoughtcrime; Newspeak; Thought Police; Room 101; Big Brother; the Ministry of Truth... (Language from 1984 that is a part of our language.)

*** analysis

♦ PAEN: from a Greek god / We will sometimes read in our newspaper that the critics have welcomed a new play with 'paeans of praise.' This is a bit of a figure of speech as a paean was once a hymn. In Greek mythology Paian was the physician of the gods, and hymns were often sung to him to gain his favor as a healer. These songs began with the words Io Paian, that is, 'Oh, Paian!' and soon a song of this type was called a paian. Such songs came to be battle hymns or hymns of triumph. Paian was respelled paean in Latin, and it is in that form it was taken into English." ♦ “There will be more hurt in a year that has already been painful.” (The economy.)

*** various groups

♦ “Recently there’s been more visibility in the trans community. But being the person that’s creating that visibility or that representation can also be really painful. The truth is that every day I experience violence of some kind that makes me feel like it’s not safe to be in my body, and not safe to be visible.” (Lor Sabourin in the Patagonia film They / Them: One Climber’s Story.)

♦ “Others described the feeling of loneliness as ‘painful.’” (Gen Zers, about feeling lonely, in spite of being the most “linked-in” generation in human history. Hmmm...)

*** more conventional usage...

♦ “I mean, “painful” is too small of a word of what it’s like... for any parent.” (Hersh Goldberg-Polin’s parents John and Rachel, prior to the murder of their kidnapped son in Gaza. The Israel-Hamas war.)

*** “And above all his sheer speed of amputation...”

♦ “Many standard operations in the early nineteenth century—being cut for kidney stone, having teeth removed, or a wounded limb amputated—were unimaginably painful. The pain also caused shock, which itself could kill. The only known form of painkiller—the soldier’s use of alcohol—was largely a method of controlling terror and deadening shock, not true anaesthesia... / Several scholars suggest a ‘cultural’ as much as a technical inhibition [for the failure of medicine to pursue anaesthesia at the time]. They argue that the late-eighteenth-century attitude to pain, in a surgical context, did not admit to the concept of a ‘pain-free’ operation. Pain itself was a natural and intrinsic part of the surgical procedure, and a surgeon’s ability to handle a patient’s pain—through his imposed psychological authority, his dexterity, and above all his sheer speed of amputation and extraction—was an essential part of his profession. In a word, there was the need for ‘a paradigm shift’ to conceive of pain-free surgery.” (The Age of Wonder by Richard Holmes.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ “Throughout the Napoleonic Wars, medical science had been spurred on by the immediate bloody demands of the battlefield. It became ever more daring and more ruthless. Larrey, for example, had performed 200 amputations in twenty-four hours after the battle of Borodino, and been awarded the Legion d’Honneur.” (The Age of Wonder by Richard Holmes. The Battle of Borodino was fought on 7 September 1812 during the French invasion of Russia.)

♦ “Over time, in novels and memoirs, a portrait emerged of the terrified soldier—tied to a stretcher, prepared with a shot or two of whiskey, a piece of wood or metal between his teeth (thus the phrase ‘bite the bullet’), writhing in pain as an arm or leg is sawed off and tossed into an ever-growing pile of body parts on the floor. Union surgeons performed about thirty thousand amputations during the war...” (Bellevue: Three Centuries of Medicine and Mayhem at America’s Most Storied Hospital by David Oshinsky.)

♦ "Shortly Tom came upon the juvenile pariah of the village, Huckleberry Finn, son of the town drunkard. Huckleberry was cordially hated and dreaded by all the mothers of the town, because he was idle and lawless and vulgar and bad—and because all their children admired him so, and delighted in his forbidden society, and wished they dared to be like him. Tom was like the rest of the respectable boys, in that he envied Huckleberry his gaudy outcast condition, and was under strict orders not to play with him. So he played with him every time he got a chance..." (Tom Sawyer by Mark Twain.)

♦ "Frankie was...a wild figure... I had come to join his gang through clause number two (the threat of torture), and had stayed with it for profitable reasons of fun and adventure... When the women of our street could think of no more bad names to call Frankie Buller for leading their children into fights that resulted in black eyes, torn clothes, and split heads, they called him a Zulu, a label that Frankie came to accept as a tribute." ("The Decline and Fall of Frankie Buller" by the great writer Alan Sillitoe.)

♦ "It was an absolutely scary experience. We called up our friends, and they said they didn't know us." (The physicist Victor Weisskopf, speaking to Robert Oppenheimer about his recent experience in the Soviet Union, following the arrest of one of Weisskopf's friends.)

♦ "Lyuda, from now on our contact with people has to be one-sided. If a man's been arrested, his wife can only visit people who've invited her. She doesn't have the right to say: 'I want to come round.' That would be humiliating for both her and her husband. You and I have entered a new epoch. We can no longer write to anyone ourselves; we can only reply to letters. We can no longer phone anyone; we can only pick up the receiver when it rings. We don't even have the right to greet acquaintances—they may prefer not to notice us. And if someone does greet me, I don't have the right to speak first. He might consider it possible to give me a nod of the head, but not to talk to me. I can only answer if he speaks first. You and I are pariahs." (Life and Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books.)

*** analysis

♦ "People who for one reason or other are "canceled" nowadays then often become pariahs.

♦ PARIAS: he beat the drums / With us a pariah is a social outcast, but this is a misinterpretation of the East Indian word. In that country a pariah is a member of the labor caste who works in the fields of the Tamil country of Madras. Their name comes from parai, 'drum,' because they were the hereditary beaters of the drum. Europeans have always had them as house servants and for this reason their employers, who were usually British, ranked them at the bottom of the social scale. This accounts for our meaning of the word pariah." (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. From Chapter 6, "Sources of Words of Attitudes and Emotions.")

♦ "Pamphil [Palykh] was devoted to [his wife] and loved his children to distraction... With the arrival of his family he had cheered up and begun to recover... But now the news had got about that... [the families] were going to be sent... to winter quarters... Pamphil's spirits fell and his hallucinations came back... / A bleeding stump of a man [lay] on the ground. His right arm and left leg had been chopped off. It was inconceivable how, with his remaining arm and leg, he had crawled to the camp... Fainting repeatedly from loss of blood, the dying man told him ... of the tortures and atrocities perpetrated by Vitsyn's squads. 'As for the children and women—O God!' / Pamphil had been in the crowd surrounding the dying man. He had seen him, heard his words, and read the threatening inscription on the board. His constant fear for his family in the event of his own death rose to a new climax... In his imagination he saw them handed over to slow torture... / In his desperate anguish he killed them himself, felling his wife and three children with that same, razor-sharp ax that he had used to carve toys for the two small girls and the boy... / The astonishing thing was that he did not kill himself immediately afterward. What could he be thinking of? It was a clear case of insanity... / While Liberius, the doctor, and the members of the army soviet debated what to do with him, he roamed freely about the camp... An obtuse vague grimace of inhuman, unconquerable suffering never left his face. / No one was sorry for him. Everyone avoided him, some people said he should be lynched, but they were not heeded. / There was nothing in the world left for him to do. At dawn he vanished from the camp, fleeing from himself like a dog with rabies." (Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak.)

♦ "Partisan detachments must be formed in areas occupied by the enemy, to stir up guerilla war everywhere, to blow up bridges and roads, sabotage telephone and telegraph lines, and to burn forests, stores and transports. We shall create intolerable conditions for the enemy and his supporters, they must be pursued and eliminated at every step." (Stalin's radio broadcast to the Soviet People 3 July 1941. From "Soviet Storm: WW2 in the East.")

♦ "Naturally, the grownups tried hard not to talk about these horrors in the presence of children, at any rate not in Hebrew... But sometime a word slipped through... I could hear the whispering... Nazis, Vilna, partisans, death camps, death trains, Uncle David and Aunt Malka, and little cousin Daniel, who was the same age as me. Somehow the fear got into me..." *** analysis

♦ (Chapter 6, "Sources of Words of Attitudes and Emotions.") "As to the history of passion, Late Latin passio contributed the word to us and this traces to the Latin passus from pator, 'suffer.' We still speak of the passion or suffering of Christ. And a patient person is one who 'suffers' too, for the word patient is related to passion. A patient person suffers but usually says nothing about it." (Chapter 8, "Terms of Religion and Their Beginnings.") "Toward the end of the 14th century, at the time of the British poet, Geoffrey Chaucer, passion began to signify such powerful emotions as anger, rage, and the tender passion, love. Now it usually means the violent emotions of sexual love. The original meaning of the word is kept in compassion, from the Latin com-, 'with,' and passio, 'suffering.' When you have compassion for people, you 'suffer with' them." (Word Origins and their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. Today, of course, "passion" often means enthusiasm.)

♦ "Some of Trump's defenders argue he's not really serious, and he's just trying to get people clutching their pearls."

♦ NPR's David Folkenflik: "And [Abby Grossberg] said that [Tucker Carlson] used a vulgar epithet—like, the most, I think, vile epithet you can use for a woman—in describing one of Trump's key allies, Sidney Powell. And let me say, although it was a shocking term, I wasn't totally surprised by that. I had heard him use this term getting off a van at the Republican National Convention in 2016. I said to Carlson, Tucker, what are you doing? And he said, what? She is. It was about someone else. I was pretty appalled in the moment." ("Tucker Carlson ousted at Fox News following network's $787 million settlement," NPR, All Things Considered, updated April 24, 2023. Folkenflik was talking with Ailsa Chang. The quote comes from the audio but does not appear in the text.)

♦ "In her suit, Grossberg said she felt pressured to lie to defend Carlson when Dominion's attorneys asked whether she was surprised that he had referred to one of Trump's female allies by a particularly vile and derogatory sexist term." ("Fox pays $12 million to resolve suit alleging bias at Tucker Carlson's show," NPR, All Things Considered, Update June 30, 2023. Folkenflik was talking with Ari Shapiro. ♦ "It had seemed impossible that Japan would court destruction by war with Britain and the United States, and probably Russia in the end. A declaration of war by Japan could not be reconciled with reason. I felt sure she would be ruined for a generation by such a plunge, and this proved true. But Governments and peoples do not always take rational decisions. Sometimes they take mad decisions, or one set of people get control who compel all others to obey and aid them in folly. I have not hesitated to record repeatedly my disbelief that Japan would go mad. However sincerely we try to put ourselves in another person's position, we cannot allow for processes of the human mind and imagination to which reason offers no key. / Madness is however an affliction which in war carries with it the advantage of surprise." ♦ "This need to constantly perform respectability for white people is a psychological drain, leaving Black people spent and demoralized." ("Black Success, White Backlash" by Elijah Anderson, The Atlantic, September 2023.)

♦ "As a Brown Muslim immigrant...she felt forced to perform her sexuality or be reduced to the usual stereotypes associated with her cultural identity." ('Against White Feminism' Is An Urgent Call To Action For Solidarity And Justice' by Jenny Bhatt. This sounds very much like stereotype threat. Presumably, it meant she slept around.)

♦ "I did not feel any pressure from Malcolm to perform girlfriend, but I think just moving through the world as a girlfriend, it just comes with a history of, you know, I'm playing a role, and this is—this role has a set of expectations attached to it." (Haili Blassingame. From "There's pressure to be partnered. Here's how to enjoy single life" with Meghan Keane, NPR's LIFE KIT, January 10, 2022.)

♦ "[Ashley] Kim concurred. 'When I first joined the English department, I felt seen, but I also felt, Maybe I don't belong,' she said. She'd gone to a magnet public school in New Jersey and felt a step behind the sanguine private-school kids in knowing how to perform her interest in the classroom." (Harvard. From "The End Of The English Major" by Nathan Heller, The New Yorker, March 6, 2023. The conventional verb collocations would be "show" or "display" interest.)

♦ "It was a short visit to the hotel, but I imagined it was something Athena would treat visitors to back when people still visited Homs from outside. It felt like a performance of normality, even as it was slipping away, and giving way to a new one... / "Finally, a priest living his faith rather than just performing its rituals." / "The psychodrama hadn't been fun; in fact, it had been deeply disturbing. But there was something refreshing in how truthful it felt. Unlike many of my interactions and observed interactions with strangers in Damascus so far, this hadn't felt like a performance—even as it was role-playing." / "He was never comfortable being a guest in someone else's home. I think it required too much intimacy and the sort of niceties he wasn't particularly good at performing. Which is why, despite his long-held belief that he could have been successful in Syria, I was less sure. Performances—like joining the Ba'ath Party even if you didn't believe in it—struck me as necessary." (The Home That Was Our Country: A Memoir of Syria by Alia Malek.)

♦ "Both were given holding deals with NBC, meaning that they couldn't take other TV offers. 'That was a really hard year for us personally,' Rogers told me. They stopped speaking for months—except when recording 'Las Culturistas.' Yang said, 'I've never felt I was performing my friendship with Matt, except for that period.'" ("Sorry I'm Not Your Clown Today" by Michael Schulman, The New Yorker, September 23, 2024. His profile is of the comedian Bowen Yang.)

♦ "Knausgard's creation...reduces the entire world to the size of the author. This is happening everywhere now—as the writer himself, with characteristic insight, recognizes in a long passage about the ways in which the Internet and social media, by forcing us endlessly to perform our own lives, threaten to trivialize the very notion of selfhood... What work more than his deserves to become the great new classic of the age of the blog?" ("Knausgard" by Daniel Mendelsohn, The New York Times Book Review, September 24, 2018.)

♦ "I don't want to hear one more peep out of them about diversity, equity, and inclusion. I don't wanna see any more of our C-suite execs recommend books for women's history month. There were tangible actions they could've taken and they chose to perform these values. No thank you." (An underpaid employee with an Asian name who was repeatedly turned down for a raise. She finally applied for her job as a new hire at a higher salary, and her posts went viral.)

*** more conventional usage...

♦ "She performed the role of Ophelia in Hamlet."

*** analysis

♦ See the Wikipedia article "Performance studies." The idea that we "perform" identities and roles comes from causes like feminism and gay rights, academic fields like gender and women's studies, and is entrenched at certain universities. It is a pernicious notion.

♦ If you don't enjoy "performing" your sexuality or your race or your life, why don't you just stop doing it?

♦ "Oh, stop acting!"

♦ Traditional American advice: Just be yourself.

♦ “I wondered, as I toured the monument (the Memorial To the Murdered Jews of Europe in Berlin), how much of the motivation to create memorials to the Holocaust reflected a desire for Germany to—internally—reckon with its heinous state-sanctioned crimes, and how much of it stemmed from a hope that putting memorials up would demonstrate to the rest of the world that Germany had accounted for its past? Put more directly were monuments like this one for Germans to collectively remember what had been done? Were they a performance of contrition for the rest of the world? Were they both?” (“Monuments to the Unthinkable: America still can’t figure out how to memorialize the sins of our history. ♦ “The story delves deep into what Bret sees as the performance of everyday life; the way everything is a narrative, a ‘pantomime,’ a ‘script.’” (“Bret Easton Ellis’ first novel in more than a decade, ‘The Shards,’ is worth the wait” by Gabino Iglesias, NPR, Review, Books, January 19, 2023.)

♦ “We told you that this would be a performance, the role of her lifetime as a heroic survivor of brutal abuse.” (Camille Vasquez, in her closing arguments in the Amber Heard-Johnny Depp trial.)

♦ “When you’re on set it seems obvious that pornography is a performance, just like a TV show or a choreographed dance. But most people haven’t been on a porn set, and so the idea that it is a performance is not that obvious.” (“Porn Is Easy To See But Hard To Talk About, Shaping The Ways People Think About Sex” by Kat Lonsdorf, NPR, All Things Considered, May 1, 2019.)

♦ “At fifty-nine, Harris is only four years younger than Barack Obama, but she has arrived at a time when voters, especially young ones, are less patient with the sheen of politics, with figures who seem just out of reach. Instead, they want a performance of approachability—what the sociologist Julia Sonnevend, in her recent book, ‘Charm,’ calls ‘personal magnetism that rests on proximity.’ It’s a method exemplified by Jacinda Ardern, New Zealand’s young Prime Minister, whose Facebook page, Sonnevend writes, ‘presented vulnerability and mistakes as features rather than as bug.’ As Harris reintroduced herself to the public, fans collected indicators of normalcy: clips of her hamming it up with kids in a marching band, cooking videos of her cracking eggs (‘one-handed!’), stories about her supplying jasmine-scented candles as parting gifts to guests at the Vice-President’s residence.” (“The Ascent: Can Kamala Harris defy her doubters—and end the Trump era?” by Evan Osnos, The New Yorker, October 21, 2024. ("When so much at work has changed, why can't we shake presenteeism?" by Josie Cox, BBC, 24 July 2023. In the article, presenteeism is defined as "a compulsion, often performative, to work long hours and be available around the clock even when unwell or unproductive.")

♦ "The land acknowledgment gets you to that start. Now it's time to think about what that actually means for you or your institution. What are the concrete actions you're gonna take? What are the ways you're gonna assist indigenous people in uplifting and upholding their sovereignty and self-determination?" (Cutcha Risling Baldy, quoted in "So you began your event with an indigenous land acknowledgement. Now what?" by Chloe Veltman, NPR, All Things Considered, March 15, 2023.)

♦ "It felt like a scream, and that was soothing. The 'fuck you' form of rebelliousness—being rude to people, and flipping the bird on the street, and destroying property. I'm not proud of that aspect of it...But it's the vibration underneath—the need to act out in that way. It was performative. We got something from people gawping, scowling, yelling at us." (The actor Gillian Anderson about the punk scene. From "Out There: In midlife, Gillian Anderson is proving that she's not so buttoned-up" by Rebecca Mead, The New Yorker, August 5, 2024.)

♦ "Patriot Front's marches and vandalism—even if they appear merely performative—are intended to normalize these ideas, to help mobilize other people, to make them think that there's a groundswell, to inspire violent action. And it's effective." ("The Infiltrators" by David Kirkpatrick, The New Yorker, August 26, 2024.)

- ♦ A plan by four churches on the Cherokee Indian Reservation to apologize to the tribe for a historical failure to recognize traditional Cherokee religion or culture has been greeted with surprise by tribal leaders. / "I don't see what they need to apologize for," said Tribal Council Chairman Bob Blankenship. "But if they feel they've offended us in any way, we'll accept it." / The majority of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians' 13,000 members belong to mainstream Christian churches... / As far as I'm concerned, it's a waste of time," said the Rev. Bo Parris of Big Cove Baptist Church. "There's nothing to apologize for." / Patty Grant, a member of the Eastern Band and one of the event organizers, said understanding intergenerational grief and trauma is an important part of what the churches are trying to do by making the apology. She said trauma from centuries of oppression often manifests itself in drug abuse, domestic violence and depression. / Pastor Steven Phillipp...said, "From my perspective as a white male, I see a need for the white church to apologize for the oppression by Christian missionaries of Native American people," he said. "We thought we had to Europeanize them to evangelize. I am not apologizing for the Gospel. But I do apologize for how we perverted the Gospel in the name of Jesus and oppressed God's people. / Principal Chief Leon Jones, the top elected leader of the Eastern Band, doesn't think an apology is necessary. / "Personally, I think the past is history and I don't hold present-day people responsible," he said. ♦ "When we read a fantasy or go to see one on the stage, we know that it is going to be a fairy tale about nonmortal characters. The word fantasy comes from the Greek word phantasia, which has the rather vague meaning of 'a making visible.' The term phantasia was used by the Greek philosophers when they wanted to refer to a power of the mind for putting things before itself. Our word phantom, for instance, which also derives from phantasia, illustrates this power. A phantom is an image formed in the imagination." ### phoenix moment

scientific Phoenix

he was a ~, rising from the ashes of his mistakes (Pasteur)

♦ In Atlanta, Georgia (USA), a bronze monument of the Phoenix rescuing a woman from a fire commemorates that city’s rise from the ashes of the Civil War. Atlanta prides itself on its motto, “The city too busy to hate.” Pretty much true today, except for the rappers.

♦ Scott Simon: I remember interviewing him once. This would have been 10 years after the riots. And he told me, “Ashes don’t always mean death. Ashes mean death to yesterday. Ashes may mean life to tomorrow...” / Pastor Steven Johnson: In fact, one of our murals at that first AME is the Phoenix rising from the ashes. (Remembering Reverend Cecil Murray,” NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, April 13, 2024.)

♦ “Fifty-four years of brutal dictatorship, and a long journey for the Syrian people since 2011, and here we are... The Phoenixes in Exile are rising today as I speak to you.” (The music composer Malek Jandali, called by some the Shostakovich of his native Syria, days after the fall of Bashar Assad.)

*** analysis

♦ In Greek mythology, the Phoenix was a bird that periodically was consumed by fire and then regenerated itself from the ashes.

♦ In his notes to Canto XXIV of The Inferno, John Ciardi describes the Phoenix thusly: “The fabulous Phoenix of Arabia was the only one of its kind in the world. Every five hundred years it built a nest of spices and incense which took fire from the heat of the sun and the beating of the Phoenix’s wings. The Phoenix was thereupon cremated and was then re-born from its ashes.” This is close to the story the Egyptians told Herodotus in the 5th century BC.)

phoney war (noun)

fiscal phoney war

it’s a ~ (Labour v. Tories / see quote below)

♦ “This morning’s announcements are part of a fiscal phoney war, ahead of the release of the parties’ manifestos in a fortnight. On tax and spend, for now, the main parties are more concerned with what they are not going to do, rather than setting out actual plans.” (BBC’s economics editor Faisal Islam. From Six O’Clock News, BBC Sounds, 30/05/2024.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ The eight months after Germany and the USSR divided Poland between themselves was called the Phoney War, for its relative inaction in Europe. It was more active at sea and in Scandinavia. And, of course, many nations were girding for a world war. It was referred to as the “sitzkrieg” and “the Bore War.” The period ended when Germany invaded and steamrolled France.

♦ “There has been an increase in so-called ‘Zoom-bombing.’” (Video conferencing during the Coronavirus pandemic.)

♦ “The Zoom bombing was an attack on free expression.” (Brandeis President Ronald Liebowitz.)

♦ “My dead baby photobombed my new wedding photos.” (The New York Post, “Weird But True.”)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ “I remember I went down into this hole for another scoop of dirt, and then that’s when the bomb hit. I looked at the man I was digging this hole with; half his body was gone. And I looked up at the trees and I could see body parts on the limbs on the trees, and I shook myself out of it and I stood up, and it was so quiet.” (Private Manuel Orona, Hill 875, Dak To, Vietnam War. The 500-pound bomb from a Marine plane caused the worst friendly-fire incident of the Vietnam War.)

[Young people determining that certain people are ‘toxic,’ even family members.] Maybe young people have been inspired by the impermanence and infinite choice baked into online dating and social media. Maybe our brains have been pickled in wellness culture and ‘self-care’ rhetoric, which stress the need to privilege our own well-being above all else. Or maybe we’re just good American capitalists, encouraged by the cult of individualism to think of ourselves as compelling brands, the main characters of cinematic star vehicles, the centers of the universe.” (“That’s It. You’re Dead To Me. Suddenly everyone is ‘toxic’” by Kaitlyn Tiffany, The Atlantic, September, 2022.)

(John Cloud at Lake Lure, North Carolina, on people who come looking for where scenes from the film Dirty Dancing was filmed. The movie, released in 1987, starred Patrick Swayze and Jennifer Grey. Dirty Dancing Cove is the popular name for the place where Swayze and Grey practiced lifts in the water. The actual spot is Firefly Cove, accessible by car from Boys Camp Road, at the end of the Flower Bridge, but perhaps best admired from a tour boat, or, if you have one, your kayak. The whole area was devastated by Hurricane Helene in 2024. But tourism will come back. The area, like Jennifer Grey in the film, is simply too beautiful not to. As the song goes, "Oh I had the time of my life, I never felt this way before, it's true, and I owe it all to you.")

*** pilgrimage places...

♦ "While in Gartok, we had had occasional showers of hail, but now the weather was mainly fine and warm. By this time we all had thick beards, which helped to protect us against the sun. It was long since we had seen a glacier, but as we were approaching the tasam at Barka, a chain of glaciers gleaming in the sunshine came into view. The landscape was dominated by the 25,000-foot peak of Gurla Mandhata; less striking, but far more famous, was the sacred Mount Kailas, 3,000 feet lower, which stands in majestic isolation apart from the Himalaya range. When we first caught sight of it our Tibetans prostrated themselves and prayed. For Buddhists and Hindus this mountain is the home of their gods and the dearest wish of all the pious is to visit it as pilgrims once in their lives. The faithful often travel thousands of miles to reach it and spend years on the pilgrimage. During their journey they live on alms and hope that their reward will be a higher incarnation in a future life. Pilgrims' roads converge here from all points of the compass. At the places from which the first sight of the mountain can be obtained are set up heaps of stones, grown through the centuries to giant proportions..." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer. From the chapter "Into Tibet.")

♦ "Downtown Jeddah is bustling with the annual post-Haj commercial boom caused by the influx of pilgrims. Many pilgrims are on a shopping spree while others set up stalls to sell items they brought with them to help pay for their journey, and even take a little extra cash home with them... Asian pilgrims can be seen buying Islamic-themed gifts, perfumes, beauty products, henna, and prayer rugs... Tunisians, Indonesians, Pakistani and Egyptians are buying religious books and rugs. African pilgrims are buying gold, electronics, cosmetics, furniture and other products in bulk in order to re-sell these items back home... The Gold Street at Bab Sharif has temporarily turned into a Little Khartoum or Little Nouakchott due to the sheer numbers of Mauritanian and Sudanese pilgrims. Women from Mauritania, Sudan, Somalia and Yemen are buying textiles for clothes." ("Balad bustles as pilgrims trade," by Omaima Al-Fardan and Fatima Sidiya, Arab News, 7 Dec. 2009.)

♦ "Raja Ram Tiwari has been setting up camps for the lost and found [in Allahabad] every year for the past 60 years, for Kumbh Mela and annual fairs. Better known as "Bhule Bhatke Tiwari" or "lost-and-found Tiwari," he has so far helped more than 633,000 lost people find their families again. At present, he works with 150 assistants. While most of these separation last a few hours or days at most, some can be a matter of years, or even a lifetime. "In 1999, we found a two-and-a-half-year-old boy. He had been separated from his mother. We kept him at the camp, we made announcements for his parents, distributed pamphlets. But for a month no one came to claim him. So we put him up for adoption [and] we gave him to a childless couple." Mr. Tiwari says he is inspired by the holy river... A Spartan man with simple needs, what drives him is the joy in the faces of those helps reunite with their families. ("The man who reunites families," by Geeta Pandey, BBC News, Allahabad, April 14, 2010.)

♦ The Camino de Santiago, or the Way of St. James, is a Christian pilgrim route. Its object is the Cathedral of Santiago de Compostela, Galicia, northwestern Spain, where Saint James is reputedly buried. In Medieval times, it was as important as the pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem. Compostela means "field of stars," and the popular name in Spain for the Milky Way is El Camino de Santiago. According to a legend, the Milky Way represents the dust raised by pilgrims. The French Way runs from Saint-Jean-Pied-de-Port on the French side of the Pyrenees to Roncesvalles on the Spanish side of the mountains, and goes through Pamplona, Logrono, Burgos, and Leon. Nowadays it is a popular hiking route.

♦ "In the evening I sat by the fire and discussed with Dersu the rest of our journey down the Lefu. I very much wanted to have a look at Lake Hanka, discovered by N.M. Przewalski... /// [The old man] stopped and pointed out an old track overgrown with grass and shrubs. That was the old route, he told us, by which the Ussurians used to go through to Olga Bay. It was by that route that, in the sixties of the last century, Budishchev and Maximovich had come, and at the thought their portraits rose before my eyes and their description of their journey... /// The Tadusha! It was this very river that L. Veniukov was the first to explore, but the Chinese had stopped him and compelled him to turn back. That was in 1857 when he put up a big wooden cross to mark his farthest point, but I could find no trace of it. No doubt the Chinese had destroyed it as soon as the Russians had left. Later there came Maximovich, Budishchev, and Przewalski, all famous men of science... /// The climb up the ridge is stiff near the crest. The pass itself is in the form of a broad saddle, boggy, and covered with burnt-out forest. The altitude is 1584 ft., and it ought really to be named after the pioneer, M. Veniukov, who passed this way in 1857, breaking the way for the men who followed... /// September 27 was given up to a reconnaissance of the Bay of Terney, discovered by the famous La Perouse on 23 July 1767, who then and there gave it its name..." *** Chang: A Drama of the Wilderness (1927)

♦ Watch the film Chang: A Drama of the Wilderness (1927). It is an extraordinary silent documentary, and it shows the actual employment of pitfalls, deadfalls, and snares. It's free on YouTube but you have to search for it... The film was very popular in its time.

