They also put on costumes featuring grass skirts, feathers, and bone necklaces..." ("In New Orleans, The Fight Over Blackface Renews Scrutiny Of A Mardi Gras Tradition," NPR, All Things Considered, 3 March 2019. The Zulu Club was founded in 1909.)

♦ "Tinku is a sublime, beautiful act. There's a predisposition in all of us to do Tinku. I believe that denying that impulse is harmful." (An Indian festival of street brawling and drinking in Bolivia.)

♦ "If you are born here it's in your heart, and I will do it for as long as my body allows it. It's not violent, but it is a way to release your own inner violence. You come out here and you get it all out, and for the next three months you're fine." (Mario Bianchi, on the Historic Carnival of Ivrea, during which thousands of citizens take over the town and hurl oranges at one another.)

♦ The Janadriyah festival promotes the culture and heritage of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. It takes place outside of Riyadh over a period of two weeks, and it includes camel races, regional and international pavilions, artists, singers, poets, dancers, musicians, foreign dignitaries, and the bestowing of honors and prizes. If you can attend, do so. Ahlan Wasahlan!

♦ "Rest in peace, soldier brave, God is nigh." (To the sound of Taps.)

♦ "After talking to my fellow paratroopers and drinking a toast to the memory of our departed comrade, I began to understand that his death had magnified our own belief in the danger, nobility, and superiority inherent in our elite unit. Instead of being diminished by his loss we were strangely magnified and empowered by it. This phenomenon is not limited to, although it is always present in, elite fighting groups. Nations celebrate their costliest battles, even losing ones—the Alamo, Pickett's Charge, Dunkerque, Wake Island, and Leningrad are examples—due to the bravery and nobility of the sacrifices involved." (On Killing by Lt. Col. Dave Grossman.)

*** boxing as a skill, an art, learning to box, self defence...

♦ "Now, look you here, Huw, my son. You are growing to be a man. It is a man's place to take punishment and give back more than he takes if there is a head on him. But sometimes he will have to take a hiding in the first ten rounds to give a bigger hiding in the next ten. But if you must have a hiding, make up your mind to a hiding. Have your hiding and learn from it. It is one thing to have a hiding, but quite another to be beaten. Never be beaten, boy. A hiding, yes, but never beaten. Come for more. Come always for more. And come for more until you are giving the hiding. Is it?... So long as he shall die with his blood in front of him, I will lift my head. A boy shall learn to fight, or let him put skirts about his knees. This boy has never been taught to fight, but he shall have his first lesson to-night. We will see if the National Schools can beat a Morgan... Now, a good straight left is the bully's downfall. That is lesson one from the book. Like this." (How Green Was My Valley by Richard Llewellyn. Huw had been beaten up by a bully after his first day in class at a new school.)

*** Joe Frazier, Larry Holmes, Nino Benvenuti, Emile Griffith...

- ♦ "Joe Frazier is my friend... If I had $4 left in my wallet, two of those would go to Joe." (Larry Holmes, after a reporter asked him if he had paid for an operation that Joe Frazier needed but couldn't afford. Larry wouldn't admit to it, but he had.)
- ♦ "Nino is a beautiful person and a great champion. It is so wonderful to see him again. We had three fights and they were all close. Maybe I won them; maybe he won them. The most important thing is that we are still good friends." (Emile Griffith speaking of Nino Benvenuti.)
- ♦ "Ingemar Johansson and Floyd Patterson became good friends who flew across the Atlantic to visit each other every year." (From the Wikipedia article "Ingemar Johansson.")
- ♦ "It became a racist fight. Larry Holmes is not a racist, I'm not a racist, and it was billed out to be. I believe that that was part of the promotion to make hate... Now, that got created by many things, I'm sure, and Don King would be part of putting that together." (Gerry Cooney about his fight with Larry Holmes at Caesars Palace on June 11, 1982, in Las Vegas, Nevada. It went 13 rounds before Cooney's trainer threw in the towel. Racial tensions were so high that Cooney ran accompanied by an FBI agent, and snipers were posted on the rooftops around Caesars Palace. The Wikipedia article for the fight says, "[P]romoter Don King and manager Dennis Rappaport began on the most massive and racially toned campaigns in boxing history..." Of course, Cooney was "The Great White Hope." A very old story. Holmes and Cooney ended up becoming good friends, not unusual for boxers, who are quickly forgotten by a fickle bloodthirsty public and, at the end—often in the throes of one kind of dementia or another—have only one another's help and friendship to depend on.)
- *** "Some day, they're gonna write a blues for fighters..."

- ♦ "The best fight I've ever seen, praying that Mick Conlan is ok." (An online commenter, BBC.)
- ♦ "[Muhammad] Ali... peeked out the window, where a crowd stood waiting to see a young man named Gary Wells attempt to jump the water fountain at Caesars on a motorcycle, the same jump that had almost killed stunt rider Evel Knievel. Ali turned away. / 'I don't want to see nobody get his head ripped off,' he said. 'They encourage him, but I know what people want to see when they watch something like that.' / Ali... lay down on this bed and his rubdown man, Luis Sarria, closed the curtains... / An hour later, the young man on the motorcycle missed his landing ramp and nearly killed himself crashing into a brick wall at eighty-five miles an hour." (Ali: A Life by the great writer Jonathan Eig. His latest book is the 2023 King: A Life, about Martin Luther King Jr.)
- ♦ "Mike's wife gradually turned into his caretaker, feeding him, bathing him, sitting him down on the toilet while she was in the shower so he couldn't wonder off. His decline accelerated in 2005, and Ellen was forced to move him into a full-time care facility. In June his heart slowly stopped beating over the course of several days, like a heavy bag coming to rest after one final punch. The man who couldn't stop fighting finally did." ("Boxing in his Brother's Shadow, He just Wouldn't Quit," by Jonathan Mahler, The New York Times, December 31, 2006. Mike Quarry suffered from pugilistic dementia. His more famous brother, Jerry Quarry, suffered from the same disease. As boys, they pounded one another to earn their father's respect, and Jerry worked Mike's corner during fights.)
- ♦ "Some day, they're gonna write a blues for fighters. It'll just be for slow guitar, soft trumpet and a bell." (Sonny Liston. His biography, published in 1963, was titled The Champ Nobody Wanted.)

♦ "In combat, cleanliness for the infantryman was all but impossible. Our filth added to our general misery. Fear and filth went hand in hand..." (With the Old Breed: At Peleliu and Okinawa by E. B. Sledge.)

♦ "First and last there were, I think, eight thousand cases of Typhoid in Bloemfontein. Often to my knowledge both 'ceremonial' Union Jacks in a battalion would be 'in use' at the same time. Extra corpses went to the grave under the service blanket. / Our own utter carelessness, officialdom and ignorance were responsible for much of the death-rate. I have seen a Horse Battery...be assigned, by some idiot saving himself trouble, the site of an evacuated typhoid-hospital. Result—thirty cases after a month. I have seen men drinking raw Modder-River a few yards below where the mules were staling...The most important medical office in any Battalion ought to be Provost-Marshall of Latrines. / To typhoid was added dysentery, the smell of which is even more depressing than the stench of human carrion... / It is possible, though I doubt it, that first and last we may have killed four thousand Boers. Our own casualties, mainly from preventable disease, must have been six times as many." (Something of Myself by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ "Everything that [Florence Nightingale] had urged and entreated in her reports was now done. Orders began to fly. Someone had finally appeared in Scutari ready to take responsibility for something! The sewer under the hospital was cleaned out; the drains were opened; the floorboards were disinfected; the rats were driven out; the water supply was purified. It had taken six months of misery before these things were done, but the commission, Florence later said, 'saved the British army.' The effect was felt immediately. The death rate in the hospital quickly dropped from 420 to 22 per thousand." (Florence Nightingale by Ruth Fox Hume. Florence Nightingale was known as "the Lady with the Lamp." She was not, in fact, a nurse. She was an administrator, logistician, statistician, advocate, reformer, educator, founder, writer, supplier of stump pillows, etc.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ Twice as many Civil War soldiers died of disease as of battle wounds. The war, Union surgeon general William A. Hammond later observed, was fought at the "end of the medical middle ages." Neither the germ theory nor the nature and necessity of antiseptics was yet understood. A wave of epidemic disease—measles, mumps, and smallpox—swept through the armies of volunteers in the early months of war, then yielded precedence to the intractable camp illness: diarrhea and dysentery, typhoid and malaria. Ether and chloroform had made military surgery a more plausible and widespread response to wounds, but lacking an understanding of antiseptics, physicians routinely spread infection with unclean instruments and dressings. After the Battle of Perryville in 1862, water was so scarce that Union surgeons performing amputations almost around the clock did not wash their hands for two days. (This Republic of Suffering by the great historian Drew Gilpin Faust.)

♦ "With human corpses, human excrement, and rotting rations scattered across Peleliu's ridges, the blow flies or bluebottle flies underwent a population explosion. Those nasty insects were so large, so glutted, and so lazy that some could scarcely fly... It was revolting, to say the least, to watch big fat blowflies leave a corpse and swarm into our C rations... Each morning, just before sunrise, when things were fairly quiet, I could hear a steady humming sound like bees in a hive as the flies became active with the onset of daylight. They rose off the corpses, refuse, rocks, brush, and wherever else they had settled for the night like a swarm of bees. There numbers were incredible." (With the Old Breed by E.B. Sledge.)

♦ "For the first time in my life I beheld a raging forest fire at close quarters, a fearful spectacle! Enormous cedars, gripped by the flame, were blazing like colossal torches. Beneath them, on the ground, was a sea of fire. Everything was burning, grass, fallen leaves, trunks, logs, stumps. We could hear living trees groan and burst from the heat. The yellow smoke rolled upwards in enormous billows. Waves of fire raced over the ground. Tongues of flame wound round the stumps and licked the red-hot rocks... I saw a wild boar make his way across the river, a big snake swim sinuously over, and a woodpecker flew from tree to tree like a mad thing, while a nutcracker never ceased its raucous chatter..." ♦ "The twelve soldiers, under the command of an officer, stood in front of the condemned man. The sentence [for desertion to the enemy] was read and the provost-marshal drew a cap over the man's eyes. Then the officer gave the stern commands: 'Get ready, aim, fire!' Eleven bullets struck the young man; still he was not dead. The provost-marshal was obliged to use his own revolver, to put him out of pain. Scenes like this jarred my nerves much more than a battle. And now, when more than a quarter of a century has passed since this took place, it causes a shuddering sensation to think of it; still more to write all the circumstances of such a dreadful spectacle."

(From Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. He served through the Civil War.)

♦ "An army's bravest men are its cowards. The death which they would not meet at the hands of the enemy they will meet at the hands of their officers, with never a flinching." ("What I saw of Shiloh" by Ambrose Bierce. Union soldiers executed for cowardice.)

♦ "During the first world war, there were more than 300 British soldiers who were executed for desertion... which is considerably more people—several times the number—of German soldiers who were executed for similar offenses during the war. The Germans became far more draconian during World War II. There has been a long battle in recent decades for getting posthumous pardons for these men and it has become a proxy battle about how the war itself is to be remembered." (Adam Hochschild, talking about his book, To End All Wars. From "Tracing The Divides In The War To End All Wars," NPR, Fresh Air, April 27, 2012.)

♦ "Dawn. The whole company is standing waiting in a small woodland glade. The firing squad is also there, as is the doctor. And the priest, who is trembling with fear at what is to happen. The first of the two prisoners arrives..." (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England. [Footnote: The Italian army executed just over 1,000 of its own men during the war, which is far more than the number executed in the British army (361), not to mention the German army (48). Over 15,000 Italian troops were condemned to life imprisonment for crimes against military discipline and many of them remained in prison long after the war was over, in some cases until 1945. The Italian commander-in-chief, Luigi Cadorna, insisted on 'iron discipline.'"]

♦ "One day, just as we were sitting down to dinner, three men were brought to the door of the tent by the Provo. The case against them was clear, and I had nothing for it but to decide that they should be led away and hanged in some place where they might be seen by the whole column in its march next day. I had a good many guests with me on that occasion, and they seemed dreadfully shocked and could not eat their dinner. I didn't like it much myself, but, as I told them, I had no time to indulge my feelings, I must do my duty. Well, the dinner went off rather gravely, and next morning, sure enough, three men in uniform were seen hanging from the branches of a tree close to the high road. It was a terrible example and produced the desired effect. But you may guess my astonishment when, some months afterwards, I learned that one of my staff took counsel with Doctor Hume, and as three men had just died in hospital, they hung them up and let the three culprits return to their regiments. I suppose I was angry at first. But as I had no wish to take the poor fellows' lives and only wanted the example, and as the example had the desired effect, my anger soon died out and I confess to you, that I'm very glad now that the three lives were spared." (Arthur Wellesley, 1st Duke of Wellington, during the Peninsular War of 1807-1814.)

♦ “The Chinese employ the following method of catching fish. They build a dam across a stream with stones from one bank to the other, leaving an opening in the middle. The water trickles between the stones, but the fish find their way down the main stream through the opening, where they are caught in an enclosure built of osiers. The Chinese visit it two or three times a day and like that catch plenty of fish.” (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ “In the creeks the water was well frozen. The ice was smooth as a mirror, clean, and transparent. Through it we could clearly distinguish the shallow parts and the deep pools, the weeds, stones, and waterlogged trunks. The natives cut some holes through the ice and let down a double net. When it was dark they lit their rush torches and ran in the direction of the holes, every now and then hammering on the ice with their mauls. Terrified at the light and noise, the bewildered fish dashed forwards and were caught in the nets.” (An Udehé fishing trip. From Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

*** whales, walruses, seals...

♦ "Before oil, there was whale oil."

♦ "We stopped killing whales for oil only when kerosene and finally electric bulbs provided better and cheaper lighting."

♦ "We will make electricity so cheap that only the rich will burn candles." (Thomas Edison, December, 1879.)

♦ “The first great oil fortunes in the United States were established not by Texans poking into the hard-baked earth, but by New England mariners roaming the seas in search of whales... Blacksmiths made whaling irons and harpoons, rivets, and nails; coopers made casks; boatwrights fashioned sturdy whaleboats from local timber; outfitters stocked all manner of goods for voyages that often lasted three or four years; artisans fashioned sails and rigging; managers and clerks tabulated profits and losses, expenses, insurance costs, and wages, and kept track of the ever-changing price per barrel of oil. For the sailors there were boarding houses, saloons that sold delirium and death, dance halls, and brothels. An equally furious and busy industry dedicated itself to converting oil and whalebone into lamp oil, watch oil, candles, hairpins, and corsets. America ran on the by-products of slaughtered whales. Whale oil greased the nation’s machines and illuminated its nights. Their oil lubricated watches, clocks and guns. Wealthy young women wore corsets of whalebone and perfume containing ambergris, a waxy substance found in the whale’s intestines. At the top of a sperm whale’s head was a case containing up to 500 gallons of pure, fine oil, just waiting to be scooped up. At the end of a long voyage, a fortunate ship might groan back toward home port bulging with 4,000 barrels of oil—worth more than $100,000. (Hetty: The Genius and Madness of America’s First Female Tycoon by Charles Slack.)

♦ “Throughout the 1870s, American whaling vessels had taken as many as 125,000 walrus from the Bering Strait region. The slaughter had proved to be a lucrative sideline to the whaling business. The whalers cooked the animal’s blubber into oil and hacked off the tusks to sell in ivory markets as far away as England and China. In a single season in 1876, more than 35,000 Bering walrus were killed... the whalers could render more than twenty gallons of oil from the blubber of a single mature bull.” ...” (In the Kingdom of Ice: The Grand and Terrible Polar Voyage of the USS Jeannette by Hampton Sides.)

♦ “The results of Cook’s intrusion into Tahiti and Australia had been bad enough for the native peoples: for the Antarctic animals it was a holocaust. His account of his voyage in the Resolution was naturally of intense interest to the whaling and sealing industry in the northern hemisphere, where the catch was already diminishing in the closing years of the eighteenth century. Here now was news of a magnificent hunting ground in the far south: seals and whales by the million, all ready for the taking. From Le Havre in France and Hull in England, and from New Bedford and Nantucket in America, the whaling and the sealing fleets set out. / No one will ever know how many whales and seals were killed in the southern ocean in the ensuing fifty years. Was it ten million or fifty million? Figures become meaningless; the killing went on and on until there was virtually nothing left to kill, nothing at any rate that could be easily and profitably killed. / The sealers came first. With the aid of Cook’s charts they found their way down to the desolate islands he had discovered, and then went on to explore many new coasts and islands on their own account. There was a devastating simplicity in their methods: they clubbed the animals to death... / In the South Shetlands a single ship would expect to take as many as 9,000 seals in three weeks, and there is a record of two ships and sixty men demolishing 45,000 in one season. And since every pelt was worth a guinea—in some markets like Canton in China very much more—there was every inducement for the slaughter to go on to the better end. An end, however, there had to be; and by the eighteen-thirties fur seals in the southern ocean were virtually extinct, and sea-lions and sea-elephants were dying out as well. / The main attack was now diverted to the whales, and in an age that needed oil for its candles (not to speak of the whalebone for such articles as umbrellas and women’s corsets), this was an even more profitable trade than sealing... The first comers in the South Pacific hardly needed to go to sea at all; the whaler simply set up a shore factory in some estuary where the animals were known to breed and then attacked them from small boats. There were dozens of such places: the Bay of Islands in New Zealand, the Derwent Estuary in Tasmania, all the coves and inlets along the deserted coasts of southern, western and eastern Australia... / In the Derwent River estuary where it had once been dangerous to sail in a small boat because of the numbers of right whales there—mostly pregnant mothers either calving or about to calve—a massacre went on year after year until the animals were wiped out. And so the hunt went on from May to October in all the breeding and mating grounds along the New Zealand and Australian coasts... / In these conditions it was not long before bay whaling—the taking of whales in their off-shore breeding grounds—was practically finished and the hunt was then continued in the open sea. Pelagic whaling—the taking of whales in the ocean—was a more arduous business... / By 1846 America had

735 whalers operating out of the New England coast, and each of them averaged 100 whales, or 300 tons of oil, on every voyage. They came south round the Horn and out into the Pacific where their bases in the tropics were Hawaii and Tahiti, and in the south, the Bay of Islands in New Zealand, Sydney and Hobart town in Tasmania. It was a tremendous killing. Eyre on his walk along the Great Australian Bight found the shore at Fowler’s Bay ‘literally strewn in all directions with the bones and carcasses of whales’, and he estimated that there were 300 American and French vessels operating on that coast alone. For meat they killed the kangaroos on Kangaroo Island, and for women they raided the native tribes ashore.” (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

♦ "This is not a flex. This is a waste. Rich people can't read the room." (An online commenter about the influencer Linda Andrade, aka the "Original Dubai Housewife," who spent $2.5 million in a week. She is the wife of a Dubai millionaire.)

♦ "Squatting next to a bear you just murdered is such a weird flex." (A female who apparently doesn't hunt.)

*** sports...

♦ In the NBA, when one player slam-dunks on another, it is seen as a sign of dominance. The dunker generally takes the opportunity to posture, often clenching his fists, pushing his chest out, and baring his teeth. The one who has been dunked on reels away in defeat, his posture lowered. The dunker's teammates often jump up and down, wave towels or place them over their heads, and hoot.

♦ "It was not taunting, he was patting himself on the back and rightly so." (A commenter about a play by Allen Lazard of the Green Bay Packers during which he blocked three Miami Dolphins defenders, knocking all three to the ground. Following that, he pointed at each one: one, two, three, for which he was fined $10,609 for taunting, even though none of the 3 defenders saw him.)

♦ "Some observers wondered if the All-Star guard was using finger guns." (The NBA player Ja Morant, celebrating himself after scoring an ally-oop basket in overtime. He had just been reinstated to play following a long suspension for brandishing real guns in online videos.)

*** monetizing, commerce, biz, ads, merch, pods, books...

♦ A grinning Black Dad tugs at his too tight yellowish retro Tee shirt, which reads "Spring Break 93." He says, "Your father knows about saving. Everything I'm wearing, I've had since boot camp." A loud buzzer sounds for "wrong answer." The words appear on the screen, WEIRD FLEX. / The Black Dad's cute daughter says, "And I just saved on my car insurance for driving safe with USAA." An ecstatic voice sings. The words appear on the screen, GOOD FLEX. / The Black Dad shouts about his Tee shirt, "And it still fits! (It doesn't.) A voice says, "Weird flex. Good flex. Flex with our annual mileage discount. Insurance that flexes with you." (A cute online advertisement for USAA Auto Insurance. The web site address to contact includes "autoflex.")

♦ "This is how we flex." (An advertisement For Samsung phone.)

*** analysis

♦ Boasting, bragging, showing off, celebrating, etc. This usage probably refers to bodybuilders and their poses. It seems analogous to the lexicalized "take a bow" or "pat yourself on the back." Some shoot "finger guns" and then pantomime blowing smoke away from the barrel of a pistol. Others kiss the back of their hand or their fingertips to express admiration for themselves—the Bruno Mars' "Uptown Girls" "Gotta kiss myself, so pretty" flex. The great boxer Naseem Hamed would kiss his bicep after a knockout. A "mike-drop" is a kind of flex.

♦ Sometimes flexing and a "power move" are synonymous: "Fame is so powerful that renouncing it can seem like the supreme power move." Or, "It also feels, let's be real, like a bit of a power move," about an RADA-trained actor and her voice during an interview.

♦ "Mama's boy" is a flex, not an insult." (According to NPR's Neda Ulaby. See the Wikipedia article "Neda Ulaby.")

*** Nanga Parbat, the Hatu Pir spur, Tarbela gorge...

♦ "The breaching of an 1841 rockslide that temporarily blocked the Indus River resulted in probably the largest flood in recorded history. Models indicate the flood had a peak discharge of about 540,000 m<sup>3</sup>/s." ("The World's Largest Floods, Past and Present: Their Causes and Magnitudes," USGS, 2004.)

♦ "Sometime during the early part of June 1841, at two in the afternoon, a wall of water, mud and rocks roared out of the Tarbela gorge of the Indus River and overwhelmed a Sikh army encamped near the river. At least 500 soldiers perished immediately and the plain was 'sown with barren sand' (Abbott, 1848, p. 231.) That previous January, at the same time as a large British army was being shot down in nearby Afghanistan, an earthquake brought down the Hatu Pir spur of Nanga Parbat mountain into the gorge of the Indus River. The resulting dam backed water up over 150 m deep and as much as 30 km upstream to the confluence of the Hunza and Gilgit Rivers. Even though a note of warning on birch bark was sent downriver to warn of the rising hazard, no one at the mountain front seems to have understood the implications. The resulting flood devastation was but one more of a long line of outbreak floods that repeatedly sweep down the Indus from the high Himalayas." (Geomorphic Development Of The Western Himalayas by John F. Shroder, Jr, Department of Geography and Geology, University of Nebraska, Geol. Bull. Univ. Peshawar, 1989, Vol. 22, pp. 127-151.)

♦ "The river was a fearful sight. The speed of the current made one's head swim. It looked just as though the banks were racing past in the opposite direction to the water. The entire valley, from hill-side to hill-side, was filled with water. Monsters of the forest, their roots underwashed, crashed into the flood, dragging with them huge clumps of earth and many a shrub and sapling growing in it. Then the torrent picked up this fallen mass and swung it onward. With savage bursts the waters raced down the valley. Where some obstacle held it up the spot was marked by a cloud of yellow foam. Bubbles rose from the pools, floated down-wind, burst, and were replaced by fresh ones." (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ ...it is a river which is likely to be frozen solid from December until March, with ice piled in great packs and jams at perhaps thirty localities—piled mountain high with great ice blocks thrown into the most jagged contortions by reason of the grinding pressure brought to bear; then comes the annual "spring thaw" in which the Allegheny rids itself of the frozen constipation in one vast bowel movement which is a frightening spectacle to behold—urged by an enema of melting snow and drizzling rains which rile all the creeks to flood tide and cause a never-ending roar from each gully and ravine. The river stirs uneasily at first, winces, then with no warning whatever delivers itself of ice, drift, flotsam and jetsam, trees, logs, houses, barns, haystacks, cornshocks, barrels, dead pigs, bloated horses, boxes, barrels, packing crates, and other impedimenta which it has warehoused during the winter—all of the hodge-podge starts moving to the tune of thunderous cannonading of ice jams breaking, and one jam swoops down upon another, and with a continued crashing and rending the mighty discharge is on its way, now taking out bridges, piers, sometimes whole villages, with the natives of the bottom lands fleeing for the hills and terrified livestock jumping fences and racing away for Egypt... " (Fredrick Way, Jr., "The Allegheny," 1942. The account is wonderfully scatological!)

♦ Last time we held the levy / But the Mississippi claimed her valley / She backed into Tennessee, and Arkansas, and Illinois, and Missouri / She spread her arms over thousands of acres of land / and she left farms ruined, stock drowned, houses torn loose / nineteen-three, nineteen-seven, nineteen-fifteen, nineteen-sixteen, nineteen twenty-two, nineteen twenty-seven, nineteen thirty-six, nineteen thirty-seven / We built a hundred cities and a thousand towns / But at what a cost. [Scenes of a dog marooned on a rooftop; inundated houses; aerial views of flooded countryside and of flooded cities] (Narration from The River by Pare Lorentz, 1938, a New Deal government-financed documentary.)

♦ "Well, I say, you're a good 'un,' the policeman remarked... 'Sorry I've got to take you back to Dawson, but I only 'ope they won't be 'ard on you.' / 'Not so fast.' The Kid smiled curiously. 'We ain't under way yet. When I go I'm going down river, and I guess the chances are you'll go along... Come on outside, and I'll show you... Fill your pipe, first—this is pretty good plug—and enjoy yourself while you can. You haven't many smokes before you... See that bend down there? That's where she'll jam millions of tons of ice. Then she'll jam in the bends up above, millions of tons. Upper jam breaks first, lower jam holds, pouf!' He dramatically swept the island with his hand..." (And that is exactly what happens. The upstream jam goes out first, the downstream ice holds, and the Kid, the policeman who believes he is taking the kid back to Dawson to face justice, and the few others—men and dogs—on the island are all killed. According to the story, "And to Donald was vouchsafed a sight such as no man may see and live. A great wall of white flung itself upon the island. Trees, dogs, men, were blotted out, as though the hand of God had wiped the face of nature clean." The creepy story, "At the Rainbow's End" by Jack London, from The God of His Fathers.)

*** analysis

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, we have all taught "foot." It's a part of the body with an irregular plural. But unless we are teaching "English for Podiatrists (EFP)," our students will more like encounter "foot" in terms of measurement or orientation. By the way, all of those language specialties—English for Academic Purposes, English as a Lingua Franca—are nothing more than T-shirt slogans.

*** "The reconstruction of jungle events from signs on the ground..."

♦ "The reconstruction of jungle events from signs on the ground has always held great interest for me." (Man-Eaters of Kumaon by Jim Corbett, Introduction by Sir Maurice Hallett, Preface by Lord Linlithgow (Viceroy of India 1936-1943). It is a wonderful account of hunting man-eating tigers and leopards. The Jim Corbet National Park is in Uttarakhand. Tigers live there.)

♦ "How me lost pipe? Means me got old, or head now no good, or what...?' / He did not finish his phrase, stopped in the middle of a word, stepped back, stooped, and examined something on the ground at his feet. I stepped up to him. He was looking round with a rather worried air, and whispered: / 'Look-see, captain! This is Amba! He go behind us. That very bad, very. Track quite fresh. Him quite near now.' / I looked, and there saw the perfectly distinct and fresh impressions of an immense cat's paw, standing out sharply printed in the muddy track. That I remembered clearly, and, besides, Dersu could not have missed them. It was clear that the brute had come along since we had passed, in the same direction as ourselves, that he was following on our heels. / 'Him near, hid there,' said Dersu, pointing towards the right. 'He stood still here long time, when we stopped hunt pipe. We come back, he jump quickly one side. Look-see, captain, no water in track.' / I looked. Although there were puddles all round, the water had not yet found its way into this quite fresh pug-mark. There could be no doubt that the great brute had stood there and then, hearing our returning steps, had sprung into the thicket and vanished behind some fallen tree. / 'Him not go far. Me know well. Wait, captain! / We stood there silently a few minutes in the hope that some sound would betray the presence of the tiger, but there was the silence of the grave. In that silence I felt mystery, and fear..." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ "Families of the victims of the Oct. 7 attack allege both the AMP and SJP are propaganda fronts recruiting 'uninformed, misguided and impressionable college students to serve as foot soldiers for Hamas.'" (The Israel-Hamas war.)

*** analysis

♦ It's common now for social activists to refer to the marchers at the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma, Alabama as "foot soldiers."

♦ "Those who walk on foot have always been considered inferior to those who ride... In a more forthright manner we speak of the humble foot soldiers who are supposed to walk and of the footman who used to run, not walk, in front of his master's carriage. / This sharp social distinction between the walkers and riders introduces us to a fascinating angle of human attitudes, to the snobbery of people that is actually imbedded in our language..." (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. From Chapter 6, "Sources of Words of Attitudes and Emotions.")

♦ “Biden pledged to end the forever wars.”

♦ “Trump promised to end the ‘forever wars.’”

*** presentism, history in contempo-speak...

Forks of the Missouri
Three ~ (in Montana)

Forks of the Ohio
the ~, where the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers join

Forks Of the Tennessee
the Holston and French Broad form the ~ (East Knoxville)

♦ Properly named geographical features with "Forks" include streams and rivers (by far the most), valleys, ridges, summits, and glaciers (also referred to as "lobes"). They are commonly distinguished simply by the cardinal directions: North, South, East, or West. Also, Middle.

♦ Forks are often sizable tributaries. For example, Big Elk Creek in Montana has a North Fork Big Elk Creek (a tributary) and a Middle Fork Big Elk Creek (a tributary), along with many other tributaries, of course.

♦ There seems to be no "Forks of the Mississippi." But if there were one, it would be the confluence of the Missouri and the Mississippi. The Missouri is considered to be the longest river in the United States.

♦ The Little Tennessee River joins the Tennessee River just downstream from Knoxville.

♦ Missouri Headwaters State Park is in Montana. The park encompasses the confluence of the North Fork (Jefferson River), the Middle Fork (Madison River), and the South Fork (Gallatin River), which the three together create the Missouri River. In July 1805 Lewis and Clark, traveling up the Missouri River, reached the area and camped there. Faced with a decision, they decided to proceed up the Jefferson River.

♦ "The same formula again and again. I want to post pictures of myself in bathing suits. When I get criticized I'll say I want to do it for others and for body positivity. When I get criticized for that, I will show sadness that the world doesn't support mental health and I'm a victim, and finally I'll get praised for being so brave for living my own truth." (Bob Loblaw. A BBC HYS comment about "SI Swim model Natalie Mariduena wants to 'be an example' of 'body normalcy'" by Stephanie Nolasco, August 20, 2022.)

fort (hold down the fort)

hold down the fort
~ until reinforcements can be hired, trained (a company)

♦ "Amid the most beautiful scenery on the western shore of Lake Champlain stand the now lonely and grass-covered ruins of the once great fort of Ticonderoga, whose trenches have been so often traced in blood during the French, British, American, and Indian conflicts in the State of New York. The remains are still considerable, the stone walls being in some places thirty feet high. They are situated on a green eminence, just north of the outlet into Lake Champlain from Lake George, which was named by the Indians of old the Horican... / Mount Defiance lies about a mile south of the fort, and Mount Independence about half a mile distant, on the opposite side of the lake, around which are wooded hills that in some places rise to a thousand feet in height..." ("Ticonderoga, 1758," from British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant. In this particular battle, the French successfully "held down the fort" against General Abercrombie and the British. "On no regiment did the slaughter fall so heavily as on the Black Watch, which had a ghastly roll of 647 killed and wounded, of whom 26 were officers belonging to some of the best families in the Highlands." A year later, the British under Wolfe would defeat the French at Quebec and win Canada for the Crown.)

the latest pronouncement from the ~s (stock analysts)

they are ~ promising riches (stock analysts, etc.)

*** analysis

♦ In Canto XX of The Inferno, the fortune tellers and diviners have their heads screwed on backwards, so that as they walk forward they can only see backwards, and their tears run down their buttocks. About Amphiaraus, Virgil tells Dante: "In life he wished to see too far before him, / and now he must crab backwards round this track." (From the great translation of The Inferno by John Ciardi. Would all our modern-day media hosts, pundits and commentators suffer this fate!)

as we ~, we will see... (politics)

♦ In Canto X of The Inferno, Dante is curious as to why the heretics can foresee the future, but know nothing of the present, for example, if somebody is currently dead or alive. Farinata Degli Uberti, the great Tuscan war chief, explains: "We see asquint, like those whose twisted sight / can make out only the far-off... / When things draw near, or happen, we perceive / nothing of them..." (From the great translation of The Inferno by John Ciardi.)

♦ "Folks, America cannot go back. I'm here tonight to show what I believe is the way forward, because I know how far we've come." (President Joe Biden's 2024 State of the Union address to Congress. Kamala Harris, campaigning to be president in 2024, also made the idea of moving forward and not going back a rallying cry during the 2024 U.S. presidential election. Both were no doubt channeling John Lewis—a congressman from Georgia and civil-rights icon—who in 2018 said, "We've come too far, we've made too much progress, and we're not going back. We're going forward.")

forward (move forward, go forward, etc.)

♦ "Some people say they are awfully homely, awful bad looking, but to me... they are beautiful fish, just like a beautiful blonde." (Pat Wudtke, 73, in Wisconsin. He has speared sturgeon—living fossils—for 50 years during the state's annual season.)

♦ "It was quite horrific looking." (A beautiful frilled shark.)

♦ "Even the ugly sharks are beautiful..." (Shark enthusiast Katherine Rundell, specifically mentioning the goblin shark, which is a living fossil.)

♦ "The mudpuppy is relatively rare and looks a lot like its larger cousin, the Eastern hellbender." (WNC anglers: Seen any mudpuppies lately?" by Karen Chavez, Asheville Citizen-Times, USA TODAY Network, Sunday, December 27, 2020. Hellbenders are also known as "snot otters" and "water dogs." They are living fossils.)

rests upon a foundation

our global role ~ of unmatched military power (US)

♦ "And so rock bottom became the solid foundation on which I rebuilt my life." (The remarkable J.K. Rowling in her speech at Harvard University.)

*** analysis

♦ The writer who wrote, "Obama poured the social justice foundation" is to be commended. He has a very specific mental image of laying a foundation for a modern house or building, using concrete, poured out by concrete mixer truck. It is doubtful that most people who use the term "foundation" or "foundational" have any image in their heads whatsoever as to what an actual foundation is. Or as a contemporary speaker ignorant of grammar would probably say, "No idea as to what is an actual foundation."

foundational (adjective)

*** analysis

♦ "They're going to burn the forest to kill the fox." (An Iraqi, speaking of US invasion to rid Iraq of Saddam. The more things change, the more they stay the same.)

foxhole (military)

we used our entrenching tools to ~

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. In one Willie and Joe cartoon drawn by Bill Mauldin, a dogface is excavating a hole into the vertical side of a cliff and explaining to another bemused doggie, "It's a horizontal foxhole." In another Mauldin cartoon, two infantrymen in their foxhole are regarding a tank going by and the one is telling his buddy, "I prefer ours. It looks to me like those moving foxholes would just attract attention."

♦ In Life and Fate by Vasily Grossman (translated by Robert Chandler), Novikov says, "But what's there to love about it [the tank]. It offers a magnificent target. Anyone can put it out of action. It makes an appalling din that gives its position away to the enemy and drives its crew around the bend. And it shakes you about so much you can hardly even observe, let alone take aim."

♦ Winston Churchill noted during the Blitz, "[T]he law of diminishing returns operates in the case of the demolition of large cities. Soon many of the bombs would only fall upon houses already ruined and only make the rubble jump. Over large areas there would be nothing more to burn or destroy, and yet human beings might make their homes here and there, and carry on their work with infinite resource and fortitude."

♦ James E. Parker, author of Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of The Vietnam War, says to Dunn, his friend and fellow grunt, "That tank looks like a big metal building, looks like it would draw fire. And it's loud. You hear that thing today?"

♦ "There are no atheists in foxholes." (Father Cummings, Bataan.)

♦ "I always wondered who invented the absurd lie that proclaimed there were 'no atheists in foxholes.' Where else could atheism better thrive than in the killing fields where homicide was honored? In the Third General Hospital at Aix, the poker game was as religious as things got." (The wonderful Tony Hillerman, from Seldom Disappointed.)

*** analysis

♦ The dismounted infantryman knows where his shelter is, and where his safety lies. The cognitive linguist's "mundane reality is down" might be paraphrased by the soldier as "safety is down." As in the ground. Uniforms for MOUT are pixilated, to look like rubble. Keep your head down...

foxhole (Keynesians in a foxhole, etc.)

in the foxhole

~, when you're in those battles... (an NBA player)

*** analysis

♦ During a time of a serious epidemic, religiosity rises. People become more religious. And that actually is generally reversed, when the epidemic goes away. You know, they say there are no atheists in foxholes, well, we're under a barrage right now, so you know people get religious, but then afterwards, you know, their religiosity sort of returns to baseline..." (Nicholas Christakis, "Denial And Lies Are

he was an ~ young man (suicide)

♦ "As wave after wave of pain and outrage swept through the Times, over a headline that was not damning enough of Trump or someone's obnoxious tweets, I came to think of the people who were fragile, the ones who were caught up in Slack or Twitter storms, as people who had only recently discovered that they were white and were still getting over the shock. Having concluded they had got ahead by working hard, it has been a revelation to them that their skin colour was not just part of the wallpaper of American life, but a source of power, protection and advancement. They may know a lot about television, or real estate, or how to edit audio files, but their work does not take them into shelters, or police precincts, or the homes of people who see the world very differently. It has never exposed them to live fire. Their idea of violence includes vocabulary." ("When the New York Times lost its way" by James Bennet, 1843 Magazine (The Economist), Dec 14th 2023.)

fragility (white fragility, etc.)

♦ "Maybe nothing is more clearly defined by rap than the fragility of Black masculinity, and the perceived threat to masculinity that queerness poses." (Rodney Carmichael. From "Thugs don't dance": iLoveMakonnen and Drake tested rap's norms of masculinity, but only one passed," NPR, Louder Than A Riot Season Two, May 4, 2023.)

*** analysis

♦ Fragility (white fragility, etc.), moral panic (noun), panic (bisexual panic, etc.), and phobia (fatphobia, etc.) are often used by groups with agendas to mischaracterize and disparage their opponents.

♦ "Linguist John McWhorter Says 'White Fragility' Is Condescending Toward Black People," NPR, Morning Edition, July 20, 2020.

♦ "Life with Dead Metaphors: Impairment Rhetoric in Social Justice Praxis" by Tanya Titchkosky, University of Toronto. Journal of Literary and Cultural Disability Studies 9.1 (2015). She gives many examples of words that relate to disability, used figuratively, including amnesia; amputated; aphasia; autistic; blind; crazy; cripple; crippled; deaf; deformed; lame; limping...

frame (noun)

antagonizing your ideological opponent is built into the ~

♦ "Antagonizing your ideological opponent is built into the '-phobia' frame, and activists have sparred over whether that catalyzes progress or impedes it." ("How '-Phobic' Became a Weapon in the Identity Wars" by Amanda Hess, The New York Times Magazine, Jan. 26, 2016. It's a brilliant article.)

*** "The Building of the Ship"

♦ "Thus," said he, "will we build this ship! / Lay square the blocks upon the slip, / And follow well this plan of mine. / Choose the timbers with greatest care; / Of all that is unsound beware; / For only what is sound and strong / To this vessel shall belong. / Cedar of Maine and Georgia pine / Here together shall combine. / A goodly frame, and a goodly fame, / And the Union be her name! ("The Building of the Ship" by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.)

♦ Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's "The Building of the Ship" is a terrific poem. Franklin Delano Roosevelt wrote out by hand the following lines from it in a message he sent to Winston Churchill, and Churchill used those same lines in a speech broadcast to the English people: "Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State! / Sail on, O Union, strong and great! / Humanity with all its fears, / With all the hopes of future years, / Is hanging breathless on thy fate!"

frankenbiting

~ stitches images and audio together (editing, etc.)

♦ “In the end, we settled on ‘A free people demand to know’ (subject to a grammar check by our copy desk, which gave its assent). Success was short-lived—mercifully, no doubt. Late that evening, Bezos dispatched an email in the ‘not what you’re hoping for category,’ as he put it. He had run our consensus pick by his then wife, MacKenzie Scott, a novelist and ‘my in-house wordsmith,’ who had pronounced the phrase clunky. ‘Frankenslogan’ was the word she used.” (How The Washington Post got its motto, “Democracy Dies In Darkness.” From “Eight Years at The Washington Post by Martin Baron, The Atlantic, September 2023. A much better motto would be, “Democracy Dies Behind A Paywall.”)

*** analysis

♦ Type in “franken-” at Wiktionary, then click on “Derived terms,” and you will get a list which includes “Frankenbite,” recorded in this entry as “Frankenbiting.” Wiktionary is wonderful.

♦ “In this series, you’re gonna hear people who 20 years ago sensed we were in a pot of water slowly reaching a boiling point and chose to take things further...” (The podcast Burn Wild, BBC Sounds, about the eco-terrorist movement.)

♦ “Are we frogs? Are we being boiled and don’t know it yet?” (A Californian, discouraged by fires, drought, and record temperatures.)