♦ "Not far from the rock there is a big pitfall. This is in the form of a stout fence to keep animals away from their watering-place, built up partly of fallen logs and partly of growing trees. Big stakes had been driven in to hold it firmly and prevent the animals from trampling it down. In a few places openings were left with pits dug underneath them, hidden by grass and dry twigs spread over the top. When the deer come down to the water at night, they come up against the fence, and in trying to find a way round, come to the holes and fall into the pits. There are fences like that stretching over a distance of thirty miles and more, with a couple of hundred pitfalls. / This pitfall on the Vangou had been abandoned... / Dersu abused the Chinese terribly for abandoning the pits without filling them in." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ 27 Nov. To Replee 11 miles. This was formerly an Ass Patrol's Post. It is now broken up and the nearest post is Odha 7 miles further—in this neighbourhood Mr Conway kills immense numbers of deer in pitfalls behind the line hedge—sometimes 19 or 20 are taken in one night in a single pitfall both Antelope and Ravine Deer—the place at which they usually jump the hedge is soon seen & a pitfall is dug just where they alight." (From the diary of Allan Octavian Hume. Quoted in the wonderful book The Great Hedge of India by Roy Moxham.)

♦ The great traveler Ibn Battuta recorded that during the Plague of 1348 in Damascus, representatives and members of the three major religions—Muslims, Jews, and Christians—all made their way to the Mosque of the Footprints with their holy books to pray for the end of the sickness. Ibn Battuta recorded that in Damascus deaths reached under 2,000 people a day, while in Old Cairo they reached 24,000 a day.

♦ The Decameron (Giovanni Boccaccio) are a collection of tales told by a group of people who have fled Florence to escape the Black Death. According to the Wikipedia entry, "Boccaccio probably conceived of The Decameron after the epidemic of 1348, and completed it by 1353."

♦ 1656. Paulus Furst's engraving of Dr. Schnabel ("Beak") of Rome wearing protective clothing typical of the plague doctors of Rome at the time. "The plague doctor's costume was the clothing worn by a plague doctor to protect him from airborne diseases. The costume consisted of an ankle-length overcoat and a bird-like beak mask often filled with sweet or strong smelling substances (commonly lavender), along with gloves, boots, a brim hat and an outer over-clothing garment. / The mask had glass openings for the eyes and a curved beak shaped like that of a bird. Straps held the beak in front of the doctor's nose. The mask had two small nose holes and was a type of respirator which contained aromatic items. The beak could hold dried (including roses and carnations), herbs (including mint), spices, camphor or a vinegar sponge. The purpose of the mask was to keep away bad smells, which were thought to be the principal cause of the disease in the miasma theory of infection, before it was disproved by germ theory. Doctors believed the herbs would counter the 'evil' smells of the plague and prevent them from becoming infected."

♦ "THE BUBONIC PLAGUE WAS ON BOARD / India's Dread Curse Broke Out on the Ship Annie Maud. / ONE DIED FROM THE DISEASE. / He Was Buried at Sea While a Terrific Hurricane Was Raging. / THE OTHER TWO SAILORS RECOVERED." (The San Francisco Call, Saturday Morning, July 17, 1897.)

♦ "THE PLAGUE AT VIENNA. / Dr. Mueller, Who Attended Barisch, Succumbs to the Disease—His Devotion to Science. / VIENNA, Oct. 23.—Dr. Mueller, who attended Herr Barisch, the surgical assistant at Prof. Nothnagle's bacteriological establishment who died on Tuesday from bubonic plague, died this morning. The three nurses who had developed symptoms of the disease, are somewhat improved today. / Dr. Mueller had many English and American pupils. He owed his death to his fearless devotion to Herr Barisch. Not only did he assiduously attend and examine him, noting down a careful description of the case from hour to hour, but he even scraped the walls of the sick room in order to prove the presence of bacilli, utterly regardless of the danger to himself. When he was attacked he wrote down a complete diagnosis of his own condition, analyzing the changes from hour to hour, and pasting them on the window, until pain and fever compelled him to stop. / All the animals at the Nothnagle establishment which had been made the subjects of experiment with the plague bacillus were killed to-day and cremated." (The New York Times, October 24, 1898.)

♦ "Plague / This disease during the year has been reported in the following countries: / Africa, Cape Colony and Egypt; Arabia, Argentina, Australia, Brazil, China, England, Formosa, Germany, Hawaiian Islands, India, Japan, Madagascar, Mauritius, Paraguay, Philippine Islands, Portugal, Reunion, Russia, Scotland, Straits Settlements, Turkey, and Wales—probably a wider dissemination than has ever been known in the history of the world. / The large majority of the cases have occurred in India—more than in all the rest of the world combined. From April 29 to November 3, 1900, 28,865 cases were reported, with 21,954 deaths. During the next six months—from November 4, 1900, to May 11, 1901—there were 506,395 cases, with 446,923 deaths, or for the period from April 29, 1900, to May 11, 1901, there were 535,260 cases and 468,877 deaths. / These figures are only approximately correct, as no doubt many cases are not reported. (Annual Report of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States for the Fiscal Year 1901.)

♦ "There is no denying it... It is sickness...the great coughing sickness which they name the Black Death. Already six provinces are stricken. People are fleeing with the wind. The first came last night to Pai-tan. And one of the women fell dead inside the Manchu Gate. A wise man knows what that portends. Ay, ay, when there is famine we march and when there is pestilence we march again. Life is not easy when the gods show their wrath." (The Keys of the Kingdom by A. J. Cronin. The plague occurred at the beginning of the 20th century, perhaps around 1911. It spread around the world, reaching San Francisco.)

♦ Plague has never been wiped out. WHO reports between 1,000 and 3,000 cases of plague every year; its figures show 182 deaths from the disease in 2003. The disease remains endemic in many countries in Africa, in the former Soviet Union, the Americas—including parts of the US—and Asia. / Plague can be fatal to humans left untreated in 30 to 60 percent of cases. If diagnosed in time, almost all plague patients can be cured with treatment including antibiotics. / The most common form of the disease, bubonic plague, usually causes swelling and tenderness in the lymph gland in the neck. The disease's least common but most deadly form, pneumonic plague, can be inhaled and transmitted between humans without involvement of animals or fleas." ("Is plague still a killer?" BBC News Magazine.)

♦ "In 1940 Japanese planes dropped plague-infected fleas over southwest China. By the end of the war Japanese biological weapons—anthrax, cholera, typhus and bubonic plague—had killed an estimated 270,000 people." (Unit 731.)

♦ "Before the next campaign, we had to take the usual inoculations plus some additional ones. Our arms were sore, and many men became feverish. The troops hated getting injections, and the large number (someone said it was seven) before Okinawa made us crotchety. The plague shot burned like fire and was the worst." (E.B. The men smeared their faces with clay for protection. (Gold Diggers: Striking It Rich in the Klondike by Charlotte Gray. "Jack" is the great writer Jack London.)

♦ "Dense swarms of mosquitoes set in immediately after sunset... a nuisance that can hardly be imagined. No breath of air incommodes those light-winged tormentors. It is quite impossible, for the European at least, to close an eye without the shelter of a mosquito net. Our Indians slept with no covering, only occasionally brushing away the most obtrusive of the little fiends." (The Amazon and Madeira Rivers by Franz Keller.)

♦ "Before evening that day there put in its first appearance the curse of the taiga, flies. The settlers call them gnus, horror or abomination, and they are indeed the plague of the forest. Their bite draws blood and the wound itches desperately, and the more it is scratched the worse it becomes. When there are many biting flies about, it is impossible to expose the head for an instant. The flies blind your eyes, become entangled in the hair and ears, crawl up your sleeve, and savagely bite your neck. Your face swells up as though with erysipelas." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. *** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "The spectacle of the Russian demobilization... continued... before our eyes... along the road in front of the Red House, moving from west to east... at all hours of the day and night. Men passed by on foot, often barefoot, with their shoes hanging from their shoulders to save the soles... Some carried sacks or suitcases on their shoulders; others, the most varied of possessions, an easy chair, a standard lamp, copper pots, a radio, a pendulum clock. / Others passed by on carts, or on horseback; yet others, droves of them, on motor-cycles... / [U]nusual vehicles also passed, always crammed: agricultural tractors, postal vans, German buses formerly used for city transport and still bearing the names of the Berlin terminals; some already broken down, and dragged by other vehicles or by horses. / About the beginning of August... [h]orses slowly began to prevail... the road belonged to them. There must have been all the horses of occupied Germany, tens of thousands passing through each day... goaded and urged on with cries and blows of the whip by girls, one to every hundred or more animals, who rode on horseback without a saddle, bare-legged, sunburnt and dishevelled... The horses were so many, what did it matter if one more or less reached its destination? / [I]t was thanks to these that we survivors of Auschwitz did not need many more months to regain our strength. / The Russians of the Command did not pay the slightest attention [to our] plundering..." (The Truce by Primo Levi. Chapter 12, "The Wood and the Path.")

♦ PLUNDER: household goods. / In German this word meant simply household goods, bedclothes, linens, and so on, so the German word plundern came to mean 'to rob household articles.' Certain of the troops that fought the Thirty Years' War displayed a particular aptitude for this, so when the British soldiers returned to their islands they carried with them a new word, plunder." (From Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. From Chapter 13, "War Words and Their Histories.")

♦ "When I am a medieval plunderer, I can do what I want, and I love the freedom." (Pol Malfait, a 53-year-old postal clerk from Ghent, Belgium. As a medieval re-enactor, he spends the weekends pretending to be a 14th-century Flemish soldier.)

♦ "This could be 'the year of the gas-pocalypse' analysts tell the Los Angeles Times..." ("Pained By Prices At The Pump? They're Likely To Go Even Higher" by Mark Memmott, NPR, The Two-Way, January 6, 2012.)

♦ A national shortage of Kraft Velveeta cheese at the start of 2014 was referred to as a cheesepocalypse.

♦ Poppy Apocalypse; Poppypalooza... (In 2019, a super bloom of desert poppies saw the town of Lake Elsinore, California, descended on by an army of blissed-out tourists equipped with cell phones and selfie sticks and earbuds. They parked alongside an interstate, blocked local roads, trampled everything, climbed trees to get the best photos, and fell down hills. A dog was bitten by a rattlesnake.)

♦ "I'm very careful to be very polite 'cause, you know, come that robopocalypse, I want them to remember that, you know, I'm not one of the bad guys. It's kind of the reason I made this film is that I'll get spared when they finally take over, they'll be like, 'He's OK. He understands us,' you know?" (The British filmmaker Gareth Edwards about his 2023 film The Creator. Gareth claims he says "please" and "Thank you" when using Siri, Alexa, ChatGPT, etc.)

*** Leishmaniasis, smallpox...

♦ "Oh, where I was born, everyone had this. First, a fly bit you, then you got a sore. After a while it healed and never came back." (A grandfather, originally from southern Turkey, explaining to his American grandson how he got a shallow scar—a papery depression—on his cheek. Cutaneous leishmaniasis is also known as "Oriental sore," "Baghdad boil," and Aleppo evil." In India it is known as kala azar, or black fever.)

♦ "For survivors, smallpox was a cruelly fickle disease, leaving many of its survivors blinded or dreadfully scarred, but others unscathed. It had existed for millennia, but didn't become common in Europe until the early sixteenth century. Its first recorded appearance in England was 1518." (At Home: A Short History of Private Life by Bill Bryson.)

♦ "One day I was called into the room of our hostess's younger sister. The room was dark, and only when hot hands gripped mine did I realize that I was standing near her. When my eyes had got accustomed to the darkness, I looked toward the bed and recoiled in a horror which I could hardly conceal. There lay completely transformed by sickness one who two days before had been a pretty healthy girl. Though a layman, I instantly saw that she had smallpox. Her larynx and tongue were already attacked and she could only cry out with thick articulation that she was dying. I tried to tell her that it was not so, and then escaped from the room as quickly as possible to have a thorough wash. There was nothing to be done and one could only hope that an epidemic would not break out. Aufschnaiter also visited her and agreed with my diagnosis... (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, Chapter 4, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "I had lots of things to carry me across the river. Sometimes I could use a camel, sometimes I could get a boat. But if I knew there was critical timing involved...I would try to arrange in advance for the elephant. The elephant rides pretty smoothly and it's pretty tall. Usually I got on with a ladder, but you could step on its trunk and it would put you on its back. I was always a little nervous about that." (May Guinan, sent to Uttar Pradesh from the CDC in the campaign to eradicate smallpox, on how she would cross a river to get to her headquarters in Lucknow. Another method involved mounting a bicycle, which was then carried on the shoulders of two men. From The Invisible Fire by Joel N. Shurkin.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ The point man is the lead man in a column of soldiers. He goes a bit ahead of the column and must look for snipers, mines, and booby traps. He may shoot first and discover to his horror that he has shot a noncombatant or a child, even. In a confused situation, he might be fired on by his fellow soldiers in a different unit. The enemy might shoot him dead, or he might set off a trap that kills him outright. Or, the enemy might shoot to wound him and then pick off anyone trying to come to his aid. Or, the enemy may let him pass and shoot up the main column of men, leaving the point man terrified, cut off, and isolated without support...

♦ "Mostly, the enemy is found by the point man, of the point platoon, of the point company bumping into that enemy." (Military operations in urban terrain / MOUT.)

♦ "Castro was yelling, 'Ah shit, man! Shit! Shit!...' / The medic was on his knees. Patrick's arms were lying loosely at his sides, his eyes roaming around the faces of the men standing above him... / Blood was everywhere. Patrick closed his eyes and his head rolled to the side, and he died. / 'I left as soon as I could this morning to get here and help you,' Pete said. 'Colonel wouldn't let me come last night.' He paused. 'Patrick must have fallen asleep, lying here in the bushes. He fired at my point man. Just jerked up and started firing. He and my point man just fired at each other. I'm sorry...' / I couldn't yell at Pete or his point man. It certainly wasn't their fault, nor was it Patrick's. I felt a mindless rage, like I wanted to cry and scream at the same ♦ "Lopinto was a tough mother. Shirtless beneath his flak jacket and slung with an especially heavy load of grenades and ammunition, he moved down the dirt cart trail they called Route 561." From the affecting history Operation Buffalo: USMC Fight for the DMZ by Keith William Nolan.)

♦ "There was another AK47 burst and, instantly, an inhuman scream, followed by shouts to Herbert that one of their guys was hit. Herbert sent his superficially wounded corpsman in that direction, but he was shot in the legs as he ran and sent sprawling. / The next shot was to his head. KIA. / There was a shout to Herbert that it was the point man Lopinto who had screamed. That was Herbert's best friend, and he shouted back to ask how bad he was hit. The return shout was that he was dead. KIA." (From the affecting history Operation Buffalo: USMC Fight for the DMZ by Keith William Nolan. "Lance Corporal Herbert, the intelligent, articulate, and very able leader of the 2d Squad of Bravo Two, was right behind the monster erupting around Bravo Three...")

♦ "Bringing up the rear as tail-end-charlie was almost as bad as walking point." (The Vietnam War. In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is known as the American war.)

♦ Nowadays the "point person" is usually a female who mindlessly parrots the administration or company line, reading from a script.

♦ "In its zeal, the Sierra Club has clear-cut a whole national park of words. Urban, vibrant, hardworking, and brown bag all crash to earth for subtle racism. Y'all supplants the patriarchal you guys, and elevate voices replaces empower, which used to be uplifting but is now condescending. The poor is classist; battle and minefield disrespect veterans; depressing appropriates a disability; migrant—no explanation, it just has to go." ("The Moral Case Against Euphemism: Banning words won't make the world more just" by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2023. George Packer is not James Packer.)

♦ "One cannot change this all in a moment, but one can at least change one's own habits, and from time to time one can even, if one jeers loudly enough, send some worn-out and useless phrase...into the dustbin where it belongs." *** war, conflict, the military...

♦ In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is called the American War. (Point of view and war.)

♦ In Russia, World War II is known as the Great Patriotic War. In China, it is known as the Second Sino-Japanese War.

♦ "It's an extraordinary thing... [The] war came as a breath of fresh air, a purifying storm, a breath of deliverance. When the war broke out, its... horrors... were a blessing compared to [what had gone before], and they brought relief... It was felt... by absolutely everyone... and they all took a deep breath and flung themselves into the furnace... with real joy, with rapture." (Major Dudorov speaking to Lieutenant Gordon in the epilogue of Doctor Zhivago. He is speaking of World War II.)

♦ "One man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter." (PLO Chairman Arafat in a 1974 speech before the United Nations.)

♦ "They are understood here. They are adored. She was, is and will remain a heroine for us." (Chechen woman, speaking of Elza Gazuyeva.)

♦ "Why don't you meet Osama bin Laden, invite him to Brussels or to the White House and engage in talks, ask him what he wants and give it to him so he leaves you in peace? Why don't you do that? You find it possible to set some limitation in your dealings with these bastards, so why should we talk to people who are childkillers? No one has a moral right to tell us to talk to childkillers..." ("Angry Putin rejects public Beslan inquiry," Jonathan Steele in Moscow and Nick Paton Walsh in Beslan, Guardian Weekly, 2004.)

♦ Some Australians regard Ned Kelly as a national hero. Others view him as a murderous villain and cop killer.

♦ "It depends on your point of view. Some see him as the person who created a murderous street gang that continues to exist today and has spread across the country, others see him as a folk hero..." ### *** public health...

♦ The French blamed the pestilence on the Neapolitans. The English, Germans and Italians called it the morbus gallicus or the 'French disease.' The Polish labeled it the 'Russian disease.' To the Turks it was the 'Christian disease.' It was called the 'Chinese pox' by the Japanese and the 'Portuguese disease' in India and Japan. The Tahitians referred to venereal disease as 'the British disease.' (Names for syphilis, from Disease, The Extraordinary Stories Behind History's Deadliest Killers by Mary Dobson. Point of view and public health.)

*** personal point of view...

♦ "I have a special hatred for ice cream trucks. I think they should be outlawed. I have so many traumas from them, and the children hit by ice cream trucks are usually on the small side, so they get head traumas." (Gracie Dinkins, a trauma surgeon. From "Flesh & Blood" by Gracie Dinkins as told to Matthew Segal, Los Angeles magazine. A purely personal point of view, based on occupation.)

♦ "I've drawn my curtain so that I can't see those hateful motor ambulances coming in slowly full, and going back empty fast, and must go to sleep. I simply loathe the sight of those M.A.'s, admirable inventions though they are. Had a look into a lovely lorry full of 100-lb. shells in the square." (Diary of a Nursing Sister on the Western Front: 1914-1915 by Kate (Katherine) Evelyn Luard.)

*** female Gen-Z point of view...

♦ "Yeah, they have these belts on with like all these extra bullets and they're like dressed for war." (Leah talking to her Brit producer, Georgia, for their podcast about the militia movement. Gen-Z point of view.)

♦ "People say it's a peaceful demonstration but I would say that a huge 18-wheeler is not a peaceful thing to have in the middle of your city." ("Health care workers in Ottawa are being harassed protesters [sic] against COVID-19 mandates," NPR, Weekend Edition, Saturday, Feb. 12, 2022. Point of view and Gen Z females.)

*** female versus male point of view...

♦ Female teacher at a North Carolina high school: Gesim was in a fight. Male ESL teacher: Did he win? (Wrong response! Awkward. The male versus the female point of view about bullying.)

*** child's point of view...

♦ "Next morning I awoke, looked out the window, and nearly died of fright. My screams brought Atticus from his bathroom half shaven. 'The world's ended, Atticus. Please do something.' I dragged him to the window and pointed. 'No it's not,' he said. 'It's snowing.'" (The beloved American novel To Kill a Mockingbird by Harper Lee. This is an example of the point of view of a child.)

♦ "When guests began applauding, she hid under the piano in fright until her mother assured her that clapping meant approval." (Celeste Holm, who as a precocious toddler in New York City danced to the music of the hotel pianist at the Waldorf-Astoria. She would go on to perform on Broadway.)

♦ "I'll never forget how scared I was when Pa took me to the first [electrified and blinking] Christmas tree there in our little church. That tree just jumped at me as I went in, it was so bright and wonderful; the most beautiful thing I had ever seen in my life. When my name was called to come up for my gift it about scared me to death. Instead of going on up like the others had, I just clung to Pa's legs and wouldn't budge. Pa had to go up with me, holding on to my hand." (Alma Covell, a textile worker, interviewed in the 1930s about her childhood. From "How the Christmas Tree Got Its Lights," by Alexis Madrigal, The Atlantic, Dec. 24, 2010.)

♦ "When I was a boy, I used to go out in the evening and see campfires around all over. My parents would tell me, 'Around those fires is where the people live.' And so when I looked up at the sky and saw a great many stars scattered about all over, I thought the stars were fires, and that a great many people must be living up there above us in the sky. Some stars that I saw were little small ones, and I thought, 'Those fires are almost going out.' Others were large fires, and I thought, 'Some people must be sitting around that big fire, and maybe some of them are cooking.'" (Old Man Hat, A Navaho Autobiography.)

*** point of view and the elderly...

♦ "Today's youth should be grateful to God for all the modern scientific inventions they can use. They enjoy so many modern tools and other things that we in our times could not." (Ali Al-Mirdasi in Buraidah, Al-Qasim, in eastern Saudi Arabia, the first person to be granted permission to ride a bicycle in his area. At the time, people rejected new devices and inventions like radios, telegrams and cars as alien, and a bicycle was referred to as "Satan's Horse." Ali had to get permission from the local religious council to ride his bike, and could only ride it to and from school and nowhere else. From "Saudi Who Rode 'Satan's Horse' Tells His Story," by Raid Qusti, the Arab News, Saturday, 5 February, 2005.)

♦ "Before, people moved everywhere on donkeys. You could stop them and talk to them. Now, everyone is zooming around in cars." (Saed al-Dhori, a man in his eighties, in Khasab, Oman. For years he lived at the top of a mountain in a single dirt-floored room made of stone with a doorway as small as a window, without electricity or water. When he was young, the gates to the capital city of Muscat were still being closed at night, and sunglasses, bicycles and radios were banned as Western conventions. In 1984 he finally joined his extended family living in a valley, where there was electricity, water, and roads. From "With Murmurs of Change, Sultan Tightens Grip," by the great reporter Michael Slackman, May 15, 2009.)

*** indigenous point of view...

♦ "[Dersu] did not like all the restrictions of town life. You cannot pitch a tent in the street, or light a fire, or shoot a rifle, because it would interfere with somebody else. / Once he was present when I was buying firewood, and he was tremendously struck that I paid for it. / 'What!' he cried. 'Plenty of wood in forest...' / He abused the contractor and tried his best to persuade me I was being swindled... That evening he did not light his stove. Next day, to save me from expense, he went out to the park to fell a tree for me. They arrested him... The next incident completely upset his equilibrium. He saw me pay for water. 'What!' he cried. 'Must also pay water! Look-see river,' pointing to the Amur. 'There plenty much water...' " (Dersu Uzala in Khabarovsk. From Dersu Uzala by V.K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ "When Younghusband reached Lhasa, he was greeted by hordes of clapping Tibetans. He took it as a gesture of welcome, not realizing that clapping was a traditional way of warding off evil spirits..." (The 1904 British invasion of Tibet.)

♦ "Townsppeople stared in disbelief at the naked Nukak." (Colombia. It is not known what the Nukak thought about the townspeople.)

♦ The Turkana have few food taboos and will even eat fish.

*** the point of view of sea mammals, fish, mammals of the land...

♦ "Nunavut—from this moment, sea mammals, we state to you: the water, the sea, do not pollute our sea—it is our home; do not make it a concern, do not contaminate it; so that we may continue to be a food resource. Our Creator has created us to provide food for you. As fish we state to you: the lakes, look after the lakes. Manage your fresh water so that we will not be contaminated and we can continue to be a food source, because our Creator has created us to be a food source for Inuit. The mammals of the land, we state to you: Please take care of the land and the vegetation; please do not contaminate us for they are our only food and our only habitat; so that we may not be a concern, and continue to be a food source, and a source of clothing. Our Creator created us, so that we could be utilized, by you. The air of Nunavut—those of us who are birds say to you: because we fly through the air to vast distances to migrate to the Arctic—please watch over the land and the air, so that we will not be contaminated, and remain a food source for you. Our Creator has created us so that we could be a resource to you for as long as the sun shall set, for as long as the sun shall rise." (Elisapee Ootoova, speaking in Inuktitut to her fellow Inuit and the visiting Prime Minister of Canada during the inauguration ceremony in Iqaluit to mark the Canadian recognition of the Inuit Territory of Nunavut.)

*** two funny stories and a funny cartoon relating to point of view...

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A young American on vacation from his job was shooting billiards with a local man at a country club in Nuwara Eliya, Sri Lanka. The Sri Lankan man spoke impeccable British English, and at one point during the game enquired, "What do you do for a living?" The young American said, "I teach English in Saudi Arabia." To which the Sri Lankan man expostulated, "How the hell can you teach English when you can't bloody well speak it!"

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. Ragged, disheveled and unshaven Willie and Joe, fighting their way through Europe, are standing in a liberated French town that—Happily!—is completely intact, as opposed to having been reduced to an abandoned pile of rubble. The streets are thronged with French civilians, including a pulchritudinous young female in silhouette; a man is seated peacefully on a balcony smoking a pipe watching the scene below him; and the shop signs are all in French. Jut-jawed Willie is saying to Joe, "Did ya ever see so many furriners, Joe?" (Up Front by Bill Mauldin, World War II. Mauldin survived the war. So did Konstantin Simonov and Vasily Grossman. Ernie Pyle didn't.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A city man grew weary of the hustle and bustle, the hubbub and din, of city life, and he decided to visit his relative in the quiet and peaceful countryside. He made a sign that said, "Gone to the countryside," posted it on his door, and set off. He drove through the desert until the road ended. Then he drove off road, following tracks in the sands, until the tracks ended at the edge of a steep valley. He abandoned his truck there, crossed the valley on foot, and then walked for miles over a flat barren empty gravel desert. Finally, in the distance, he saw his relative's stone hut, next to a single tree. In great joy and anticipation he hurried to it, only to find, posted on the door, a note that read... "Gone to the countryside."

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "In its zeal, the Sierra Club has clear-cut a whole national park of words. Urban, vibrant, hardworking, and brown bag all crash to earth for subtle racism. Y'all supplants the patriarchal you guys, and elevate voices replaces empower, which used to be uplifting but is now condescending. The poor is classist; battle and minefield disrespect veterans; depressing appropriates a disability; migrant—no explanation, it just has to go." ("The Moral Case Against Euphemism: Banning words won't make the world more just" by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2023. George Packer is not James Parker.)

♦ "As wave after wave of pain and outrage swept through the Times, over a headline that was not damning enough of Trump or someone's obnoxious tweets, I came to think of the people who were fragile, the ones who were caught up in Slack or Twitter storms, as people who had only recently discovered that they were white and were still getting over the shock. Having concluded they had got ahead by working hard, it has been a revelation to them that their skin colour was not just part of the wallpaper of American life, but a source of power, protection and advancement. They may know a lot about television, or real estate, or how to edit audio files, but their work does not take them into shelters, or police precincts, or the homes of people who see the world very differently. It has never exposed them to live fire. Their idea of violence includes vocabulary." ("When the New York Times lost its way" by James Bennet, 1843 Magazine (The Economist), Dec 14th 2023.)