♦ “Like many concerned keepers of the game and its traditions, Sword will often explain the creeping dispassion for baseball in terms of that overcooked analogy about the boiling frog in the pot. ‘Part of what made this so tricky was that the games were getting two or three minutes slower every year rather than half an hour slower, so there was never a point where it felt like a real emergency,’ he told me. I offered an alternative analogy, comparing baseball’s predicament to a slow-growing tumor that the new rules would surgically excise. ‘I’d prefer to go back to the frog,’ Sword said. / How did America’s beloved old frog find itself in such mortal danger...?” (“How Baseball Saved Itself” by Mark Leibovich, The Atlantic, July / August 2023.)

♦ “Don’t be the frog in the boiling water and think this is okay.” (Tim Walz, about something Trump may or may not have said.)

♦ "It remains all quiet on the deliberative front." (Jurors consider verdict for third day.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ All Quiet on the Western Front by Erich Maria Remarque. World War I.

♦ "The collapse of France and the destruction of the French armies and of all counter-poise in the West ought to have produced some reaction in Stalin's mind, but nothing seemed to warn the Soviet leaders of the gravity of their own peril. On June 18, when the French defeat was total, Schulenburg reported: 'Molotov summoned me this evening to his office and expressed the warmest congratulations of the Soviet Government on the splendid success of the German Armed Forces.' This was almost exactly a year from the date when these same Armed Forces, taking the Soviet Government by complete surprise, fell upon Russia in cataracts of fire and steel. We now know that only four months later in 1940 Hitler definitely decided upon a war of extermination against the Soviets, and began the long, vast, stealthy movement of these much-congratulated German armies to the East. No recollection of their miscalculation and former conduct ever prevented the Soviet Government and its Communist agents and associates all over the world from screaming for a Second Front, in which Britain, whom they had consigned to ruin and servitude, was to play a leading part." (Their Finest Hour by Winston S. Churchill, Chapter VI, "The Rush For The Spoils.")

♦ There were great husky men crying with the pain of gaping wounds and dreadfully swollen, discolored trench feet, who sank down exhausted the moment they stopped. There were strings of from eight to twenty blind boys filing up the road, clinging tightly and pitifully to each other's hands, and led by some bedraggled limping youngster who could still see... I wonder if I'll ever be able to look at marching men anywhere again without seeing those blinded boys, with five and six wound stripes on their sleeves, struggling painfully along the road." ### *** analysis

♦ What things are frozen in time? Countries like North Korea and Bhutan and Transnistria seem like such places. Certainly places like Australia when Cook visited or New Guinea when the first whites arrived in the highlands in the 1930s must have seemed frozen in time, and other remote places, such as northern Burma.

♦ Cataclysms can lock places in time, like Pompeii and Herculaneum by the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius, and Chernobyl in the Ukraine by the failure of a nuclear reactor.

♦ Fossils are frozen in time, whether in stone or in amber, in peat or in permafrost, in a glacier or in the long-vanished sediment of an ancient river or sea.

♦ Demilitarized zones, like the one between North and South Korea, or between Ethiopia and Eritrea, can be frozen in time, often to the advantage of the wildlife.

♦ In the U.S., military reservations, some taken over in the First World War, have been frozen in time. The small communities that existed on them were simply left to decay in place.

♦ The Great Smoky National Park has been frozen in time since its creation. The small communities were left to decay, so that only the foundations of buildings remain. Its old-time cemeteries, however, like the Proctor Cemetery, are still kept up or "V-upped" by descendants annually on Decoration Day.

♦ Areas flooded by dams are frozen in time. This is the case with Lake Fontana in North Carolina, where drowned bridges, trees, and even buildings may reappear when water levels drop.

♦ All places "frozen in time" are inherently interesting to people, because they make us think of the past, our own mortality, and eternity.

♦ "The OG Yield Curve Whisperer." (A triumph of trendy headline creation that somehow manages to include OG, "whisperer," and economics. NPR.)

♦ "And Alfie died in France, it was the only place in the world where it died." (Michael Caine speaking about the 1966 film.)

♦ "Soldiers who die are taken to a holding area, where they are made to do manual labor to underscore the point that dying is never fun." (Military-training language.)

♦ "I think the dance between those two things will always be a thing." (Tiana Kaye Blair, an artist-in-residence at the Dallas Theater Center.)

♦ Estheticians knead, wax, pluck, rub, and paint people.

♦ "I met a pancake in the West Cell..." (The full quote is: "I met a pancake in the West Cell, an enormous open laboratory space at M.I.T. which resembles an airplane hangar. What with all the pancakes and doughnuts being tested there, the West Cell has come to be called the West Cell Diner." ("Green Dream: Is limitless clean energy finally approaching?" by Rivka Galchen, The New Yorker, October 11, 2021. The "pancake" is an H.T.S. magnet, in the form of a stacked array.)

♦ "You be you, Daddy." (Barack Obama's daughters.)

♦ "You do you" has attracted the interest of The New York Times, the great writer Colson Whitehead, and the Yale Grammatical Diversity Project in North America. "You do you, I do me."

♦ “He’s the future, he’s the present, he’s the everything.” (An admiring sports pundit about the NBA’s Victor Wembanyama.)

*** analysis

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, we are used to teaching the future as a “tense,” as part of a grammar lesson. We hardly ever teach it as a word with its collocations: “We all want a better future for our children,” “Who knows what the future holds,” “But that’s in the future,” etc. Nor do we ever teach the future as a variety of concepts, with all their associated language. This dictionary and thesaurus can help.

♦ "It is one of the many ironies of Gallipoli that, after the chaos and confusion that had blighted the whole operation from the beginning, the final evacuations were models of superb organisation and planning... [Gallipoli] was a brilliant concept which should—and could—have succeeded... With Constantinople occupied, it is doubtful whether the Russians would ever have signed a separate peace—and the Russian Revolution might never have occurred... Had the campaign succeeded—as it so very nearly did—the Great War would probably have ended three years earlier, and a million lives would have been saved." (The Middle Sea: A History Of The Mediterranean by the wonderful historian John Julius Norwich.)

*** analysis

Gamification in ESL

flash deals, gamification and (rock-bottom) prices

~ ("Temu is as addictive as sugar")

*** analysis

♦ "The word 'gamification' is a curious one. Superficially, its meaning is clear enough. To gamify something is to make it like a game, usually by wrapping game-like elements around it: points, missions, in-game rewards; a profile, avatar or fantastical environment. By doing this, the thinking goes, the activity in question is made more engaging and enjoyable. Everyone is a winner! Yet the very essence of a game is that it's voluntarily undertaken, and that it confers satisfaction through a mixture of luck, skill and meaningful choice. None of these things are much in evidence in the context of an Amazon warehouse, no matter how many virtual dragon races take place within it." ("Why your life could be part of someone else's game" by Tom Chatfield, BBC, 21 September 2022. Chatfield points out quite rightly that this usage is more like a euphemism for an oppressive regime or organization.)

♦ "That morning, Paul's fellow lumberjacks were astonished to see him eat only a smallish breakfast of a dainty dozen eggs, a simple side of ham, a poor pound of bacon, a finicky foot of bear sausage, a small skillet of hash browns, a tiny trough of grits, but ten or so breakfast Burraidors, barely a half barrel of gravy poured over his biscuits, a paltry fifty or so cartwheel-size apple granola pancakes, and a tiny tub of bread pudding topped with a piddling pond of warm cream and hardly a half-acre of wild huckleberries. / 'Why, for God's sake! What has happened to your appetite, Paul!' his fellow-lumberjacks cried out in consternation and concern. 'Is the grub no good? Shall we run off the cooks, and kidnap a new bunch? Are you feeling poorly?' / 'By God! My appetite seems to have deserted me,' Paul said grimly. 'No doubt during the night. But it can't have got far, and I'll track it down and get it back or my name's not Paul Bunyan!'" ("When Paul Bunyan Lost His Appetite But Recovered It" by Samuel Langhorne Clemmons.)

*** analysis

♦ Gargantua, a kindly giant in French folklore, was the giant prince with a huge appetite and loud voice in Rabelais's 16-century satiric novel.

♦ "Maybe Joshua is getting advice from his corner to step on the gas and get this job done." (BBC commentator Carl Froch on Jermaine Franklin v. Anthony Joshua.)

♦ "They do get a little lazy, they do take their foot off the gas..." (A boxing commentator about Cuban boxers who relocate to the United States.)

♦ "You still have to hit the brake if you want to stop at some point. Because there is a wall there, and you are driving toward the wall, right? So if you want to stop before the wall, you have to start braking. So that's where we are. We don't accelerate anymore, which is good, but we don't brake it." (Pierre Freidlingstein at the University of Exeter. The good news is, the world might reach peak greenhouse gas emissions in the next couple of years, and then emissions would start to decline. The bad news is, limiting global warming to 1.5 degrees Celsius will, apparently, require reducing greenhouse gases to...wait for it...drumroll...zero.)

♦ "He was sharing a hotel room [in Fort Worth] with his father-in-law Yellow Bear. Before retiring, Yellow Bear 'blew out' the gaslight before going to bed, a mistake that Indians often made. Before the night was over, he was dead of asphyxiation, and Quanah, who remained unconscious for two days, barely survived." (Circa 1900. From Empire of the Summer Moon: Quanah Parker and the Rise and Fall of the Comanches by S.C. Gwynne.)

♦ "I keep my work together, all in order to help me to pass the examinations; I consult Mendes in everything and arrange my studies according to what he has done, for I should like to do it in the same way. The study of Latin and Greek is very difficult, but still it makes me feel happy, and I am doing what I longed to do. I may not sit up so late in the evening any more, Uncle has strictly forbidden it, still I keep in mind what is written under the etching by Rembrandt, 'In the middle of the night the light diffuses its radiance,' and I keep a small gaslight burning low all night. I often lie looking at it, planning my work for the next day." (Dear Theo: The Autobiography of Vincent Van Gogh, Edited by Irving and Jean Stone.)

*** analysis

♦ Gas Light was a 1938 English play by Patrick Hamilton. It is about an abusive and criminal husband who tries to convince his wife that she is crazy. The word has come to mean a certain sort of psychological manipulation. It can appear in a series like, "gaslighting, lying, and manipulation."

♦ "When I jog through upscale white neighborhoods near my home in Connecticut, white people tense up—unless I wear my Yale or University of Pennsylvania sweatshirts. When my jogging outfit associates me with an Ivy League university it identifies me as a certain kind of Black person: a less scary one who has passed inspection under the 'white gaze.'" ("Black Success, White Backlash" by Elijah Anderson, The Atlantic, November 2023. The Sterling Professor of Sociology and of African American Studies at Yale was born in Pemiscot County, Missouri, in 1943.)

♦ "White-centering can be thought of as a system that prioritizes white dominant culture to the detriment of non-white groups and cultures.../ White-centering has been given many names including the white gaze and whiteness as the default." ("3 Ways To Transform Your Workplace To Be More Equitable" by Janice Gassam Asare, Senior contributor, Forbes, October 25, 2023.)

♦ Straight men look at and judge women and others. They criticize women and others who do not conform to their notion of what they should be or how they should act. Women feel objectified by this attention, and shamed if they don't "give men what they want to see." Women and others are increasingly and unapologetically acting and making art in ways that defy this 'male gaze.'

♦ "She shaved her head in an explicit rejection of the male gaze..." (The Irish singer Sinead O'Connor, according to NPR's Anastasia Tsoulcas.)

♦ "It is really important to remember that we have very limited representation and presence isn't the same thing as representation centered around the Black American person the Black American community and it does not take into account constantly the white gaze." (Bethany C. Morrow, author of So Many Beginnings: A Little Women Remix, speaking with Lulu Garcia-Navarro on NPR.)

♦ "For Anders, although his newly brown skin is a constant physical reminder that he's no longer who he used to be, the greatest change may be in his psyche. He's now acutely aware of otherness and being observed, how he moves in the world and how he takes up space. When he returns to work...he's both drawn to and repulsed by the only other dark-skinned employee, who, unlike him, has always known what it's like to be treated as both invisible and hypervisible." (Cady Lang's Time review of The Last White Man by Mohsin Hamid, New York Times bestselling author of Exit West. This paragraph deftly weaves together several tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion.)

♦ "There is plenty of room in the world for mediocre men, but there is no room for mediocre women."

*** jumping on the "gaze" bandwagon...

♦ "'The 'female gaze,' a term often invoked by and about Sciamma, is an analogue of the 'male gaze,' popularized in the nineteen-seventies to describe the implied perspective of Hollywood movies—the way they encouraged a viewer to see women as desirable objects... For Sciamma, the female gaze operates on a cinematographic level..." ("Now You See Me: Celine Sciamma's feminist quest for a new grammar of cinema" by Elif Batuman, The New Yorker, February 7, 2022.)

♦ "In 'Women Painting Women,' the female gaze is front and center," Susan Stamberg, NPR, May 12, 2022.

♦ "In a piece for Vogue Scandinavia, Swedish Eurovision winner Loreen made the case for the naked dress as a way to push back against the male gaze."

♦ "You've probably heard the 'male gaze' or the 'white gaze,' but what about the 'coded gaze'? Computer scientist Joy Buolamwini coined the term while in grad school at MIT..." ("If you have a face, you have

♦ “Kim O’Grady, an experienced management consultant in Perth, Australia, couldn’t figure out why his resume was generating no job leads for more than four months, said Susanna Kim in ABCNews.com. He finally realized that companies were turning him down because his gender-neutral first name led them to assume he was a woman. ‘I pictured all the managers I had over the years and, forming an amalgam of them in my mind, I read through the document as I imagined they would have,’ he wrote on his blog. The truth became immediately apparent. ‘It was like being hit on the head with a big sheet of unbreakable glass ceiling,’ he said. After putting ‘Mr.’ before his name on his resume, he quickly landed a job. ‘The sad reality is this shows we all know how real and invasive sexism is,’ O’Grady wrote this week.” (“A name exposed a familiar truth,” The Week Magazine.)

♦ “Americans across the spectrum of race, gender and creed have had enough of this woke garbage.” (Piers Morgan.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. “Young lady came up and she said, ‘Vince,’ which I thought she was introducing herself to me. She said, ‘Can I get an interview after you tee off?’ And I was like, ‘Sure.’” (Everette Sands. And thus he was interviewed by the pretty young reporter Lauren Withrow, who thought she was interviewing the famous ex-NFL player Vince Young, at the BMW Charity Pro-Am in South Carolina. Funny! Nowadays, it is not unusual at all that a young lady might be named Vince, or refer to herself as “Vince.”)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A young man out on the town looking to pick up a pretty girl found himself in a jazz club, even though he knew absolutely nothing about jazz and, honestly, didn’t really even like it. He finally found a pretty girl to chat up, and at a certain point in their conversation—which seemed to be going very well, from his point of view—the pretty young woman said, “Do you like Billie Holliday?” To which the young man enthused, “I love him!” (Wrong answer!)

♦ "No Finnish unit, however small, went into battle without sufficient artificial warmth for every man. Frontline dugouts were equipped with small, efficient stoves that burned with a hot, steady flame and gave off the merest whisper of smoke. Just behind the front lines the Finns lived and worked in shellproof dugouts roofed over with layers of logs and earth and completely camouflaged. Inside these dugouts the walls were lined with furs and skins. Men could rest in snug comfort when they returned from patrol duty or a period of combat. When a Finnish soldier was wounded, he was usually back in the comfort of a warm aid-station bunker within the hour... / For many of the encircled Soviet troops, just staying alive, for one more hour or one more day, was an ordeal comparable to combat. Freezing, hungry, crusted with their own filth... for them the central forest was truly a snow-white hell... In the forest the Russian soldiers had to face what they called Belaya Smerť: the White Death. It came silently, when men became so numb with cold and fatigue that they just lay down in the snow and went to sleep, or it came violently, in the form of a sniper round fired from an invisible Finn hundreds of meters away... Aside from the field kitchens, the invaders' only source of warmth was campfires... [When a Russian soldier was wounded he] knew only an intensification of misery, cold, and pain." ♦ "Having grown up here [in California], I truly believe that Cal (the University of California, Berkeley) is a sleeping giant in terms of men's basketball. This is a sleeping giant. This is a program that can be a nationally ranked program year in and year out. That's what I'm excited about." (Coach Mark Madsen, about his new job at Cal. Cal had a 3-29 record the previous season, a 38-87 record with the coach Madsen replaced, 6 consecutive losing seasons, and a 16-game losing streak. A quick turnaround is quite possible, however, due to the transfer portal, exploitation of NIL, and relaxing academic standards: as Madsen has said, "I don't want a player to be penalized because maybe his high school doesn't offer enough AP courses." To quote the great boxing promoter Don King, "Only in America!")

♦ "This is going to be an uphill battle. So folks, we cannot be our own worst enemies. No, because the minute something goes wrong, the minute a lie takes hold, we cannot start wringing our hands. We cannot get a Goldilocks complex about whether everything is juuuust right." (Applause. Michele Obama speaking at the 2024 DNC.)

♦ In Krakatoa, the great writer Simon Winchester points out that volcanic eruptions are often associated with death and disaster and yet in fact they are one of a number of reasons why the Earth is "just right" for life. The earth is just the right distance from the sun, allowing for water in liquid form. Its size is just right, too, with just the right gravitational pull to maintain an atmosphere. It has just the right number of volcanoes of the right size to create and recycle elements essential "to the making and maintenance of organic life." Finally, the volcanic eruptions are often the result of the movement of great plates, which can't exist on planets that are too hot or too cold.

♦ "In 1849 the harbor of San Francisco was speckled with idle ships from which the crews had deserted in a body to go to the gold fields... The price for washing clothes was so high that the more well-to-do among the miners, gamblers and merchants sent bundles of laundry work to the Hawaiian Islands, which meant that they had to wait three months before they got back their shirts and socks... With great flourish the newspapers announced the arrival of each fresh batch of prostitutes, describing their charms..." (From A New American History by W. E. Woodward.)

♦ "A new American metropolis, San Francisco, had begun to rise on the coast, changing almost beyond recognition every few months... And Sacramento and Stockton, at the portals of the gold-bearing district, became thriving municipalities almost as rapidly as San Francisco. In April, 1849, the site of Sacramento, on Johann Sutter's domain, had four houses; that fall its population was approaching ten thousand... In the first five years after the discovery of gold not less than half a billion dollars was taken out." (Ordeal of the Union by Allan Nevins.)

♦ "Mothers, sons, daughters witnessed the truckloads of men leaving their villages. They took the little they had and off to the city they went. Side by side, these men stood at the back of the trucks, fighting hard the urge to look back." (Narration by Hugh Masekela from his "Songs of Migration," a revival of the music made by migrants who moved from all over southern Africa to Johannesburg following the Witwatersrand Gold Rush in 1886. "The songs...tell sorrowful stories about leaving home, waiting for letters that never come, yearning for distant lovers and enduring cruel conditions in the mines." ("Music, Infused with Sorrow and Joy, in Honor of Migrant Dreamers," by Celia W. Dugger, The New York Times, March 18, 2010.)

♦ "In the 1890s, gold was as important as oil is today: it made the world turn. Gold was crucial for governments because every country's currency depended on its gold holdings, and money and credit for economic expansion rested on increasing gold supplies. And like oil today, in the second half of the nineteenth century supplies of gold seemed to be dwindling, putting a squeeze on the world's economies. Banks were failing, breadlines lengthening. / Gold was also the basis for individual fortunes, because a prospector who struck a mother lode would never had to work again in his life. An ounce of pure gold dust (enough to fill a teaspoon) was and is worth a lot of money—nearly twenty dollars in 1896 and more than $1,000 today. Miners like Bill and Joe had been drifting into the Yukon basin for nearly twenty years, drawn by rumors of gold dust in the river's gravel bars and nuggets in its tributaries. They arrived with their shovels, gold pans, and picks, eager to make their fortunes. There were other lures, too—the chance to conquer unknown territories, live on the frontier, escape the rules and regulations of more ordered societies. Wild-eyed and leather-skinned, muscular and pugnacious, they clung to their dreams like warriors on a crusade. By 1896, there were perhaps a thousand such adventurers in the Northwest, alongside the uncounted indigenous people, including the Tutchone, Tlingit, Inuit, Han, and Tagish, who had made this inhospitable region their home for generations." (Gold Diggers: Striking It Rich in the Klondike by Charlotte Gray.)

♦ To really understand what a gold rush is all about, just look at Sebastião Salgado's amazing pictures of illegal gold miners excavating a pit in the Amazon. The lack of regulation, the frenzy of miners excavating a pit like ants swarming over a piece of flesh, the obvious danger to the men carrying bags of rocks on their backs up ladders, the almost surreal degradation of the environment... It's all in those pictures.

*** various groups...

♦ "What I did? You're racist!" (A man verbally abusing the police, eventually arrested.)

♦ "This is the best school I've ever taught at." (The character Dewey Finn in School of Rock, addressing his fellow teachers in the lunch room. The line is clearly meant to provoke a laugh. Nowadays, however, I suspect it would simply pass over the heads of most watchers.)

♦ "This espionage charges are ridiculous." (White House spokesperson Karine Jean-Pierre.)

♦ "iPhone 15 set to promises upgrades at steeper prices, analysts say." (ABC.)

♦ "He's always crying. He needs to remember who is his coach is?"

♦ "Do we have any sense of how much longer are these mudslides are going to be a risk for people?" (NPR's Michel Martin.)

♦ "It's an arms race to define what is antisemitism."

♦ "The staff spent a long time trying to figure out how can they help this boy feel better..." (NPR's Cory Turner, who reports and edits for the NPR Education team.)

♦ "Man found hanging in subway tunnel near Grand Central Station: cops." (The New York Post. The man was dead. He had committed suicide. He had hanged himself. Cops say no criminality suspected. It should be, "Man found hanged in subway tunnel...")

♦ "I mean about 9,000 people were just hung, or executed, shot..." (NPR's Weekend Edition Saturday host talking with Burkhard Bilger.)

♦ "They were taken into a different building and they were hung." (NPR's Ruth Sherlock, reporting from Damascus after the fall of Bashar Assad. From "What comes next for Syria after the Assad Regime" by Leila Fadel, Jane Arraf, Ruth Sherlock, NPR, Morning Edition, December 16, 2024. Presumably, Sherlock meant "hanged." There is room for ambiguity, though, for many prisoners were hung in various ways as part of their torture, but not hanged.)

♦ "For six hours after he was hung, his body was left on display in Damascus, swinging from a noose." (The Home That Was Our Country: A Memoir of Syria by Alia Malek.)

♦ The host of NPR's Weekend Edition Saturday spoke about the Jewish musicians and composers who "either fled, or they died, tragically..." during and after the period of Weimar Germany.

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "First, NPR needs to get the little things right. If it can't, what does that say about the accuracy of the bigger issues?... / Second, errors of grammar and usage tend to break the listener's concentration. If a listener stops to wonder if he or she really heard an error or a syntactical lapse, then whatever else the reporter or announcer was saying is lost because the listener's train of thought has been derailed." ("Listeners' Language Concerns" by Jeffrey A. Dvorkin, NPR Public Editor, March 29, 2005.)

♦ "for those grammar Nazis freaking out about the incorrect pluralization of the title....that's the point" (With a laughing-crying emoji. An online commenter about the 2024 film Wolfs starring George Clooney and Brad Pitt.)

♦ "Are you his teacher or wot? I would of thought (sic) that the grammar police had better things to do." (An online commenter on a BBC HYS about a soccer match. The target of his comment had criticised a poster's use of "would of" versus "would have." The (sic) was ironic and funny!)

♦ "Waal, north of the Mason Dixon line, that may well be true." (The grammatical correctness of "hanged by the neck until dead" versus "hung by the neck until dead." A North Carolinian putting the writer and compiler of this work in his place.)

♦ Commenter A: it doesn't seem to matter who the referee's are. / Commenter B: Referees, no apostrophe. / Commenter A: Really doesn't matter. / Commenter C: Well maybe it should / Commenter ? : Removed comment. (A BBC sports HYS.)

♦ Can you imagine a recitation of "Requiem" by Robert Louis Stevenson with the "lie" and "lay" verbs all screwed up? I can. "Under the wide and starry sky / Dig the grave and let me lay / And I lied me down with a will / Here he lays where he longed to be." Hilarious!

♦ OXYMORONS. Language arts; prescriptive linguists...

♦ "Click here to report a spelling or grammar error. Please include the headline." (actionnews5.com in Memphis. If only all websites—ABC, NPR, the New York Post, etc.—had such a link!)

♦ "Red Flag—The person can't meet in person, often working overseas for a government, army or an aid organization, and there are inconsistencies with what they tell you. For example, 'I'm born in America' but then they have poor English in messages." ("From romance baiting to sexual extortion: Red flags and romance scams to look out for on Valentine's Day" by Madeleine Achenza, Feb. 8, 2024. "Poor English." Wow, that's judgmental!)

♦ "Cause of death revealed: How did he died." (Such clickbait is often foreign and unsecured. Americans are constantly reminded to be on the lookout for such sites, with one tipoff being "ungrammatical" language or spelling "mistakes." In this single area of life, it seems, it is perfectly okay for Americans and linguists to be judgmental about language use.)

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, we have all taught the "place where" and "time when" distinction. It seems to no longer apply. We've told our students that "want" and "like" are not ordinarily used in the continuous. We've taught and tested the grammar of embedded questions.

On the other hand, read "Professor leads NSF-funded study of double negative use among American dialects" by Josh McAuliffe, psu.edu, September 21, 2023. "Blanchette and three fellow researchers recently received a $384,272 National Science Foundation collaborative research grant to fund their study, 'A Microcomparative Study of Negation in Dialectal Variation,' a continuation of Blanchette's longtime research on linguistic diversity among American English dialects."

*** analysis

♦ As ESL or EFL teachers, most of us have noticed and taken pride in the fact that our students have better grammar and language skills than many native-English speakers. In my experience, students take pride in that, too.

♦ "[My mom's] the person that was always making sure that I got lay versus lie right." (ABC host Linsey Davis.)

♦ "Merriam-Webster sanctions the use of "amass" as an intransitive verb. But of 34 example sentences, only one writer uses "amass" intransitively: she is Katie Myers, WIRED, 2024: "As the police amassed..."

♦ "There's no stopping people who want to improve (or improvise) existing words." (The editor Merrill Perlman, writing specifically about the use of "overwhelm" as a noun.)

♦ "But the question is not: Can we understand this typist (who types professor as proffessor)? It is: How did this typist come to be, and what does this mean for us all?" (Richard Mitchel, 1929-2002. "The Underground Grammarian advocates ridicule.")

♦ "One cannot change this all in a moment, but one can at least change one's own habits, and from time to time one can even, if one jeers loudly enough, send some worn-out and useless phrase...into the dustbin where it belongs." ("Politics And The English Language" by George Orwell, Horizon, April 1946.)

♦ This sort of language has many possible explanations.

♦ "Throng of tourists came to see the men and their iron leviathans at work. They held their children up to see and hear the dynamite blasts. They came day by day to watch the limestone walls appear, running straight and true for miles, and to see great new canyons form in front of them, like one of the huge chasms out west that excited travelers were reporting having seen. This was becoming Chicago's Grand Canyon, and it was made by man. (The Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal. From The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "When someone under the ice shines a flashlight, you see the flashlight in his hand and the spot where the light hits something, but you don't physically see the beam. There's nothing in the water to backscatter light. It's like you put a layer of ice seven feet thick across the top of the Grand Canyon and stepped through it. That's how you feel under Antarctic ice. As if you were hanging in space." (An ice diver.)

♦ If you are interested in kayaking, see the Wikipedia article "Grand Canyon of the Stikine." A whole book might be written comparing it to the Rhindu Gorge of the Indus in Northern Pakistan.

♦ The "Swiss Grand Canyon" is on the Vorderrhein.

♦ "You may have heard of tightrope walking, but have you heard of a slackline? Well, here it is, it's pretty much what you would expect, a rope that's not tight, but slack. Unsurprisingly, this is American Dean Potter. He is crossing this canyon in central China. It is 1,800 meters above sea level and you may have noticed he does not have a safety line." ("US slackline walker Dean Potter crosses China canyon," BBC video, 23 April 2012. Potter walked 40 meters across the Enshi Grand Canyon in China's Hubei Province on a slackline in just over two minutes. Slacklining is much more difficult than tightrope walking. See the Wikipedia article "Enshi Grand Canyon." Another spectacular Chinese canyon has a Wikipedia article "Yarlung Tsangpo Grand Canyon.")

*** "Big Canyon..."

♦ "1869. "Powell's men slid their four boats into the Green River on Monday, May 24, 1869... and would not emerge from their own unprecedented epic for ninety-eight days of nearly perpetual terror, hunger, cold, and wonder." (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester. Powell was one-armed. He lost his arm at the Battle of Shiloh, but that did not stop him from serving in battles right to the end of the Civil War. Or navigating the Grand Canyon in a boat.)

♦ "And five years after leaving the waters [the Colorado River] behind, in 1876, John Wesley Powell first wrote out the name Grand Canyon. He appears to have concluded that Big Canyon simply didn't do justice to the almighty crevasse he had seen and journeyed through, so he replaced it with a pair of words soon to be on every American's lips and not much later on the lips of most sentient English-speaking beings on the planet, as one of the great natural wonders of the world." (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ “In 1948, [Edna] Lewis, with Karl Bissinger, a photographer, and Johnny Nicholson, an antiques dealer, opened Café Nicholson, a French-inspired restaurant on Manhattan’s East Side. As one of the era’s few Black female chefs, Lewis quickly became famous in the city, and the café became a haunt for the likes of Gloria Vanderbilt, Tennessee Williams, Paul Robeson and Salvador Dali. Lewis blended French and Southern cuisine, preparing fried oysters, Virginia ham, filet mignon and chocolate souffles. The novelist William Faulkner once asked Lewis if she had trained in Paris and was shocked to learn she had never left the United States.” (“Food: The Grande Dame of Southern Cooking” by Taryn White, Smithsonian, June 2023. ♦ “From time immemorial, it has been said that desert winds carry with them all kinds of rumor and report—especially stories of scandal and outrage.” (Gold Dust by Ibrahim al-Koni.)

♦ “They’ve got a gallows-bad reputation, but, you know what a place the beach is for talking.” / “The beach, if you don’t know is the name of the gossip mill of white derelicts and rough customers that hang around your South Sea island ports. You’ll find captains and traders too fond of their grog and properly down on their luck. I’ll admit, I was fond of the gin myself back then...” (The Beach of Falesa by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ “You may take it for a fact that anything of this kind is not only noticed and discussed by a man’s own race but by some hundred and fifty natives as well... [T]he news flew, in the usual mysterious fashion, from mouth to mouth, till Bisesa’s duenna heard of it and told Bisesa.” (The affecting and horrible story “Beyond the Pale” by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ “‘You’re sure you’ve took no ‘arm?’” cried Mrs. Cloke, who had heard the news by farm-telegraphy, which is older but swifter than Marconi’s. / ‘No. I’m perfectly well,’ Sophie protested.” (“An Habitation Enforced” by Rudyard Kipling.)

♦ “But I ain’t one to gossip, so if anyone ask you ain’t heard it from me. No, you haven’t. Oh, oh, look, there go Miss Jenkins...” (Kim Wayans as the character Benita Buttrel from the 1990s “In Living Color” TV Series. Hilarious!)

♦ Thomas: Hey, Victor! I’m sorry about your dad. Victor: How’d you hear about it? Thomas: I heard it on the wind. I heard it from the birds. I felt it in the sunlight. And your mom was just in here cryin’. (The affecting 1998 film Smoke Signals, based on the book by the great poet and writer Sherman Alexie. “He went to Reardan, a white high school, where he played on the basketball team and was the only real Indian on the Reardan Indians.”)

♦ Viva voce is Medieval Latin for “with a living mouth.” If you hear something viva voce it means somebody told you. It has come to mean “word of mouth.”

♦ Hawaii has the “coconut wireless” or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via “the talking drum.” From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Sahrawis: “I heard it on the wind.” Americans can “hear it through the grapevine,” or hear a report or account through the rumor mill or catch wind of something or hear something around the water cooler, even though waters coolers don’t exist anymore. Italians say “per sentito dire” which basically means, “heard it said,” and they hear gossip “voci di corridoio” which means “hall voice” or “voices in the hall.” These systems operate by word-of-mouth, and, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ “When a professional golfer wants to pass along a rumor, he’ll tell you that he heard it ‘on the range’... The range, the one location where everyone in the sport gathers, is also golf’s back room. Pre-round chat may concern course conditions, or who is sleeping with whose wife. Recently, the range has been preoccupied by one topic...” (“Sand Trap: Saudi money and Donald Trump roil ‘the gentleman’s game’” by Zach Helfand, The New Yorker, October 24, 2022.)

♦ “[The internet] is the modern world’s equivalent of those bars in Donegal where rumors about the case used to circulate.” (No Body Recovered, BBC Sounds, Episode 6. A missing child.)

♦ He who gossips to you will gossip about you!

♦ "Lying on the beach beyond the glacier was wreckage that told of many ill-fated ships. We noticed stanchions of teakwood, liberally carved, that must have come from ships of the older type; iron-bound timbers with the iron almost rusted through; battered barrels and all the usual debris of the ocean. We had difficulties and anxieties of our own, but as we passed that graveyard of the sea we thought of the many tragedies written in the wave-worn fragments of lost vessels. We did not pause, and soon we were ascending a snow-slope heading due east on the last lap of our long trail." (South! The Story of Shackleton's Last Expedition, 1914-1917 by Ernest Shackleton.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "One day, Klimov and Shaposhnikov had to go right up to the German lines. They climbed over the railway embankment and crept up to a bomb-crater that sheltered a heavy-machine-gun crew and an artillery officer. Pressed flat against the ground, they watched the Germans go about their tasks. One young man unbuttoned his jacket, tucked a red checked handkerchief under his collar and began shaving; Seryozha could hear the scrape of the razor against his wiry, dust-covered stubble. Another German was eating something out of a small flat tin; for a brief moment Seryozha saw his face take on a look of concentrated, lasting pleasure. The officer was winding up his watch. Seryozha felt like asking very quietly, so as not to frighten him: 'Hey! What time is it?' / Klimov took the pin out of a grenade and dropped it into the crater... / 'You're not a Baptist, are you?' Old Polyakov once asked this man who had killed a hundred and ten people... / Once Seryozha saw Klimov after he had drunk a captured bottle of schnapps; then he had been quite terrifying—even Grekov had seemed wary of him." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books.)

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. "But I was getting too soft, and so I had to throw one [italics mine] at the quartermasters and the French and everybody else except Ordnance. The ordnance men were too busy patching up the vehicles these gasoline cowboys had wrecked." (Up Front by Bill Mauldin. By "throw one" he meant not a grenade but four funny cartoons about the crazy truck and jeep drivers who would frighten soldiers walking along the roads, make them jump into ditches, and splash mud on them. The captions of the four cartoons are (1) "You'd hurry home too if you lived in a ration dump!" (2) "Some of you may not come back. A French convoy has been reported on the road" (3) "I'll be darned! Here's one wot wuz wrecked in combat" and (4) "Damn fine road, men!")

♦ A plan by four churches on the Cherokee Indian Reservation to apologize to the tribe for a historical failure to recognize traditional Cherokee religion or culture has been greeted with surprise by tribal leaders. / “I don’t see what they need to apologize for,” said Tribal Council Chairman Bob Blankenship. “But if they feel they’ve offended us in any way, we’ll accept it.” / The majority of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians’ 13,000 members belong to mainstream Christian churches... / As far as I’m concerned, it’s a waste of time,” said the Rev. Bo Parris of Big Cove Baptist Church. “There’s nothing to apologize for.” / Patty Grant, a member of the Eastern Band and one of the event organizers, said understanding intergenerational grief and trauma is an important part of what the churches are trying to do by making the apology. She said trauma from centuries of oppression often manifests itself in drug abuse, domestic violence and depression. / Pastor Steven Phillip...said, “From my perspective as a white male, I see a need for the white church to apologize for the oppression by Christian missionaries of Native American people,” he said. “We thought we had to Europeanize them to evangelize. I am not apologizing for the Gospel. But I do apologize for how we perverted the Gospel in the name of Jesus and oppressed God’s people. / Principal Chief Leon Jones, the top elected leader of the Eastern Band, doesn’t think an apology is necessary. / “Personally, I think the past is history and I don’t hold present-day people responsible,” he said. “All we can do is live today’s life and do the best we can today.” (“Churches to offer apology to Cherokee” by Jon Ostendorf and Quintin Ellison in the Asheville Citizen-Times, July 22, 2002 A1.)

*** presentism, history in contempo-speak...

♦ “By the mid-eighteen-forties, American farmers, too, had become gung ho for guano.” (“Elemental Need: Phosphorus helped saved our way of life—and now threatens to end it” by Elizabeth Kolbert, The New Yorker, March 6, 2023. “Gung ho” is very much a Chinese word relating to World War II (first entry 1941), so of course American farmers weren’t “gung ho” for guano in the mid-eighteen-forties. But it’s cute alliteration. The word might have been put in quotation marks, but it wasn’t. On the other hand, the essay is breezy: Elizabeth refers to guano as “yellowish clay,” “bird shit,” and simply “shit.” The use of “gung ho” is a form of presentism.)

♦ "I'm going to tell you, and I know you are recording me, but I get asked all the time: 'Who are some of the tough guys, some of the bad guys?' And when I tell them that Chris Paul, in my 32 years in the league, was one of the biggest a-holes I ever dealt with..." (Bill Spooner, a retired NBA referee, who should know...)

♦ "Government ministers, newspaper columnists, ordinary people—they're all asking why the BBC doesn't say the Hamas gunmen who carried out appalling atrocities in southern Israel are terrorists. / The answer goes right back to the BBC's founding principles. / Terrorism is a loaded word, which people use about an outfit they disapprove of morally. It's simply not the BBC's to tell people who to support and who to condemn—who are the good guys and who are the bad guys... / And it's always been like this in the BBC. During World War Two, BBC broadcasters were expressly told not to call the Nazis evil or wicked, even though we did call them 'the enemy'. / 'Above all,' said a BBC document about all this, 'there must be no room for ranting'. Our tone had to be calm and collected. / It was hard to keep that principle going when the IRA was bombing Britain... / But we held the line. And we still do, to this day." ("Why BBC doesn't call Hamas militants 'terrorists'—John Simpson" by John Simpson, BBC, Israel Gaza War, October 11, 2023.)

See the Wikipedia article "Effects of Hurricane Helene in North Carolina.")

♦ "For instance, in Spanish, there is an expression mas gambas, which roughly translates as 'more big prawns.' This is a derogatory expression, used to describe the sort of people who are uninterested in issues such as politics and environment, and who are only worried about their day-to-day needs. Instead of worrying about important issues, they will simply sit in a bar and order 'more prawns'. Understanding this expression involves the activation of a great deal of cultural knowledge..." (Applying Cognitive Linguistics to Second Language Learning and Teaching by Jeannette Littlemore, 2nd ed. 2023. Chapter 6, 6.5, "What Challenges Might Metonymy Present to Second Language Learners." ♦ "This film is meant to inspire, it is not meant to once again make the women the 'bad guy.'" (Brandon Sklenar about the 2024 film It Ends With Us.)

*** analysis

♦ People protest "stereotyping." Yet, men and women have always been and always will be "typified" in the language. It would be impossible to comprehend and deal with reality without categories.

♦ If you wish to show your students a humorous online clip that typifies different kinds of "guys," show them: YouTube, "Gomer Pyle Learns a Bully." Gomer defies expectations and drives his company commander crazy.

handicap (noun)

things that seemed like ~ became evidence of authenticity

♦ “The awkward tendencies that her opponents had mocked turned out to be a significant part of her appeal. ‘She seems like a politician I could sit down and have a laugh with,’ one fan known for impersonating her on TikTok declared. Things that had seemed like political handicaps became evidence of authenticity: her fondness for dull statistics and Venn diagrams, her disregard for what she called ‘lovely speeches,’ her disdain for introspective questions about her ‘moment.’” (“The Ascent: Can Kamala Harris defy her doubters—and end the Trump era?” by Evan Osnos, The New Yorker, October 21, 2024. No.)

And I ain’t eaten in so long my stomach thinks my throat was cut an’ I was wonderin’ if you’d have any work I could do fer a small meal. I’d do anythin’ at all to earn it... / Minister: Son, I have been in the service all my life and have seen that thousands of men like you got to work for a meal. However, at this moment, there is no work to be done here, and therefore if I were to feed you it would be a cast [act?] of charity, which may help for the moment but cause harm in the long run. You seem to have retained your pride and dignity since you did not ask outright for a free meal and that is to your credit. But to answer your question, there is no work to be done so therefore you cannot earn a meal. (He steps back into the house and closes the door, leaving Woody standing on the porch with his mouth hanging open.)” (From the filmscript of the 1976 film Bound for Glory, based on the life of singer-songwriter and composer Woody Guthrie. Guthrie was played by the actor David Carradine.)

♦ "Teenage angst and apathy are not some novel social development. Every generation has its own version of hormonal uprising—and yes, the inevitable adult handwringing that goes with it." (Kirsten Fleming, New York Post.)

♦ "And when a relative novice gets put into a coma or worse, the hand wringing will start." (An online commenter on the Tommy Fury-Jake Paul boxing match.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Back in Britain, hands were wrung, and indignant questions were asked." (Singapore falls to the Japs, World War II.)

♦ "I felt no remorse or guilt that I had bombed the city." (Charles W. Sweeney, pilot of plane that dropped an atomic bomb on Nagasaki in World War II.)

♦ "I don't feel any guilt or blame about it. I think my view really is if we hadn't done it someone else would have. And it would be with us in any case." (Lilli S. Hornig, who worked on the Manhattan Project. From "The Bomb," PBS, 2015.)