♦ "The Home Secretary has blamed political correctness for the failure of authorities to tackle child sexual exploitation." (BBC, Six O'clock News, 02/04/2023. The Home Secretary was Suella Braverman, referencing fears of accusations of racism about investigating and prosecuting British Pakistani males.)

♦ "I'm actually convinced that it was political correctness gone mad. You know, there was absolutely no reason for it. I was rocking the multicultural boat. But, how would you get changes without talking about it?" (Ann Cryer, Labour MP for Keighley, 1997-2010. From The Betrayed Girls: The Rochdale Scandal—2017 Documentary.)

♦ "[The rapid national audit of grooming gangs] will properly examine ethnicity data and the demographics of the gangs involved, and their victims, and will look at the cultural and societal drivers for this type of offending, including amongst different ethnic groups." (Home Secretary Yvette Cooper, a member of the Labour Party. Heard on BBC Six O'Clock News, 16/01/2025.)

♦ "Why on Earth would anyone be proud of making a PC Snow White?" (Piers Morgan, about the upcoming "woke" 2024 Disney film. Said professional wrestler Dylan Postl about the activist actor Peter Dinklage, "By being progressive in his mind, he is really doing the opposite and taking dreams away and potential roles from seven dwarf actors—I think it's a shame. It doesn't make any sense to me that we are taking one person's voice for the whole community." One online commenter said the controversy made him think of "Men without hats—the safety dance—YouTube." Worth watching!)

♦ "How dare you say that! isn't a persuasive political argument."

♦ "Some nights at the bar I would descend into discussions with cosmologists and other[s]... and discover that Doctor Seuss meant more to them than a menagerie of imagined animals and a vivid and troublesome cat." ("The Science of Dr Seuss," BBC, Sounds, with Robin Ince. Seven Doctor Seuss books were cancelled in 2021.)

*** analysis

♦ "It was ironic, it was arch, so it felt like, 'Oh My God! they're using this against us!'" (Ruth Perry, who founded the Women's Study Department at MIT in 1984, about the term "political correctness." From "How Cancel Culture Became Politicized—Just Like Political Correctness," NPR, All Things Considered, July 26, 2021.)

♦ "I think 'hillbilly' is the one epithet people are allowed to use. The rest are politically incorrect. If they want to look down upon us, then that is their problem. The ignorance is one-sided, and in that way I've never had a problem with it." (Fred Chappell, North Carolina poet laureate.)

♦ "It occurred to me that, because the world media establishment had ignored the Balkans for so long..., these people never had to learn, as the Israelis and Arabs did, how to talk in code, so as not to offend Western sensibilities with their racial hatred. In the Balkans, people spoke more honestly than in the Middle East, and therefore more brutally." (Balkan Ghosts: A Journey Through History by the superb writer and correspondent Robert D. Kaplan.)

♦ "There is too big a gap between what people say in public and what they believe, when they are just by themselves. And this is you know somehow a collateral effect of this political correctness, which taught people that you are not allowed to say this or that but uh it didn't change what they believe." ("From Romanian director Christian Mungiu on his film R.M.N.," NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, May 6, 2023.)

♦ See the Wikipedia article "Euphemism," specifically the section "Lifespan," to learn about "the euphemism treadmill." Steven Pinker of Harvard University has also discussed the idea, and the linguist John McWhorter has mentioned it, and written about it. The problem is, the euphemism simply acquires the connotation of the word it replaces, requiring yet a new euphemism, etc. Nothing changes.

♦ "The euphemism treadmill must be accepted as an inevitable and unexceptionable result of what a word is: not only a bundle of sounds linked to a meaning, but also one that naturally piles up with implications over time because it is used by human beings living lives. Since words can't sit still, and the implications they attract will sometimes be unpleasant, civility will require changing some of them regularly, like underwear." (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 2, "It's the Implication That Matters: Words on the Move.")

♦ Pollyanna was a character from the 1913 children's-literature novel by Eleanor H. Porter. A Pollyanna is a person who is incredibly optimistic even in the most dire circumstances, and the word is often used in the pejorative sense.

♦ OPTIMISM, n. The doctrine, or belief, that everything is beautiful, including what is ugly, everything is good, especially the bad, and everything right that is wrong. It is held with greatest tenacity by those most accustomed to the mischance of falling into adversity... Being a blind faith, it is inaccessible to the light of disproof—an intellectual disorder, yielding to no treatment but death. It is hereditary, but fortunately not contagious." ♦ “Project 562. Matika Wilbur, a visual storyteller and licensed primary school educator from the Swinomish and Tulalip peoples of coastal Washington, has spent a decade traveling to more than 400 tribal nations. / Through her research as both a photographer and educator, Wilbur found that many state history standards fail to cover Native Americans post-1900—an oversight she says is ‘damaging to native and non-native youth.’ / What little documentation of contemporary native communities that does exist is often ‘poverty porn,’ says Wilbur. And that’s not what she wants her students—or any students—to think of Native American culture. / She hopes her continued work through her Project 562—dedicated to photographing the more than 562 federally recognized tribes in the United States—will help inspire native peoples and counteract problematic stereotypes. / ‘I remember thinking: I’m showing contemporary representation of indigenous people to my students that is traumatizing them. And I’m not doing the work. I can’t be a part of the problem that’s causing harm to the students. My job is to inspire them. My job is to give them hope,’ says Wilbur.” (“Want To See Inspiring Pix? He went to Cheyenne and was sworn in as a deputy U.S. marshal and then selected Scott Davis, Boone May, and eight other good men for his party. They went to Fort Laramie for horses, ammunition, and supplies and then headed north into the Inyan Kara country... / On October 9 Cheyenne’s Leader reprinted a story from the Deadwood Times: “THE GOOD WORK PROGRESSES: [The sheriffs] returned yesterday and reported that they found the bodies of two men hanging to a pine tree about seven miles from Jenny’s Stockade... They were black in the face, with tongues and eyes protruding, and were a ghastly looking spectacle... They had been hanging for some time, and it is thought that the Scott Davis party did the good work last week. The sheriffs did not molest them, but left them to swing and fester in the sun, a warning to others of the same ilk.” (From Great Stagecoach Robberies Of the Old West by R. In the same article, she mentioned that "Several thousand people recently joined a march in Belgrade against LGBTQ Pride." See also the Wikipedia article "Belgrade antigay riot.")

*** more conventional usage...

♦ The conventional sense of "pride" is usually positive, but it can also be negative. For example, a person can have too much pride and be stubborn, or not ask a question out of pride, or something can wound one's pride. "Pride goeth before a fall," etc. Or, as the Canadian psychologist Jordan Peterson wrote, "Remember when Pride was a sin?"

♦ Pride in one's appearance / car / lawn / house; pride in one's country; Hmong American pride in Sunisa Lee; small-town pride; civic pride; community pride; national pride; with pride ("Infantry is infantry" he says with pride); a badge of pride (working to exhaustion); a point of pride (working hard); a sense of pride; a source of pride (being a veteran); the pride that comes with...; they take pride in...; they pride themselves on...; It filled him with pride...

♦ "It's crazy how many Filipinos are here. I feel so proud. I feel so glad to be here and show Filipino pride. We're going to fight until the end." (Sara Eggesvik, a member of the Philippines women's national football team during the Fifa 2023 Women's World Cup. In contrast, most of the United States women stood silent and stone-faced for the United States National Anthem. Pinoys have long distinguished themselves at home, around the globe, in healthcare in the United States, and in the United States military. Go Pinoys! You have so much to be proud of!)

*** analysis

♦ "A word is a thing on the move. This means wrapping our heads around something that cannot feel right at first, but that simple logic requires us to accept. To wit, any claim that people in general are using a word 'erroneously' is illogical... If a significant proportion of the people speaking a language are using a word in a way that dictionaries tend not to mention, it means that the word is moving—as we would expect, since words always do." (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 2, "It's the Implication That Matters: Words on the Move," Subsection "But That Isn't What It's Supposed to Mean!")

♦ Pride is generally capitalized when used as a premodifier, and can also be a single word, also capitalized.

priesthood (noun)

priesthood of economists

members of (a public-policy) priesthood

scientists had been regarded as ~...

♦ "For a few years after World War II, scientists had been regarded as a new class of intellectuals, members of a public-policy priesthood who might legitimately offer expertise not only as scientists but as public philosophers. With Oppenheimer's defrocking, scientists knew that in the future they could serve the state only as experts on narrow scientific issues." (American Prometheus: The Triumph And Tragedy Of J. Robert Oppenheimer by Kai Bird and Martin J. Sherwin. The popular 2023 film Oppenheimer was based on this book.)

he's known as a ~ kind of guy (Governor Andrew Cuomo)

♦ "We fight hard, we play for keeps, we take no prisoners. We'll get in the trenches and fight dirty." (Greg Pruet, president of the Idaho Second Amendment Alliance, a gun-rights group.)

♦ "Bowen also calls out the classism and cultural biases even within Black media circles where so many of her colleagues come from privilege and 'have had to untangle their Blackness from the web of whiteness they were socialized in.' This is one reason Bowen is powerful; she takes no prisoners. Going against every tide, Bowen's trap feminism enthusiastically celebrates 'ghetto girl culture.' More than reconciling feminism with hip-hop, she marshalls its power." ("5 books at the intersection of Black feminist thought, culture, and politics" by Carole V. Bell, NPR, Book Reviews, March 21, 2022.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "A man cannot change his feelings again during the last rush with a veil of blood before his eyes." (Ernst Junger. World War I. Quoted in On Killing by Lt. Col. Dave Grossman. Close-quarters combat. Soldiers who resist to the final moment and then throw down their weapons and raise their hands may or may not be taken prisoner in the heat of battle.)

♦ "About saving the lives of enemy wounded there was disagreement; the convention varied with the division. Some divisions, like the Canadians and a division of Lowland Territorials, who claimed that they had atrocities to avenge, would not only avoid taking risks to rescue enemy wounded, but go out of their way to finish them off. The Royal Welch were gentlemanly: perhaps a one-in-twenty risk to get a wounded German to safety would be considered justifiable." (Good-Bye To All That by Robert Graves. World War I. No man's land.)

♦ "We rode past the other bodies of men and women and four more dead babies, looking very soiled in the daylight, towards the village; whose loneliness we now knew meant death and horror. By the outskirts were low mud walls, sheepfolds, and on one something red and white. I looked close and saw the body of a woman folded across it, bottom upwards, nailed there by a saw bayonet whose haft stuck hideously into the air from between her naked legs. She had been pregnant, and about her lay others, perhaps twenty in all, variously killed, but set out in accord with an obscene taste... / I said, 'The best of you brings me the most Turkish dead', and we turned after the fading enemy, on our way shooting down those who had fallen out by the roadside and came imploring our pity. One wounded Turk, half naked, not able to stand, sat and wept to us. Abdulla turned away his camel's head, but the Zaagi, with curses, crossed his track and whipped three bullets from his automatic through the man's bare chest. The blood came out with his heart beats, throb, throb, throb, slower and slower. / Tallal had seen what we had seen. He gave one moan like a hurt animal...[H]e dashed his stirrups into the mare's flanks and galloped headlong, bending low and swaying in the saddle, right at the main body of the enemy... / Instantly their rifles and machine-guns crashed out, and he and his mare, riddled through and through with bullets, fell dead among the lance points... / By my order we took no prisoners, for the only time in our war... / Just one group of Arabs, who had not heard our news, took prisoner the last two hundred men of the central section... [A] man on the ground behind them screamed something to the Arabs, who with pale faces led me across to see. It was one of us—his thigh shattered. The blood had rushed out over the red soil, and left him dying; but even so he had not been spared. In the fashion of to-day's battle he had been further tormented by bayonets hammered through his shoulder and other leg into the ground, pinning him out like a collected insect. / He was fully conscious. When we said, 'Hassan, who did it?' he drooped his eyes towards the prisoners, huddling together so hopelessly broken. They said nothing in the moments before we opened fire. At last their heap ceased moving; and Hassan was dead..." (Seven Pillars of Wisdom by T.E. Lawrence, Chapter CXVII.)

*** more conventional usage...

♦ "The stately pace of the motorcade, a royal prerogative..."

♦ "In many societies, special privilege is accorded to standard accents."

♦ Driving is a privilege, not a right. (What most Americans heard growing up.)

♦ Rank has its privilege. (Typical American understanding of the word, which accepts the fact that you earn your rank and deserve whatever privileges that come with it. A better and bigger office with a view. A driver / chauffeur. Not having to wait in line at a club; a VIP room. Same for the airport. Company or military perks. The list goes on and on.)

♦ "Respect has to be earned." (A basic American value.)

♦ "Privilege is vile." (A traditional American way to remember how to spell the word correctly that also expresses the traditional, historic, and ingrained American view that undeserved [italics mine] privilege is wrong.)

♦ "USC was one of the universities embroiled in an admissions cheating scandal in which wealthy parents sought to get their undeserving [italics mine] offspring into college by falsely portraying them as star athletes." ("Former USC dean pleads guilty in political bribery case," AP, September 19, 2022.)

♦ The vast majority of Americans give credit where credit is due.

♦ "Harlem's most opulent apartment house, the Dunbar—honoring the Dayton, O., Negro poet Paul Laurence Dunbar—houses some of the most celebrated of the colored folk. It is an impressive structure, a Rockefeller creation, with all the white folk appointments, even to uniformed elevator operators and hot-cha door flunkies. Bob Robinson lives there. Also Duke Ellington, Cab Calloway, Adelaide Hall and the colored cartoonist E. Simms Campbell." ("New York Day by Day" by O.O. McIntyre, from The Day, New London, CONN., Thursday Afternoon, April 1, 1937.)

♦ First he built a fire against a fallen tree trunk... Then he cut a branch of dogwood that forked into three tines, leaving the stem for a handle. On the fork he laid a chunk of his hard corn bread and fastened it in place with limber twigs woven crosswise. He impaled a slice of fat salt pork, on a sharpened stick, broiled it over the coals, and held his bread under it to catch the dripping grease and get warmed through. / Youlus ate as voraciously as a hound, meantime drinking his black coffee without sugar and getting supreme enjoyment from it... If some well-meaning but misguided genii had carried him off on a magic carpet and set him to feast at a king's table, Youlus would have sniffed and growled at every dish placed before him and would have bragged about his 'old corn bread and sow-belly.'" (Smoky Mountain Magic by Horace Kephart.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Responsibility, not privilege, would be the keyword for battalion leadership when the Second Raiders formed up." (From the Wikipedia article "Evans Carlson," about the legendary leader of Carlson's Raiders. His biography is extraordinary.)

*** analysis

♦ "White privilege, male privilege, cisprivilege... (Terms popularized on Tumblr. From the brilliant podcast The Witch Trials of J.K. Rowling, "Chapter 3: A New Pyre.")

♦ "Perhaps a laudable anxiety to be correct and systematic in making and recording meteorological observations has induced the prevailing idea that extreme precision is all-important, and that observations should be very numerous. Observatories, unquestionably, such should be the case; but to treat all localities, all alike, and to require a similar registration from each, would indeed be Procrustean, while their application of very refined instruments might be like cutting wool with razors." (The Weather Book by the great sea captain and scientist Robert FitzRoy.)

*** analysis

♦ This refers to making everyone and everything fit to an arbitrary standard; to ensure conformity. In science, it can relate to tailoring data to fit the hypothesis. It is similar to "one size fits all." Procrustes was a crazy man who stretched people or cut off body parts so that his victims would fit a metal bed.

♦ “Paine is the preeminent spokesman of a new class of people who are emerging at just that time. We used to call them the artisans, self-educated working men with a skill... They’ve taught themselves to read or they’ve become literate.. And they develop political ambitions.

And Paine is the perfect spokesman of this group of people who meet in taverns and coffeehouses and public squares to discuss self-improvement and the improvement of society. And that’s why—it’s Promethean, I suppose, is the word I’m looking for. It’s the desire to share the fire, not just with the gods but with the whole of humanity, so everyone can warm themselves by the flame and see by it, too.” (“Hitchens: How Paine’s ‘Rights’ Changed the World,” NPR, October 23, 2007. From the special series, “Books That Changed the World.”)

- ♦ “In Greek Mythology, Prometheus was a Titan who loved humans too much. He gave them the gift of fire, and at the banquet with the gods, he would save them the best pieces of meat. That kind of generosity upset Zeus, who condemned him to be chained to a mountain and have his liver eaten by an eagle. Every night the liver would grow again, ready to be devoured the next day. This torment...is the punishment for wanting to outsmart the gods. Giving men fire, Prometheus provided the first important tool, the very first step towards technology, science, and the dominance of humans over nature... It didn’t end well.” (BBC, “The curious case of the man with a hole in his stomach,” 17 May 2022.)

*** anglicization: Cutter, RaffAHHH, Keeevee, Hartoom...

♦ The BBC, and English people in general, tend to retain the anglicization of foreign names. A BBC news reader might pronounce Cape Verde as “Cape Vurd.” To paraphrase Winston Churchill, “Do we really want NPR pronouncing Paris Paree?”

♦ “There is still much resistance to the use of the pinyin name Beijing for the current Chinese capital. Not only are very few outsiders able to pronounce the word accurately; its use also flies in the face of the more general use in English of ‘English’ names or pronunciations for distant cities or countries. Roma is called Rome, Deutschland is called Germany, Suomi is called Finland, and Zhongguo is called China. Many who accept this logic would like Peking returned to common currency, but doubt that it will ever happen.” (Footnote 47. From The Man Who Loved China by Simon Winchester.)

♦ “Ixopo The name of a village. Its Zulu pronunciation is difficult, and would be considered affected [italics mine] in English speech. It is pronounced in English, ‘Ickopo,’ with the ‘o’ as in ‘hole.’ (From the “List of Words” at the end of the 1987 edition of Cry, the Beloved Country by Alan Paton.)

♦ Wolf Blitzer of CNN was probably responsible for popularizing the pronunciation of “Qatar” as “CUT-er” during his coverage of the Gulf War. It would be the rare American who heard this pronunciation and could then point out “Qatar” on a map of the Arabian Peninsula. In fact, some people now text “Qatar” as “Cutter.”

♦ Tyler Adams, the USMNT captain, graciously apologized to an Iranian journalist for pronouncing Iran as EYE-RAN at the FIFA World Cup in Qatar, and it is to his great credit. (“USMNT captain Tyler Adams apologizes for mispronunciation of Iran; addresses issue of discrimination in the US” by Ben Morse and Wayne Sterling, CNN, November 28, 2022. Tonya Mosley of NPR’s Fresh Air pronounces it as eye-RAN and eye-RAIN-i-an.)

♦ “From Iceland, to Italy, to the Philippines, to Afghanistan, to CHEE-laay, to Indonesia...” (NPR’s Steve Inskeep. Five out of six ain’t bad. Inskeep has pronounced Pakistan as “Pakistan” and “Pockistan” in the same story.)

♦ Recently, NPR had a segment on a man condemned to death in Saudi Arabia. Unfortunately, his name was incomprehensible to almost all native American English speakers due to Leila Fadel's inability or unwillingness to pronounce the first sound of the man's last name with an Anglicized hard "g," properly stressed. What is gained by this? What if someone wanted to get more information about the man on the internet?

♦ Reporting the Israel-Hamas war, NPR pundits seem to be going out of their way to see who can pronounce Rafah in what they think is a more Arabic manner. Arabic has four "h's." Non-native speakers of Arabic can only approximate them. Like Spanish, there are many Arabic dialects. Similarly, there is no reason to pronounce Khartoum as Hartoom, as Eyder Peralta is fond of doing. It is no wonder the average American is ignorant in geography. Cutter, RaffAHHH, Keevee, Hartoom...

*** anglicization: Sikh (sick) and Sikhs (six)...

♦ "Canada announced that six Indian diplomats were persons of interest in the assassination of a leading Sikh (pronounced "sick") separatist." (Heard on NPR. Also heard in the same story: "He wants to create a homeland for Sikhs (pronounced "six").")

♦ "Last month a group of Americans who identifies ethnic Sikhs (pronounced "six") [sic] have [sic] been walking across the Central Valley of California..." (NPR Weekend Edition November 2, 2024. "It's a scary time to be Sikh (pronounced "sick")." "Sikhs (pronounced "six") for Justice want an independent Sikh (pronounced "sick") homeland.")

♦ Watch and listen to some old Pathe News newsreels about India and Pakistan. Note how "Sikh" is pronounced.

In view of the critical notices Pacino's Scottish/cockney-with-a-dash-of-the-Bronx accent was to receive, it was an auspicious remark." (Al Pacino: A Life On The Wire by Andrew Yule, about the 1985 film Revolution, which was savaged by most critics.)

♦ "Bob was the best cold reader in the business, you could throw a Budapest phone book at him and he'd read it out with unwavering authority and enunciation that was proper without being stuffy." (Scott Simon's wonderful tribute to Bob Edwards. From "Scott Simon remembers Bob Edwards, the voice of NPR for 25 years, NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, February 17, 2024.)

♦ More NPR. Scott Detrow introduced a woman, sounded like Jennifer Vermasco. Searching on Google, I wondered if the person might be Jennifer Schmidt. Then I checked the beginning of the transcript, and the name was recorded—incorrectly—as Jennifer Francisco. Search on Google led to more confusion. Finally, I checked further down the transcript, and found that the byline name was Jennifer Vanasco!

*** authenticity, identity...

♦ "Something I've always wondered is when I'm going to develop the affected-Black-intellectual voice,' Harris said that summer, still stuck in London. He was reflecting on some of his favorite writers and artists of an older generation, and the way that their talk was often as effortfully stylized as their work. He'd been thinking about Andre Leon Talley, the fashion writer and editor whose high diction and baroque syntax became hallmarks of his style—and seemed, moreover, like a way of asserting his belonging in a largely white milieu... / Talk of that voice—I knew what Harris meant without having to ask—got me thinking, perhaps slightly defensively, of my own. / 'You have it a little bit,' he said, confirming a fear I'd spoken aloud." ### *** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "First, NPR needs to get the little things right. If it can't, what does that say about the accuracy of the bigger issues?... / Second, errors of grammar and usage tend to break the listener's concentration. If a listener stops to wonder if he or she really heard an error or a syntactical lapse, then whatever else the reporter or announcer was saying is lost because the listener's train of thought has been derailed." ("Listeners' Language Concerns" by Jeffrey A. Dvorkin, NPR Public Editor, March 29, 2005.)

♦ "How much do these 'pundits' get paid for spouting all these clichés and stating the obvious?" / "I don't need the pundits, build up, half time twaddle or the inarticulate trip over their words, the Aitches and 'he wot done it, like' phrasing—they don't add value, they detract." / "We only need a few pundits, preferably that can speak good English with proper grammar." / "Oh yeah and don't forget the Alex Scott sob story sympathisers..." (Commenters about the BBC commentators at the Qatar World Cup.)

♦ March 2, 2024, a black day for pronunciation! Listen to "The Palast Orchester performs 1920s German Jazz music once banned by the Nazis," NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, March 2, 2024. The opera Mahagonny is NOT pronounced the same as the tree and its wood.)

♦ "'Wheel of Fortune' player denied win after mispronouncing word: 'Pat Sajak was cold-blooded'" by Samantha Ibrahim, Jan. 5, 2024. To solve the puzzle, the contestant had to read "Congenial company and clever conversation." She pronounced "congenial" as "CON jun uhl." Pat Sajak muttered something about "a coined word," and another contestant read the word correctly. A rare case where pronunciation cost a person money. It should cost some their jobs...

♦ The Hindu scriptures say you cannot convert to Hinduism.

♦ "Confucianism has no priesthood or rites of conversion, and is not generally considered a religion, but new members of China's middle class regard an interest in philosophy and history as a mark of cultivation and cultural nationalism." ("Confucius Comes Home" by Evan Osnos, The New Yorker, Jan. 13, 2014.)

♦ "In pagan religions—in the Roman world or anywhere else in the world—there really wasn't such a thing as conversion. When we think of conversion, we think of somebody turning from one set of religious practices and beliefs to another. There were certainly people in the Roman world who adopted new religions. But since everybody was a polytheist, except for the Jews, adopting a new religion never meant giving up the old religion. It meant simply adding on a new god or goddess to be worshipped. And so pagans never converted to another pagan religion, they simply added on a religion. The only thing like conversion could be found in Judaism where if you decided to become Jewish you would have to convert and give up your pagan religion but there's very little evangelism among Jews. Jews didn't go out trying to win converts because most Jews simply didn't care whether you were Jewish or not, they simply wanted to be Jewish." (Bart Ehrman, from "Author Traces Christianity's Path From 'Forbidden Religion' To A 'Triumph,'" NPR, Fresh Air, March 20, 2018.)

♦ "[Conversion] was one of the things that made Christianity quite distinct in the ancient world. It had to do with the nature of the Christian religion. Christians from the very beginning believed that it was Jesus' death and resurrection that could make a person right with God. And that if a person was not right with God, they would pay an eternal penalty, there would literally be hell to pay if somebody didn't convert. And so Christians believed that their religion was the only right religion and that people had to practice their religion or else they would go to hell. Moreover, Christians maintained that they were to follow Jesus' teaching of love—love your neighbor as yourself. Well, if your neighbor is going to go to hell by not believing what you believe, and you love this person, then you need to make them see the error of their ways and you convert them to your faith. And so that's what the Christians were doing from the very beginning, trying to convert others so they could join the church and avoid the terrors of hell." (Bart Ehrman, from "Author Traces Christianity's Path From 'Forbidden Religion' To A 'Triumph,'" NPR, Fresh Air, March 20, 2018.)

♦ "In the nineteenth century, a huge army of missionaries spread round the globe and scattered through industrial slums, Indonesian jungles, African villages, Pacific islands, and South American mountains. Some 360 Christian organizations, from celibate Roman Catholic orders like the Jesuits to mass membership Protestant bodies such as the Society for the Propagation of the Christian Gospel, maintained an estimated 12,000 Christian missionaries in the field during these years. The Jesuits were among the most well-established missionary forces: Francis Xavier, one of the order's founders, arrived in Goa, in western India, as early as 1542. Since Xavier's successes in India and China, Jesuits had been converting souls on every continent. Three and a half centuries later, there was barely a corner of the globe in which the black-robed figure of the Jesuit missionary, with his biretta and large wooden cross, was not a familiar sight. So it was hardly surprising that such a figure had arrived in the new boomtown [of Klondike City]." (Gold Diggers: Striking It Rich in the Klondike by Charlotte Gray.)

♦ "Use ESL to help plant churches among unreached Muslim peoples. Work with Muslims in one of 38 countries in Asia, the Arab world, and Africa as part of a church planting team." (Frontiers, a Christian organization that focuses exclusively on proselytizing to Muslims.)

♦ "Instead of talking about the Jesus of the New Testament, [Christian] missionaries using the Camel Method point Muslims to the Koran, where in the third chapter, or sura, an infant named Isa—Arabic for Jesus—is born. [Christian] missionaries have found that by starting with the Koran's Jesus story, they can make inroads with Muslims who reject the Bible out of hand." ("A Christian Overture to Muslims Has Its Critics," The New York Times, 2010.)

♦ "[From] its origins, football has been linked with religion for purposes of both praise and opprobrium. The rise of college football coincided with the popularization of 'muscular Christianity,' a theology that associated the faith with vigor and might rather than suffering and submission. In Elmer Gantry, Sinclair Lewis's satirical novel about a charlatan evangelist, the title character started his public life as a football star for a religious college. / By the middle of the 20th century, evangelical groups like the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and Athletes in Action aimed specifically at proselytizing in the sports field. / 'Churches have turned to athletes in the last 30, 40 years,' said Robert J. Higgins, author of God in the Stadium: Sports & Religion in America." ("Cultural Conflicts, Playing Out on the Football Field," by Samuel G. Freedman, The New York Times, Jan. 27, 2012. The term "muscular Christianity" garners six hits in the first 253 pages of the 2024 "Independent Learning Lessons Review John Smyth QC," popularly known as the Makin report.)