♦ Edward G. Uhl helped invent the bazooka in 1942. It was devastatingly effective against German tanks, able to penetrate more than 4 inches of a tank's armor plate. General Eisenhower hailed the bazooka as one of the four "tools of victory" that won World War II. The others were the jeep, the C-47 Skytrain, and the atomic bomb.

♦ "Afterwards, the President [President Truman] was heard to mutter, 'Blood on his hands, dammit, he hasn't half as much blood on his hands as I have. You just don't go around bellyaching about it.' He later told Dean Acheson, 'I don't want to see that son-of-a-bitch in this office ever again.' Even in May 1946, the encounter was still vivid in his mind, he wrote Acheson and described Oppenheimer as a 'cry-baby scientist' who had come to 'my office some five or six months ago and spent most of his time wringing his hands and telling me they had blood on them because of the discovery of atomic energy.'" (American Prometheus: The Triumph And Tragedy Of J. Robert Oppenheimer by Kai Bird and Martin J. Sherwin. The popular 2023 film Oppenheimer was based on this book.)

♦ "In 1945, news reached the camps that the US now possessed the atomic bomb. According to Solzhenitsyn, this unexpected development gave hope to many prisoners, who began to pray for atomic war." ("On The Prison Highway, The gulag's silent remains," by Ian Frazier, The New Yorker, August 30, 2010.)

♦ "The wailing over Hiroshima finds no echo in Japan." (Isidor I. Rabi, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly, criticizing Military and Political Consequences of Atomic Energy by Patrick M. S. Blackett.)

*** analysis

♦ "Handwringing" is often pejorative or derogatory. It is also notable by its absence: most Americans are not wringing their hands about the destruction of Hamas by Israel after October 7, 2023.

♦ Who actually does this? (Wrings one's hands in angst.)

♦ "These were smart men, they saw the handwriting on the wall." (Native American chiefs. Many Native Americans sent their children off to boarding schools, like the Carlisle Indian Industrial School, in the hope that their children would have a better future. Some did. Some didn't. One graduate of the school was Jim Thorpe, and one of his teachers at Carlisle was the poet Marianne Moore.)

♦ Compiler's note: My grandfather was alive as a child when Indians in full regalia would knock on the door, requesting food... (The rural area outside of Allegan, Michigan.)

♦ "Brothers, my blood is red with Siwash, but my heart is white... A great truth came to me when I was yet a boy. I learned that to your kind and you was given the earth; that the Siwash could not withstand you, and like the caribou and the bear, must perish in the cold. So I came into the warm and sat among you, by your fires, and behold, I became one of you..." ("Grit of Women," by Jack London.)

Hannibal (American Hannibal, etc.)

Hannibal Directive

the so-called ~ (see quote below)

the sheer audacity won Arnold the title of the ~ (Quebec)

♦ The military man praised as the "American Hannibal" for his heroism at Quebec, on Lake Champlain, in the Mohawk River valley, and particularly at the Battle of Saratoga, was none other than Benedict Arnold, who, as the supervisor of West Point, schemed to deliver that strongpoint on the Hudson to the British. Unlike other notorious traitors, he lived out his days in relative peace and prosperity, in Canada, and then London, where he died.

*** "Hannibal ad portas!"

♦ According to historian John Julius Norwich, Hannibal led 37 elephants over the Alps, and Norwich notes that the Carthaginians must have had some secret way with elephants, as African elephants are generally considered to be untamable, unlike their Indian counterparts.

♦ Hannibal is also associated with his great military victory over the Romans at the Battle of Cannae, a double envelopment that is still taught at military schools. However, he failed to follow up on his victory, a failure which has become known as a "Hannibalic victory."

♦ Hannibal learned of the defeat of his brother's relief force when the Romans delivered his brother's head to his camp. Carthage, of course, would end up being razed to the ground.

♦ David's painting, "Napoleon Crossing the Alps," shows a rock with Hannibal's name inscribed on it.

♦ See the Wikipedia article "Hannibal Directive." Supposedly, this so-called directive is based on the fact that Hannibal committed suicide rather than fall into the hands of his enemies. As to whether such a directive actually exists, officially or unofficially, you be the judge.

*** various groups...

♦ “Family sues Meta alleging teen daughter suffered harm due to Instagram addiction” by Katie Kindelan, GMA, June 9, 2022.)

♦ “The number one criterion now is safety. There's harm to the individuals involved, harm to that place, and harm to that organization, but also harm to that neighborhood.” (Read Hayes, Loss Prevention Research Council Director, on why some store employees are wearing body cameras to document conflicts with shoplifters. Shoplifters are increasingly aggressive and nowadays operate as organized mobs.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ “In 2016, the writer Sarah Schulman published a book called Conflict Is Not Abuse, elaborating on [Catherine] Hodes's work. She argues that overstatement of harm can itself cause more harm. The person seen as good will be supported and the person seen as bad will be shunned. On social media, Hodes said, these binaries become even more entrenched, because people are encouraged to take sides. This was the case with Ford's tweet, and thousands of other ephemeral dramas." ("That's It. You're Dead To Me. Suddenly everyone is 'toxic'" by Kaitlyn Tiffany, The Atlantic, September, 2022.)

♦ "You know, we have a situation where a handful of people are crying wolf, about social media. But we don't actually have the data, we don't have the materials we need to build a wolf detector." (Professor Andrew Przybylski of the Oxford Internet Institute (OII). From "Facebook's growth not linked to psychological harm, study finds" by Chris Vallance, BBC, August 9, 2023.)

♦ "The assertions are strident, and the vocabulary is esoteric ('harm,' 'insurrection') as if it were translated from a foreign language. In a sense, it is. The language is legalese, and it is designed to build a foundation upon which a company can be held liable under civil-rights law in an American court. This activist tactic has been widely misunderstood... The word 'safe' is carefully chosen. It gestures at certain specific kinds of negligence for which a university could pay dearly in a court of law." ("The Inequality of 'Equity,'" by Christopher Caldwell, National Review, May 17, 2021.)

♦ "No harm, no foul," "What's the harm of me staying out late on a Friday?" "Smoking can harm your health," etc.

*** analysis

♦ The use of the word "harm" often suggests, threatens, or lays the basis for a legal case.

♦ When a term can mean anything to anyone, or includes everyone, it means nothing.

♦ INJURY, n. An offense next in degree of enormity to a slight. (The Devil's Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

*** analysis

♦ A harrow is an agricultural device used to chop up clods of dirt. In the 1949 film Border Incident starring Ricardo Montalban and George Murphy, the character played by George Murphy, Jack Beames, meets his fate under a harrow. His end is, literally and figuratively, harrowing.

♦ Cynthia Ozick used the word as a plural noun to describe the Holocaust writings of Hans Gunther Adler: "[He recorded] harrowings that would forever be too late to erase."

♦ Dante, in the Inferno, refers to the harrowing of hell by Christ. This usage of the word is based on the Old English word for "to harry or despoil."

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "Now whether you like the nickname or not, the 'Harvard of the Midwest' label has stuck with Wash. U. since it first grew beyond a regional university. But like any nickname, the 'Harvard of the Midwest' label has probably been used before by other schools. So the only question to ask now is how many other schools refer to themselves as the 'Harvard of the Midwest.' The answer? Dozens."

(“So which school is the real ‘Harvard of the Midwest?’” by Nathan Everly, Student Life (the independent newspaper of Washington University in St. Louis since eighteen seventy-eight), December 6, 2006. )

♦ “The ‘Harvard of the Midwest’ editorial in The Daily Eastern News on Sept. 7 was the best editorial the paper has had in quite some time. / The editorial strongly rebuked Eastern’s administration for proclaiming on its Web site that the university has been called ‘The Harvard of the Midwest.’ / As the editorial indicated, the statement is absurd and ridiculous. The editorial was headlined: ‘The Harvard of untrue boasts.’” (“The truth behind ‘The Harvard of the Midwest’” by Allan H. Keith, The Daily Eastern News, September 12, 2005. The newspaper’s motto is, ‘Tell The Truth And Don’t Be Afraid.’)

*** “That’s the way we roll...” (Harvard today)

♦ “Identity politics are at the root of the problem. No one wants to be called sexist or anti-LGBTQ+ or some other ‘ist.’ But what is really unbearable is to be called racist. If a Harvard student—or teacher—thinks there is an chance of being called racist, he or she will clam up... [I]n recent years, the term ‘racist’ has become a cudgel and a smear, especially amplified on the internet.” (Evan Thomas ’73. From Letters, Harvard Magazine, March-April, 2024.)

♦ “The Harvard online course catalog has a search box. Type in ‘decolonize.’ That word...is in the title of seven courses and the descriptions of 18 more.” (“Reaping What We Have Taught” by Harvard Professor Harry R. Lewis, Contributing Opinion Writer, The Harvard Crimson, January 8, 2024.)

♦ “How did your campuses get this way? What is it about the way you hire faculty and approve curriculum that’s allowing your campuses to be infected by this intellectual and moral rot.” (Congresswoman Ms. Virginia Foxx of North Carolina, Chairwoman at the hearing, “Holding Campus Leaders Accountable and Confronting Antisemitism,” the House Committee on Education and the Workforce, December 5, 2023. Congresswoman Foxx directed her questions to (1) Claudine Gay, president of Harvard (2) M. Elizabeth Magill, President of the University of Pennsylvania, and (3) Sally Kornbluth, President of MIT.)

♦ “They hate, we ball... This is what you want... That’s the way we roll... A Team of superheroes are making the future bright...And we do our homework too...” (Watch: Harvard Housing Day 2023, Currier House, Currier vs the World, YouTube)

*** monetizing, commerce, biz, ads, merch, pods, books...

♦ “AAI is the Harvard of climbing schools.” (A small advertisement in Outside Magazine for the American Alpine Institute. 100% carbon neutral.)

*** analysis

♦ Google “Harvard of the Midwest” and in the “People also search for” box you will find links to harvard of the plains; harvard of the south; harvard of the west; and harvard of canada.

♦ For older Americans and their forebearers, Harvard was a great national symbol for educational excellence and achievement.

♦ This usage may become extinct in our lifetime. Harvard no longer stands for much. Like so many modern businesses and institutions, it has successfully ruined its brand.

♦ “A whale-ship was my Yale College and my Harvard.” (Moby Dick by Herman Melville.)

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON: A young man and a young woman are sharing a round café table in heaven. Both wear robes, both have wings, both have haloes above their heads, and both have their cups of coffee near them on the table. The young man has his laptop open but is looking at the woman; the young woman has put down her phone for a moment and is looking at the man. In the background, another angel is sitting at a café table staring like a zombie at his laptop, while an angel is flying in the sky with its head down, riveted to his or her phone. The woman is saying, "Free Wi-Fi and unlimited refills are nice, but frankly I was expecting more." (The New Yorker, August 5, 2024. Funny!)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A father accidentally ran over the family cat while backing out of the garage. His little daughter cried and cried and was inconsolable. "Don't be sad," he said, and told her to get an empty shoebox from the house. He put the dead cat in the shoebox, and then he led her out into the yard, where he dug a hole. All the while, he explained to her how the cat had gone to cat heaven, and how happy the cat was there. In cat heaven, he explained, it rained cream, and the cats licked the cream off the leaves. Cat nip and cat treats grew on all the bushes. All the dogs were in zoos, and the cat mothers and fathers took their kittens to look at them. He went on and on in a soothing voice, and gradually his little daughter calmed down. She stopped crying, and even helped to fill in the little grave with clods of dirt from her little hands. When the funeral was over, she said, "Daddy? Can we kill another cat?"

♦ "Man, you eat all the goddamn oranges and all the goddamn bananas you want." (An American merchant-marine sailor in 1947, to Tom Lantos (1928-2008), who was traveling from Europe to the US on a converted troop ship. Lantos, a Holocaust survivor, had discovered a big basket of oranges and a big basket of bananas in the mess and had asked the sailor, 'Should I take an orange or a banana?' On hearing the sailor, Lantos thought, 'Then I knew I was in paradise.' He went on to become the lone Holocaust survivor to serve in the US Congress. He was admitted to the US because he had been awarded an academic scholarship to study in the US on the basis of an essay he had written about the US president Franklin D. Roosevelt.)

♦ "One of the problems when you go down this rabbit hole is you meet up with all the long-ball hitters in the history of art. They're all in the batting cage waiting. Because it's the ultimate long-ball challenge, from Chaucer to Shakespeare to Philip Roth, that of the dying man."
(The great filmmaker Paul Schrader, a Michigander.)

hector (verb)

she ~ personal information online

*** analysis

♦ "[H]e is the prince of the city, on whose shoulders its defense depends ('Hector' means something like 'the one who holds things together'), the dutiful son of the aged king and queen, Priam and Hecuba, the responsible older brother to numerous siblings whom he must often whip into shape (not least the playboy Paris, whose adultery with another man's wife set the war in motion), and, above all, the husband of a beautiful young wife, Andromache, and the father of an enchanting child, Astyanax." ("JFK, Tragedy, Myth" by the wonderful classicist Daniel Mendelsohn.)

♦ "It is unexplainable why this distinguished name should have contributed such an unpleasant word to our language." (Wilfred Funk, Litt.D., about the Trojan hero, whose name has been transformed to mean braggart or bully. From Word Origins and Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D.)

hedgehog (military)

the ~ had succeed at the Battle of Na San hedgehog defense

they cannot be reinforced, so they must mount a ~

Czech hedgehogs
~ symbolized "defense at all costs" in the Soviet Union the beaches of Normandy were spiked with ~

*** analysis

♦ A hedgehog defense involves an isolated stronghold or strongpoint which can be surrounded yet still survive, in modern times, by aerial resupply. The strongpoints are capable of all-around (perimeter) defense. The Battle of Khe Sanh (1968) was such a defense. Hedgehogs or strongpoints can be bypassed but will slow an attacker down and expose the enemy's rear to attack. Problems include the fact that strongpoints can simply be bypassed (as happened to the French at the start of World War II) or that the enemy can prevent aerial resupply, as happened to the 6th Army under Paulus at Stalingrad in 1943 and the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. In Vietnam, the hedgehog concept had worked at the Battle of Na San but proved to be a decisive catastrophe for the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954. Many wondered if the Battle of Khe Sanh in 1968 would be a Dien Bien Phu for the US, but the U.S. Marines somehow managed to hang on.

("After Babel: How Social Media Dissolved The Mortar of Society And Made America Stupid" by Jonathan Haidt, The Atlantic, May, 2022.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "A Scottish officer, named Lieutenant Macculloch, is said at this time to have suggested to [Wolfe] the daring but brilliant idea of attempting that which the French conceived to be impracticable—the scaling of the Heights of Abraham—and thus gaining the lofty ground which overlooked the city at a part where its defences were most weak... / Slinging their muskets, and climbing, some with their swords in their teeth, the Frasers scrambled up the steep and woody precipice... / Following the Highlanders, Wolfe was soon on the plateau of the precipice, and with ardour he formed his troops in contiguous columns of regiments as they came toiling up; and ere the rising sun began to gild the spires and ramparts of Quebec and the far-stretching bosom of the mighty St. Lawrence, he had his whole force marching in battle array along the famous Heights of Abraham, with colours flying and all their bayonets glittering..." (British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant. Chapter XXII. "Quebec, 1759." Wolfe would suffer his famous death in battle. According to Grant, before the Marquis of Montcalm died of his wound, he said, "Thank Heaven, I shall not live to see the capitulation of Quebec! I have got my death fighting against the bravest soldiers in the world, at the head of the greatest cowards that ever carried muskets!" Finally, Grant writes, "It is recorded that Lieutenant Macculloch, the officer according to whose suggestion [Wolfe] first conceived the idea of turning the French flank by scaling the Heights of Abraham, died a pauper in Marylebone Workhouse, in the year 1793.")

♦ Fiddlers Hell (valley / OR); Bears Hell (ridge / WV); Bears Hell Run (stream / WV); Bumpass Hell (flat / Shasta County, CA); Cow Hell Swamp (Swamp / GA); Half Hell (populated place! / NC); Little Hell (swamp / GA)...

♦ "But it's not pronounced 'Bump Ass,' more like 'Bump Us.' It's named after mountaineer Kendall Vanhook Bumpass, who held a mineral claim here in the 1860s. / In 1865, Bumpass brought a group of visitors out to see the surreal landscape. And while showing them around, he stepped through the crust...into a nearly 240 degree Fahrenheit, highly acidic mud pot. / According to park Ranger Shanda Ochs, his companions pulled him out and dragged him to a nearby patch of snow, which they packed around his boiled leg. Still, it ended up having to be amputated. So the region became known as his 'hell.'" ("Welcome to Bumpass Hell, a Bubbling, Stinky Sliver of 'California's Yellowstone'" by Katherine Monahan, KQED, Oct. 7, 2023. Perhaps this story is true: it sounds to me like an interpretation to ensure tourists don't leave the walkways and come to harm. As a visitor is quoted as saying, "It's just like this barren hellscape and it smells like eggs.")

♦ For the unincorporated community, read the Wikipedia article "Hell, Michigan," specifically the section titled "Etymology," which suggests four theories about the origin of the name. The article is very interesting and worth reading. Wikipedians are wonderful.

♦ A man in Kentucky once gave me directions to get to a put-in on the Rockcastle River. He finished up with, "An' right when you're sure you're right in the middle of nowhere... Well, it's just four miles further on!" This might explain the origin of "Hell to Find Lake" and "Hell to Get to Tank."

♦ There are a multitude of Hell Canyons, Hell Gates, and Hell Hollows in the United States.

♦ In the southern Appalachians, people speak of "rhododendron hells." These are densely overgrown areas, particularly along ensorcelled streams. Hunters have gotten lost in such "hells," only to emerge hours or even days later, crawling on all fours, naked, their clothes having been stripped off by the foliage.

♦ There is a Christian attitude towards nature that might explain some of these place names. John Ciardi's great translation of The Inferno starts out, "Midway in our life's journey, I went astray / from the straight road and woke to find myself alone in a dark wood. How shall I say..." In his notes for Canto VIII he points out that "Within the city walls lies all the Lower Hell; within it fire is used for the first time as a torment of the damned; and at its very center Satan himself stand fixed forever in a great ice cap."

♦ You may be an atheist, or a product of the enlightenment in which the devil no longer exists. And yet, the expression persists in the language. It lives on!

♦ “How about that ‘They are still Heroes’ headline. They weren’t heroes before the game, and certainly were less so after. All this jingoistic hyperbole is an irritation. They did well in the tournament. Got the Silver. They didn’t storm the beaches. They didn’t rescue anyone. They didn’t put their lives at risk. They did get outplayed by better team. They had a great tournament, but heroic? Nah.” (An online commenter about England’s loss to Spain in the Fifa 2023 Women’s World Cup. To which “Johnny Thunder” replied, “Language is contextual. You are just another misplaced internet pedant.” With-er-ing! The following—unrelated—comment about England’s loss to Spain was “Aha ha ha, Aha ha ha, Aha ha ha, Aha ha ha, Aha ha ha, Aha ha ha, Aha ha ha.” To which a commenter responded, “Open a window there has been a leak of nitrous oxide in your building.” Another commenter wrote, “They are heroes”—what, for losing?”)

His superpower is to see the good in others and bring that out of them.” (Brendon Fraser about his role in the film The Whale, in which he plays Charlie, a 600-pound-man who rarely leaves his couch. The article goes on to read, “Hunter, who also wrote the screenplay, said his play is personal. He started it 12 years ago when he was teaching a mandatory expository writing course at Rutgers University that no one wanted to take and everyone resented. He also pulled from his own background, setting the play in his hometown of Moscow, Idaho, and weaving in his history of being depressed, self-medicating with food and going to a fundamentalist religious high school as a gay teenager.” (From “Brendon Fraser celebrated for a comeback role in ‘The Whale’” by Lindsey Bahr, AP Film writer, Sept 4, 2022.)

♦ "The language a writer uses to create a world is that world, and Franzen's strenuously contemporary and therefore juvenile language is a world in which nothing important can happen. Madame Bovary's marriage sucked, Heathcliff was into Catherine: these words fail the context not just because they are of our own time. There is no import in things that 'suck,' no drama in someone's being 'into' someone else. A writer like Franzen, who describes two lovers as 'fucking,' trivializes their relationship. The result is boredom." ("Smaller Than Life," by B. R. Myers, The Atlantic, October, 2010.)

("Dante's Divine Comedy mined for 21st-century meaning," BBC, 11 Jan 2021, with BBC Europe Editor Katya Adler.)

♦ "The short-list for this year's Turner prize doesn't feature any individual artists for the first time. Instead, the contenders are all collectives, which created artwork ranging from a 24-hour fundraising rave to the use of food to help understand the workings of the world... There's a strong political thread. The raves... are part of what is described as queer, trans and intersex black and people of color radical activism." (BBC Six O'clock News, 07/05/2021. J.M.W. Turner was born 1775 and died 1851. Many people know him for his painting, "The Fighting Temeraire.")

*** various groups...

♦ “Holocaust remembrance Day is a time to remember more than one atrocity.” (The Louisville Courier-Journal, Opinion, Jan 27, 2023. The opinion includes references to Black people, Asians, Hispanics, Muslims, LGBTQ+ and trans-gender people, Native Americans, skin color, religion, gender identity, ethnic background, hate speech, current “autocratic” leaders, and “polite racism” versus outright bigotry.)

♦ According to the Wikipedia article “Maafa,” that term “is derived from a Swahili term for ‘disaster, terrible occurrence or great tragedy.’” Palestinians speak of the “Nakba,” or “Catastrophe.”

♦ Russia versus the Ukraine. Both sides are referring to the Holocaust.

♦ “Petrovsky-Shtern told me, ‘From a purely historical standpoint, there is no comparison’ between the Holocaust and the Russian invasion of Ukraine... But, he added, ‘from the point of view of rhetoric, the comparison makes sense. [Zelensky] is saying, ‘They are coming to erase us.’” (“The Memorial: A Holocaust atrocity was about to be commemorated. Then came another war” by Masha Gessen, The New Yorker, April 18, 2022.)

♦ Sunny Hostin of The View compared the January 6th insurrection to the Holocaust. (In 2024. Commenters described her comparison as “odious,” “breathtaking,” and “deranged.”)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ “The use of ‘holocaust’ by Mr. Castro demonstrates his ignorance of history and disdain towards its victims. Such words are unacceptable.” (French foreign ministry spokesman Bernard Valero, responding to comments by Fidel Castro that France’s deportation of Roma in 2010 amounted to a ‘racial holocaust.’”)

♦ “So I just wanted to come here today and say that I’m truly sorry for offending people with remarks about the Holocaust. There’s no comparison.” (Marjorie Taylor Greene, U.S. Congresswoman.)

♦ Nick Robinson: Do you when you hear people making comparisons with the thirties pause or do you in stark contrast as some people do say, ‘How dare you make that comparison?’” / Suella Braverman: To throw out those flippant analogies diminishes the unspeakable tragedy that millions of people went through. And I don’t think anything that is happening in the UK today can come close to what happened in the Holocaust. So I find it a lazy and unhelpful comparison to make.” (“Gary Lineker tweet ‘diminishes’ tragedy of Holocaust—Suella Braverman,” BBC, Political Thinking with Nick Robinson, March 9, 2023.)

*** the Shoah...

♦ “In the United States, Holocaust deniers have had more success than any other country.” (Linguist Deborah Tannen.)

♦ “A circle is closing. For the first time in 20 or 30 years, the Jewish congregations commemorate Kristallnacht for themselves... It’s a change that indicates that specific period of coming to terms with the criminal deeds of a forerunner government in Germany is itself becoming history. It will not be forgotten, but it is not anymore an issue of major emotional importance for the population.” (Cilly Kugelmann, deputy director of the Jewish Museum in Berlin, on the celebration of the fall of the Berlin Wall and the remembrance of Kristallnacht, both of which occurred on November 9. From “Recalling History on a Day of Light and Darkness,” by Michael Slackman, The New York Times, November 9, 2010.)

♦ “For several days now Sofya [Osipovna Levinton] hadn’t wanted to sleep. She sat there, wide awake, in the stinking darkness... As she listened to people’s cries and mutterings, she realized that their heads were filled with painfully vivid images that no words could ever convey... ‘Golda! Golda!’ cried a man’s voice, racked with sobs. // Rozenberg the accountant was still counting as he helped dig the pit for himself and the other brenners... And then suddenly, while he was dreaming, his tears had come gushing out, burning him, breaking through the crust that had formed over his brain and his heart. ‘Golda! Golda!’ he cried out.” // [Sofya Osipovna Levinton’s] eyes—which had read Homer, Izvestia, Huckleberry Finn and Mayne Reid, that had looked at good people and bad people, that had seen the geese in the green meadows of Kursk, the stars above the observatory at Pulkovo, the glitter of surgical steel, the Mona Lisa in the Louvre, tomatoes and turnips in the bins at market, the blue water of Issyk-Kul—her eyes were no longer of any use to her... She was still breathing, but breathing was hard work..." (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part 1, Chapter 43 and 44 and Part 2, Chapter 48.)

*** analysis

♦ "It would be good generally if people could stop using Nazi Germany as a kind of bad things emoji. Better to explain and use detail. Save Nazi Germany. Keep it in your back pocket for those occasions when only Nazi Germany will do." ("Why there are no winners after the BBC's two-footed tackle on Gary Lineker" by Barney Ronay, The Guardian, 10 March 2023.)

♦ "Comparing the Holocaust to any previous or subsequent event in human history is wrong, of course. It minimizes the unprecedented tragedy of the 6 million Jews whose murders the world failed to stop." ("Why Hamas victim Hersh Goldberg-Polin's name—like Anne Frank's—will live forever" by Gil Hoffman and Jacki Alexander, The New York Post, Sep 6, 2024.)

♦ Many older people are uncomfortable hearing comparisons like the ones above to the Jewish Holocaust of World War II.

From Le Havre in France and Hull in England, and from New Bedford and Nantucket in America, the whaling and the sealing fleets set out." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "The battle that followed began at 1400 hours on December 6 and ended on December 15, barely a mile north of where it had begun. It was a ten-day blood bath that cost the Regiment over a hundred and fifty battle casualties. / The opening attack was made in broad daylight by Charley Company under cover of the strongest artillery support Division could muster. It was a devastating barrage...but the enemy replied with equal violence and within minutes Charley was being pounded into the saturated valley floor under a titanic upheaval of mud and steel. Dog, coming up behind, tried to avoid the worst of that holocaust..." (And No Birds Sang by Farley Mowat. World War II. Italy.)

Roquefort cheese due to an EU ban on U.S. beef containing hormones.)

♦ "Behind dusty oaken doors / six robed dinosaurs / conspired to wage a holy war / over our bodies." (Reina del Cid's "My Country 'Tis of Thee (Land of Inequity)." From "5 protest songs that have taken on new meaning post-Roe" by Ari Shapiro, Noah Caldwell, Jonaki Mehta, NPR, Music, July 2, 2022.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Christendom too had been changed by the Fourth Crusade. Long divided, it was now polarised. For centuries before and after the Great Schism of 1054, relations between the Eastern and Western Churches had fluctuated between the politely distant and the bitterly acrimonious; their differences, however, had been essentially theological. After the sack of Constantinople (1204) by the Western Crusaders, this was no longer true. In the eyes of the Greeks, these barbarians who had desecrated their altars, plundered their homes and violated their women could no longer be considered, in any real sense of the word, Christians at all. How now could they ever agree to the idea of union with Rome? 'Better the Sultan's turban than the cardinal's hat,' they used to say; and they meant it." (John Julius Norwich, A History of the Mediterranean.)

♦ 1572. August. The Catholic party annihilated between 30,000 and 100,000 Huguenots (Protestants) across France.

♦ The Thirty Years' War, 1618-1648. The deadliest European religious war in history. "The ur-trauma of the German people, when the German character was formed," according to Curt Hondrich.

♦ "The day after the surrender of Fort Sumter the entire land, both North and South, blazed with an ardent and confident patriotism, although the patriotism of the South was precisely opposite to that of the North... The churches were kept open all day for the saying of bloodthirsty prayers. God, as usual, was on both sides." (A New American History by W. E. Woodward.)

♦ “A word is a thing on the move. This means wrapping our heads around something that cannot feel right at first, but that simple logic requires us to accept. To wit, any claim that people in general are using a word ‘erroneously’ is illogical... If a significant proportion of the people speaking a language are using a word in a way that dictionaries tend not to mention, it means that the word is moving—as we would expect, since words always do.” (Words on the Move by the linguist John McWhorter, Chapter 2, “It’s the Implication That Matters: Words on the Move,” Subsection “But That Isn’t What It’s Supposed to Mean!”)

what had gone before were ~...

♦ "Here [in Marble Canyon] the men started to grow restless: the trip was taking too long and was bruising, cold, and dangerous. Major Powell, they complained, was interested only in science—in taking observations, in collecting, in writing. He seemed less concerned with getting the team down to calm waters, to safety, and to home. / There were mutinous rumblings, and they were scarcely mitigated when their leader realized—and promptly told his men—that it was going to get worse and take still longer. For with the cliffs fast rising around them and the outflow of a known river named by the old conquistador explorers the Colorado Chiquita bursting in on their left side, it was clear that the main part of the huge cleft, the hitherto untraveled Big Canyon, as it was then vaguely known—lay now directly in front of them. What had gone before were mere hors d'oeuvres. The main dish lay just ahead. / 'We are three quarters of a mile in the depths of the earth,' Powell would later write in his diary." (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "The Bayonet Tree got its name when one of Herkimer's men was crucified on it. George Walter lay beside a spring, pretending to be dead while an Indian ran a scalping knife around his skull, tearing off, finally, hair and skin from the bloody head. The Senecas captured Robert Crouse, the tallest and strongest man in Tryon County. They trussed him up, and then, in order to cut him down to their size, they whittled his legs off below the knees, cut the ropes holding him, and told him to walk." (The Mohawk by Codman Hislop. His book is about the Mohawk River.)

♦ "Movements of the Hostile Sioux Indians / ...They rushed on to the camp with that unearthly scream and yell peculiar to their race... This shouting is done on purpose to terrify their opponents, and give them an exaggerated idea of their strength. Whatever the strength of the assaulting party was, it is sufficient to say they were repulsed, but not before they had killed one enlisted man of the Seventh Minnesota Volunteers, and one boy. Two women were wounded and three or four men...[The] Indians carried away with them several horses. Col. Miller, upon being informed of this unfortunate event, immediately sent a force of well-mounted cavalry in pursuit, and if the redskins are captured they will be summarily dealt with. This outrage has again stricken the inhabitants of the border settlements with terror, and many are fleeing from an expected crusade of the savages..." ♦ "The helicopters stayed low. Some distance to the front we could see jets strafing the ground. Clouds of smoke drifted up from an area on the horizon and gnatlike gunships moved in and out of it. As we got closer we saw bombs falling from diving planes. The napalm tanks tumbled and exploded into fireballs when they hit the jungle. / As the large, open LZ finally came into view, the gunners on both sides of the slicks began firing into the jungle. I had the impulse to sit on my M-16 to give me an extra measure of protection from bullets that might come up through the floor. / In the field ahead I saw soldiers moving around. Several downed helicopters were lying on their side. Fires were burning in the nearby jungle. I felt myself breathing faster. I tightened my grip on my M-16 and retightened it... / The helicopter finally flared out to brake its forward speed and settled down in the field... Adrenaline pumping, we barely avoided the soldiers carrying the stretchers as we jumped to the ground. Some of the men on the stretchers were dead..." ♦ "It's Lipstick Day in East Nashville. Rep. Aftyn Behn (D-Nashville) on Wednesday read a proclamation to make it official. / The proclamation preceded the groundbreaking for a sister business for The Lipstick Lounge, a sports bar called Chapstick... / In the proclamation, Behn thanked the bar, which markets itself as 'a bar for humans,' for its fundraising for those living with HIV/AIDS and its sponsorship of LGBTQ and allied sports leagues. She said The Lipstick Lounge was one of the first bars in the area to provide all-gender restrooms and kept drag performances with heightened security while the state attempted to ban them." ("Lipstick Lounge Owners Break Ground on Sports Bar Venture" by Hannah Herner, Nashville Scene, May 15, 2024. At the groundbreaking, Nashville mayor Freddie O'Connell said, "We get to have a place in Nashville that will be a sports bar for humans.")

♦ "For almost two decades, Sven Marquardt has worked as the doorman and principal sorter at Berghain, the Berlin night club. He has been as responsible as anyone for its singular admixture of interesting humans, which, along with its freethinking ethos and its killer sound system, has made it world-famous and very hard to get into. Typically posted by the entrance, dressed in black, face-tattooed, with lower-lip piercings that look like silver fangs, he has become in his own way world-notorious, too—as an embodiment of Berghain's old East Berliner queer-punk spirit..." ("Night Life Dept. Ein Berliner" by Nick Paumgarten, The New Yorker, June 12, 2023.)

♦ "This shit, it doesn't faze me too much, only because like I've seen like, like... I'll just say human life to me, the way I look at it if I don't know you if I don't know you is meaningless it's meaningless I'm just keeping it straight up but... Yeah, he's dead what can we do now?" (Alex Bodger aka GoraPakora on TikTok. He stood by and filmed the murder of Paul Stanley Schmidt on his cellphone.)

♦ "As annoying human beings, we all want attention to some degree." (The TikTok Edvasian, 880K.)

♦ "TUNE IN! A show full of debate analysis, SCOTUS news, and books and movies and an interview about how to raise boys to be fine human being." (NPR's Danielle Kurtzleben @ titonka. She describes herself as "a real piece of work" and "absolutely a girlboss.")

*** analysis

♦ "Some alternative types use "human" in a strange and unusual way, as in, "I find that humans are very interesting." In the example above, "She is a magnificently accomplished human," it would seem more normal to say, "human being," but, even better, "person." The full quote is, "She is a magnificently accomplished human, she is not an empty vessel after the fashion of X..."

♦ "Human" is conventionally used in opposition to "animal," "space aliens," and, increasingly nowadays, "technology." For example, "A popular AI chatbot has been caught lying on robocalls—telling users that it's human."

♦ "Human person" in quotes obtains an unknown number of hits on Google. Wikipedia does not (yet) have an entry for "Human person," nor does Wiktionary. NPR obtains 52 results for "human person" in quotes, two of which are quoted above. One relates to the Catholic Religion, the other to a non-binary person.

humanitarian assistance (as verb)

humanitarian assistance our way

there is no way to ~ out of this crisis (Sudan)

♦ "There is no way to humanitarian assistance our way out of this crisis." (Samantha Power, Administrator of USAID and former U.S. ambassador to the UN, about the Sudan crisis. She is an Irish immigrant to the U.S. Heard on NPR. Steve Inskeep repeated her unusual usage, as if to highlight it, for whatever reason. From "World leaders gather at the United Nations this week with a lot on their plate" by Michele Kelemen, Steve Inskeep, NPR, Morning Edition, September 23, 2024.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Calcutta was the preferred jumping-off point for free China—the place where Needham would get his papers and his marching orders. He would then fly into China over the infamous 'Hump,' a rickety and spectacularly unsafe air bridge that was then being organized by American freelance pilots, who flew Dakotas and kindred planes over the eastern Himalayan ranges between British Indian air bases in Bengal and the encircled free Chinese cities in Yunan... / Needham gazed out of the aircraft windows, far too excited to sleep. Range after range of gigantic mountains, glaciers uncoiling between them, rose up before and beneath him... / And then the frontier was crossed, and the plane began its slow descent over the deeply incised valleys of the Salween and Mekong rivers... / [A]ll China waited for him." (The Man Who Loved China by the great writer Simon Winchester.)

*** "You eat all the goddamn oranges and bananas you want..."

♦ "Hunger was now torturing us. The Cossacks sat gloomily round the fire and hardly spoke. Hoping to forget their hunger a little, the men tried to sleep. I lay down too, but could not sleep. Anxiety and doubt tormented me. If we did not manage to kill something tomorrow, or reach the Iman, things would be desperate indeed. In the summer a man can carry on without food for several days, but in the winter hunger kills quickly." (Dersu Uzala by V. K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr.)

♦ "The mental adjustment took longer. It was a continual surprise to encounter no queues at food shops—'like a man who braces himself to pick up a heavy suitcase,' wrote Ginzburg, 'and finds it empty.' The words 'I'm hungry,' recently so charged with desperation and despair, only slowly reverted to their old function of expressing an ordinary desire for lunch." (Leningrad by the great writer Anna Reid.)

♦ "There is always trouble if meat is not divided by lot. Someone immediately says that he has been given more than his share, and tries to hand a piece to someone else. Then there is much arguing and swearing 'by God!' with everyone insisting that he has been given too much, and finally a deadlock ensues which can only be settled by casting lots for the meat—as should have been done in the first place. I have never heard a man grumble that he has received less than his share. Such behaviour would be inconceivable to the Bedu, for they are careful never to appear greedy, and quick to notice anyone who is. I remember the story of a destitute Bedu boy, who told his mother that he liked dining when there was no moon, for then his companions could not see how much food he took. His mother said, 'Sit with them in the dark and cut a piece of rope with your knife turned the wrong way round.' The boy did so that very night. There was no moon and it was very dark, but as he picked up the knife a dozen voices called out, 'You have got it the wrong way round!'" (Wilfred Thesiger, Arabian Sands.)

♦ Bedouins will appoint a man to divide the food into portions. Each man will take a portion, but never one he thinks is larger than the other portions. And so, the last portion goes to the man who divided the food, and if his portion is larger, he will eat shame. And so he is very careful to divide the portions equally.

♦ One third food. One third water. One third empty. (What the stomach is for, according to a Bedouin.)

♦ It is said a Tuareg can survive in the desert for nine days on just three dates, if it is necessary. On the first day, he will eat the skin of one date. On the second day, he will consume the meat of that one date. And on the third day he will suck the stone of that one date. And so on for nine days. On the tenth day, however, all he can do is tie himself to his camel and hope that he is alive if his camel reaches water.

♦ "He who eats his fill while his neighbor goes without food is not a believer."

♦ "You have hundreds of college students who are living in their cars while attending classes. To me, it just kinda shows what kind of a Hunger Games type situation college has become for so many type people [sic] of doing what they can to make sure they get that piece of paper that will keep them in the middle class." (Journalist Will Bunch. From "College is increasingly out of reach for many students. What went wrong?" NPR, Fresh Air, August 3, 2022.)

♦ "One down, two to go" makes it sound like she's playing the Hunger Games, she's on the hunt, for people who don't follow her particular right-wing agenda, the Maga agenda." (Harvard's Laurence Tribe about Representative Elise Stefanik, and calls to replace Harvard President Dr. Claudine Gay following her testimony at "Holding Campus Leaders Accountable and Confronting Antisemitism," House Committee on Education and the Workforce, Dec. 5, 2023.)

♦ "Unseemly hungers; biting honesty; spitting it back at others; female hunger; female hunger; everybody was starving around me; if you were starving you were doing great; you must starve; then you'll be palatable; "palatable" displays of womanhood; she looks hungry, as if she could swallow the whole world and it wouldn't be enough; What Buckley remembers her whispering most was, "You're starving, you're absolutely starving"; take a bite of the apple; her taste for playing women who want something they are not supposed to want; really take a bite of the apple; demand the right to see the world as it really is, to eat what is delicious; a tree teeming with apples; her hunger is recognizable; it doesn't feed her enough (being 100% in love with her partner)... (Figurative language relating to food and eating in "Monster Talent: In role after indelible role, Jessie Buckley is exploring the darkest corners of human nature" by Jordan Kisner, photograph by Jennifer Cheng, The New York Times Magazine, December 4, 2022.)

♦ "I'm hungry for nature; I don't think I've ever seen kind of England so kind of delicious; I dunno, whatever feels like kind of nourishing; like [?] that I can get my teeth into..." ("Cannes 2022: Irish actress Jessie Buckley talks 'Men,' YouTube France 24 English, May 23, 2022.)

(12-Honorable Mention) Xiu-Xiu, the Sent Down Girl (1998 / apple). ("Top Ten Food & Sex Scenes in the Movies," at <http://blogs.houstonpress.com/eating/> 2008.)

♦ "The significance of sex and food is reversed between the Siriono and us Westerners: the Sirionos' strongest anxieties are about food, they have sex virtually whenever they want, and sex compensates for food hunger, while our strongest anxieties are about sex, we have food virtually whenever we want, and eating compensates for sexual frustration." (The Siriono Indians live in Bolivia. From The World Until Yesterday by Jared Diamond.)

♦ "If you ever go to school hungry, it puts a chip on your shoulder, it really does. I think hunger makes you angry because even now if you miss a few meals you're not the most nice guy that you'll ever meet. And of course I had a chip on my shoulder all the time because to go to school without breakfast then at lunch without a lunch it makes for a bad boy. And of course I'd try to conceal my lack of things by fighting all the time. Pretty soon I became an expert at fighting, not too good because it means I never did get good at schoolwork. 'Cause you're too tired. All the time sleeping in class. Can you imagine not having a breakfast not having a lunch and the teacher saying, 'Wake up, son, wake up!' You can't wake up. The most important thing for me in school when I was growing up was the hour three, it meant, you're out!" (The great boxer and businessman George Foreman. The George Foreman grill is popular with homeless people. They tap into an electrical source wherever they happen to be, even outdoors under an overpass, and use it to cook.)

♦ "It is a fact that if you are hungry and you see somebody eating something you would like to have your teeth in too, spit will flood to your mouth and you will swallow to make a noise. That noise Shani made as I watched her. Then I saw her eyes, and they were on my can. / 'Why no home for dinner to-day?' I asked her... / Next morning I went to school with my can packed tight... Not a word from my mother, only a little smile. / So Shani and me sat together to have dinner every day in my mother's smile..." (How Green Was My Valley by Richard Llewellyn.)