♦ "To be sure, many observers, beginning with de Tocqueville, have remarked that Americans are singularly concerned with their individual well-being. Since the 1830s, when de Tocqueville visited America, the United States has been swept by a series of popular movements concerned with improving health variously through diet, exercise, moral purity, positive thinking, and religious faith. Today, were a revived de Tocqueville to observe Americans jogging in parks, shopping in health food stores, talking psychobabble, and reading endless guides to keeping fit, eating right, and staying healthy, he would probably conclude that, if anything, the obsession is now more pronounced." the evangelical ~

♦ "He was criticized—and praised—earlier this year after he had issued a fatwa saying it was permissible for women to have reconstructive hymen surgery before marriage to conceal that they were no longer virgins. He said that since it was impossible to tell whether a man was a virgin, women should have the same option." (Egypt's grand mufti, Sheik Ali Gomaa, "A Compass That Can Clash With Modern Life," by Michael Slackman, The New York Times, June 12, 2007.)

♦ "Virginity is a very real issue for Egyptian women, as illustrated in the popular 2009 film 'The Wedding.' It tells the story of Abdullah and Gamila, a young couple who signed their marriage contracts years ago but couldn't afford the marriage ceremony that would, by tradition, allow the union to be consummated. But the couple has been having sex all along... ('Artificial Virginity Device Sparks Backlash In Egypt,' by Peter Kenyon, NPR, All Things Considered, Oct. 13, 2009.)

♦ "If they think they can get a pure-hearted girl this way they are really mistaken. To me, the way people are taking virginity as a commodity these days is such a sad thing." ### *** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "If we are victorious in one more battle with the Romans, we shall be utterly ruined." (Attributed to Pyrrhus of Epirus, following the Battle of Asculum. Wilfred Funk, Litt.D., records it as, "One more such victory and we are lost.")

♦ "Such a tragedy. They will think this was their victory so this will become an American war. And the end will be the same... except for the numbers who will die before we get there." (Lt. Col. Nguyen Huu An, on the inability of the NLF to overrun Hal Moore's troops in the Ia Drang Valley in 1965, from the 2002 film We Were Soldiers.)

♦ A Hannibalic victory, referring to Hannibal's famous victory over the Romans at the Battle of Cannae during the Second Punic War, refers to his failure to follow up on it. Ultimately, he would be defeated. According to Wilfred Funk, Litt.D., "That great Carthaginian, Hannibal, is said to have called Pyrrhus first among generals."

*** analysis

♦ In the old days it could be expected that everyone who read or heard this allusion could be expected to understand it. No longer! Note the brackets in the following quotation, from an article on the BBC website about a Parliament vote of confidence: "I very much fear if Johnson does win tonight it will be a Pyrrhic victory [one that comes at great cost]." This is indicative of the sad state of modern education and society.

♦ [Note: The linguist John McWhorter talks in the quote below about the word "minority." But his insight seems to apply to words like "queer" and "gay" and "straight" and many other words in English] "Minority in American English has taken on, via implications, a meaning quite far from what the word originally referred to... Word meanings drift as always, this time from referring to a proportion to referring to dark-complected people. 'He's a minority'—imagine how queerly illogical that sentence would sound to someone transported to our times from 1600. 'A minority of what?'" (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 2, "It's the Implication That Matters: Words on the Move.")

♦ "A word is a thing on the move. This means wrapping our heads around something that cannot feel right at first, but that simple logic requires us to accept. To wit, any claim that people in general are using a word 'erroneously' is illogical... If a significant proportion of the people speaking a language are using a word in a way that dictionaries tend not to mention, it means that the word is moving—as we would expect, since words always do." (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 2, "It's the Implication That Matters: Words on the Move," Subsection "But That Isn't What It's Supposed to Mean!")

♦ The LGBTQ+ tactic is obvious: Just put "queer" in front of anything you can think of, and publish. You will find a publisher, and you will feel supported in your agenda.

time queue
in the ~, earlier events are before later ones (linguistics)

*** analysis

♦ How in the world is a pool or billiards cue related to a girl's pigtails, or a line of people? According to Wilfred Funk, Litt.D., our word queue comes from the Latin word cauda, meaning "tail." And so we have a cue stick for pool and billiards based on its straight shape, the girl's pigtail, and "the queue that waits for the second show at the movies." It's a nice way to think of the word. (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. From Chapter 18, "Your Favorite Sports and Their Word Histories.")

From the mouth of the river a sand-bank stretched out to sea. Thoughtlessly I walked along it, when suddenly I felt a great weight tugging at my feet. I tried to retreat but to my horror found I could not stir from the spot. I was slowly sinking. 'Quicksands!' I yelled in an unnatural voice..." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. ## Quisling (Quisling of China, etc.)

quisling army

a ~ at the tail of the Japanese (Aung San Suu Kyi's father)

Petaín, the Laval, the Quisling

he became the ~ of China (Wang Jingwei)

♦ Wang Jingwei escaped his treason trial by dying in Japan in 1944, where he was receiving treatment for an old wound from an assassination attempt. Following Japan's defeat, his tomb in Nanjing was destroyed and his body was burnt.

♦ Benedict Arnold; Wang Jingwei; Vidkun Quisling; Pierre Laval; Philippe Petaín; William Joyce (aka Lord Haw-Haw)... (Notorious traitors.)

♦ "You will know that a quisling is a traitor who gives himself over as a tool to the enemy, and that the word is based on the name of Major Vidkun Quisling who deserted his people and assumed the leadership of the Norwegian Nazi party upon the German invasion in 1940. Whether this term quisling will live is to be seen, for a word not only has to win its way into a dictionary, but once there it must earn its board and keep. Lazy words that fall into disuse are dropped." (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. From Chapter 13, "War Words and Their Histories.")

♦ The term / allusion "quisling," like "Benedict Arnold," has lived on, at least among reasonably educated citizens. But for how long? Consider the case of the term "Pyrrhic victory." In an article on the BBC website about a Parliament vote of confidence, the BBC felt it necessary to add a definition to its readers: "I very much fear if Johnson does win tonight it will be a Pyrrhic victory [one that comes at great cost]."

♦ This adjective comes from Don Quixote de la Mancha by Cervantes, a surprisingly modern book for having been written so long ago. Quixote means different things to different people. The phrase “tilting at windmills,” especially, can be viewed sympathetically or negatively. Shakespeare and Cervantes died in the same year: 1616.

(From the beloved film of To Kill a Mockingbird starring Gregory Peck. In a very dramatic scene, Mr. Finch shoots the mad dog and Jem learns something about his father that he hadn’t known.)

♦ “And then a cousin died. This was the first death in our joint family, and it left me desolate. I was about seven years old... / This is the story she told on her return, and it is permanently etched in my head: It was the afternoon of a very hot day, and most of the household in Delhi were napping. She was sitting alone on the long front veranda when she noticed a stray dog with a strange gait meandering down the front drive. The next thing she remembers is hearing screaming and sounds of a struggle. She ran through the opening in the henna hedge into the south courtyard. There, in front of the bedroom of my middle uncle, Shibbudada, was the dog, growling, frothing at the mouth, and clutching Brijesh’s hand. She tried to shake the hand free, but the dog's teeth were firmly embedded around Brijesh's thumb, so it took a while. In the meantime, she yelled for help, but not before getting a lot of blood on herself as well. Family and servants came running, and the dog was ultimately captured for examination in case it had rabies. / Lalit and my father left for Kanpur. It was in Kanpur that we got the call from Delhi saying that the dog did have rabies, that Brijesh was getting his rabies injections, and that Lalit should get them, too. / Lalit got her shot at the hospital on the way to school. I would go in with her. She would have to lie down and expose her stomach. The biggest, thickest needle would be poked slowly right into her soft belly. The medicine went in slowly, too. Her face expressed her agony, but she did not make a sound. I wanted to cry for her but did not dare. It seemed to take forever. I would think of Brijesh, too. He was so much younger. The same would be happening to him. / [L]ater, we learned that Brijesh had rabies and that he was in a hospital. The injections had not worked for him. It happened sometimes, they said. We got daily reports from Delhi. It was an agonizing death, they said, complete with hydrophobia and all the havoc that rabies wreaks. He cried for water but could not swallow a single drop." ♦ "On a day in October in 1831, a nine-year-old boy ran frightened away from the edge of a crowd that blocked the door of the blacksmith shop of a village in the mountains of eastern France. Above the awed excited whispers of the people at the door this boy had heard the crackling "s-s-s-z" of a white hot iron on human flesh, and this terrifying sizzling had been followed by a groan of pain. The victim was the farmer Nicole. He had just been mangled by a mad wolf that charged howling, jaws dripping poison foam, through the streets of the village. The boy who ran away was Louis Pasteur, son of a tanner of Arbois and great-grandson of a serf of the Count of Udressier... (Microbe Hunters by Paul De Kruif. ♦ “Black Tunisians, who make up around 10-15% of the population, suffer discrimination because of the colour of their skin.” (BBC.)

♦ “When it comes to identifying and ending systemic racism we can be agents of change...” (NPR’s CEO John Lansing.)

♦ “We need you to talk. We need you to stop sitting around the dinner table acting like everything’s great because it’s not. Just because you aren’t experiencing it doesn’t mean it’s not happening. Your role in this is to help change the system.” (Jillian Hanesworth’s advice to white people about systemic racism. From “Buffalo’s poet laureate calls for change” by Raquel Maria Dillon, NPR, Race, May 17, 2022.)

♦ “John James Audubon’s racism is the albatross rotting around the necks of those who would hold him in reverence. It is past smelling foul and beginning to reek.” (“What Do We Do About John James Audubon?” by J. Drew Lanham. Which begs the question, “What Do We Do About J. Drew Lanham?” The answer: give him a Macarthur Genius Award. See the Wikipedia article “J. Drew Lanham.” “This article may be in need of reorganization to comply with Wikipedia’s layout guidelines.”)

♦ “The husband of a Black woman who died hours after childbirth in 2016 sued Cedars-Sinai Medical Center on Wednesday, saying she bled to death because of a culture of racism at the renowned Los Angeles hospital.” (“Lawsuit says a Black patient bled to death because of a hospital’s culture of racism,” NPR, Health, by the AP, May 5, 2022.)

♦ A relatively recent trope about racism in the US is the idea of “weathering.” That’s the idea that racism “weathers” people, affecting their health, etc., in ways that are not equitable. Black Americans “live sicker and die quicker.” Arline Geronimus of the University of Michigan coined the term for chronic stress.)

♦ “She doesn’t have the complexion for protection.” (Black criticism of media coverage of victims of crime.)

♦ “E news posted offset [sic] instead of Takeoff when they first reported his death and instead of apologizing they just deleted it. Black people do not all lookalike [sic]! Incredibly tacky AF [as fuck]! If you hired educated black people that never would’ve happened.” (Offset and Takeoff are the names of two members of the hip-hop group Migos. Offset’s real name is Kiari Kendrell Cephus. Takeoff’s real name is Kirshnik Khari Ball or Kirsnick Khari Ball. “Takeoff” was shot and killed at 2:40 a.m. after a dice game outside of Billiards & Bowling in Houston, Texas. Because of the stigma of “snitching,” few witnesses have come forward with information.)

♦ “Bad from the Mirror, but they corrected their error over two hours before Kwasi Kwarteng tweeted about it.” (The Mirror published a picture of Kwasi Kwarteng that was a different Black man. The Mirror put out the following statement: “This morning a picture in a story about Kwasi Kwarteng was wrongly captioned on the Mirror website. This was a terrible error and we apologise to Mr. Kwarteng and all our readers. The Mirror has a long history of working against racism and we will redouble our efforts on this." Did the Mirror commit an act of racism or was it just a mistake, quickly corrected? You be the judge.)

♦ "Recently, Google processed images of a trio of happy young African Americans and its automatic photo-tagging service labeled them as gorillas. The company apologized profusely, but in systems like Google's, errors are inevitable. It was most likely faulty machine learning (and probably not a racist running loose in the Googleplex) that led the computer to confuse Homo sapiens with our close cousin, the gorilla. The software itself had flipped through billions of images of primates and had made its own distinctions. It focused on everything from shades of color to the distance between eyes and the shape of the ear. Apparently, though, it wasn't thoroughly tested before being released." (Weapons of Math Destruction by the remarkable Cathy O'Neil.)

♦ "Racism is not just a netball problem." (Donnell Wallam / Australia.)

♦ "Must I Mentor a White Law Student When I Requested a Black Mentee?" (The Ethicist by Kwame Anthony Appiah, The New York Times Magazine, Dec. 4, 2022.)

♦ "Ex-Virginia Tech soccer player who refused BLM Kneel gets $100K in settlement." (Kiersten Hening / USA.)

♦ "If we don't know how to end racism, we can at least call it structural." ("The Moral Case Against Euphemism" by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2023. "Equity" language.)

♦ John McWhorter's article, titled "The Dictionary Definition of Racism Has to Change" (The Atlantic, June 22, 2020), is interesting. In it he says we need a "3.0 definition of racism based on 'sociopolitics'" and "a usage...that one often acquires in college classes in the social sciences." This raises at least three points. (1) There is absolutely nothing in a dictionary that prevents McWhorter or anyone else from expressing ideas about racism; his use of the combining form "socio" with "politics" to coin "sociopolitics" proves it. My computer spellchecker marks "sociopolitics" as an error. "Sociopolitics" is not recognized by Merriam-Webster or the online Oxford Learner's Dictionaries. If you type "sociopolitics" into search at Wikipedia, you are directed to a long article at "Political sociology." (2) If such a 3.0 definition is included at Merriam-Webster as a new sense, it should be identified as "aggrieved group," just as lexicographers tag certain words or senses as "biology," "archaic," "colloquial," "substandard," "slang," etc. (3) No person interested in words has failed to note that all the dictionary publishers seem to be in competition to add contemporary, trendy, and often controversial updated senses to new words; the attendant publicity is simply good business.

♦ "A lot of black people today are wringing their hands and pointing accusing fingers at white doctors from the public health service." (Janie Taylor, "Origins of the Infamous Tuskegee Syphilis Study," NPR, August 7, 1972. It's a seven-part series available in its entirety at NPR. Type "Janie Taylor" in search at NPR, and all seven of her reports should be available. Should access change, try searching at NPR for "The digital preservation of this audio has been made possible in part by the National Endowment for the Humanities" and then search through the at present 112 results for the seven episodes: "Was The Tuskegee Syphilis Study Unethical?" / "Why Weren't Tuskegee Syphilis Study Patients Given Penicillin As Treatment?" / "Were Participants Informed Of The Purpose Of Tuskegee Study?" / "Tuskegee Syphilis Study Patient Believed He Was Being Treated" / "Nurse Who Worked 39 Years For the Tuskegee Syphilis Study" / "Former Director For Tuskegee Syphilis Study Believes Work Was 'Completely Ethical'" / "Origins Of The Infamous Tuskegee Syphilis Study." ♦ "Some people don't want to watch movies about enslaved people..." (The film critic Eric Deggans, about the 2022 film Emancipation featuring Will Smith.)

♦ The spin bowler Azeem Rafiq has charged the Yorkshire Cricket Club with "institutional racism." In 2021, Rafiq himself had to apologize for using anti-Semitic language in Facebook messages and a meme relating to African people.

♦ "The Home Secretary has blamed political correctness for the failure of authorities to tackle child sexual exploitation." (BBC, Six O'clock News, 02/04/2023. The Home Secretary was Suella Braverman, referencing fears of accusations of racism about investigating and prosecuting British Pakistani males.)

♦ "I'm actually convinced that it was political correctness gone mad. You know, there was absolutely no reason for it. I was rocking the multicultural boat. But, how would you get changes without talking about it?" (Ann Cryer, Labour MP for Keighley, 1997-2010. From The Betrayed Girls: The Rochdale Scandal—2017 Documentary.)

♦ "[The rapid national audit of grooming gangs] will properly examine ethnicity data and the demographics of the gangs involved, and their victims, and will look at the cultural and societal drivers for this type of offending, including amongst different ethnic groups." (Home Secretary Yvette Cooper, a member of the Labour Party. Heard on BBC Six O'Clock News, 16/01/2025.)

♦ See the Wikipedia article "Oxford child sex abuse ring."

♦ "Attempts to shame or scare men into voting Democrat are not being successful, and particularly the claim there must be something behind this, either sexism or racism, even if they're not admitting it." (Richard Reeves about the 2024 U.S. presidential election. He wrote the book Of Boys and Men.)

*** analysis

♦ "Prejudiced was once, after all, the word of choice for racist bias. Racist only took over starting in about 1970, with a major uptick after 1980... Sexist replaced chauvinist around the same time racist did prejudiced, and for the same reason—potent terms need refreshment, especially when heavily used. This is why, more and more, white supremacy is easing out racism. It was only a matter of time, and dictionaries should be on notice." ("The Definition of Racism Has to Change" by John McWhorter, The Atlantic, June 22, 2020.)

♦ If you search NPR for "historical racism," you will get 10 hits. Search "racism," and you get 16,673 hits (and counting).

♦ "Racism, at the individual level, can be seen as a predictive model whirling away in billions of human minds around the world. It is built from faulty, incomplete, or generalized data. Whether it comes from experience or hearsay, the data indicates that certain types of people have behaved badly. That generates a binary prediction that all people of that race will behave that same way." (Weapons Of Math Destruction by the remarkable Cathy O'Neil.)

♦ "To a racism hammer, everything is a racist nail."

♦ "Many political words are similarly abused. The word Fascism has no meaning except in so far as it signifies 'something not desirable'." ("Politics And The English Language" by George Orwell, Horizon, April 1946.)

♦ "We must also ensure everyone from all underrepresented communities gets a seat at our table and we are going to make that happen." (Meher Tatna, about the 2021 Golden Globes.)

♦ "It became a racist fight. Larry Holmes is not a racist, I'm not a racist, and it was billed out to be. I believe that that was part of the promotion to make hate... Now, that got created by many things, I'm sure, and Don King would be part of putting that together." (Gerry Cooney about his fight with Larry Holmes at Caesars Palace on June 11, 1982, in Las Vegas, Nevada. It went 13 rounds before Cooney's trainer threw in the towel. Racial tensions were so high that Cooney ran accompanied by an FBI agent, and snipers were posted on the rooftops around Caesars Palace. The Wikipedia article for the fight says, "[P]romoter Don King and manager Dennis Rappaport began on the most massive and racially toned campaigns in boxing history..." Of course, Cooney was "The Great White Hope." A very old story. Holmes and Cooney ended up becoming good friends, not unusual for boxers, who are quickly forgotten by a fickle bloodthirsty public and, at the end—often in the throes of one kind of dementia or another—have only one another's help and friendship to depend on.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "Who Can be 'Racist'?" by Michelle I. Gao, Crimson Opinion Writer, The Harvard Crimson, August 10, 2018. Perhaps a better title would have been, "Who Isn't 'Racist'?"

♦ "People like AJ, Pogba, Sterling are role models for egotists. Call them on it and you are classified... Take our money and then insult us with racism. It's creating a hellish environment." (A commenter on a BBC HYS about the second Oleksandr Usyk-Anthony Joshua fight, and Joshua's bizarre post-fight antics and rant. The following comment merely said, "I'm just glad Joshua lost. He is an unlikeable character.")

♦ “I suppose he’ll now blame the judges for being racist, that seems to be the way of things these days.” (A commenter about the bizarre post-fight antics of Anthony Joshua, after he lost a second time to Oleksandr Usyk. Another poster commented, “He’ll probably pull out the race card next.”)

♦ “If you think I’m a racist, go f*** yourself.” (The boxer Anthony Joshua.)

♦ “My mother was not part of a ‘racist mob.’ (The son of Kathy Osterman, reacting to a comment by Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot.)

♦ “[The] depiction of city police officers as racist and homophobic was incorrect.” (Anne E. Schwartz, the journalist who broke the story of Jeffrey Dahmer’s crimes, about Netflix’s 10-part biopic Dahmer—Monster: The Jeffrey Dahmer Story. The series slams police as racist and homophobic.)

♦ “This is not a racist city. This is an open city. If you behave well, you are welcomed and even helped.” (Newsstand owner Domenico Giordano of Civitanova Marche, Italy. From “Role of race contested in killing of Nigerian man in Italy” by Colleen Barry, AP, reprinted in The Washington Post, August 6, 2022.)

♦ “I’m not a racist. I don’t have anything in common with the views of white supremacists.” (Nicholas Wade, author of A Troublesome Inheritance, to Maryland Democrat Kweisi Mfume at a Congressional hearing in 2023.)

♦ “I know, I know this is going to offend the liberal elites, every time I say it it offends them. But let me say it one more time. America is not a racist country!” (South Carolina Senator Tim Scott at the 2024 Republican National Convention.)

♦ “Don’t worry. A Christian politician cannot be racist. So we should never hesitate to heavily challenge our opponents on these issues.” (Victor Orban addresses CPAC 2022, in Texas.)

♦ “Well, uh, first thing of all ya know, when someone starts out a statement by saying, ‘Look, I’m no bigot,’ they’re probably going to end up saying something bigoted.” (Arslan Iftikhar, civil-rights attorney, about NPR’s firing of journalist Juan Williams. “Shop Talk”: Was NPR Right To Oust Juan Williams? NPR, Tell Me More, October 22, 2010.)

♦ “The term ‘racist’ has become utterly meaningless—a big yawn and a shoulder shrug—nobody cares but the NPC class...” (A online commenter about an unusual case where a drunk white military hero allegedly called a hotel guard the N-word. It later came out that the guard was a white man. To which one commenter replied, “Big deal. Changes nothing. Voicing a slur is still an awful thing to do.” To which another commenter replied, “Always, always have race hoax on your bingo card.” And yet another commenter replied, “Oops! Al Sharpton just had to turn his private jet around.” The “NPC” in the original post probably stands for “nonplayer character.” It refers to video games.)

♦ “How soon before breathing is racist? Seems that today everything is racist in some people’s minds. The term has completely lost its meaning which is a shame as true racism is truly evil and statements like ‘swimming is racist’ dilute the impact of the word ‘racism.’” (A commenter about the article “Fetterman’s Wife Calls Swimming in America ‘Very Racist’” by Ari Blaff, National Review, October 27, 2022. At Yahoo. Another commenter on the same article posted: “Swimming is racist. Bridges are racist. Wanting secure borders is racist. Wanting murderers to stay in prison is racist...”)

♦ “She began to do the Lakota shawl dance...” (SuAnne Big Crow, responding to prejudiced chants from an opposing non-Indian team at the beginning of a high-school basketball game. Her performance won over the prejudiced fans, who ended up applauding her.)

*** analysis

♦ “Prejudiced was once, after all, the word of choice for racist bias. Racist only took over starting in about 1970, with a major uptick after 1980... / Sexist replaced chauvinist around the same time racist did prejudiced, and for the same reason—potent terms need refreshment, especially when heavily used. This is why, more and more, white supremacy is easing out racism. It was only a matter of time, and dictionaries should be on notice.” (“The Definition of Racism Has to Change” by John McWhorter, The Atlantic, June 22, 2020.)

♦ “Just to clarify a bit and to state it plainly. White folks, conservatives included, are afraid of being called racist by African-Americans.” (Jack Tchen, who created NYU’s A/P/A Studies program and co-founded the Museum of Chinese America.)

♦ “Identity politics are at the root of the problem. No one wants to be called sexist or anti-LGBQ+ or some other ‘ist.’ But what is really unbearable is to be called racist. If a Harvard student—or teacher—thinks there is an chance of being called racist, he or she will clam up... [I]n recent years, the term ‘racist’ has become a cudgel and a smear, especially amplified on the internet.” (Evan Thomas ’73. From Letters, Harvard Magazine, March-April, 2024.)

♦ “Even white supremacists don’t want to be called racist.” (“‘Not Racist’ Is Not Enough: Putting In The Work To Be Anti-Racist” by Eric Deggans, NPR, Life Kit, August 25, 2020.)

♦ “To a racism hammer, everything is a racist nail.”

♦ In the 1930s, 40s and 50s, a person would be smeared as a “communist” or “homosexual.”

♦ Bias; bigot; prejudice; animus... (Less emotional words than racist or hate. In almost every case, no matter what a person’s prejudices are, an American will help out another person in trouble, or extend a simple courtesy.)

♦ BIGOT, n. One who is obstinately and zealously attached to an opinion that you do not entertain.” (The Devil’s Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

*** rainbow hunting...

♦ Rainbows occur when it is raining while the sun is shining. To see a rainbow, turn your back to the sun. Look at your shadow on the ground. From the shadow of your head (the antisolar point), measure 42 degrees upwards, or about four fist widths with your arm held straight out in front of you, as if you were holding a stick in your fist vertically. There you may see the top of the rainbow. The sun must be less than 42 degrees above the horizon, so that you will never see a rainbow at noon on a summer day in the US, when the sun is high in the sky. At 51 degrees, you may see a second rainbow above the primary rainbow. Like so many things, this is tedious to explain but easy to do.

*** analysis

♦ Many falls around the world are named Rainbow Falls. This is often because, when the light is right, you can see a rainbow, or even a moonbow on full-moon nights, in the mist at the bottom of the falls.

♦ There are many Rainbow Creeks, and some of them no doubt are named so because they contain rainbow trout. There are many Rainbow Falls. And there are many Rainbow Lakes, perhaps because one's view of the firmament is relatively unobstructed when you are in a boat in the middle of a lake, as opposed to being in a car in the middle of the city. In other words, you're likely to notice a rainbow at the lake.

"In Praise of the ~" by Jesse Singal, New York Magazine

♦ "Yeah, you have to have an iPhone to do it... Like, if you're in a public space and you have your AirDrop turned on, any other rando with an iPhone can like, send you a photo, or a gift, or whatever. It's kind of awesome but kind of scary (upspeak). Uhh, it's really scary to me, I have mine turned off all the time... The kids are using AirDrop to just like drop memes and stuff on anyone around them, but there's also like this dark underbelly to the AirDrop where like a lot of folks on the New York subway will get AirDrops, pictures of... bodies." (Tony Romm, Washington Post tech reporter, referring to dirty pictures and sexting. From "Weekly Wrap: Government Takes On Big Tech, What 'Intersectionality' Means, RIP iTunes," NPR, It's Been A Minute, June 7, 2019.)

♦ "The subgenre of TikToks called TraumaTok, where we sort of normalize posting extremely traumatic events... No need for rollercoasters now when we can cry, laugh and angry [sic] in 15 seconds. While it's good to express yourself, be vulnerable at times, it's starting to desensitize ourselves to emotions that should be kept private or within a small group of friends, and not shared with randoms." (The TikToker Edvasian, 880K.)

♦ "Neck tattoo guy catches him outside and beats him savagely leaving Jules naked, bloody, traumatized..." (Bob Mondello's review of the 2024 film Femme on NPR, All Things Considered.)

♦ "But why did Joe (Biden) go? He never said. Actually, he made it clear that he thought his magnificent record in office 'merited a second term.' If that was true, why not put it to the test, allowing those randos we call 'the voters' to decide?" ("Accidental rise of a Kamala Harris is a symptom of an unserious age" by Martin Gurri, Opinion, The New York Post, Aug. 5, 2024. At the 2024 DNC, Kamala Harris said "In many ways, Donald Trump is an unserious man.")

♦ "Having my mind open to the world all the time. I'm just fascinated by stuff that happens around me. I like people, which is becoming increasingly unfashionable. I love being around new people..." (The writer Richard Osman.)

♦ OLD: stranger... / NEW: rando...

*** analysis

♦ "Rando" has a Merriam-Webster entry—first known use 2003. The Wiktionary entry is excellent. Wiktionary is wonderful. No entry in Wikipedia, yet.

♦ "'Rando' has an edge of exclusion to it." (POV.)

♦ "Some alternative types use "human" in a strange and unusual way, as in, "I find that humans are very interesting." (POV.)

♦ A "rando" or "a random" as a person and "randomness" very much relate to Gen Z, Millennials, and the technology they grew up on. On TikTok, everyone is a rando...

♦ "In the old days, people might think of and address others as brothers, fellow human beings, fellow Americans, citizens, comrades, native sons, friends, children of God, etc. Nowadays, Millennials and Gen-Zers live in a universe of "randos."

♦ "[A]ll the men ever born are also my brothers..." (The American poet Walt Whitman, 1819-1892.)

♦ "Want To Widen Your Worldview? A Random Roomie Helps" with Melissa Block and Jesse Singal, NPR, All Things Considered, August 28, 2014. It is an excellent interview. The best place to widen your worldview is to join any branch of the military. Unfortunately, most college students would not consider such a thing.

♦ "Building a career the old-fashioned way—slow and steady—is not glamorous, but being launched into the stratosphere seemingly at random, with no personal or professional infrastructure in place to support sudden fame, tends to leave musicians stricken, if not traumatized." (Virality. From "Offline: Lizzy McAlpine on the power and pitfalls of viral fame" by Amanda Petrusich, The New Yorker, June 24, 2024.)

♦ "A random Southern chick..." (Hawk Tuah Girl. See "Why Is Everybody Talking About the Hawk Tuah Girl?" by Tomas Mier, Rolling Stone, June 25, 2024.)

♦ "I swear, the afterlife is so random." (Stupid dialogue from the 2024 film Beetlejuice Beetlejuice.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "Maybe talk to someone in person, or seek professional help, instead of looking for validation from random strangers. Everyone loves attention to a degree. But the people you dump your extreme feelings onto, especially randoms who have never asked, they reserve the right to say, [The Michael Jordan meme "don't do drugs"] 'Stop it. Get some help.'" (The TikTok Edvasian, 880K.)

♦ "One common sign of psychosis is disorganization. To us, on the outside, it can look like someone talking fast, getting lost in tangents, or even just stringing seemingly random words together." (Breaks from reality.)

♦ "This review is so wrong and misleading and meant to personally attack someone, it's made from a profile made just for this with one review under a random name. In this day in [sic] age anyone can go online and say just about anything they want, this allegation in not true and truly ridiculous..." (A response to an unfavorable review.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "As though by mutual agreement both sides ceased firing at nine o'clock. Neither side had yielded an inch, but both had lost heavily. The 'Stonewall' Brigade alone lost a third of its roster together with five officers, and the Iron Brigade suffered 750 casualties out of 2,000 who had answered the roll that morning. Burying parties found the dead lying in parallel lines where they had fallen without breaking ranks." (The Second Battle of Manassas, August 29-30, 1862. From Colonel John Pelham: Lee's Boy Artillerist by William Woods Hassler. The U.S. Civil War.)

♦ There was an all-pervasive stench of putrefaction and millions of fat blowflies filled the air. Even Junger, normally so cool, was shaken by what he saw. 'The ploughed-up battlefield was a scene of horror. The dead lay there among the living defenders. When we dug bunkers we saw how the dead lay in layers one above the other. One company after another had been mown down as they made a stand shoulder to shoulder under the drum fire; then their corpses had been buried under the tons of earth hurled up by the projectiles and new men had taken the place of the fallen.'" ♦ “No one was there. Strange. I had seen the firing. We would have noticed anyone leaving the thicket. / Beck found two spider holes close to the forward edge of the thicket, partially covered by debris. Each opening was smaller than a basketball rim, barely large enough for a man to squeeze out. A cool, earthy smell emanated from them. / ‘Are the VC at the bottom of these holes, or do these go back to some room or tunnel?’ I asked Bratcher as Wooley came up. / I sent men out to the front as security and looked back at the spider holes. Spencer stuck a long bamboo pole down one. It hit bottom after about five feet and then, when Spencer pushed, it went down another four feet. We shined a flashlight down the holes. Both holes curved out of sight to our front. / Yelling ‘Fire in the hole,’ we threw in grenades and ducked behind trees. The explosions were muffled and only a small amount of dust came out and blew away. We walked carefully back to the holes and looked down. I said, ‘Damn. We either send someone down or we leave and keep on toward our TAOR.’ / Wooley told me to send someone down. ♦ “The same formula again and again. I want to post pictures of myself in bathing suits. When I get criticized I’ll say I want to do it for others and for body positivity. When I get criticized for that, I will show sadness that the world doesn’t support mental health and I’m a victim, and finally I’ll get praised for being so brave for living my own truth.” (Bob Loblaw. A BBC HYS comment about “SI Swim model Natalie Mariduena wants to ‘be an example’ of ‘body normalcy’” by Stephanie Nolasco, August 20, 2022.)

♦ “We both in different worlds needed redemption over the same issue. You know, when I look in the mirror I gotta look at the man who let his wife get murdered. You know, at some point, I needed redemption. I needed to be rebuilt into something I could live with. You know, and I see Jeremy in the same light, you know in a different frame, a different story line. You know, he’s the, he’s the, one who put all this into play, you know, he’s the one who’s holding the knife. And so he needs his own redemption. You know what? I thank God for that. I thank God for that because without that I don’t think we ever get to the bottom of it. And very few people know the truth. You know, now there’s a bigger story to tell. Where it goes from here, we’ll see (guitar music).” (Leo Schofield about Jeremy Scott from the podcast Bone Valley, “Chapter 9 | Coming Clean.” Does it sound like a Hollywood pitch written by a film-school graduate? You be the judge.)

♦ “He did reference the movies and it’s not hard to understand why. I mean, Star Wars was always a fairytale for children, and fairytales

But everyone will remember the handless Belgian baby. It was loudly spoken of in buses and other public places, had been seen in a hospital, was now in the next parish, etc., and it was paraded, not as an isolated instance of an atrocity, but as a typical instance of a common practice. / In Parliament there was the usual evasion, which suggested the story was true, although the only evidence given was 'seen by witnesses.' / But the most harrowing and artistically dressed version of the handless child story appeared in the Sunday Chronicle on May 2, 1915. / 'Some days ago a charitable great lady was visiting a building in Paris where have been housed for several months a number of Belgian refugees. During her visit she noticed a child, a girl of ten, who, though the room was hot rather than otherwise, kept her hands in a pitiful little worn muff. Suddenly the child said to the mother: 'Mamma, please blow my nose for me.' / 'Shocking,' said the charitable lady, half-laughing, half-severe, 'A big girl like you, who can't use her own handkerchief.' / The child said nothing, and the mother spoke in a dull, matter-of-fact tone. 'She has not any hands now, ma'am,' she said. The grand dame looked, shuddered, understood. 'Can it be,' she said, 'that the Germans--?' The mother burst into tears. That was her answer.' / Signor Nitti, who was Italian Prime Minister during the war, states in his memoirs: / 'To bring the truth of the present European crisis home to the world it is necessary to destroy again and again the vicious legends created by war propaganda. During the war France, in common with other Allies, including our own Government in Italy, circulated the most absurd inventions to arouse the fighting spirit of our people. The cruelties attributed to the Germans were such as to curdle our blood. We heard the story of poor little Belgian children whose hands were cut off by the Huns... Mr. Lloyd George and myself, when at the head of the Italian Government, carried on extensive investigations as to the truth of these horrible accusations, some of which, at least, were told specifically as to names and places. ♦ "The question is why. Why did these men fail to fire? As I examined this question and studied the process of killing in combat from the standpoints of a historian, a psychologist, and a soldier, I began to realize that there was one major factor that was missing from the common understanding of killing in combat, a factor that answers this question and more. The missing factor is the simple and demonstrable fact that there is within most men an intense resistance to killing their fellow man. A resistance so strong that, in many circumstances, soldiers on the battlefield will die before they can overcome it." (On Killing by Lt. Col. Dave Grossman.)

♦ Linguist John McWhorter's analysis of "really" is interesting, as always. Really is "fundamentally emotional" and "personal." He says, "Really conveys a hand-on-the-heart testament." "Really is about your gut feelings in a way that very is much less so." In his FACE typology of MPMs (modal pragmatic markers), he considers it to represent "Factuality: For Real." (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 1, "The Faces of English: Words Get Personal," subsection "Factuality: For Real.")

♦ The linguist John McWhorter does not specifically mention "really" being doubled up. But he has a wonderful discussion of exclamation points that perhaps applies. "It is often remarked that people are now using multiple exclamation points in texting, social media, and casual writing... The reason for the proliferation? The potency of the single exclamation point has faded over time..." (Words on the Move by John McWhorter, Chapter 3, "When Words Stop Being Words: Where Does Grammar Come From?" subsection "The Signal Fades." It appears that words, letters, punctuation marks, and emojis can all proliferate. "Wayyyyy too blessed for that," etc.)

♦ The rearguard action of a group of British soldiers at the village of Khig, following the British disaster in the Battle of Maiwand (27 July 1880) during the Second Anglo-Afghan War, was one of the most courageous last stands in military history. It helped allow the bulk of the British troops to safely withdraw to Kandahar. The only survivor of the last stand was Bobbie, a terrier attached to the Berkshires, who made it all the way back to England. Bobbie visited Queen Victoria, who awarded him with a medal. No doubt Bobbie got treats, too.

*** The Taiping Rebellion...

♦ 1850-1864. The Taiping Rebellion. Led by Hong Xiuquan, who believed he was Jesus' younger brother. A rebellion against the Qing ("Ching") dynasty and its Manchu elite. Ultimately 20-30 million died, most from plague and famine. Sixteen of 18 provinces were affected and at least 600 cities destroyed. It was during this same time period that the Susquehanna bore the U.S. flag up the Yangtze to Wuhu (1854), and the side-wheeler Saginaw steamed into Tung Ting Lake, 700 miles from that river's mouth (1861). If the Saginaw had been a Chinese warship on the Mississippi River, it would have reached the vicinity of Memphis, Tennessee. And it was also during this time that the British and French forced the Second Opium War upon China (1856-1860). / Amazingly, when the rebels tried to take Shanghai in 1860, they were repulsed by a Qing army led and supported by European officers who included Charles George Gordon (Chinese Gordan, Pasha Gordan, Gordan of Khartoum). Frederick Townsend Ward also assisted, a US sailor and soldier of fortune. / The Third Battle of Nanking (Nanjing) in 1864, which ended the Taiping Rebellion, was perhaps the bloodiest battle up to that point in human history. In three days, over 100,000 died. The rebels fought to their deaths or committed suicide rather than be captured. / The Qing Dynasty would last into the 20th century, but essentially the rebellion finished them off. One result of the rebellion was that it made the dynasty realize that it had to Westernize and modernize its military. This is but a part of China's long history that shapes Chinese attitudes to the West to this very day.

♦ “Activists Reclaim Use Of The ‘S’ Word” by NPR Staff, NPR, Tell Me More, Jun 9, 2011. (“Slut.”)

♦ “Queer theorists and ‘crip’ theorists (those critiquing ‘disabilities’) are at the cutting edge that I believe we need to also be mindful of.” (Jack Tchen, a professor and historian at New York University. “Crip” of course is short for cripple, or crippled.)

♦ “I’m really following in the footsteps of many people in the fat activist tradition, who want to reclaim the word ‘fat,’ much like people in queer liberation spaces have reclaimed the word ‘queer’ as not a negative, not a pejorative, not a shameful term, but as a description.” (Kate Manne. From “In ‘Unshrinking,’ a writer discusses coming out as fat and pushing back against bias” by Mara Gordon, NPR, March 13, 2024. Kate Manne’s book is Unshrinking: How To Face Fatphobia. She talks about “coming out” as fat.)

♦ “I call disabled viewing platforms the “cripple pen.” (A disabled commenter, reclaiming the word “cripple.” From “After the N-word, the P-word” by Rajni Bhatia, BBC, 11 June 2007, which is about reclaiming the word “Paki” in the same way some Blacks have “reclaimed” the N-word. Who has the right to say what when.)

♦ “Respectability politics never actually liberated the oppressed. Whether you’re a creative or an audience member, power can be had in reclaiming the stereotypes that challenge your very existence.” (From “Queer villains, erotic noir, 90s pulp. ‘Basic Instinct’ and the backlash, rewound,” NPR, Pop Culture happy Hour, Nov. 13, 2022.)

♦ “Wherever the truth lies, [the actor Sharon] Stone chose to take back control of an allegedly violating experience and reclaim it, lean into it...” (The interrogation scene in the film Basic Instinct. From “Queer villains, erotic noir, 90s pulp. ‘Basic Instinct’ and the backlash, rewound,” NPR, Pop Culture happy Hour, Nov. 13, 2022. According to the podcast, she also “owned” it, joked about it, “embraced the role,” and was “game to talk about it.” According to Paul Verhoeven, “She knew exactly what we were doing.”)

♦ “I landed on the flower because of its reclamation—queer reclamation of it. It is a flower that has been used originally as a derogatory term.” (The tattoo artist Cedre Csillagi. From “To raise funds for trans communities, an artist has pledged to do 1,000 pansy tattoos” by Halisia Hubbard, NPR, Culture, Nov. 25, 2022.)

♦ “WHAT IS VETERANS DAY? Veterans Day is an American holiday to honor the patriotism, love of country, and sacrifice of veterans. THIS WON’T STAND! We reject this holiday and refuse to celebrate it. The American war machine should not be honored for the horrors unleashed on others. WHAT NOW? Instead, we will celebrate Martyrs Day in honor of those martyred by the Israel-US war machine.” (A flyer put out by the Columbia University Apartheid Divest group announcing a protest at Columbia University. The Israel-Hamas war.)

*** more conventional usage...

♦ “RECLAIM THE BEACH — Paros citizen moment for free beaches.” (A large protest banner. The movement seeks to reclaim beaches

(Emani Stanton, 17. At People, "Black Female Duo Wins Harvard Debate Competition" by Rachel DeSantis, July 21, 2021.)

♦ "You see a fierceness that's coming from the girls that are coming up now, that's because we understand we ain't got nuttin to lose. I already done lost that job, I already done lost that job." (Angelica Ross, about Trans representation in media / entertainment. According to her Wikipedia article, "Her breakthrough role came in 2018, as Candy Ferocity in Rya Murphy's FX drama series Pose.")

♦ "We don't have enough representation of people that look like me as non-binary... that are outside the white androgyny." (Self-described as fat, Black, and non-binary. Dating...)

♦ "I think it had a lot to do with me being a Black woman, period. And having seen how historically, you know, if our stories, you know, have been presented to the world, oftentimes they're misrepresented or they're not represented in their fullness or there's just like a sliver of us being presented. And so, I just felt like this is huge responsibility to not only show, like her—I would say ginormous levels of strength and resilience—but also to provide an audience like a window into the vulnerability." (Katori Hall speaking about the great American-born Tina Turner, birth name Anna Mae Bullock, a Swiss citizen since 2013.)

♦ "We've been silenced and misrepresented. And so, any time you get an opportunity to tell your truth, you are pushing back against so many lies and falsehoods... And being an artist and in demanding that the world just looks at you, you oddly are being an activist." (Katori Hall.)

♦ "We demanded representation, and not just in gender and race, but in perspective, values and experience." (Rashad Robinson, president of Color of Change, about Ketanji Brown's confirmation to the Supreme Court.)

♦ "It is really important to remember that we have very limited representation and presence isn't the same thing as representation representation centered around the Black American person the Black American community and it does not take into account constantly the white gaze." (Bethany C. Morrow, author of So Many Beginnings: A Little Women Remix, speaking with Lulu Garcia-Navarro on NPR.)

♦ "A lot of the festivals that we have, now, overlook hip-hop, they do. I mean, if you look at Gov Ball, there's not enough hip-hop, uh, representation, if you look at Coachella, there's not enough hip-hop representation. Firefly, any of those festivals, there's not enough hip-hop representation." (Music journalist Jayson Buford. From "Why hip-hop festival Rolling Loud seems to be a hotbed for arrests." NPR, All Things Considered, updated November 2, 2021. By Audie Cornish, Mano Sundaresan, Mallory Yu.)

♦ "It's an issue of representation. It's an issue of whether or not you can envision yourself doing something else other than playing this sport of football or maybe basketball." (Professor Kevin Blackstone of the University of Maryland. From "Why playing football appeals to families in spite of danger," NPR, All Things Considered, February 8, 2024. "An investigation by University of Maryland journalism students looks at why Black families are drawn to football, despite knowing the risks of injuries." At some universities, Blacks make up just three percent of the student population but fifty to sixty percent of the football team.)

♦ "Growing up, I saw no representations of vulvas like mine... I've had thousands of messages from people sharing their appreciation for the celebration of vulva diversity." ### *** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ She remains thrilled by the unusually wide demographic appeal of the series (Last Tango in Halifax). Might this be due to its subject matter being love and families, which most people have some experience of? 'Yes. Even if the characters didn't look like them. I sometimes think we make too much of 'representation'. You don't necessarily need to see yourself on a screen for it to be interesting. For me, ideally 'diversity' would mean white audiences watching black shows and the other way round." (The actor Nina Sosanya. From "Nina Sosanya: 'I was always a minority—even in my own family' by Mark Lawson, The Guardian, 11 July 2016.)

♦ "For a while, I have felt like a pawn in this hollow representation game. Because what the hell does Disney's 'Coco' do for Mexican children? Bob Iger gets richer. That's the climax." ♦ "History doesn't repeat itself, but it rhymes." ("Why Hamas victim Hersh Goldberg-Polin's name—like Anne Frank's—will live forever" by Gil Hoffman and Jacki Alexander, The New York Post, Sep 6, 2024.)

*** analysis

♦ "History doesn't repeat itself, but it often rhymes." This is often attributed to Mark Twain. According to the Quote Investigator website, "There is no substantive evidence that Twain who died in 1910 made this remark." Attributing quotes to people is always problematic. And, in many cases, quotes attributed to people are simply untrue, the stuff of posters and T-shirts and the internet.

*** The Lagoon Amusement Park...

♦ LAGOON AMUSEMENT PARK. One of the largest and most popular resorts in Northern Kentucky at the beginning to the 20th century was the Lagoon Amusement Park in Ludlow. An 85-acre lake was created for the park by damming Pleasant Run Creek, which empties into the Ohio river nearby; and streetcar lines were extended to the Lagoon entrance at what is today Laurel St. between Park Ave. and Lake St. / The park's grand opening was May 18, 1895... / Rides available for the first season included a large toboggan sled, a pony track, a miniature gold mine, and a scenic railroad. Of the early rides, one of the most popular was the roller coaster... Over the next few decades, many rides were added...[including a chute-the-chutes, an Alpine slide, a circular swing, a $10,000 merry-go-round, and a 100-foot Ferris wheel built on one of the lake's many islands.] In 1909 the management constructed an elevated automobile ride in the park, featuring full-sized touring cars. The ride carried patrons along a two-mile elevated track, which snaked its way through the woods on the north end of the park." (The Encyclopedia of Northern Kentucky, edited by Paul A. Tenkotte, James C. Claypool. The University Press of Kentucky. The entry for the Lagoon Amusement Park was written by David E. Schroeder.)

♦ "But in between these two classes there is a huge dump of worn-out metaphors which have lost all evocative power and are merely used because they save people the trouble of inventing phrases for themselves... Many of these are used without knowledge of their meaning (what is a 'rift', for instance?), and incompatible metaphors are frequently mixed, a sure sign that the writer is not interested in what he is saying." ("Politics And The English Language" by George Orwell, Horizon, April 1946. His points are well taken. But when I see the word "rift," I think of and am in wonder of the Rift Valley, in East Africa. Far in the future, that part of Africa will become isolated from the rest of Africa by a great inland sea. It will no longer be "part of the main.")

♦ "In 'Political Theory of the Digital Age: Where Artificial Intelligence Might Take Us,' Mathias Risse, a Rawlsian political philosopher, issues an urgent call for a new category to be added to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'epistemic rights,' meaning the right to know and to be known, or—as may well be more sought after—the right to remain unknown. 'Democracy and technology, specifically AI, are by no means natural allies,' Risse writes, arguing that preserving democracy will require making hard choices about technology. So far, those choices are being made by corporations, especially American corporations, and especially in the United States, where people now live in what can be best understood as an artificial state." ("The Artificial State: A different kind of machine politics" by Jill Lepore, The New Yorker, November 11, 2024. It's a brilliant article.)

*** Robert Frost's poem "The Road Not Taken"...

♦ "Two roads diverged in a yellow wood, / And sorry I could not travel both / And be one traveler..." ("The Road Not Taken" by Robert Frost.)

♦ "Finally, sometimes metaphoric mappings are so conventional that they force themselves on readers or listeners even without any overt specification of mappings. In such a case, the author can afford the apparent luxury of underspecification, exactly because it is only apparent. We cannot really call these minimalist—they don't give the reader any special sense of discovery or active participation in the reading. An example is Robert Frost's 'The Road not taken' which says, 'Two roads diverged in a yellow wood / and sorry I could not travel both... I took the one less traveled by / and that has made all the difference.' Despite Frost's own insistence that this poem was about actual choices of paths during country walks (poking fun at a friend who treated these choices too seriously), generations of readers have consistently and automatically understood it as being about LIFE AS A JOURNEY (within which LIFE CHOICES ARE CROSSROADS). This makes us realize that mappings which are not explicitly labeled may or may not be genuinely left open to the reader." (Figurative Language by Barbara Dancygier and Eve Sweetser.)

♦ In The Last Place on Earth, Roland Huntford tells the sad story of Hjalmar Johansen. After surviving the "Robinson Crusoe winter" with Nansen in the Arctic, he took to drink, separated from his wife and children, resigned from the army, went bankrupt, and became destitute. Nansen, wishing to help his old companion who had saved his life, convinced Amundsen to take Johansen on his expedition, which Amundsen did, against his better judgement. In Antarctica, Johansen rubbed Amundsen the wrong way. The result was that Johansen was left out of the party that went to the South Pole. Back home, Johansen resumed drinking and ended up committing suicide. He was a man who withstood and overcame harshest nature, but not society.

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "After weeks of incessant but minor cannonading, the grand attack was made on the 13th of September, 1782... / By evening the ship cannonade began to slacken; rockets, as signals of distress, were seen soaring into the air, while boats were rowed about the disabled men-of-war, in which our artillery must have made the most dreadful havoc, for, during the short intervals of cessation, a strong, indistinct clamour, the mingled sound of groans, and cries, and shrieks, came floating upward to the ears of the garrison... (British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant.)

♦ "A Scottish officer, named Lieutenant Macculloch, is said at this time to have suggested to [Wolfe] the daring but brilliant idea of attempting that which the French conceived to be impracticable—the scaling of the Heights of Abraham—and thus gaining the lofty ground which overlooked the city at a part where its defences were most weak... / Slinging their muskets, and climbing, some with their swords in their teeth, the Frasers scrambled up the steep and woody precipice... / Following the Highlanders, Wolfe was soon on the plateau of the precipice, and with ardour he formed his troops in contiguous columns of regiments as they came toiling up; and ere the rising sun began to gild the spires and ramparts of Quebec and the far-stretching bosom of the mighty St. Lawrence, he had his whole force marching in battle array along the famous Heights of Abraham, with colours flying and all their bayonets glittering..." (British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant. Chapter XXII. "Quebec, 1759." Wolfe would suffer his famous death in battle. According to Grant, before the Marquis of Montcalm died of his wound, he said, "Thank Heaven, I shall not live to see the capitulation of Quebec! I have got my death fighting against the bravest soldiers in the world, at the head of the greatest cowards that ever carried muskets!" Finally, Grant writes, "It is recorded that Lieutenant Macculloch, the officer according to whose suggestion [Wolfe] first conceived the idea of turning the French flank by scaling the Heights of Abraham, died a pauper in Marylebone Workhouse, in the year 1793.")

*** great love stories...

♦ "Grit of Women" by Jack London is one of the greatest love stories ever written.

♦ "One dollar and eighty-seven cents. That was all. And sixty cents of it was in pennies. Pennies saved one and two at a time by bulldozing the grocer and the vegetable man and the butcher until one's cheeks burned with the silent imputation of parsimony that such close dealing implied." (The beginning of "The Gift of the Magi" by O. Henry. One of the greatest love stories ever written. To this day people put pennies on the grave of its author in Riverside Cemetery, Asheville, North Carolina, USA.)

♦ "If the story of Daphnis and Chloe still touches people's hearts, it is not simply because their love was born in the shade of vines and under a blue sky. That story is repeated everywhere—in a stuffy basement smelling of fried cod, in a concentration-camp bunker, to the click of an accountant's abacus, in the dust-laden air of a cotton mill. / And now the story was being played out again to the accompaniment of the howl of dive-bombers—in a building where people nourished their filthy sweat-encrusted bodies on rotten potatoes and water from an ancient boiler, where instead of honey and dream-filled silence there was only noise, stench and rubble." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Katya and Seryozha. Stalingrad.)

♦ “In the South Shetlands a single ship would expect to take as many as 9,000 seals in three weeks, and there is a record of two ships and sixty men demolishing 45,000 in one season. And since every pelt was worth a guinea—in some markets like Canton in China very much more—there was every inducement for the slaughter to go on to the bitter end. An end, however, there had to be; and by the eighteen-thirties fur seals in the southern ocean were virtually extinct, and sea-lions and sea-elephants were dying out as well. / The main attack was now diverted to the whales...” (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ A group of Kentucky teenagers, a Native American, and a group of black Hebrew Israelites all met by accident on the National Mall in Washington, DC. No, this is not by any means the beginning of a joke. Read "Viral standoff between a tribal elder and a high schooler is more complicated than it first seemed" by Michael E. Miller, The Washington Post, Jan 22, 2019. Or the Wikipedia article "2019 Lincoln Memorial confrontation."

♦ "The case—in which a twenty-eight-year-old female banker was brutalized and raped and five youths of color were convicted, and then, decades later, exonerated—became a Rorschach blot, with some people (largely white) seeing a city 'systematically ruined, violated, raped by its underclass' and others (largely of color) seeing a city 'in which the powerless had been systematically ruined, violated, raped by the powerful.'" ("The Falconer: What we got wrong about Joan Didion" by Nathan Heller, The New Yorker, February 1, 2021.)

♦ "How people viewed the verdict in that trial exposed really deep divides on how different races experienced the criminal justice and the legal system." (ESPN's Michele Steele on the death of O.J. Simpson.)

♦ "For now, observers are left to speculate about what fundamentally drives Kavanaugh... / If Kavanaugh is 'dangerous,' as his critics contend, it's not because he is part of some brazen right-wing conspiracy. It's because he has managed to ascend to the height of American power while remaining, perhaps even to himself, a living Rorschach test." ("Whose side is Kavanaugh on?" by McKay Coppins, The Atlantic, June 2021.)

♦ "Quiet quitting is like this year's version of the debate about the color of that viral dress. Do you remember? [Sound bite: "White and gold versus blue and black."]. Now it's like, 'Quiet quitting, what is it? Is it bad, is it real, are millions of people clocking out early and dancing into the streets to find their fuller selves?' At its heart, we're in a debate about how emotionally invested people should be in their work, with quiet quitting as a Rorschach test, just like that viral dress. Do you see it as blue or gold. Do you think quiet quitting is sad... Or do you see it [as] a rebellion against burnout? Some academics argue quiet quitting is... To corporate execs it's just..." ("The concept of quiet quitting has captured the post-pandemic zeitgeist" by Alina Selyukh, NPR, Morning Edition, Sept 15, 2022. "Quiet quitting" has also been applied to the friendships Gen Zers and millennials have, a good example of piggybacking.)

♦ "How you interpret and prioritize the cascade of reasons for Trump's reelection is a kind of Rorschach test. It will require a long reckoning before anyone can conclude which of the leading factors—economic anxiety, cultural politics, racism, misogyny, Biden's decline, Harris's late start—was determinative..." *** "The brilliant victory won by Nelson in the Bay of Aboukir..."

♦ "The brilliant victory won by Nelson in the Bay of Aboukir imprisoned the army of France amid the arid sands of Egypt; but, nevertheless, Napoleon led it in 1799 across the desert to Palestine. He took Jaffa by storm, and laid siege to Acre, where, as related, he was repulsed by the British and Turks under Sir Sidney Smith. Subsequent to this, alarming news from France caused him to hurry home and leave his troops in Egypt, when they began to lose heart, about the time our great expedition to that country was projected, with the purpose of driving them out of it." (British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant. A French soldier had found the stone, but the British took it from the French by the Capitulation of Alexandria in 1801 as a spoil of victory, which is why it is in the British Museum, and not the Louvre, never mind the Grand Egyptian Museum.)