♦ "We will make do. Everyone will have a little bit." (Abdul Aziz, 63, of Dhaka, Bangladesh, disappointed that his money could not buy more beans and cauliflower for his family.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Then started again, and, coming to a small log cabin, entered and asked for something to eat. The poor people seemed to be alarmed and said they had nothing. 'Oh,' we said, 'we do not wish to deprive you, and we are willing to pay.' Then they took courage and gave us some fat pork, corn bread, and a kind of coffee, made, I think, out of burned peas. But it was warm. There were three of us, the two doctors and myself. We gave our hosts five dollars, and they were delighted, and so were we. Hunger made that breakfast the most delicious we had in six months." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. Corby served during the Civil War.)

♦ See the Wikipedia article, "Willie and Joe," the two cartoon G.I.s from World War II. My favorite "Willie and Joe" cartoon is the one labeled "The Prince and the Pauper." In Up Front by Bill Mauldin, the text about the cartoon reads, "It would take a pretty tough guy not to feel his heart go out to the shivering, little six-year-old squeaker who stands barefoot in the mud, holding a big tin bucket so the dogface can empty his mess kit into it... [T]here is a big difference between the ragged, miserable infantryman who waits with his mess kit, and the ragged, miserable civilian who waits with his bucket. The doggie knows where his next meal is coming from. That makes him a very rich man in this land where hunger is so fierce..." I showed this cartoon to our military students in Saudi Arabia, and some wondered who the "Prince" was, but their buddies explained it to them, and they got it and admired it greatly.

♦ "I weighed one hundred eighty going in, and I came out weighing one hundred fourteen..." (From Once Upon a Town, the Miracle of the North Platte Canteen by the brilliant Chicago Tribune writer Bob Greene.)

♦ "We were hungry every minute of the day. There were two 20-gallon drums in the kitchen, one for the first course, a watery cabbage-soup without a scrap of meat, and one for the second course, a gooey paste of dried potato mash or pearl barley, also without meat. Oh, and canned mackerel, one tin between four of us. The label said: 'Year of manufacture: 1956. Consume within 18 months.' In my year and a half in Afghanistan I stopped being hungry only once, when I was wounded. You were looking for ways to get or steal food the whole time. We climbed into the Afghans' orchards and gardens, even though they shot at us and laid mines to blow us up with. We were desperate for apples, pears, fruit of any kind. I asked my parents to send me citric acid, which they did. We dissolved it in water and drank it. It was nice and sour and burnt your stomach." (Zinky Boys: Soviet Voices from the Afghanistan War by Svetlana Alexievich.)

♦ "He who eats his fill while his neighbor goes without food is not a believer."

♦ "Keep it in mind during the days ahead that war does inexplicable things to people, and no man can guess how it is going to affect him until he has had a really stiff dose of it... The most unfortunate ones after any war are not those with missing limbs; they are the ones who have had their spiritual feet knocked out from under them. The beer halls and gutters are still full of such poor bastards from my war, and nobody understands or cares what happened to them...I remember two striking examples from my old Company in the 4th Battalion. Both damn fine fellows, yet both committed suicide in the Line. They did not shoot themselves—they let the Germans do it because they had reached the end of the tether. But they never knew what was the matter with them; that they had become empty husks, were spiritually depleted, were burned-out." (A letter Farley Mowat received from his

♦ “Every step I’ve taken has gaslighted those whom I love... I am not a culture vulture. I am a culture leech. You should absolutely cancel me, and I absolutely cancel myself.” (Rachel Dolezal, an academic who claimed “identities of color,” including Black Caribbean, North African Blackness, US rooted Blackness, Caribbean rooted Bronx Blackness, Boricua...)

♦ “She got grants, and she got fellowships, and she checked boxes, and she got positions.” (A Pretendian, known for the beadwork and the Native American signifiers she would wear and her loud laughter at gatherings and pow-wows.)

♦ “Buffy is our family. We chose her and she chose us. We claim her as a member of our family and all of our family members are from the Piapot First Nation. To us, that holds far more weight than any paper documentation or colonial record keeping ever could.” (“Statement from the Piapot Family” about Buffy Sainte-Marie.)

♦ “I am a white person who has incorrectly identified as Native my whole life, based on incomplete information.” (A female academic, outed as a Pretendian.)

♦ “Well, geez, if gender is just a ‘social construct’ shouldn’t ethnicity be as well? By the progressive tenants of gender identity she should be able to identify as any ethnicity she pleases.” (An online commenter about “Activist Raquel Evita Saraswati has faked her ‘Arab and Latin’ racial identity as far back as 2004: reports” by Ben Kessler, The New York Post, February 21, 2023. The article states that the activist has been referred to online as “the new Rachel Dolezal.”)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "On the afternoon of the 6th, during one of the many fierce onslaughts of the enemy, the rails and logs, of which we had built our field works, caught fire and quickly reached to the timber. Amidst clouds of smoke and crackling flames the fight went on, the musketry rattled and roared, and many a noble soul fell, while the fire still leaping and sweeping through the trees, burned up both the dead and wounded of both armies." (The Wilderness. From Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. The U.S. Civil War.)

♦ "The fire had swept every superficial foot of it, and at every step I sank into ashes to the ankle... Death had put his sickle into this thicket and fire had gleaned the field." ("What I Saw of Shiloh" by Ambrose Bierce, 1881. Both wounded and dead had been consumed by a fire.)

♦ "They reach the railway that runs to Bialystok at around eleven o'clock—that is also in the process of being demolished. A large armoured train is steaming back section by section while soldiers tear up the track behind it. Lobanov-Rostovsky's unit follows the train. First they blow up a bridge, then they come to a railway station which, as a matter of course, they set fire to. / The flames are already licking up the wooden walls of the building when Lobanov-Rostovsky notices a cat wandering around up on the roof, terrified and screaming helplessly. He goes and finds a ladder and climbs up to save the cat: / 'The animal was scratching with his claws in such terror that it was unsafe to attempt to climb down with him so I hurled him from the two-storey building. He made two somersaults in mid-air, landed on four paws, and, with his tail erect, disappeared into the bushes.'" (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England.)

("Brief Answers To The Big Questions" Is Stephen Hawking's Parting Gift To Humanity" by Marcelo Gleiser, NPR, Book Reviews, October 16, 2018.)

♦ "Byrne's work has long been obsessed with the many ways of being imprisoned—in oneself, in an addiction to things, in a meaningless life—and equally attuned to different forms of escape." ("David Byrne And Spike Lee Conjure Up A Joyous Vision Of 'American Utopia'" by John Powers, NPR, Fresh Air, October 13, 2020.)

♦ "I wanted to speak up for my rights. And also I didn't want my future to be just sitting in a room and be imprisoned in my four walls and just cooking and giving birth to children. I didn't want to see my life in that way." (Malala Yousafzai. Greta Thunberg was born in 2003. Malala Yousafzai was born 1997. Florence Nightingale was born in 1820. Joan of Arc was born circa 1412.)

♦ "She's also started telling her own story in public. She's given just a handful of speeches, but each time she's been met with a line of women coming up to her afterward, confessing their own secret desire to escape. Her story resonates, she says, because so many women wonder if they wouldn't do the same thing. They feel pressure to smile and pretend their life is fine, even when trapped in a bad relationship or a bad job or any number of circumstances that seem beyond their control. Toby thinks these women are inspired by her not only because she had the guts to leave, but also because she tells her story without shame." ("Toby Dorr's Great Escape" by Michael J. Mooney, The Atlantic, October 2020.)

♦ "Then there is the other idle man, who is idle in spite of himself, who is inwardly consumed by a great longing for action, because he seems to be imprisoned in some cage. A just or unjustly ruined reputation, poverty, fatal circumstances, adversity—they are what make men prisoners. And the prison is also called prejudice, misunderstanding, fatal ignorance of one thing or another, distrust, false shame. One cannot always tell what it is that keeps us shut in, confines us, seems to bury us, but nevertheless, one feels certain barriers, certain walls. Such a man does not always know what he can do, but he feels by instinct: Yes, I am good for something; my life has an aim after all; I know that I might be quite a different man! There is something inside of me; what can it be? / Do you know what frees one from this captivity? It is..." (Dear Theo: The Autobiography of Vincent Van Gogh, Edited by Irving and Jean Stone.)

♦ "Quite soon after the Ministerial movements, a change in the enemy's method affected our general policy. Till now the hostile attack had been confined almost exclusively to high-explosive bombs; but with the full moon of October 15, when the heaviest attack of the month fell upon us, about 480 German aircraft dropped 386 tons of high explosive and in addition 70,000 incendiary bombs. Hitherto we had encouraged the Londoners to take cover, and every effort was made to improve their protection. But now 'To the basements' must be replaced by 'To the roofs'... An organisation of fire-watchers and fire services on a gigantic scale and covering the whole of London (apart from measures taken in provincial cities) was rapidly brought into being... Women pressed forward to take their share. Large-scale systems of training were developed to teach the fire-watchers how to deal with the various kinds of incendiaries which were used against us. Many became adept, and thousands of fires were extinguished before they took hold. The experience of remaining on the roof night after night under fire, with no protection but a tin hat, soon became habitual." (Their Finest Hour by Winston S. Churchill. ### *** “COMING! Hookworm Dispensaries...”

♦ COMING! / To Roxobel, Kelford and / Powellsville. / Bertie Co. Hookworm Dispensaries. / Hookworm greatly magnified (picture) / The County Commissioners have so arranged with the North Carolina Board of Health that the towns of Roxobel, Kelford and Powellsville will secure the services of The State and County Free Hookworm Dispensaries. / Dr. Covington, a state specialist on these diseases, and Mr. Conner, an expert microscopist, will be in attendance at these dispensaries on the days and dates printed below. / Everybody should visit these dispensaries on the dates given below, be examined and see if they have any of these diseases. If you have, medicine will be given that will change you from a tired, indolent, despondent kind of a man to one who goes about his work with a vim and a rush, always finding pleasure in everything. Ask any of the thousands who have already been treated in this county. They know. All this without any cost to you whatever. All is paid for by the state and county. Come, bring your wife and children with you, let them see the different varieties of worms that often infect people. See the hookworm eggs under the microscope and hear talks on this disease. / Remember the dates as this will be your last opportunity to be examined and treated free of all cost. / In visiting the dispensaries do not neglect to bring with you a very small box on which you have written your name and age containing a small specimen of your bowel movement as only in this way can an examination be made. In making this examination, if present, any of the worms are found, whether it be the tape worm, round worm, or any of the other various varieties.” (A poster used by the Commission. ♦ "Alex Levy contacted me just before the meeting began to tell me to use whatever question I got first to apologise, and at some point to acknowledge my privilege. / A Zoom call with a couple of thousand people is a disorienting experience, particularly when many of them are not particularly mindful of your 'full humanity'. I do not recommend it. As my first turn to speak came up, I was still struggling with what I should apologise for. I was not going to apologise for denying my colleagues' humanity or endangering their lives. I had not done those things. I was not going to apologise for publishing the op-ed. Finally, I came up with something that felt true. I told the meeting that I was sorry for the pain that my leadership of Opinion had caused. What a pathetic thing to say. I did not think to add, because I'd lost track of this truth myself by then, that opinion journalism that never causes pain is not journalism. It can't hope to move society forward." ("When the New York Times lost its way" by James Bennet, 1843 Magazine (The Economist), Dec 14th 2023.)

♦ "One day Savostyanov came into Viktor's office and pleaded with him. / 'Viktor Pavlovich, I entreat you, we all of us entreat you: write a letter, say you repent! I can assure you that will help. Just think: you're throwing away everything—and at a time when an important—no, a truly great—work lies before you, a time when all that is genuine in our science looks to you with hope. Write a letter, admit your errors.' / 'What errors? What do you want me to repent of?' / 'Who cares? It's what everyone does—writers, scientists, political leaders, even your beloved Shostakovich. He admits his errors, writes letters of repentance—and then returns to work. It's like water off a duck's back.' / 'But what do you want me to repent of? And who to?' / 'The director, the Central Committee... It doesn't matter—as long as you repent! Something like this: 'I have committed errors and I admit my guilt. I am now conscious of this and I promise to mend my ways.' That sort of thing—you know what's expected. That's bound to help; it always helps.' / Savostyanov's bright, laughing eyes were for once quite serious. They even seemed to be a different colour. / 'Thank you, thank you, my friend,' said Viktor. 'I'm grateful to you for your concern.'" (Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books.)

badly designed ~ makes us feel out of control

♦ "Smart doorbells becoming more intelligent."

♦ "The shoer assumes a squatting position and observes the feet as the horse is led past him, away from him, and toward him. The manner in which a foot leaves the ground, its path in the air, and the manner in which it is planted should be closely watched in order to detect any of the defects of gait which can be remedied by intelligent shoeing." (Manual For Army Horseshoers, 1917. In the past, people were intelligent, and technology was often as rudimentary as the forge used to make, shape, and modify an army horseshoe; today, technology is intelligent and people are stupid.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "People want 'dumbphones'. Will companies make them?" by Brennan Doherty, BBC, 20 May 2024. (Answer: No.)

♦ News reader: "South Yorkshire's police and crime commissioner has written to the government to say smart motorways should be abandoned. Dr. Alan Billings said they were unsafe. Earlier this week, a coroner at the inquest of two men who died on a smart motorway near Sheffield called for such roads to be reviewed..." (From BBC's Six O'clock News, 24 / 01 / 2021, "SNP sets itself on collision course with Westminster.")

♦ "There's a little Philip K. Dick, a little Orwell, a little Kafka in her portrait of powerful bureaucracies ceding control of the most intimate decisions of our lives to hyperempowered computer models riddled with all of our unresolved, atavistic human biases." (A blurb from the Paris Review for Weapons of Math Destruction by Cathy O'Neil.)

♦ "The villagers shrugged and said, 'Nobody asked us, we knew every third year there would be a flood.'" (A UN energy expert, after a small Japanese hydroelectric project in Bhutan was washed away in a flood.)

♦ "Many of my friends have bought motorcycles instead of using horses. They enjoy decorating the cycle with tassels and carpets like we do our horses. Although my sons want bikes, we will stick to our horses. Besides, we live too far away from the town for the bike and the terrain is much too rocky to get to our usual encampments." (An ethnic Tibetan nomad in western China.)

♦ "Before, people moved everywhere on donkeys. You could stop them and talk to them. Now, everyone is zooming around in cars." (Saed al-Dhori, a man in his eighties, in Khasab, Oman. From "With Murmurs of Change, Sultan Tightens Grip," by Michael Slackman, May 15, 2009.)

*** old technology rescues new technology, etc.

♦ In late December 2009 modern electric rail service was disrupted in England by cold and snow which even shut down the Channel Tunnel. A steam locomotive offering "Christmas meal" trips was unaffected, however. On its final trip of the season, it picked up 100 stranded passengers at Victoria Station and carried them to cities in the south for free. (Old technology rescues new.)

♦ "Another resident of the Isle of Skye, Ross McKerlich, told the BBC that he was surprised to see the submarine outside his home when he awoke this morning." (The HMS Astute, stuck in the mud just yards off the coast of Scotland. The new submarine has been described as Britain's 'stealthiest' because its 39,000 acoustic panels rendered it invisible to enemy warships and submarines. The Navy used old-fashioned ropes and tugboats to tow it back out to deeper water. Old technology rescues new.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ The US is speeding up the delivery of dozens of bomb-detection dogs to Iraq after it was learned that the ADE 651 hand-held wand that was supposed to detect car bombs and weapons at vehicle checkpoints didn't work. The wands cost just $250 to make but drew up to $60,000 each from the Baghdad government, which spent a total of $85 million for them. Their British manufacturer has been arrested for fraud.

♦ "Sorry, we didn't know you were invisible." (The mocking Serbian apology offered in 1999 after its military shot down an American F-117A stealth fighter during NATO's bombing campaign.)

♦ "The preparations [by the French for the great offensive in Champagne at the end of September 1915] include the distribution of a completely new piece of equipment—the steel helmet... As with quite a few other 'new' pieces of equipment (steel shields for the trenches, spiked clubs for assault troops, sharpened infantry spades and all the different kinds of hand grenade) they remind one of earlier centuries and reveal how, paradoxically, the hypermodern can be a return to the past..." (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England.)

♦ "Foch thought the airplane silly. Kitchener dismissed the tank as a 'toy' and von Hindenburg, warned of Allied tanks, scoffed, 'The German infantry can get along quite well without those peculiar motor cars.' The invaluable Stokes mortar was rejected twice at the British War Office and finally introduced by Lloyd George, who begged the money for it from an Indian maharajah." (The Arms of Krupp by William Manchester.)

♦ "Every British officer understood animals, as a point of honor." (Seven Pillars of Wisdom, Book VIII, Chapter XCV by T.E. Lawrence.)

*** analysis

♦ Technology can be dumb, smart, or brilliant and can even teach itself (AI).

♦ "What's "smart" or "intelligent" or "brilliant" today will be "dumb" or "legacy" tomorrow. So much for the enthusiasm of all those "early adopters" and their disparagement of tradition and legacy and "the old ways of doing things."

♦ "There's no one pure enough to survive a full investigation by the movement." (A comment about 1937 Stalinist Russia? No, Nellie Bowles about The New York Times.)

♦ A FUNNY JOKE: The tomb of a pharaoh was discovered in Egypt, but the greatest Egyptian Egyptologist was unable to decipher the hieroglyphics and identify the pharaoh. And so an international appeal was made as the world press camped out by the tomb. The premier German Egyptologist went into the tomb and reappeared a day later. "Who is he, who's the pharaoh!" members of the world press clamored. The German admitted defeat. He had been unable to decipher the hieroglyphics and identify the pharaoh. Next, the preeminent French Egyptologist from the Louvre went into the tomb. Two days later he reappeared, shaking his head in disappointment. Then the foremost British Egyptologist from the British Museum went into the tomb, and spent three days there before reappearing. He, too, had failed. Finally, it was the great Soviet Egyptologist's turn. He and his KGB minder disappeared into the tomb. A week later they reappeared, and the Soviet Egyptologist triumphantly announced, "Ramses Amenhotep the 48th!" The world press roared its approval, and the dean of international journalists shouted, "How were you able to identify the pharaoh when the German, Frenchman, and Englishman couldn't?" The Soviet Egyptologist nodded in deference to his KGB minder and stepped back. The KGB man stepped forward, loudly smacked the fist of his one hand into the palm of his other hand, and announced, "The bastard confessed!"

("How The Bobos Broke America" by David Brooks, The Atlantic, September 2021. Bohemian values, bourgeois lives.

♦ "In conversation, Jackson repeatedly returns to the ways the evolving discourse around race, identity, and social justice fails to take into account the perspectives of flesh-and-blood Black people. Jackson's best friend, Kisha, is a Black woman who runs a day-care center in South Carolina. The two of them talk constantly about how initially compelling concepts like intersectionality have turned into rhetorical class markers. 'So many of these [concepts] don't have any practical applications to anybody's actual lives,' he told me. 'I bet you a garbageman has never had to do a diversity training,' he said. 'This only operates at a certain class level...' The issue, as he sees it, boils down to the fact that more school is always required to make use of these terms, or even to understand them, and as a result they're deeply exclusionary. 'You have to read more...It's endless working and reading and studying,' he said. 'I feel like there's a scam inside of it that's meant to keep some people on top and some people on bottom.' He went on, 'It's all about these social-class associations, and you either have entrance into this country club or you don't, based on whether you subscribe to a kind of thought or belief system.'" ("The Radical Self-Awareness of Michael R. Jackson" by Thomas Chatterton Williams, The Atlantic, March 2024.)

She currently lives on the Upper West Side in New York City. It's hard to understand how she was "invisible.")

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "I know what it's like to be a woman who is essentially invisible to most people because of not being seen as traditionally beautiful or whatever." (Rebel Wilson, on BBC. She has been in films, is a producer and director, and is on the BBC's 100 Women of 2021. It's hard to see how she's been "invisible and overlooked." Whatever.)

♦ "I dreamed of being an astronaut by looking at Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin when I was 13 years old. What if Ed [Dwight] had actually flown? What a difference it would have made in my life because, during that time, I didn't see anyone that looked like me." (The astronaut Bernard Harris, who flew on two NASA Space Shuttle missions—in spite of seeing "nobody who looked like him"—about the elderly Ed Dwight's trip on New Shepard in 2024. In terms of publicity for Jeff Bezos, Dwight's flight was equivalent to Mary Wallace Funk's New Shepard flight. Dwight had been appointed by President John Kennedy to the Aerospace Research Pilot School, making him the first Black astronaut candidate but was not chosen for the NASA astronaut corps. Dwight is a retired Air Force captain and artist. According to his Wikipedia article, "While delivering newspapers, he [was inspired to fly when he] saw a picture of Air Force pilot Dayton Ragland, a Black man from Kansas City, on the front page of The Call." The "I didn't see anybody who looked like me" is a commonplace, conventional 21st century trope / meme / cliché.