He was knocked down by a blow from the magistrate (Magdalene Zeh), and inducted into various places in that young village where the sow delighted to wallow. After receiving many indignities in the neighborhood of Weisersdorf, some of which he was conscious of receiving, and some not, he was placed upon a rail and rode skimmington through most of the settlements.' After a trip of some six or seven miles on the rail, Sheriff Adams was finally deposited on a log bridge on the road to Albany. Magdalene 'then seized a stake which she carelessly laid over his person, until two of his ribs made four, and his organs of vision diminished by one half.' After a final, and unmentionable, indignity, 'she called off her compatriots, leaving him for dead.'" (The Mohawk by Codman Hislop. His wonderful book is about the river in New York State.)

*** analysis

♦ In the old days, a person might have been run out of town on a rail, after having been tarred and feathered. Nowadays, being "run out of town on a rail" has been replaced by doxing, swatting, pile ons, and cancellation. Ain't we civilized!

See the Wikipedia article "Operation Harling." Wikipedians are wonderful.

♦ "The immediate derivation of sabotage is obvious. It comes from the French word sabot which means the wooden shoe, or shoes, the peasants buy who can't afford the leather ones. The French turned sabot into the verb saboter which means 'to do work badly' or 'to destroy a plant or machinery willfully so as to win a strike.' The word sabotage is relatively new in English and in other languages. It seems to have gained currency about the time of World War I when this technique was strongly advocated by trade-unions as a means of coping with management, and especially by that radical labor organization, The International Workers of the World... Sabot is ultimately from the Arabic word sabbat which means 'sandal.'" (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D.)

*** Hinduism...

♦ "The fear of starvation is always hanging over the Indian peasant... / To an American it seems strange that under such distress these villagers never used their cows for food when it was inevitable that the animals would perish from lack of fodder. Only once on our trip did we hear—and then only in scandalized whispers—of a village that was actually 'eating its cows.' For a Hindu farmer to do away with a starving cow, even to put that beloved beast out of its misery, is as unthinkable as for him to slaughter it to feed his starving and equally beloved children. / Such prohibitions as these—too fantastic to seem credible to a Westerner—appear to separate the Indian from the American farmer by a distance greater than the curve of the world that divides them. And yet the problem of getting food out of the land has similarities which reach around the globe..." (Halfway to Freedom by Margaret Bourke-White.)

*** various groups...

♦ “This is a day that Minnesota says, ‘Bring your authentic self. You’ll be seen, heard, valued and loved in this state, and we want you to be whoever you are.’ We see you, we hear you, and we will make sure you are in a safe place to be who you are.” (Gov. Tim Walz. Kamala Harris selected him to be her vice-presidential running mate.)

♦ “Thank you for creating a safer space for current and future athletes to unequivocally be themselves.” (Nastia Liukin, thanking Simon Biles on Instagram.)

♦ “We don’t need booing to know we’ve not played well.” (England’s Marcus Rashford.)

♦ “Harrison announced that his would be a safe space and also a brave space where everybody could say things that were hard to say, without being judged.” (“Guns Down: With the number of shooting deaths rising, Shaina Harrison is teaching kids to turn anger into advocacy,” by Ian Frazier, The New Yorker, April 5, 2021. Harrison was addressing ninth graders.)

♦ “Recently there’s been more visibility in the trans community. But being the person that’s creating that visibility or that representation can also be really painful. The truth is that every day I experience violence of some kind that makes me feel like it’s not safe to be in my body, and not safe to be visible.” (Lor Sabourin, a non-binary rock climber.)

♦ “Been getting a lot of ‘why are they placing her body like that in those ads?’ Well, I direct the ads. I place myself like that. And it’s because of the thousands of unwelcome comments I receive about my body. You’ve lost the privilege of looking at it until I feel safe again.” (A tweet from Milana Vayntrub, AT&T commercial actress.)

♦ “She has a very deep passion for diversity and inclusion and actively seeks to make any environment she’s in more safe and inclusive for everyone.” (NPR’s Sommer Hill.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ “I lied. That was my coping and my way to feel safe and seen and heard.” (Elisabeth Finch, Grey’s Anatomy writer.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ A local man did not want us to park in front of his shop, and I felt like my buddy had been too harsh in dismissing him. And so when we left the restaurant and I saw a box lying in the road behind our vehicle, I shot my palm against my friend’s chest and said, “Just a minute. Let me check something out...” (IYKYK.)

*** analysis

♦ “The assertions are strident, and the vocabulary is esoteric (‘harm,’ ‘insurrection’) as if it were translated from a foreign language. In a sense, it is. The language is legalese, and it is designed to build a foundation upon which a company can be held liable under civil-rights law in an American court. This activist tactic has been widely misunderstood... The word ‘safe’ is carefully chosen. It gestures at certain specific kinds of negligence for which a university could pay dearly in a court of law.” (“The Inequality of ‘Equity,’” by Christopher Caldwell, National Review, May 17, 2021.)

♦ “First of all, I want you two kids to know, this is a safe space, okay, feel free to express yourselves, don’t be afraid, I sense...” (The 2024 film Beetlejuice Beetlejuice. NOT a safe space.)

♦ A salient is a projecting part of a fortification. Or it is a bulge on the front line. If the salient is cut off, it becomes a pocket. A salient can form in a number of different ways, and can be defended or used offensively in a number of ways. In World War II, the Kursk Battle and the Battle of the Bulge each developed around a salient. At Kursk the Germans attacked a Russian salient; at the Battle of the Bulge, they used their salient to spearhead their attack. Both ended up in crushing defeats for the Germans.

This was the final bit of evidence that he needed... and it was at this point that everything came together...and all of the sudden it made perfect sense and he knew that he had the answer." (The great Ignaz Semmelweis autopsied his good friend Jacob Kolletschka and connected lack of hand hygiene with puerperal (childbed) fever. While today he is known as "the saviour of mothers," at the time his ideas were dismissed by the medical establishment. As John Snow's ideas had been dismissed, and Thomas Aitchison Latta's. From BBC, Sounds, Great Lives, "Ignaz Semmelweis.")

♦ "In 1856 he made his last discovery. In the University Hospital he'd had marvelous results with no women dying. Then suddenly deaths flared up again. Here were women having babies on bed linen infected with purulent discharges from patients just dead. The hospital authorities were being efficient saving expenses by skimping the laundry bills... / Semmelweis clamored. Nothing was done about it and you can't blame the authorities who after all didn't have to risk their lives having babies. Semmelweis roared. Then he took those dirty, dangerous sheets. He walked with them into the office of the high government official, von Tandler, and held those sheets right under the elegant nose of this dignitary. The refined man shuddered and the mothers stopped dying." (Men Against Death by Paul De Kruif. From the chapter, "Semmelweis: Saver Of Mothers.")

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "At the time, the Allied command appeared to have been very little disturbed by this barbarism. It was said the Germans were simply pursuing the 'scorched-earth' policy they had developed in Russia, where everything which might conceivably have been of any use to the Russian Army was destroyed, and the civilian population—rendered homeless and destitute—was deliberately converted into a living obstacle in the path of the advancing Russian troops. Presumably because our brass hats considered the scorched-earth policy a legitimate military tactic, the atrocities inflicted on the Italian peasants in the Sangro mountains rated no more than a few casual and non-condemnatory references even in the official military histories written after the war..." (And No Birds Sang by the great Canadian writer Farley Mowat. Italy. World War II.)

♦ "Fiercely the red sun descending / Burned his way along the heavens / Set the sky on fire behind him / As war parties when retreating / Burn the prairies on their war trails." (Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.)

♦ "The same formula again and again. I want to post pictures of myself in bathing suits. When I get criticized I'll say I want to do it for others and for body positivity. When I get criticized for that, I will show sadness that the world doesn't support mental health and I'm a victim, and finally I'll get praised for being so brave for living my own truth." (Bob Loblaw. A BBC HYS comment about "SI Swim model Natalie Mariduena wants to 'be an example' of 'body normalcy'" by Stephanie Nolasco, August 20, 2022.)

♦ "Will Smith is executing a pretty standard and frankly effective return to the public. You know, he'd been keeping out of media, but with Emancipation's release, he appeared for a high-profile interview in a friendly venue, he talked over the scandal last week with Daily Show host Trevor Noah, who admitted that he's Smith's friend, and then he hit the red carpet and a few other friendly media outlets, and he emphasized how he hopes that audiences disregard the scandal for the sake of his co-workers. And that's kind of a common strategy for big-name celebrities in trouble, you disappear for a while, you talk over the controversy with a friendly interviewer, and then you return to public events and kind of act as if this situation is mostly behind you..." ("How celebrities work their way back into the spotlight after scandals," NPR, All Things Considered, December 5, 2022. With Eric Deggans.)

♦ "Instead, the Jan. 6 hearings were meticulously choreographed... Unlike typical congressional hearings, these would have a script. 'Every word was intentional,' one senior staff member recalled. 'Nothing was spontaneous.'" ("Inside the Jan. 6 Committee" by Robert Draper and Luke Broadwater, The New York Times Magazine, January 1, 2023.)

♦ "That pattern is initially denying there is a problem, sometimes making misleading or obfuscating statements, and making life difficult for those investigating the issue. Only when external findings eventually show wrongdoing or ineffectiveness by the Met, is there finally an admission of failings. This is usually accompanied by announcements of new actions which the Met claim address the problems and present as if they are fully implemented and effective. / Another part of the pattern is an acceptance of failings only in respect of individual officers, who are termed 'bad apples.' They are seen as distinct from the majority of officers, who do their jobs well and with integrity." (Baroness Casey Review.)

♦ "The dangerous straits through which the Waldeck-Rousseau ministry was obliged to pass were hit off in a cartoon appearing in the Humoristische Blätter of Berlin, entitled 'Between Scylla and Charybdis.' On one side of the narrow waterway a treacherous rock shows the yawning jaws of the Army. On the other side, equally hideous and threatening, gleam the sharpened teeth of the face typifying the Dreyfus Party. Waldeck-Rousseau, appreciating the choppiness of the sea and the dangerous rocks, calls to his gallant crew: 'Forward, dear friends, look neither to the right nor to the left, and we will win through at last.'" *** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Tanks had replaced the cavalry of former wars with a vastly more powerful and far-ranging weapon, and in many aspects their manoeuvres resembled naval warfare, with seas of sand instead of salt water. The fighting quality of the armoured column, like that of a cruiser squadron, rather than the position where they met the enemy, or the part of the horizon on which he appeared, was the decisive feature. Tank divisions or brigades, and still more smaller units, could form fronts in any direction so swiftly that the perils of being outflanked or taken in rear or cut off had a greatly lessened significance. On the other hand, all depended from moment to moment upon fuel and ammunition, and the supply of both was far more complicated for armoured forces than for the self-contained ships and squadrons at sea... / The personal interventions of the two Commanders-in-Chief were as dominant and decisive and the stakes on both sides were as high as in the olden times." ### *** analysis

♦ A STORY ABOUT PERCEPTION: An old man lived in a house. His hobby was woodworking. One day a new family moved into the house next to him. The family had a young boy, and the old man watched him run home from school one afternoon through his window: the boy acted like a child, ran like a child, laughed like a child. One morning the old man went into his garage and discovered that his hammer was missing. He looked out his window that afternoon and saw the boy arrive home from school, and now the boy acted like a thief, ran like a thief, laughed like a thief, and the old man felt bitter. A month or so later, the old man found his hammer in a place where he had absent-mindedly put it. That afternoon he looked out of his house and saw the young boy return home from school. And the boy acted like a child, ran like a child, laughed like a child.

the monastery appeared as the archetypal ~ (Bulgaria)

♦ "The name Kyirong means 'the village of happiness' and it really deserves the name. I shall never cease thinking of this place with yearning, and if I can choose where to pass the evening of my life, it will be Kyirong. There I would build myself a house of red cedarwood and have one of the rushing mountain streams running through my garden, in which every kind of fruit would grow..." (From Heinrich Harrer's Seven Years in Tibet, published in 1953. Though Harrer doesn't explicitly mention Shangri-la, for him it seemed to be Kyirong.)

♦ "The scene was unforgettably dramatic. In the background was the immense massif, scoured by three mighty glaciers... She had long pigtailed, and her hair was decorated with amulets made of yellowed amber; on her arms she wore bracelets of braided silver. I thought then I had never seen anything quite so beautiful. There was distant birdsong...and some of the yaks wore bells, which pealed slightly... Tiny puffs of cloud laced in the summer sunshine, their shadows briefly darkening the grassland. I wanted to stay here, my own Shangri-la among the hills, for always. / But we had to cross the Chola hills..." (The River at the Center of the World: A Journey Up the Yangtze, and Back in Chinese Time, by Simon Winchester, published in 1996. The last two chapters are set in western China.)

♦ "[T]he monastery appeared as the archetypal vision of Shangri-la: a rhapsody of warm and sensuous colors, topped by domes, roofs, and a medieval tower, clashing perfectly with the austere, sylvan tones of the landscape. The sunlight shone through dark and towering pine trees as Nadia [whom he later describes as an attractive, intelligent woman] led me up the hillside. Bands of mist, which made me think of high ideals, floated between the peaks. Everywhere I heard the sound of mountain torrents." (From Balkan Ghosts: A Journey Through History by the great travel writer, journalist and political analyst Robert D. Kaplan. He experienced his vision of Shangri-la at the Rila Monastery in Bulgaria.)

♦ "Buncombe County voters have picked Democrats in presidential elections since 2008, often against the red tide of the surrounding region. Buncombe County currently has an all-Democrat commission, and for some, Asheville represents something of a 'liberal Shangri-La,' as one political scientist put it." ("Why is Trump coming to Asheville?" by Sarah Honosky, Asheville Citizen Times, Wednesday, August 14, 2024. Asheville is actually more like a woke "La-La land," as Asheville shares with cities like San Francisco all the problems of drug addiction, homelessness, political progressivism, anarchism, and violence.)

♦ “If you pay attention to education trends, you know that a lot of talk these days is about grit. This idea that passion and persistence are really important traits in kids, rather than IQ or natural talent. And, the thinking goes, helping kids to be more gritty makes them more likely to succeed. Now, a new study says, we should care less about grit. To talk about this, we are joined by Anya Kamenetz...” (“MacArthur ‘Genius’ Angela Duckworth Responds To A New Critique Of Grit” by Anya Kamenetz, NPR, All Things Considered, May 25, 2016.)

♦ “The brain loves peppermint!” (A North Carolina teacher-trainer and devotee of “brain-based, evidence-based” educational research, encouraging teacher-trainees to hand out peppermint in class to promote learning.)

*** analysis

♦ “SHIBBOLETH: test word for the enemy / Shibboleth, as we know, is a test word or pet phrase of a party or a word or phrase distinguishing the adherents of a party or sect, as ‘lower tariff is the shibboleth of the Democratic party.’ The modern meaning of the word shibboleth (which is the Hebrew word for an ear of corn), comes to us from an old Biblical tale. The Gileadites were fighting the Ephraimites at the Jordan Fords. Some of the Ephraimites infiltrated the lines and posed as friends. But, the Gileadites under their general Jephthah were suspicious. A captain called one of the intruders into his tent and cross-questioned him: 'Sany now Shibboleth,' he commanded, and we are now quoting Judges XII, 6: 'And he said Sibboleth, for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Then they took and slew him.' In like fashion in our World War II it was general practice in areas where United States troops were in contact with the Japanese, to employ test words containing an 'l' sound—such as Llewellyn, lollipop, lollapalooza, Kalamazoo—inasmuch as the Japanese have difficulty in pronouncing our sound 'l,' usually giving it the sound of 'r.' Through the use of these test words it was also possible to expose Japanese who were posing as Chinese since, curiously, the Chinese had difficulty in pronouncing the sound 'r' and usually give that letter the 'l' sound. So there is little that is new under the sun." (Word Origins And their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. Chapter 16, "Terms Of Religion And Their Beginnings.")

♦ "...the constant danger of attack from Bolshevik forces caused a number of soldiers to intentionally wound themselves for the purpose of evading service at the front; these men were court-martialed, as was a soldier guilty of 'misconduct before the enemy.' Apparently, self-inflicted gunshot wounds were not the only method used to avoid combat; Pvt. Charles F. Kingan was convicted of contracting 'a venereal disease through neglect thereby unfitting himself for active military duty against the enemy.' Some seventy men were convicted of this last offense; almost all received three months confinement at hard labor to discourage such behavior in the future." ("Bolsheviks, Polar Bears, and Military Law: The Experiences of Army Lawyers in North Russia and Siberia in World War I" by Fred L. Borch III.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. (Mordant.) "A bloke in the Munsters once wanted a cushy, so he waves his hand above the parapet to catch Fritz's attention. Nothing doing. He waves his arms about for a couple of minutes. Nothing doing, not a shot. He puts his elbows on the fire-step, hoists his body upside-down and waves his legs about till he gets blood to the head. Not a shot did old Fritz fire. 'Oh,' says the Munster men, 'I don't believe there's a damned square-head there. Where's the German Army to?' He has a peek over the top—crack! he gets it in the head. ♦ "A body of the 89th Highland Regiment, which had been raised among the Gordon clan in the preceding year at Badenoch, were landed from the Sandwich, East Indiaman, and behaved with their usual gallantry. Pressing onward, they burst from the rear, through Draper's grenadiers, in their eagerness to get at the enemy. Tossing aside their muskets, they raised a wild cheer, and with their bonnets in one hand and claymores in the other, threw themselves upon the soldiers of Lally, and cut many to pieces. They were only fifty in number, and were commanded by Captain George Morrison. From that time the operations of Lally were confined to the ramparts of Pondicherry. Several of his cannon were taken by the brave little band of Highlanders. Seven of these were found to be eighteen-pounders, loaded to the muzzle with all sorts of projectiles—bars of iron, jagged metal, stones, and bottles." ♦ "The silence of the past 27 years surrounding this case has spoken loudly in our community." (Sekyiwa Shakur, about the arrest in 2023 of the only living suspect in the murder of her brother, the rapper Tupac Shakur.)

♦ "Imagine if moderate Dems said they didn't want a certain minority. The condemnations would be deafening. Yet now we hear much silence." (Identity politics.)

♦ "For many, her absence as the fires burned spoke volumes." (L.A. Mayor Karen Bass in Ghana as 2025 wildfire ravage Los Angeles.)

♦ "Inside, it's so quiet that you can hear a nuclear bomb not drop." ("Bunker Mentality: Shopping for a home at the end of the world" by Patricia Marx, The New Yorker, September 2, 2024.)

He was killed. / A-Wang: (The busy chopping sound he has been creating goes silent for several beats.) / Ritai: You be careful. (From the great 2004 film Mountain Patrol: Kekexili.)

*** Butte, Montana...

♦ "When the mines were working, there was a rhythm to life by what the whistles told you, and what the sounds were. So there was a noise that went on constantly that you were aware of and yet not aware of. And when the mines were gone, there was a dead silence... And it was eerie." (From the PBS documentary, "Butte, America," which recreates the life in Butte, Montana, when the mines were still operating. The mines operated from 1890 to 1977, and in 1920 over 40,000 people lived in Butte, many of them miners.)

*** the Titanic...

♦ "Strangest of all was the silence. Hardly a word was spoken. Everyone noticed it; everyone had a different explanation. The Reverend P.M.A. Hoques, a passenger on the Carpathia, thought people were too horror-stricken to speak. Captain Rostom thought everybody was just too busy. Lawrence Beesley felt they were neither too stunned nor too busy—they were simply in the presence of something too big to grasp." (A Night to Remember by Walter Lord. He is referring to the scene on the Carpathia as the survivors of the Titanic were brought on board. The scene was certainly strange. To the north and the west was an endless plain of packed ice, and between the icepack and the ship were big bergs and smaller growlers, an Arctic scene that the passengers traveling from New York to Gibraltar and the Mediterranean on the Carpathia could not have expected to see. And the survivors were dressed in lace trimmed evening dresses, kimonos, fur coats, pajamas, fur evening capes, motoring coats, evening slippers...)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ On the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month, the guns fell silent on the Western Front. (The way many Americans remember the date of the end of World War I.)

♦ "At the Armistice, the sudden cessation of the artillery fire which had continued ceaselessly on the Western Front for more than four years had an almost frightening effect on the troops. It was as if the kitchen clock had stopped at eleven o'clock in the morning and the household was uncertain as to when the potatoes should be put on to boil, if at all. 'When the guns stop' had been a synonym for 'when the war is over.' Yet was it over?... [T]here were no scenes in the trenches even remotely resembling those that took place at home." (Good-Bye To All That by Robert Graves.)

♦ "For fifty-seven nights the bombing of London was unceasing... / From September 7 to November 3 an average of two hundred German bombers attacked London every night... / On the night of November 3 for the first time in nearly two months no alarm sounded in London. The silence seemed quite odd to many. They wondered what was wrong. On the following night the enemy's attacks were widely dispersed throughout the Island; and this continued for a while... / These new bombing tactics began with the blitz on Coventry on the night of November 14..." (Their Finest Hour by Winston S. Churchill, Book II, "Alone," Chapter XVIII, "London Can Take It.")

♦ "There were no birds singing in the forest. No animals, no wolves or bears. There were not even mice. Nothing. There was nothing there. Perhaps the prisoners had eaten the birds, I don't know. But I never heard a sound." (The remarkable Polish schoolgirl Danuta Maczka, describing the Siberian logging camp she was deported to in early 1940. From "A Polish girl's journey across three continents" by Monica Whitlock, BBC, 16 September 2012.)

♦ "The men in the bunkers and command-posts of the 62nd Army felt very strange indeed; they wanted to touch their faces, feel their clothes, wiggle their toes in their boots. The Germans weren't shooting. It was quiet. / The silence made their heads whirl. They felt as though they had grown empty, as though their hearts had gone numb, as though their arms and legs moved in a different way from usual. It felt very odd, even inconceivable, to eat kasha in silence, to write a letter in silence, to wake up at night and hear silence. This silence then gave birth to many different sounds that seemed new and strange: the clink of a knife, the rustle of a page being turned in a book, the creak of a floorboard, the sound of bare feet, the scratching of a pen, the click of a safety-catch on a pistol, the ticking of the clock on the wall of the bunker... / Chuykov left the bunker and climbed slowly up to the top of the slope; the wooden steps creaked under his boots. It was dark. Both the east and the west were quiet. The silhouettes of factories, the ruined buildings, the trenches and dug-outs all merged into the calm, silent darkness of the earth, the sky and the Volga. / This was the true expression of the people's victory. Not the ceremonial marches and orchestras, not the fireworks and artillery salutes, but this quietness—the quietness of a damp night in the country... / Chuykov was very moved; he could hear his heart thumping in this breast. Then he realized the silence was not total. From Banniy Ovrag and the 'Red October' factory came the sound of men singing. Below, on the banks of the Volga, he could hear quiet voices and the sound of a guitar..." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part 3, Chapter 17.)

♦ "Absence is present in this film. The absence is definitely... it's kind of deafening in its absence and its presence. And I feel that even in this city—New York—that there is that feeling as well." (The film director Steve McQueen talking about his film Occupied City.)

♦ "These are Rimonom, decorations for the Torah scroll. They are little crowns that go on top, with bells on them... I hear the ringing of Jewish Rimonom, and it makes me shiver. And in the first phone call with the great-grandchild of the person who donated it, when you hold this religious object up to the receiver and let it ring, it makes another person shiver, ten thousand kilometers away." (The great German Rolf Rausmeissel, historian. He has dedicated his life to returning cultural objects stolen from Jews by the Nazis to the descendants of their rightful owners for continued religious use.)

♦ "To Mr. Yamaguchi, there seemed to be children everywhere, some running, many limping along the side of the road. 'They didn't cry, he said. 'I saw no tears at all. Their hair was burned, and they were completely naked. I saw so many of these children. Behind them big fires burned. Miyuki Bridge, next to our dormitory, was still standing, but all over it there were burned people, children as well as adults, some of them dead, some of them on the verge of death. They were the ones who couldn't walk any more, who had just lain down. None of them spoke, none of them had the strength to say a word. It's funny that during that time, I didn't hear human speech, or shouts, just the sound of the city burning. Under the bridge there were many more bodies, bobbing in the water like blocks of wood.'" ("The Luckiest or Unluckiest Man in the World? Tsutomu Yamaguchi, double A-bomb victim" by Richard Lloyd Parry, The Times of London, March 25, 2009. Compiler's note: this article has been preserved, thankfully, on the Wayback Machine.)

♦ "I remember I went down into this hole for another scoop of dirt, and then that's when the bomb hit. I looked at the man I was digging this hole with; half his body was gone. And I looked up at the trees and I could see body parts on the limbs on the trees, and I shook myself out of it and I stood up, and it was so quiet." (Private Manuel Orona, Hill 875, Dak To, Vietnam War. The 500-pound bomb from a Marine plane caused the worst friendly-fire incident of the Vietnam War.)

♦ "It's pretty obvious, right from the first moment that the soldiers deploy because... you have this eerie sort of quietness?" (Siobhan Fallon, military wife, speaking about her book, You Know When the Men Are Gone on NPR's All Things Considered in 2011.)

♦ Day is done / Gone the sun / From-the-lake / From-the hill / From-the-sky / Rest in peace / Soljer brave / God is nigh And as the last note quivered to prideful silence... (From Here to Eternity by James Jones.)

*** Christian slaves...

♦ The Battle of Lepanto, 1571, was the last great naval engagement to be fought with oared galleys. Fifteen thousand [italics mine] Christian galley slaves were set at liberty. "Among the Christian wounded was Miguel de Cervantes, aboard the Marquesa. He was struck twice in the chest, a third shot permanently maiming his left hand—to the greater glory," as he put it, 'of the right.' He was to describe Lepanto as 'the greatest occasion that past or present ages have witnessed or that the future can hope to witness', and to remain prouder of his part in it than of anything else in his life." The lives of Cervantes and Shakespeare were roughly contemporaneous; Shakespeare was seven years old when Cervantes was liberated from Turkish captivity, and both died in the same year, 1616. (The quotation is from The Middle Sea: A History Of The Mediterranean by the historian John Julius Norwich. To this day Turkey remains an important player in world history, particularly in the Middle East and Central Asia, all the way to Xinjiang, China. In 2023, Russia sacrificed Nagorno-Karabakh, with its 150,000 Armenian Christians, to the Turks (and Azerbaijan) in return for Turkish support in Russia's war with Ukraine.)

*** African slaves...

♦ "Slavery was accepted as an institution in Africa as much as it was by Europeans or by settlers in the Americas." (The historian Hugh Thomas. This makes sense. There were too few Europeans in their small caravels to actually capture slaves, the locals were too fierce, and Europeans tended to die of African diseases. And so, from the Portuguese on, Europeans dealt and traded with African rulers.)

sledding (tough sledding)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ There were great husky men crying with the pain of gaping wounds and dreadfully swollen, discolored trench feet, who sank down exhausted the moment they stopped. There were strings of from eight to twenty blind boys filing up the road, clinging tightly and pitifully to each other's hands, and led by some bedraggled limping youngster who could still see... I wonder if I'll ever be able to look at marching men anywhere again without seeing those blinded boys, with five and six wound stripes on their sleeves, struggling painfully along the road." ♦ "It's this very unusual juxtaposition of veganism, which is often connected to what I'm not allowed to eat, with sluttiness, which is all the things that I'm gonna do even though I'm not allowed to." ("Special Sauce: The Slutty Vegan burger chain puts the party in plant-based eating" by Charles Bethea, The New Yorker, April 17, 2023. "Slut," "slutty," "sluttiness," and "sluttified" are mentioned 57 times in the article. See the excellent response to the article directly below.

*** more conventional usage...

♦ NOT SO LONG AGO: "The situation was complicated by large numbers of 'slut farmers'—men with sufficient private means not to worry about making their farms pay. They left their fields to get full of thistles and even thornbushes, which provided cover for game; and found rough shooting far more fun than uneconomic farmwork." (The Long Week-End: A Social History of Great Britain 1918-1939 by Robert Graves and Alan Hodge.)

♦ NOT SO LONG AGO: "No one liked Henry Clinton, especially Clinton himself, who was, by his own account, 'a shy bitch.'" (Valiant Ambition: George Washington, Benedict Arnold, and the Fate of the American Revolution by Nathaniel Philbrick. Page 12.)

♦ "Charles Bethea's entertaining piece on Slutty Vegan shows the burger chain's use of the word 'slutty' to be a savvy bit of branding, capable of capturing the paradoxical associations of cute promiscuity, chic vulgarity, and naughtily virtuous veganism ("Special Sauce," April 17th). The history of the word 'slut' reinforces its good-bad connotations. The word might be connected to the Old English 'slyt' (sleet) and seems related to words meaning 'muddy' and 'slushy.' Since its earliest appearance, in the fifteenth century, 'slut' has often, but not always, had a negative meaning: a dirty or slatternly woman, a licentious woman or man, a scullery maid, or simply a girl. In the past half century, some speakers have reclaimed 'slut' and used it proudly, as in SlutWalks, marches against stigmatizing victims of sexual assault. Other modern uses trade jokingly on its implications of promiscuity, as in 'I'm a TV slut. I'll watch anything.' Who knows how it will evolve in the future—perhaps into a common food term?" (PROMISCUOUS USAGE, by Judith Tschann, Redlands, Calif. From "The Mail," The New Yorker, May 15, 2023.)

♦ "Scout Snipers / The Grim Reaper / Confirmed kills [number obscured by a soldier]" (A sign in the background of a group photo of soldiers taken in front of a tent, An Hoi, Vietnam. In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is called the American War.)

♦ “Zaitsev began to tell the story of his battle of wits with a German sniper at the foot of Mamayev Kurgan. It had lasted for days. The German knew Zaitsev was watching him and he himself was keeping watch on Zaitsev. They seemed well-matched; neither could catch the other out...” (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. The great 2001 film Enemy at the Gates starred Jude Law as Zaitsev and Ed Harris as the German. It also starred Joseph Fiennes and Rachel Weisz.)

♦ [A quiet card game in the rear was disturbed by the shots of a sniper in a tree. A soldier from the West, a crack shot, dealt with the problem.] “‘That gray squirrel is pretty frisky, and I must stop his fun to stop him spoiling ours.’ He drew a bead on the man in the tree and fired. As the Confederate sharpshooter came crashing through the branches to the ground, the Westerner sat down and asked: ‘What’s trumps?’ He seemed as unconcerned as if he had killed a mosquito that had been annoying him. / ...[B]ehind all this was constantly present to our eyes and mind the scene of a great stream, a procession, so to speak of human souls on their way to eternity.” (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. The Civil War.)

♦ See the Homer Winslow picture “Sharpshooter (1863).” About snipers, Homer Winslow wrote that sniping was “as near murder as anything I ever could think of in connection with the army.” Winslow was never a soldier.

♦ “Early on [Benedict Arnold] realized that an officer on a gray horse was playing a prominent role in maintaining the integrity of the British right. Arnold rode over to Colonel Morgan on the American left and requested that he order a sharpshooter to aim at the British officer. It took three shots, but eventually the Indian fighter Tim Murphy managed to put a rifle ball into the gut of General Simon Fraser, the Scotsman who was Burgoyne’s intimate friend and the commander of the British right. The Americans had already begun to overwhelm the enemy, but the felling of Fraser by an American sniper appears to have precipitated the collapse of the British line...” (Valiant Ambition: George Washington, Benedict Arnold, and the Fate of the American Revolution by Nathaniel Philbrick.)

♦ “[T]he funeral of General Fraser took place under fire, and under circumstances extremely rare even in war. / The October evening was calm and clear, and the funeral procession, as it entered the great redoubt, with arms reversed and the mournful roll of the muffled drums, was followed by the eyes of hundreds of both armies; but some of the Americans, ignorant of its true nature, poured a constant cannonade upon the spot where the grave was dug. Unmoved by the danger, Mr. Brudenel, the chaplain, while the shot threw the sand and loose soil over his white surplice, read the touching burial service of the Church of England, while the sun sank down, and twilight added to the solemnity of the scene. / ‘Suddenly,’ says the Field-Book of the Revolution, ‘the irregular firing ceased, and the solemn voice of a single cannon boomed at measured intervals along the valley, and awakened the responses of the hills. It was a minute gun fired by the Americans in honour of the gallant dead. The moment information was given that the gathering in the redoubt was a funeral company fulfilling the last wishes of the noble Fraser, orders were issued to withhold the cannonade with balls, and render military honours to the fallen brave.’” (British Battles On Land And Sea by James Grant, “The Funeral of Fraser.” Arguably, Saratoga, 1777, was the battle that won the American Revolution. Benedict Arnold, the “American Hannibal,” would go on to betray his country in his role as Commandant of West Point. The revolution was, of course, also a bitter civil war between the Loyalists and the Patriots, or Americans.)

♦ Lt. Col. Dave Grossman notes that snipers operate at long range, as opposed to mid- and hand-grenade range, close range, edged-weapons range (bayonet, etc.), knife range, and hand-to-hand combat range. The closer to the victim, the stronger the resistance to killing in combat. For that reason snipers—and pilots and members of the artillery—suffer relatively fewer psychological side effects from their killing. (On Killing: The Psychological Cost of Learning to Kill in War and Society, Revised Edition, by Lieutenant Colonel Dave Grossman.)

♦ Kill one, terrorize a thousand. (Snipers creed.)

♦ "I need you to be a soldier of God, a good little soldier." (Female victim testimony from the Commission to Inquire into Child Abuse (CICA) / Ryan Commission, which detailed Catholic Church abuse in Ireland. What the priest told a child in Catholic care prior to sexually abusing her.)

♦ "I've always said, 'I'm his soldier.' Jim's this director I'll do anything for, but he's in the trench right there next to me." (Hollywood actor Sam Worthington about Avatar: The Way of Water and its director, James Cameron.)

♦ "I mean, I've been in the Twitter war zone for a while, it takes a lot to phase me at this point. You can't take it personally, none of these people actually know you. It's like if you're fighting a war and there's some opposing soldier that shoots at you, it's not like they hate you. They don't even know you. So, just think of it like that. They're firing bullets, whatever, but they don't know you, so don't take it personally." (Elon Musk talking to Joe Rogan.)

♦ "Embracing collaborations...is critical to our shared success, and a force multiplier [italics mine] for delivering top-notch journalism across the country." (Senior Vice President of News and Editorial Director Nancy Barnes.)

♦ "We are here to provide you the approved short-term substitute training. I'm sorta the captain [italics mine] of today's shift, and I've got a wonderful crew..." (Chicago education.)

♦ Be a good soldier; be a loyal supporter; Don't upset the apple cart; fall in line; don't speak to anyone about this... (Government servants.)

♦ "And the savage in you makes you adore it with its squalor and wastefulness and danger and strife and glorious noise. You feel that, after all, this is what men were intended for rather than to sit in easy chairs with a cigarette and whiskey, the evening paper or the best-seller, and to pretend that such a veneer means civilization and that there is no barbarian behind your starched and studded shirt front." (Harvey Cushing, a US surgeon during World War I. From The Beauty and the Sorrow by the brilliant Swedish historian and writer Peter Englund.)

♦ "How many men who listened to me have served their nation in the wars? How very many, are not here to listen? The war in Vietnam is not like those other wars. Yet, finally, war is always the same. It is young men dying in the fullness of their promise. It is trying to kill a man you do not even know well enough to hate. Therefore, to know war is to know that there is still madness in this world." (President Lyndon Baines Johnson, speaking about the Vietnam War. In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is known as the American War.)

*** children...

♦ "The servicemen from the trains were always so neatly dressed. My family and I always just wore overalls all the time—I had never seen anyone with uniforms like that. It was such a rat race, with them hurrying around—I didn't want to be like those guys. It was kind of scary. I was a little boy from a farm, nine years old. It was too much for me to want to be a part of." (A Nebraska boy seeing the activity at the North Platte Canteen) /// "It was such a different way of life for me to see. The sailor boys were so good-looking, to a young girl like me. The sailors and the soldiers would just come rushing in the door, like they couldn't believe there was enough food for them. They would play the piano and sing... that was so interesting for me, never having seen or done anything like that." (Marian Peterson, recalling when she was eight or nine and saw troop trains stop at the North Platte Canteen. From Once Upon a Town: The Miracle of the North Platte Canteen by the great Chicago Tribune writer Bob Greene.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Nobody can soldier without coffee." (A Union cavalryman, writing in 1865.)

♦ "[Our hosts] gave us some fat pork, corn bread, and a kind of coffee, made, I think, out of burned peas. But it was warm.... Hunger made that breakfast the most delicious we had in six months." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby, about his service during the Civil War.)

♦ "I weighed one hundred eighty going in, and I came out weighing one hundred fourteen..." (From Once Upon a Town, the Miracle of the North Platte Canteen by the brilliant Chicago Tribune writer Bob Greene.)

♦ "Stumpfe thought about food incessantly; he searched for it even when they were fighting... / Bach caught sight of the huge back and shoulders of this eternally hungry soldier. He was digging in a patch of wasteland where the kitchens and supply-depot has once stood... Then an old woman appeared...staring down at the ground as she stirred around in the snow with a hook made from a thick piece of twisted wire... / It was a summit meeting between the representatives of two great peoples. Bach was the only witness; the soldier and the old woman forgot the meeting immediately. / As it grew warmer, big flakes of snow settled on the ground, on the red brick-dust, on the crosses of graves, on the turrets of abandoned tanks, in the ears of dead men waiting to be buried." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part Three, Chapter 37.)

♦ Who won the war? / The MPs won it. / How'd they win it? / Why, their mothers and sisters laying for Liberty Bonds. (Infantry chant while marching past MPs. From Here to Eternity by James Jones.)

♦ "It was the first day that passes were issued to the troops of the Hawaiian Department since the Saturday night before Pearl Harbor, and at ten o'clock in the morning a well-primed yowling horde of wild men from all around the 90-mile perimeter descended upon Honolulu like spokes descending upon a wheel hub and began to line up outside the bars and whorehouses until even the lines got entangled and men heading for the New Congress Hotel suddenly found themselves inside Wu Fat's restaurant four doors up the street ordering drinks. It stayed just about like that all day long until the curfew. It, and the two days following, were a sort of red letter day. Not a bartender in town will forget them. Neither will many of the madams who were there then. Even a few of the respectable people still remember it." (From Here to Eternity by James Jones.)

♦ "The French... were shocked by the attitude of some American soldiers, who seemed to think that when it came to young French women 'everything can be bought.' / In Pigalle, rapidly dubbed 'Pig Alley' by GIs, French prostitutes were coping with more than 10,000 men a day. The French were also deeply shocked to see US soldiers lying drunk on the pavements of the Place Vendome. The contrast with off-duty German troops, who had been forbidden even to smoke in the street, would hardly have been greater." ("An ugly carnival," by Antony Beevor, The Guardian, Thursday 4 June 2009.)

♦ "It don't mean a thang." (The Vietnam War. In Vietnam, the Vietnam War is known as the American War.)

♦ "The Caravan is a hundred grenades, that missed / The Caravan is sand on your face / The Caravan, three toasts, a moment of silence / Someone's lost, someone's won / Caravan, caravan, caravan." (The haunting Soviet Afghan War Song. Try searching for "Soviet Afghan War Song Caravan." And read Zinky Boys by Svetlana Alexievich.)

♦ "The most ironic thing is that it became really quite serious and in the Falklands War the sailors sitting on the HMS Sheffield after they had been hit by an Exocet sang it for 3 hours while they were waiting to be rescued. And the RAF pilots would sing it in great jeopardy, when they were changing for their long, low-level bombing in the Bush Wars, Desert Storm. And so you know, it took on a kind of optimistic component to it..." (The "Bright Side" song by Monty Python, BBC. As late as 2016, Monty Python sketches were a favorite of civilian US Iraq and Afghanistan War combat veterans at Camp Vinnell in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, sitting around the pool at the Tiki Hut on the weekends. They knew the skits by heart. Or was it heartbreak? Search: "Inheritance Tracks, Eric Idle.")

♦ "Your mother had a pair and your little brother and your girlfriend and you nail them to a wall in some bar in the Philippines and you've spread yourself so far and wide that there's no way you can die because your dog tags are out there pulsing around the globe." (The great writer Anthony Swofford, Marine, who served in the Gulf War, 1990.)

♦ "The earth is bleeding." / "You better get used to it, because we're going to be living in it." Watch: Jarhead (2005): Most Memorable Scenes!

♦ "There's no beer, no prostitutes and people are shooting at us. It's more like Portsmouth." (A British soldier, on hearing that the British defense secretary Geoff Hoon had asserted that Umm Qasr, Iraq, was like Southampton.)

♦ "Camp Lejeune." (A US marine in Afghanistan, who had also served in Iraq, on being asked where he felt the threat was most dire. Camp Lejeune is in North Carolina in the United States.)

♦ "In combat, cleanliness for the infantryman was all but impossible. Our filth added to our general misery. Fear and filth went hand in hand..." (With the Old Breed by E.B. Sledge.)

♦ "With human corpses, human excrement, and rotting rations scattered across Peleliu's ridges, the blow flies or bluebottle flies underwent a population explosion. Those nasty insects were so large, so glutted, and so lazy that some could scarcely fly... It was revolting, to say the least, to watch big fat blowflies leave a corpse and swarm into our C rations... Each morning, just before sunrise, when things were fairly quiet, I could hear a steady humming sound like bees in a hive as the flies became active with the onset of daylight. They rose off the corpses, refuse, rocks, brush, and wherever else they had settled for the night like a swarm of bees. There numbers were incredible." (With the Old Breed by E.B. Sledge.)

♦ "The worst thing about Cassino [Town] was the smell. The stench was absolutely horrible because every time a mortar bomb went off, it raised a stench..." (The British para James "Jim" Knox, fighting with the New Zealanders. The stench was caused by the mortars' explosive exhumation of decomposing bodies and body parts from the rubble.)

♦ There was an all-pervasive stench of putrefaction and millions of fat blowflies filled the air. Even Junger, normally so cool, was shaken by what he saw. 'The ploughed-up battlefield was a scene of horror. The dead lay there among the living defenders. When we dug bunkers we saw how the dead lay in layers one above the other. One company after another had been mown down as they made a stand shoulder to shoulder under the drum fire; then their corpses had been buried under the tons of earth hurled up by the projectiles and new men had taken the place of the fallen.'" (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England.)

*** a soldier's fate

♦ "The duke did what he could for his wretched men. He sent urgent appeals to the towns and churches of northern Spain, begging for the immediate dispatch of beds, clothes...for the 4,000 sick survivors ashore. That total steadily increased as further ships limped home. Some were in a terrible state..." (The Spanish Armada by Colin Martin and Geoffrey Parker.)

♦ Years ago they had marched thousands of miles to legendary battlefields... they had once gone to the ends of the earth and seen beyond the farthest horizon... We looked at these men in blue, existing in pensioned security, honored and respected by all... and we were in awe of them. Those terrible names out of the history books—Gettysburg, Shiloh, Stone's River, Cold Harbor—came alive through these men. They had been there... and to watch them was to be deeply moved." (Waiting for the Morning Train: An American Boyhood by Bruce Catton.)

♦ "Corday also comes across a representative of a new phenomenon, the soldier beggar. Of late it has become usual to see them at restaurants or cafes. They are often wearing medals on their chests, fine medals like the Croix de Guerre, awarded for heroism in the field. They sell picture postcards or sing patriotic songs to collect a little money. / The begging soldier Corday meets on the pavement has an arm missing. He is also drunk. He is meandering through the stream of people, asking one, then another, for a few coppers or for a cigarette at least. And he repeats the same word all the time: 'Peace... peace...'" (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England. He is writing about World War I.)

♦ "Saratov greeted Lyudmila rudely and cruelly... / At the tram-stop some young women quietly shoved past anyone who happened to be old or weak. A blind man in a Red Army hat, obviously only recently released from hospital and still unable to cope alone, moved anxiously from one foot to the other, tapping his stick rapidly in front of him... / People were jostling each other as they climbed into the tram-car—while he stood there, weeping and shouting..." (Life And

Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books.)

♦ "This seems like anything but Christmas eve." (Bob Wilson, a civilian surgeon, in Nanking, 1937. From the brilliant and affecting 2007 documentary film Nanking.)

♦ "'O, Tannenbaum, O, Tannenbaum...'" / Out of the cold darkness of oblivion, as though from the depths of the sea, long-dead thoughts and feelings rose slowly up to the surface. They brought no joy, no relief, but their strength was a human strength, the greatest strength in the world..." (German soldiers. Christmas Eve. Stalingrad. Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part Three, Chapter 36. Few would live to return to Germany. Many died of typhus in captivity. In Part Three, Chapter 28, Darensky says, on seeing German prisoners, "We never invited them to come here." And yet, in just 12 short paragraphs, he rebukes a Russian colonel for kicking one of them. Such is the pity of war.)

(A very interesting and very odd conversation. Interesting because Audi Cornish seems to react sharply to the use of the cliché "head south" and very correctly restates the meaning as, "if there's a threat that the government could collapse..." But odd because Michele Kelemen does not represent the State Department, she is NPR's diplomatic correspondent. Were the two of them "acting out" a script? ♦ “the various indignities that being Black in traditionally white spaces exposes you to... / “racial incorporation”...brought [many Blacks] into previously white spaces... / In predominantly white professional spaces... / normalize the presence of Black people in professional and other historically white spaces... / the loaded interrogations, and the other awkward moments and indignities that people of color experience in white spaces...” (“Black Success, White Backlash” by Elijah Anderson, The Atlantic, September, 2023. “Elijah Anderson is the Sterling Professor of Sociology and of African American Studies at Yale, and a recent Stockholm Prize laureate. His most recent book is Black in White Space: The Enduring Impact of Color in Everyday Life.”)

♦ “[H]ow you choose to cultivate and represent that space—whether real or imagined—matters.” (“21 Hip-Hop Albums That Reflected The Politics Of Race, Space And Place in 2017” by Rodney Carmichael, Bobby Carter, Jenny Gathright, Sidney Madden, Mosi Reeves, and Steffanee Wang, NPR, Best Music Of 2017, December 28, 2017.)

♦ “That was a direct result of her uplifting our space during her conversation.” (Fawn Pochel, who identifies as First Nations Ojibwe, about a speech by Cutcha Risling Baldy at Dominican University that resulted in $200 in “unexpected” donations to the First Nations Garden.)

♦ “Orchestras have traditionally been a pretty white space.” (Diversity, equity and inclusion / DEI.)

♦ “I try to cry quietly so that I don't take up more space.” (Robin DiAngelo. She coined the term “White fragility” which has been characterized as silence, defensiveness, argumentation, certitude, and pushback.)

♦ “For Anders, although his newly brown skin is a constant physical reminder that he's no longer who he used to be, the greatest change may be in his psyche. He's now acutely aware of otherness and being observed, how he moves in the world and how he takes up space. When he returns to work...he's both drawn to and repulsed by the only other dark-skinned employee, who, unlike him, has always known what it's like to be treated as both invisible and hypervisible.” (Cady Lang's Time review of The Last White Man by Mohsin Hamid, New York Times bestselling author of Exit West. This paragraph deftly weaves together several tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion.)

♦ “I want spaces in sport for trans athletes to be their authentic selves and compete at the highest level, and know they are loved and that they belong there.” (Chris Mosier, about transgender athletes at the Tokyo Olympics.)

♦ “As you all know I have battled injuries my whole career, but this is one that I cannot come back from. I have done everything I can do to continue, but this is where the good Lord has called me to serve in a different space.” (NC State QB Grayson McCall, announcing his retirement from football after suffering at least his fourth concussion.)

♦ “The space of play, playing with dolls, the space of creating worlds with dolls is that space of dreaming. And now kids get to dream with a Laverne Cox Barbie, the first transgender Barbie—that is a beautiful space of dreaming and possibility.” (“Laverne Cox honoured as first transgender Barbie, BBC, 26 May, 2022. That's a lot of space!”)

♦ “Harrison announced that his would be a safe space and also a brave space where everybody could say things that were hard to say, without being judged.” (“Guns Down: With the number of shooting deaths rising, Shaina Harrison is teaching kids to turn anger into advocacy," by Ian Frazier, The New Yorker, April 5, 2021. Harrison was addressing ninth graders.)

♦ "We've given them the flexibility to kind of determine what their spaces look like...you know, do they want to do rows...?" (Qynne Kelly, Associate Principal at Lincoln High School, Des Moines, about the guidelines teachers have for setting up their classrooms during the pandemic.)

♦ "We feel very proud to be Asian here, and we want to share kind of culture and space with each other but also with the rest of the city." (Joanne Kwong, President, Pearl River Mart.)

♦ "People have become accustomed to more car-free spaces during the pandemic." (Cities block streets so restaurant patrons can dine in the road, socially spaced. Ordinarily, this would be express as "car-free zones.")

♦ "It's so unfortunate that marginalized communities are in competition for the tiny allotment of space that society gives them." (Ani DiFranco.)

♦ "Watts (2001) has made the argument that to have a voice an agent must find a space where the voice can be concretized... The connection between voice and space becomes particularly critical when such a space is denied in the real world through marginalizing forces and a new space needs to be carved out." ("Voices of the Marginalized on the Internet" by Ananda Mitra.)

♦ "Black folk have always been aware that we've been excluded and othered. Even in spaces we've managed to create for ourselves, [non-Black] people violently infiltrate and occupy these spaces with no respect to the architects who built it." (Eric Louis, age 21, a Black TikTok "creator" who helped to organize the #BlackTikTokStrike, to protest cultural appropriation and preferential treatment.)

♦ "I think the superpower of a Black Woman is to occupy the space in the fullness of who she is." (The actress Aisha Hinds.)

♦ "The industry caught up to my ambitions and created space for me to have my voice." ("Faces of NPR HBCU Edition: Kia Miakka Natisse," Sommer Hill, NPR, February 16, 2022.)

♦ "It really is an unusual space in which we can come together and socialize and it doesn't feel anything like Zoom." (The 2021 virtual Sundance Film Festival.)

♦ "NPR arts editor Nina Gregory was an early adopter of Clubhouse—which she calls the 'third space' during the pandemic. The third space isn't home or work, she says, but rather acts as the coffee shops, bars, parks and other places where we connect with other people." ("What Is Clubhouse? The Popular Audio-Based Social Media App, Explained" by Tonya Mosley and Allison Hagan, WBUR, Feb. 10, 2021. Clubhouse is based around voice communication.)

♦ "Yeah, you're in a world, right, I mean, you're in something like a fantasy or a dream, and we all have that interior space all the time, but to get to go into someone else's interior space, how incredible is that?" (Miranda July.)

♦ Lulu Garcia-Navarro: Before we get to your new music, uh, I do want to talk to you about this meme about listening to Girl in Red. ("Marie Ulven Talks TikTok Fame, Sexuality And Her New Album," NPR, Weekend Edition Sunday, May 2, 2021. Trendy!)

♦ "I studied theater, but I was focused on being an actor, and I noted that people seemed to have a very narrow view of what kind of space my body could occupy on stage—and I found that really frustrating. I decided to write plays." (The playwright Aleshea Harris.)

♦ "This girl in jean shorts standing in her house with eleven men. Like the female body in that space was what drew me to this for sure." (Tina Satter, theater director, about Is This a Room: Reality Winner Verbatim Transcription.)

♦ "I wanted to create a safe space not in the sometimes trite sense we see the term used, but a true and sacred space for all our queer family to feel safe enough for freedom, fun, and cathartic self-expression. I wanted to build an antidote for the Trump era. I wanted to build all of us a home." (Frankie Sharp, who is suing his former partners at The Q, one of New York City's largest LGBTQ nightclubs. So much for "a true and sacred space for all our queer family.")

♦ "Prentice (Penny), I was hoping you could talk a little bit about when and how [Black Twitter] kind of shifted from a cultural space where Black people from different parts of the world and country could talk to one another and have this—I don't want to call it a safe space—a fun space, and a uniquely Black space—into something that actually fueled cultural and political movements in some ways, and also elevated local stories like George Floyd." ("Cultural space," "safe space," "fun space," "Black space..." That's a lot of "spaces!")

♦ Interviewer: As someone who's been first in a lot of spaces you've been in, a woman of color, knocking on the door to possibly be the next president, how do you protect your mental health and your mental space? / Kamala Harris: Well, number one rule, don't read the comments... (cackling). (Kamala Harris on All The Smoke with Stephen Jackson and Matt Barnes.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "I'm wondering how can [sic] a shared sense of space be created in places where Black and brown people are literally sharing the same physical space. I mean sharing being economically marginalized, overpoliced, unrepresented in big issues that affect both of them..." ("What the city council scandal reveals about LA's racial divides—and Solidarity," NPR, Morning Edition, Oct 14, 2022.)

♦ "When you're in a position in which you are a distinct minority, then there is a sense in which within a majority white culture you do start to see other people of color as rivals rather than as allies. Because there is so little space for you, there's such scarcity, and so you fight with other people who are of your same identity in order to get the spoils." (Korean American author Julia Lee, author of Biting the Hand: Growing Up Asian in Black and White America. From "Biting the Hand": Korean American author calls for weaponizing invisibility," NPR, Morning Edition, April 19, 2023.)

♦ "The assertions are strident, and the vocabulary is esoteric ('harm,' 'insurrection') as if it were translated from a foreign language. In a sense, it is. The language is legalese, and it is designed to build a foundation upon which a company can be held liable under civil-rights law in an American court. This activist tactic has been widely misunderstood... The word 'safe' is carefully chosen. It gestures at certain specific kinds of negligence for which a university could pay dearly in a court of law." ("The Inequality of 'Equity,'" by Christopher Caldwell, National Review, May 17, 2021.)

♦ NPR's Leila Fadel: After this long eventful week [2024 election of Donald Trump] imagine slipping away for a quick bit of quiet in space [italics mine]. NPR's Brian Mann snuck out before work one morning for a canoe trip on a wild river in Vermont." (Ordinarily, "in space" would be expressed as "in nature." Not at NPR!)

*** analysis

♦ "These days, everybody talks about spaces: the 'gastronomic space,' the 'podcast space,' even, on N.F.L. podcasts, the 'analytic space.' Derived from some combination of sociology and interior design, the word has elbowed aside terms like 'field' or 'conversation,' perhaps because it's even more expansive. The 'space' of a national election is, for that reason, never self-evident; we've always searched for clues." ("As Bad As All That: Donald Trump and the unmaking of America" by Adam Gopnik, The New Yorker, October 21, 2024. Gopnik goes on to use "space" in the following examples: (1) "And our own electoral space?" (2) "And then there's the galvanic space of social media." (3) "Though Trump can be situated in a transoceanic space of populism..." (4) "There is certainly a far-right political space..." (5) "The space is that strange.")

♦ "The White population numbered 40,000 in 1831; the Black population numbered three hundred. Not 300 warriors, but 300 men, women and children. The Whites were armed with guns, the Blacks with clubs and spears. The Whites had fought the Blacks for a quarter of a century, and had tried every thinkable way to capture, kill, or subdue them; and could not do it. If white men of any race could have done it, these would have accomplished it. But every scheme had failed, the splendid 300, the matchless 300 were unconquered, and manifestly unconquerable. They would not yield, they would listen to no terms, they would fight to the bitter end... / In a very few years nothing but a scant remnant remained alive. A handful lingered along into old age. In 1864 the last man died, in 1876 the last woman died, and the Spartans of Australasia were extinct. / The Whites always mean well when they take human fish out of the ocean and try to make them dry and warm and happy and comfortable in a chicken coop..." ### make you special

the things that you feel make you outside of normal ~

- ♦ “This is why I love Wicked, because I think it encourages people to celebrate their differences. I think that the things that make you different, the things that you feel that make you outside of normal, are actually the things that make you special. And I would keep growing into those things. Don’t be afraid to be all of yourself. And if you’re around people who don’t celebrate those things, you’re around the wrong people.” (The queer actor Cynthia Erivo, b. 1987.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

- ♦ Brendan Depa was one of the “so-called exceptional students.” The special help they are given at school is called exceptional student education. (Video shows 6-foot-6 student beat teacher unconscious, Matanzas High School, Palm Coast, Florida.)

- ♦ “Well, Carl’s amazing.” (Wink wink, nudge nudge. Snarky, sarcastic male abuse about a weird underperformer who doesn’t fit in. A synonym for the old “retarded” or “special.” This is a good example of the euphemism treadmill.)

- ♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. A passenger airplane, at first glance entirely full of huge lions. The human stewardess rolling the dinner cart down the aisle has stopped, and is asking, “Sir, did you order the special meal?” She is speaking to a hare, sitting in the middle seat between two great lions, one of whom is reading a newspaper, the other a book. The other lions on the plane are eyeing one another. The New Yorker magazine, June 5, 2023. The cartoon is signed “Kuper.”)

*** “I love it when an animal comes back...”

- ♦ I love it when an animal comes back. Good for the animals! May they be fruitful and multiply and repopulate their historic ranges! It thrills me when a right whale—hunted to the brink of extinction by whalers for its oil and baleen—is spotted in the Azores, or when a cloud leopard—still wearing its beautiful hide and possessing its claws—is spotted in Bangladesh. It gives me mordant cheer to know that Korean tigers are thriving in the no-man’s-land of the DMZ between North and South Korea, safe from people who would otherwise eat their meat and grind their bones into powder for medicines and aphrodisiacs.

We would have noticed anyone leaving the thicket. / Beck found two spider holes close to the forward edge of the thicket, partially covered by debris. Each opening was smaller than a basketball rim, barely large enough for a man to squeeze out. A cool, earthy smell emanated from them. / ‘Are the VC at the bottom of these holes, or do these go back to some room or tunnel?’ I asked Bratcher as Wooley came up. / I sent men out to the front as security and looked back at the spider holes. Spencer stuck a long bamboo pole down one. It hit bottom after about five feet and then, when Spencer pushed, it went down another four feet. We shined a flashlight down the holes. Both holes curved out of sight to our front. / Yelling ‘Fire in the hole,’ we threw in grenades and ducked behind trees. The explosions were muffled and only a small amount of dust came out and blew away. We walked carefully back to the holes and looked down. I said, ‘Damn. We either send someone down or we leave and keep on toward our TAOR.’ / Wooley told me to send someone down. I called one of the Puerto Ricans, PFC Fernandez-Lopez, the smallest man in the platoon...” (Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of the Vietnam War by James E. Parker Jr. “Cu Chi was not friendly.”)

*** analysis

♦ "The Arab Spring is a term that was coined really by the media. In the media, we like to package large ideas and events into little words so that we don't have to keep explaining them over and over again. And so the Arab Spring was very very good because it was in the springtime, all the revolutions happened in the springtime, the spring also makes you think of an uprising, you're rising up, so it's springing, and also it's Arab. And so this sounds very very nice and clean and so the media has since called what's happening in the Middle East right now the Arab Spring." (Journalist Hadeel Al-Shalchi, speaking at Carleton University in Ottawa, Canada. In her talk, she mentioned that "Tahrir was a delight to cover." In the question and answer, nobody thought to ask about the CBS "60 Minutes" correspondent

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "In 2008, the U.S. Marines deployed to Sangin, reinforcing American Special Forces and U.K. soldiers. Britain's forces were beleaguered—a third of its casualties in Afghanistan would occur in Sangin, leading some soldiers to dub the mission 'Sangingrad.'" ("The Other Afghan Women" by Anand Gopal, The New Yorker, September 13, 2021.)

♦ Hype? James Holland, author of The Savage Storm: The Battle for Italy 1943, talking with John Batchelor, referred to the Battle of Ortona as "the Stalingrad of the Adriatic." The Wikipedia article for the battle states, "The battle was known to those who fought it as the 'Italian Stalingrad,' for the brutality of its close-quarters combat, which was only worsened by the chaotic rubble of the town and the many booby traps used by both sides." The Wikipedia article goes on to mention that the battle is still studied as an example of military operations in urban terrain (MOUT). One big difference between Stalingrad and Ortona (among all the obvious ones) is that the Germans were beaten at Stalingrad. At Ortona, the Germans withdraw to defensive lines further north. The great Canadian writer Farley Mowat fought near Ortona and mentions the city several times towards the end of his book, And No Birds Sang: "Second Brigade, Kennedy told them, had managed to claw its way into the outskirts of Ortona but the street fighting which had then erupted had bogged them down in a bloody stalemate with the [German] paratroopers. Therefore, First Brigade would go back into the line, and the Regiment would lead a sweeping left hook around Ortona in an attempt to force the Germans to abandon the town... / He did not tell his officers what the Brigade intelligence office had told me: 'Monty blew into Div. H.Q. last night and he was frothing at the mouth. Passed the word to get on with it at any cost. The General told him the Div is worn down to the nub and ought to be relieved, but there ain't no reserves, so no reliefs. It's carry on, boys, and do-or-die, and bring me Pescara on a bleeding silver plate!' At war's end, the Germans still occupied the north of Italy.

*** Stalingrad by Vasily Grossman...

♦ "[A] long dismal wail from steamship hooters and factory sirens. This cry, prophesying death and disaster, hung in the air, as if conveying the anguish of all the city's inhabitants. It was the voice of the entire city—the voice not only of people but also of stone, of buildings, of cars, trucks and machines, of telegraph poles, of the grass and trees in the parks, of electric cables and tram rails; it was a cry let out not only by living beings but also by inanimate objects. All now sensed their coming destruction. Only a rusty iron throat could have engendered this sound, which expressed in equal measure animal horror and the anguish of a human heart. / It was followed by silence—Stalingrad's last silence. / Planes were coming from every direction... / Only people on the east bank of the Volga, ten or fifteen kilometres away...could see the fire as a whole and grasp the extent of the disaster..." (Stalingrad by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert and Elizabeth Chandler.)

*** analysis

♦ How was the Battle Of Shanghai like the Battle of Stalingrad? (1) Both battles were titanic "no quarter given" battles in wars that would shape and define the modern world (2) Both featured urban warfare, tanks in cities, soldiers fighting house-to-house in rubble (3) Rivers were important in both battles: in Russia, the Volga; in Shanghai, the Yangtze and the Whangpoo (Huangpu) Rivers. Of course, there were many differences. By definition, metaphor recognizes similarities and ignores differences.

stalking-horse (noun)

stalking horse
the company was the system's ~ (sued)

*** "The buffalo men would kill thirty-one million buffalo..."

♦ Hunters discovered that if they hid behind a cutout of a horse, they would not frighten their prey.

♦ "Between 1868 and 1881 [the buffalo men] would kill thirty-one million buffalo, stripping the plains almost entirely of the huge, lumbering creatures... The first large-scale slaughter of buffalo by white men with high-powered rifles took place in the years 1871 and 1872. There was no real market for buffalo hides until 1870, when a new tanning technology allowed them to be turned into high-grade leather. That, combined with a new railhead in Dodge City, Kansas, meant that the skins could be shipped commercially. For hunters, the economics of the new business was miraculous, all the more so since the animals were so stupefyingly easy to kill. If a buffalo saw the animal next to it drop dead it would not flee unless it could see the source of the danger. Thus one shooter with a long-range rifle could drop an entire stand of the creatures without moving. A hunter named Tom Nixon once shot 120 animals in 40 minutes. In 1873 he killed 3,200 in 35 days... Surprisingly, only a few voices cried out against the slaughter of the buffalo, which had no precedent in human history." (Empire of the Summer Moon: Quanah Parker and the Rise and Fall of the Comanches, the Most Powerful Indian Tribe in American History by S.C. Gwynne. To explain further, if the hunter stood up and was noticed, the buffalo would stampede. But if the hunter was concealed behind a blind, the herd would continue grazing even as its members dropped around it, unperturbed even by the sound of gunshots.)

*** analysis

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, we all know that "subterfuge" is not likely to show up as a lesson in our teaching materials, even though it is a thoroughly modern and cross-cultural topic of interest to all people. Our teaching materials tend to focus on conventional "topics" like "shopping," "going to the doctor," or functions like "apologizing," etc. Perhaps that should change. This dictionary and thesaurus can help.

I can't say that I'm surprised." (Melissa Wiggins, who signed the "Fire Raven Smith From Vogue" petition at change.org.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ The rearguard action of a group of British soldiers at the village of Khig, following the British disaster in the Battle of Maiwand (27 July 1880) during the Second Anglo-Afghan War, was one of the most courageous last stands in military history. It helped to allow the bulk of the British troops to safely withdraw to Kandahar. The only survivor of the last stand was Bobbie, a terrier attached to the Berkshires, who made it all the way back to England. Bobbie visited Queen Victoria, who awarded him with a medal.

♦ The Battle of the Alamo is well known to Americans, as is Custer's last stand. Less well known is the fact that there was one survivor at Custer's last stand, Comanche, the favorite mount of Captain Myles Keogh. The horse was found wandering the battlefield, badly wounded. Comanche was transported by ship to Fort Lincoln, and then to Fort Riley, Kansas, to live out his life in peace, never ridden again, allowed to eat the flowers from the flower gardens, and called upon only to participate in "riderless horse" ceremonies.

♦ Another famous rear-guard action was the Battle of Thermopylae in Greece in 480 BC, against the invading Persians, who were eventually defeated. No evidence of the pass currently exists. It is now a plain, and the only bodies are those of trucks drivers who have pulled over and are sleeping under their trucks.

♦ "Marcus ['Get up, let's go'] Luttrell...was the lone survivor." (Operation Red Wings. The great American hero.)

♦ "First and foremost, there is this: Once again the national political conversation includes the name Sarah Palin. She is once again the tip of the spear, at least in the realms of the right, and not just another spear carrier..." ("Palin's Call For Impeachment Reopens Debate Over...Sarah Palin" by Ron Elving, NPR, July 16, 2014. Elving is well known for his use of over-wrought figurative language, and in that article he uses: "legion," "rabid," "lip-smacking," "doldrums," "command," "weighed in," "bruising," "scuttled," "thrust was parried," "blowback," "tip of the spear," "spear carrier," "standard bearers," "cutting edge," "lived on this media mountaintop," "trudge back to Alaska," "potency," "bedevil..." Quelle dramatique!)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ In the notes to his translation of Canto XXXII of Dante's The Inferno, John Ciardi writes, "At the battle of Montaperti [Bocca degli Abbatini] hacked off the hand of the Florentine standard bearer. The cavalry, lacking a standard around which it could rally, was soon routed." And so Bocca degli Abbatini ended up in the 9th circle of hell, "The Treacherous to Country," deserving completely a kick in the head.

♦ "This was written in the stars, a million miles away. Before I was ever born I was destined to do what I did..." (The great boxer Tyson "The Gypsy King" Fury after his victory over Deontay Wilder.)

♦ "Oppenheimer, of course, knew Los Alamos well. Perro Caliente was a forty-mile horseback ride across the plateau. He and his brother had explored the Jemez Mountains on horseback over many summers. / Oppenheimer got what he wanted—a spectacular view of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains—and General Groves got a site so isolated there was only a winding gravel road and one phone line into the place..." ("American Prometheus: The Triumph And Tragedy Of J. Robert Oppenheimer" by Kai Bird and Martin J. Sherwin. The popular 2023 film Oppenheimer was based on this book.)

♦ Nina Totenberg: [John Paul] Stevens' rise was, to some extent, a fluke... / Clifford Sloan: It was an accident of history, and the stars lined up in a way that could not have been possible before that precise moment and probably could not have been possible after that precise moment." (John Paul Stevens had no political ties and was known as a judge's judge. Gerald Ford, who only became president after Nixon resigned, and who was vice president only because Spiro Agnew had resigned, suddenly had the appointment to fill, at a time after Watergate when people were sick of politics. Ford appointed Stevens to the Supreme Court. and he was swiftly confirmed with bipartisan support, 98-0 in the Senate. The confirmation of Supreme Court judges has been quite different since.)

♦ "The result of collaborative efforts and compromises often leads to the proverbial committee-designed racehorse becoming a giraffe. This process is inherent in the motion-picture business and will never change. / Sometimes, however the moons, the planets, and the stars all line up... / My Hollywood experience may be atypical, and I may not be as lucky or fortunate on my next close encounter with Hollywood, but this time, the heavenly bodies did align." ("Author's Foreword: The General's Daughter, The Book & The Movie" by Nelson DeMille.)

♦ "You couldn't line up all the stars and moons the right way to get that scenario to play out." (A murder mystery.)

♦ "Strauss was relieved when the hearing board finally convened ...in Building T-3, a dilapidated two-story temporary structure built during the war on the Mall near the Washington Monument at 16th Street and Constitution... / The opposing teams of lawyers sat across from each other at two long tables positioned to form a 'T.' On one side sat the AEC's lawyers... Facing them were Oppenheimer's defense team... At the bottom of the 'T' was placed a single wooden chair, where the defendant or other witnesses sat facing the judges. When Oppenheimer was not testifying, he sat on a leather couch against the wall, behind the witness chair." (American Prometheus: The Triumph And Tragedy of J. Robert Oppenheimer by Kai Bird and Martin J. Sherwin. The popular 2023 film Oppenheimer was based on this book.)

♦ "Such a wrong can never be righted; such a blot on our history never erased... We regret his great work for his country was repaid so shabbily." Henry DeWolf Smyth, about Robert Oppenheimer being stripped of his security clearance and having his reputation smeared in 1954.)

*** analysis

♦ The courtroom scenes in the great 1980 film Breaker Morant are quite affecting. The entire film can be seen as the contrast between the vibrant, vivid and complex scenes of life, love, duty, honor, war, and death outside the courtroom and the rigid formalism and predetermined verdict of the scenes inside the courtroom.

*** the Great Bengal Famine of 1943; Auschwitz...

♦ "Just as our hunger is not that feeling of missing a meal, so our way of being cold has need of a new word. We say 'hunger,' we say 'tiredness', 'fear', 'pain', we say 'winter' and they are different things. They are free words, created and used by free men who lived in comfort and suffering in their homes. If the Lagers had lasted longer a new, harsh language would have been born; and only this language could express what it means to toil the whole day in the wind, with the temperature below freezing, wearing only a shirt, underpants, cloth jacket and trousers, and in one's body nothing but weakness, hunger and knowledge of the end drawing nearer." (If This Is A Man by Primo Levi, Chapter 13, "October 1944.")

♦ "The fear of starvation is always hanging over the Indian peasant. For several centuries, at recurrent intervals, famine has thrown its withering shadow over India, but in recent years the pace has quickened. One of the severest crises, the great Bengal famine of 1943, is still frighteningly fresh in the minds of the peasants... In 1943 the roads and railroads served the Indian people even less than usual, because of the prior claims of the military. While the outside world was losing its hundreds of thousands of lives on the battlefield, India was losing them from starvation... When more than a million dead clogged the streets of Calcutta and other millions of bodies lay strewn over the fields of several provinces, censorship within India kept the world outside from appreciating the ghastly extent of the tragedy." (Halfway to Freedom by Margaret Bourke-White.)

♦ "Another resident of the Isle of Skye, Ross McKerlich, told the BBC that he was surprised to see the submarine outside his home when he awoke this morning." (The HMS Astute, stuck in the mud just yards off the coast of Scotland. The new submarine has been described as Britain's 'stealthiest' because its 39,000 acoustic panels rendered it invisible to enemy warships and submarines. The Navy used old-fashioned ropes and tugboats to tow it back out to deeper water.)

♦ "Sorry, we didn't know you were invisible." (The mocking Serbian apology offered in 1999 after its military shot down an American F-117A stealth fighter during NATO's bombing campaign.)

*** The steam locomotives on the Jitong railway...

♦ "They seem almost like beasts, don't they? You stand close to one, and it gives off heat. The compressors pant. When it's going up a steep grade, the rods are going back and forth in a cyclic motion and the thing strains and grunts. To my mind, there is nothing more romantic. You can hear them from afar, and they speak to us of the ability to travel to different places and feel mystical things." (Gary Hunter, about the steam locomotives on the Jitong railway.)

♦ In late December 2009 modern electric rail service was disrupted in England by cold and snow which even shut down the Channel Tunnel. A steam locomotive offering "Christmas meal" trips was unaffected, however. On its final trip of the season, it picked up 100 stranded passengers at Victoria Station and carried them to cities in the south for free. (Old technology rescues new.)

*** Steam under high pressure is dangerous...

♦ "Steam under high pressure is dangerous, of course. People were killed (140 in a gigantic boiler explosion in Charleston in 1838, for instance). Cassandras denounced what they saw as a troubling new American tendency to recklessness and blind ambition: 'Go Ahead!' seemed to one diarist of the time to be the watchword of the age, 'regardless of the consequences and indifferent to the value of human life.'" (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "Most of the new passengers were Union soldiers, chiefly from Ohio and just released from Confederate prison camps such as Cahawba and Andersonville. The US government had contracted with the Sultana to transport these former prisoners of war back to their homes." (From the Wikipedia article "Sultana (steamboat)," a Mississippi River steamboat paddlewheeler that blew up on April 27, 1865, killing an estimated 1,800 of 2,400 aboard. Three of the ship's four boilers exploded, and the ship sank near Memphis.)

There were isolated cases of cannibalism. The laws of human civilization were suspended. The jungle law was in force. Man dreamed the prehistoric dreams of the cave dweller..." (Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak.)

♦ "The driver stopped the car near the corpse of a dead horse...Lenard watched the anxious, unshaven men hewing off slabs of frozen horsemeat with hatchets. One soldier, standing between the horse's exposed ribs, looked like a carpenter up in the rafters of an unfinished roof.../ Suddenly the road and the ruined house were caught in the rays of the setting sun. The empty eye-sockets of the burnt-out building seemed to fill with frozen blood. The ploughed-up, soot-covered snow turned golden. The dark red cave of the horse's innards was lit up. The snow eddying across the road turned into a whirl of bronze.../ It was like a scene from the Stone Age. The grenadiers, the glory of the nation, the builders of the New Germany, were no longer travelling the road to victory.../ How was it that the dazzling energy of Hitler and the terrible power of a people moved by the most progressive of philosophies had led to the quiet banks of a frozen Volga, to these ruins, to this dirty snow, to these windows filled with the blood of the setting sun, to the quiet humility of these creatures watching over a steaming cauldron of horsemeat?" (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part Three, Chapter 31.)

♦ "Well, I think, you know there was that movie A Perfect Storm about all these things came together to make a superstorm. I think there were a lot of factors that just converged for Tyson-Douglas. From Douglas' standpoint his mother had died, you know, a month and a half or whatever before the fight. And he was always talented, but he was not real dedicated to training and, you know, and showed up overweight and under-motivated. Well, his mother died. So, he trained as he had never trained before, because he dedicated the fight to his mother's memory. That's on one hand. The other thing was that Mike Tyson had bought into the myth of his own invincibility... And there were rumors...that he was runnin' four, five or six girls a night—Japanese hookers—through his room. And if the old adage—you know, that sex takes your legs, you know—is true...it's amazing he had enough strength to crawl into the ring before the fight. And then once the bell rang, that was not the Buster Douglas he had expected, this was a different guy..." (Boxing writer Bernard Fernandez. ### *** analysis

♦ Wikipedia has two articles. The first article is "Just So Stories," which describes the Just So Stories for Little Children written by Rudyard Kipling and published in 1902. The stories explain animal characteristics, such as how the leopard got its spots, or how the rhino got its skin, or how the camel got its hump. Those are the actual "Just So Stories." The second Wikipedia article is the figurative "Just-so story," which discusses something called the "anthropological sense."

♦ "Many different streams of migrants were to make their confluence in the future United States. But the British stream flowed first and remained foremost. From the beginning its leaders were out of sympathy with the Government at home. The creation of towns and settlements from the wilderness, warfare with the Indians, and the remoteness and novelty of the scene widened the breach with the Old World. During the critical years of settlement and consolidation in New England the Mother Country was paralysed by civil war. When the English State again achieved stability it was confronted with self-supporting, self-reliant communities which had evolved traditions and ideas of their own." ♦ "The icebergs' source, the Jakobshavn Glacier, is sometimes called an outlet glacier and sometimes an ice stream. Ice is always flowing, albeit slowly, from the center of the ice sheet toward the edges. In an ice stream, it flows particularly quickly. As Jakobshavn's calving front retreated, it also thinned, and the glacier's speed—already brisk for a block of ice—increased. In 2012, its flow rate exceeded a hundred and fifty feet a day, which is believed to be a glacial world record. Though it has since slowed down again, the glacier has still been losing a lot of ice—during the past few decades, some ninety billion tons of it. (All on its own, Jakobshavn is believed to be responsible for more than one per cent of global sea-level rise since 2000.)" ### *** Noland Creek Trail outside Bryson City...

♦ The trailhead for the Noland Creek Trail in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park is almost at the end of The Road to Nowhere out of Bryson City, western North Carolina. In a little over a mile you will cross four wooden bridges. On the first, look to your left, and the current is going away. On the second, coming towards you. On the third, going away. On the fourth, coming towards you. Now that's twisty! It's a wonderful walk, in every season.

♦ "A great Indian river, at low water, suggests the familiar anatomical picture of a skinned human body, the intricate mesh of interwoven muscles and tendons to stand for water-channels, and the archipelagoes of fat and flesh inclosed by them to stand for the sandbars. Somewhere on this journey we passed such a river, and on a later journey we saw in the Sotlej the duplicate of that river. Curious rivers they are; low shores a dizzy distance apart, with nothing between but an enormous acreage of sand-flats with sluggish like veins of water dribbling around amongst them; Saharas of sand, smallpox pitted with footprints..." (Following the Equator: A Journey Around the World by Mark Twain. Of course, he is talking about a braided river. See the Wikipedia article "Braided river." Wikipedians are wonderful.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

stripe (of all stripes)

*** coal, sand dredging...

♦ "People at my age don't like to move to a new place. But we have no choice. We have no water. The earth is sinking. The air is poisoned. And there's that big man-made mountain." (An elderly Shanxi Province villager in Shangma Huangtou, which is surrounded now on three sides by the An Tai Bao open-pit coal mine. From "The Not So Good Earth," by David Barboza, The New York Times, June 23, 2006.)

♦ "The coal industry calls this 'coal country.' I call it God's country... The Appalachian people have been lied to for the past 100 years, based on coal. Promised prosperity, based on coal. And I still don't see it... We pay the ultimate price for coal. The highest-producing coal counties in the US are the poorest. They have stolen the wealth from these communities and the people." (Maria Gunnoe in West Virginia, winner of the North American Goldman Environmental Prize in 2009 for confronting coal companies in Appalachia and their program of mountaintop removal. Julia Bonds won for the same effort in 2003.)

♦ “Though most people never give it a second thought, sand is a crucial ingredient in the construction of roads and buildings—the skeletons of modern cities. Concrete and asphalt are largely just sand and gravel glued together with cement... / Worldwide, more than 48bn tonnes of ‘aggregate’—the industry term for sand and gravel, which tend to be found together—are used for construction every year. That number is double what it was in 2004. It’s an industry worth hundreds of billions of dollars annually. / Pulling all of that sand out of the ground, however, takes a severe toll on the environment. Across the world, riverbeds, beaches and floodplains are being stripped bare by sand miners. In response, authorities are trying to regulate the manner and location of extraction. In turn, it has spawned a global boom in illegal sand mining. ‘As the price of sand goes up, the ‘mafias’ get more involved,’ says Pascal Peduzzi, a researcher with the United Nations environment programme and author of a study on sand mining.” (The Pulitzer Center.)

♦ “Why the world is running out of sand” by Vince Beiser, BBC Future, 17th November 2019.

*** analysis

♦ “Food desert. It’s a term I’ve used myself...” (“Let’s Stop Using Metaphors that Celebrate Extraction, Colonialism, and Violence: Earth, Justice, and Our Classrooms” by Bill Bigelow, Rethinking Schools, Fall, 2022, Volume 37, No. 1.)

♦ “And America Strong tonight. Two American heroes reunited and ready to celebrate the holiday together.” (ABC World News, Nov. 27, 2024. A military dog-handler and a retired military dog.)

*** analysis

♦ “We don’t need ‘Buffalo Strong.’ We need for this to never happen again.” (A member of the Buffalo community after a mass shooting, on the inadequacy and sentimentality of the “Buffalo Strong” slogan.)

♦ “She takes issue with the social media hashtag #BuffaloStrong, because it could trick people into thinking that survival is the goal, when they really deserve to exist and thrive without the fear of being hunted down in a grocery store.” (“Buffalo’s poet laureate calls for change” by Raquel Maria Dillon, NPR, Race, May 17, 2022.)

♦ "My big thing is to do more stuff like this..." (Kyle Gordon about his song "Planet of the Bass" and his upcoming album.)

♦ MR: Getting into sort of X Y or Z newest wellness fad can for some folks kind of put them on this track, kind of filter them or funnel them closer and closer to anti-vax stuff, closer and closer to QAnon stuff, and QAnon itself is like closer and closer to organized white supremacy. AG: Yes. ("The Wellness to QAnon Pipeline," Maintenance Phase podcast.)

♦ "The right to my body is super important and I'm pro-choice. I also care about immigration. My past research and stuff has been in like immigration and refugees." (A UPenn coed, heard—where else!—on NPR's Morning Edition.)

♦ "This shit, it doesn't faze me too much, only because like I've seen like, like... I'll just say human life to me, the way I look at it if I don't know you if I don't know you is meaningless it's meaningless I'm just keeping it straight up but... Yeah, he's dead what can we do now?" (Alex Bodger aka GoraPakora on TikTok. He stood by and filmed the murder of Paul Stanley Schmidt on his cellphone.)

♦ "He has an unfortunate tic, when speaking about grave topics, of trailing off his sentences and adding filler words like blah blah blah and all that stuff." ("Arnold's Last Act" by Mark Leibovich, The Atlantic, April 2023.)

*** analysis

♦ Type in "and stuff" into search at NPR, and you get 3,567 results and counting... Not every usage represents this marker of inarticulacy, but many do.

♦ Linguist John McWhorter's analysis of "and stuff" is interesting, as always. He notes that "and stuff" is similar to "that sort / kind of thing." "The assumption [is] that that the things not being specified are known already, such that one need not take the time to elaborate." McWhorter also points out that "and stuff" can be expressed as "n' shit" "in today's robust vernacular." In his FACE typology of MPMs (modal pragmatic markers), he considers it to represent "Acknowledgment: I Hear You." (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 1, "The Faces of English: Words Get Personal." Listen also to "The shifting Meanings Of Our Evolving Modern Language," wbur, on point, December 26, 2016.)

♦ "But the question is not: Can we understand this typist (who types professor as proffessor)? It is: How did this typist come to be, and what does this mean for us all?" (Richard Mitchel, 1929-2002. "The Underground Grammarian advocates ridicule.")

♦ This sort of language has many possible explanations.

♦ "Jackson believes that social media, a gathering threat for many years, tore open our collective reality in 2020; it created 'an alternate universe' in which identity-based suffering—or merely the claim to such, however implausible or vicarious—could be converted into social capital. In the theater world in particular..." ("The Radical Self-Awareness of Michael R. Jackson" by Thomas Chatterton Williams, The Atlantic, March 2024.)

♦ "More recently, we have approached the Israel-Hamas war and its spillover onto streets and campuses through the 'intersectional' lens that has jumped from the faculty lounge to newsrooms. Oppressor versus oppressed. That's meant highlighting the suffering of Palestinians at almost every turn while downplaying the atrocities of October 7, overlooking how Hamas intentionally puts Palestinian civilians in peril, and giving little weight to the explosion of antisemitic hate around the world."