♦ "I was brought into this world visible, but I identify as invisible. My preferred pronouns are who/where." (Funny snark from an online commenter about a "woke" celebrity.)

*** more conventional usage...

♦ "I had to be nonexistent, invisible." (The 11-year-old Amos Oz, the only child at a tableful of adults discussing literature, politics, etc.)

♦ "I guess I was invisible for so long that it felt good to be noticed." (The silly film John Tucker Must Die.)

♦ "I can disappear when I get that scared." (Thandie Newton's character from the great film The Journey of August King, based on the book by John Ehle. Another character in the film was played by Sam Waterston.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "The Iron Brigade embodied the resolve of Michigan, Wisconsin and Indiana during the Civil War."

♦ "General Jackson quickly realized that he had greatly underestimated the fighting prowess of these Federal troops. His valiant 'Stonewall' Brigade had taken on the stubborn Iron Brigade composed of Wisconsin farmers who were conspicuous in their tall, bell-crowned black hats which added to their naturally rugged appearance. The toughest brigades in each army were now locked in a fierce struggle... / As though by mutual agreement both sides ceased firing at nine o'clock. Neither side had yielded an inch, but both had lost heavily. The 'Stonewall' Brigade alone lost a third of its roster together with five officers, and the Iron Brigade suffered 750 casualties out of 2,000 who had answered the roll that morning. Burying parties found the dead lying in parallel lines where they had fallen without breaking ranks." (The Second Battle of Manassas, August 29-30, 1862. From Colonel John Pelham: Lee's Boy Artillerist by William Woods Hassler. The U.S. Civil War.)

*** jumping on the "ish" bandwagon...

♦ "It's nicknamed the green comet...and you may be able to see it while it's in the neighborhood-ish. I mean, it's gettin' to within 26 million miles from earth." (NPR's A Martinez. Stellar reporting. Trendy language.)

♦ "Policy-ish." (NPR's Selena Simmons-Duffin. "POLICY-ISH" is now a descriptor at NPR, along with "music," "national," "books," "politics," etc. Why?)

♦ "Brumation and torpor: How animals survive cold snaps by playing dead-ish" by Vanessa Romo, NPR, Animals, February 14, 2024.)

♦ "So, the group is planning on supporting about two dozen-ish candidates under the age of 35..." (Elena Moore, who covers "youth politics" for NPR, Morning Edition, Morning News Brief, August 9, 2023. Of course, "about" is redundant. But "-ish" is highly associated with the younger demographic, and it is NPR's great wish and hope to be highly associated with the younger demographic.)

♦ "We're already out, and it's been, what like, thirtyish minutes." (Riley Sullivan, with high upspeak on "minutes." Riley was passing out free Naloxone and fentanyl testing strips on the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill campus. His goal is for every student to carry Naloxone on his or her person and know how to load and inject it. Three UNC-Chapel Hill students have died of fentanyl in the last two years. From "Naloxone On college campuses saves lives" by Liz Schlemmer, NPR, All Things Considered, October 16, 2023.)

♦ "For the third of singles who reported trying it, consensual nonmonogamy covered a range; polyamory (where relationship partners agree that each may have a romantic relationship with other people); open relationships (a committed primary relationship that openly allows for romantic and/or sexual activity with others); swinging (expanding an exclusive romantic relationship to seek out other sexual partners together); and being monogamish (a committed relationship that allows for sexual variety with others, either together or individually)." ("Where do Americans stand on consensual nonmonogamy?" by Cady Lang, Time, February 26, 2024. "Cady Lang is a staff writer at TIME. She covers culture, focusing on identity, celebrity, and fashion." "She is a writer and producer living in Brooklyn, by way of the Bay Area.")

♦ "So, as I've said many times and I think you've heard me say this, I always joke, I'm Catholic, but I'm also Jew...ish, as in "ish." (Congressman George Santos, expelled from Congress in 2023. "Don't let the door hit you on the way out.")

♦ A Black female blogger refers to Jewish people as "Ish-es and Palestinian people as "Palo-s." Bizarre!

♦ "Smithsonian / in passing / district of chaos / America-ish" (An online gallery of photographs by Matailong Du.)

♦ Rich Eisen and Bryant Gumbel were talking about people who retire and come back. Eisen said about Tom Brady, "Brady said he was gone and then wasn't." Gumbel said, "Now he stayed gone." Eisen replied, "Nuuh, ish," while making a hand gesture for "maybe." The recovered word would be "gone-ish."

♦ NPR's Michel Martin: So let's go to Deepa now. You were at the [Kamala] Harris event at Howard University last night, which is here in Washington, D.C. When did it become clear things were not going her way? / NPR's Deepa Shivaram: Yuh know I would say it was around 11 p.m.-ish... (The 2024 U.S. presidential election.)

♦ Defense lawyer: I believe you said you arrived about 8:45 in the morning? / Cop: 8:45-ish. (This is interesting. The male cop—a dark-skinned Hispanic, millennial, groomed facial hair—could have said simply "Yes." A televised murder trial that attracted national attention.)

♦ "I don't know why we have you know made it this separate thing, as if it's an island nation in which you need a visa and passport." (Ken Burns talking about his series on country music.)

♦ "I'll stay over here on Gen-X island by myself." (Good-natured podcast banter having to do with pop-culture references and knowledge.)

♦ "And I thought, if I was doomed to be sent to this island of punishment, of grief, at least I will try to make it with my own words..." (The Israeli writer David Grossman about his novel Falling Out of Time.)

♦ No man is an island entire of itself; every man / is a piece of the continent, a part of the main; if a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe / is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as / well as any manner of thy friends or of thine / own were; any man's death diminishes me, / because I am involved in mankind. / And therefore never send to know for whom / the bell tolls; it tolls for thee. (John Donne.)

♦ The Gulag Archipelago by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn.

*** The Atlas of Remote Islands by Judith Schalansky...

♦ The Atlas of Remote Islands by Judith Schalansky is a wonderful, short, impressionistic, graphically distinguished book about actual islands. It should be on the bookshelf of every household with children.

♦ "When I first moved to Manhattan in 1990, it was easy to forget that New York City is a collection of islands (of the five boroughs, only the Bronx is on the mainland) or that it has over 520 miles of coastline, more than either San Francisco or Seattle." ("Wet and Wild" by Tony Perrottet, photographs by Gina LeVay, Smithsonian, May 2017. The map is superb.)

♦ "The old river in its broad reach rested unruffled at the decline of day, after ages of good service done to the race that peopled its banks, spread out in the tranquil dignity of a waterway leading to the uttermost ends of the earth." (The Heart of Darkness by Joseph Conrad. The identity and strength of Britain has always been due to its status as an island nation with a great Navy. Now, of course, its Navy is not so great.)

♦ At low tide, the 33-island nation of Kiribati—pronounced kee-ree-bahs, Keer-a-boss—can be three times larger than at high tide! Kiribati is the easternmost country in the world. Half of the tuna consumed in Germany comes from Kiribati alone. The EU, China, Taiwan, Japan, Russia, the US. the Philippines, Indonesia, and Thailand all fish for skipjack tuna in Kiribati waters. Kiribati is just 313 square miles, yet the islands extend 2,400 miles from east to west, and 1,300 miles from north to south, on both sides of the equator. It holds fishing rights to more than a million square miles of sea. The word for airplane in Gilbertese spoken in Kiribati is 'te wanikiba,' or 'the canoe that flies...' Of the 33 islands of Kiribati, 21 are inhabited. The capital of Kiribati is Tarawa, an atoll in the Gilbert Islands. That atoll was the scene of the Battle of Tarawa in World War II. Both the US and Britain tested nuclear bombs on and around Kiritimati Island (Christmas Island) in 1957 and 1962. (In Gilbertese spelling -ti is pronounced -s: Ke-rees-mass. The island was discovered by European on December 24, 1777-Christmas Eve—by Captain James Cook.) The countries most likely to be submerged by a rise in the ocean level include Kiribati, the Marshall Islands, and Tuvalu in the Pacific Ocean, and the Maldives in the Indian Ocean. Kiribati is truly a fascinating island nation!

*** analysis

♦ Islands can be remote, and they are often the source of endemic species. On the other hand, if the island has a port, than it might be a place where people from all parts of the world mingle and mix.

♦ On the 6th of May the Yukon began to rise rapidly, lifting the ice, which, however, remained fast in front of the town... The sight was one to inspire respect. When a big floe, forty feet across, struck the front of the barrier, it half rose out of the water, then dived under, or turned on edge, crunched into the front with a dull roar, and remained there... At four o'clock on the morning of the 8th the cry was raised,
'The ice is going out!' and everybody rushed out in time to see the bridge of ice crack, groan, then slowly push together and stop; then slowly, slowly the whole mass began to move, and in a few minutes there was nothing but a swift river, with cakes of ice as big as cabins strewn along the banks..." ("The Klondike Stampede" by Tappan

♦ "Then we go to New York, and this guy, he used to be fat and he isn't fat anymore. His name is Joe. He came out and sang, and we didn't need to play anymore, because after that performance, we had already won." (Los Angeles Dodgers baseball player Enrique Hernandez, trolling the New York City / Bronx rapper Fat Joe. Fat Joe sang before Game 3 of the 2024 World Series, which the Yankees lost at home. Allegedly, during Game 5, Fat Joe appeared on the Jumbotron in LA when the Yankees were up five to zero. The Yankees would go on to lose that game and the World Series. It is now suspected that the New York Yankees suffer from a Fat Joe Curse.)

♦ "Hey, Joe, what do you know?" (The lifelong burden of being named Joe.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ See the Wikipedia article "Willie and Joe" about the two cartoon G.I.s from World War II. My favorite "Willie and Joe" cartoon is the one labeled "The Prince and the Pauper." In Up Front by Bill Mauldin, the text about the cartoon reads, "It would take a pretty tough guy not to feel his heart go out to the shivering, little six-year-old squeaker who stands barefoot in the mud, holding a big tin bucket so the dogface can empty his mess kit into it... [T]here is a big difference between the ragged, miserable infantryman who waits with his mess kit, and the ragged, miserable civilian who waits with his bucket. The doggie knows where his next meal is coming from. That makes him a very rich man in this land where hunger is so fierce..." I showed this cartoon to our military students in Saudi Arabia, and some wondered who the "Prince" was, but their buddies explained it to them, and they got it and admired it greatly.

♦ "An ineffective, woke, unaccountable military is an affront—at every level—to the young men who actually pull the triggers... Joes know where to point the finger—and it's a middle finger." (Pete Hegseth, author of The War On Warriors: Behind The Betrayal Of The Men Who Keep Us Free. In 2024, President-elect Donald Trump selected him to be his Secretary of Defense.)

♦ O it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, go away"; But it's "Thank you Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play. (Rudyard Kipling. His son John was killed at the Battle of Loos, September 1915, age eighteen. President Teddy Roosevelt's son Quentin was killed in action July 1918, age 20. Both fathers grieved deeply, as any father would, famous or not, over the death of his son in combat.)

*** analysis

♦ If you are curious about "G.I. Joe," see the Wikipedia article "G.I." and also the Wikipedia article "Devil dog." Wikipedians are wonderful.

♦ Geoff Nunberg comprehensively discussed this word, "Joe." Listen to "Geoff Nunberg Nominates 2008's Word of The Year," NPR, Fresh Air, December 24, 2008. A 5-minute Listen. Fresh Air does not seem to have replaced Nunberg as its go-to linguist. A good candidate would be the linguist John McWhorter.

♦ "It may have been a little after midnight when I ran into a bear standing on his hind legs in the middle of my path, growling at me. At this point the sound of the swiftly running waters of the Ganges was so loud that we had neither of us heard the other's approach. Pointing my primitive spear at his heart, I backed step by step so as to keep my eyes fixed on him. Around the first bend of the track I hurriedly lit a fire, and pulling out a burning stick, I brandished it in front of me and moved forward to meet my enemy. But coming around the corner I found the road clear and the bear gone. Tibetan peasants told me later that bears are only aggressive by day. At night they are afraid to attack..." - ♦ "The presentation of Black bodies on stage singing, dancing, expressing joy, expressing melancholy." (A Broadway musical.)
- ♦ "We live in a world and work in industries that are so aggressively committed to upholding whiteness and perpetuating an unabashed misogyny towards Black women. And yet. I am forever in gratitude for the greatest lesson of my life—regardless of any challenges or obstacles, I will always have the power to cultivate my own joy, and it is this joy that will continue to be one of my greatest forms of resistance." ("Oscars 2023: Till director Chinonye Chukwu calls out misogyny and racism after snub" by Paul Glynn & Ian Youngs, BBC News, Jan 25, 2023.)
- ♦ "And our film-culture gatekeepers don't like Black joy. They only want movies where Black people are brutalized and depressed and sad and victimized. They don't want movies of how Black people...where their humanity is defined by their capacity for joy and love and desire. It's part of what is so beautiful in The Color Purple." (Culture critic Armond White, who is Black and gay.)
- ♦ "I make work for people to see, but the process is for me," says Gio Swaby, the Bahamian portrait artist who positions Black joy as an act of resistance. Last spring, not long after starting as an MFA student at the Ontario College of Art and Design University..." ("Fiber Optics" by Kayla Holliday, Vanity Fair, June 2022.)

- ♦ "We wanna focus on the joy, the stories, the culture, the celebration of us existing and being human. That's it." (Virginia teacher Deana Forbes about Black History Month in her African-American Studies class at Freedom High. "Joy." "Story." "Celebration.")
- ♦ "The difference now is what she calls a resistance culture of joy." (A woman about hearing the call to prayer during Ramadan in the part of Astoria, Queens, called "Little Egypt.")
- ♦ "Jewish anarchism offers this beautiful joy." (Cindy Milstein, queer.)
- ♦ "We really wanted to make sure that the show didn't veer towards being too saccharine or, you know, like, 'Oh, autism is my superpower!' she said. That's not the point of our show. It's about showing that, yes, there is struggle, but also there is community and also there is hope and there is joy. And honestly, there is autistic culture to learn about and to respect and to celebrate." (Librettist Rebekah Greer Melocik. From "How to Dance in Ohio" is a Broadway musical starring 7 autistic actors," Jeff Lunden, NPR, Morning Edition, December 5, 2023.)
- ♦ "According to Ross, we should all take joy a lot more seriously because joy is the ember and fire behind social movements and survival. And his definition of joy isn't something that you experience alone. His joy comes from connection and our interlocking lives or, as he puts it, entanglement." (Brittany Luse, from "Ross Gay on inciting joy while dining with sorrow," NPR, It's Been A Minute, Feb. 21, 2023.)
- ♦ The rich; the bourgeoisie; then the other students arrived—the white students; WASPy; minority students; their comfort superseded our joy; the sounds of my identity; we self-segregated; people of color; immigrants; racial minorities; the gentry; black and brown communities; Brooklyn remains loud and proud; one person's loud is another person's expression of joy; uptown; Puerto Ricans; Nobody could call us nothing; ("Let Brooklyn Be Loud: Why do rich people love quiet so much?" by Xochitl Gonzalez, The Atlantic, September, 2022.)
- ♦ "Something elemental seems to have been lost. Black music, from blues to jazz to proto-rock 'n' roll to soul to early hip-hop, has consistently been distinguished by its sense of humor, by its playfulness. Just as joy is an important survival mechanism for oppressed people, it's essential for the sustainability of any popular art form. Rap has gone through different periods in which the fun ebbs and flows, but the serious acts and the free spirits were always in balance... / There's still plenty of levity...but mostly you find it on the other side of the gender divide." ("The Future Of Rap Is Female" by Niela Orr, The New Yorker Magazine, August 13, 2023.)
- ♦ "Gorgeous article. I'm moved by the theme of how terror, abandonment or anger meets breath, which makes joy, which means survival..." (Bill Heck, New York. "Readers responded out our special issue celebrating hip-hop's 50th anniversary," The New York Times Magazine, August 27, 2023.)
- ♦ "For me, queer joy looks like a celebration of uninhibited self-expression free from expectations around sexuality and gender performance." (Steven Goings, who identifies as they / he. They / he are / is a diversity trainer at California State University—Monterey Bay.)
- ♦ "Spend some time with us. Be in community with us. Joy is infectious. See what it sparks for you." (Jules Gill-Peterson, Ph.D., professor of History, John Hopkins University.)
- ♦ Kristen Lovell: I think a lot of the times that when these documentaries are presented, they leave out certain elements of what Trans joy looks like and, you know, community, you know, especially back in like the early 90s, you would see a lot of documentaries, they're always dark and gritty and, you know, the Trans sex workers on the streets and, you know, the conversation becomes about the most dire of situations, and even though those stories are equally important [pronounced im-POR-ent], it's how they're told. / Ari Shapiro: Yeah, that sisterhood comes across REEE-lee vividly. ("Kristen Lovell, co-director of 'The Stroll,' knows sex work is real work," NPR, All Things Considered, May 10, 2024.)
- ♦ "But I'll tell you what. I want to bring you all to a street in Newark, New Jersey, called Martin Luther King Boulevard. On that street was this incredible housing project called Brick Towers. We never mistook wealth with work. In those towers was a tenant president, a Miss Virginia Jones. Her son was murdered in the 1980s in the lobby of one of those buildings, but she was a woman of invincible joy. And I'll tell you this, I used to ask her, 'How are you so joyful?' and she would always tell me, 'Church woman.' She'd say, 'The joy I have, the woorld didn't give it to me. Come on, now. Come on now.' She taught me that you gotta generate the joy. That hope is the active conviction, that despair will never have the last word. And so tonight, there are so many challenges in our nation, there are so many problems that we're facing. Heck, if America hasn't broken your heart, you don't love her enough. But yet we will be joyful warriors, we are going to bring back to the journey of our nation joooooy. And if there's any tradition in America that has helped us to generate that joy, it has been the artists of America. It has been those folks bringing the rock-n-roll and the funk, bringing the gospel, and the hard rock. Well tonight we are blessed by one of those great American artists to help us to cleanse our spirits, to raise our hearts, and to bring in that joy. Ladies and gentlemen, I give you one of the true greats in America, someone to bring the joy to this incredible arena, Maren Morris..." ### *** analysis

♦ "The Hindustani name for juggernaut was jaganath. They gave this epithet to Krishna, chief Hindu deity and lord of the world, and to the idol of him which each year is dragged through the streets of Puri, in India. In the olden days worshippers threw themselves beneath the wheels of the cart and were crushed in their frenzies of devotion. Thus a juggernaut is anything to which we are blindly enslaved. We can say, for example, 'she sacrifices herself to the juggernaut of fashion.'" (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. Chapter 16, "Terms of Religion And Their Beginnings.")

*** various groups...

♦ "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." (Martin Luther King. The quote and attribution appear at the end of Mary Boyle: The Untold Story, the documentary by Gemma O'Doherty.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "Net zero, decarbonization, 1.5C—when tested, they meet blank faces. People either don't know what they mean or find them confusing. David Fenton, a longtime PR specialist for progressive causes, cites as one example the phrase 'climate justice'. When most voters hear the word 'justice', he tells me, they think of courts or police; bolt it to 'climate', and people are not moved, just confused." ("As heat records break, the climate movement has the right answers—but the words are all wrong" by Jonathan Freedland, The Guardian, 14 Jul 2023.)

*** analysis

♦ “Our political aspirant will also deliver us ‘justice.’ When? Where? How? ‘Justice’ about what? He is in favor of ‘justice.’ So are we. But are we sure what kind of ‘justice’ he has in mind? Perhaps it is different from the kind we are thinking about. It might be that we wouldn’t like his brand of ‘justice.’ What is ‘just’ to one person is often cruel in the eyes of another. ‘Justice’ is a good election word, and all words should be suspect during an election.” (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D. Chapter 12, “Political Terms and Their Origins.”)

♦ JUSTICE, n. A commodity which is a more or less adulterated condition the State sells to the citizen as a reward for his allegiance, taxes and personal service. (The Devil's Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

*** analysis

♦ The pundit who wrote about the need for a candidate to "kickstart a moribund campaign" made me laugh out loud. I would try to revive, reinvigorate, resuscitate, or breathe life into that poor campaign, not stomp on its chest with what I am wearing on my feet! I would only try to kickstart or jump-start it if it had stalled. You can point out people's odd or mixed metaphors, or you can have friends.

♦ "The Nipah virus has a kill rate of 70%." (Seventy percent of infected people die. Ordinarily, this would be expressed as "death rate.")

*** analysis

♦ It's a stranger and stranger world. In the past, a person died. Now that same person is "killed" by a river, virus, etc. Soldiers are injured [italics mine] in combat, not wounded. And civilians are wounded in accidents, as opposed to injured. Hunters don't shoot or kill animals; they murder or execute them.

♦ "But the question is not: Can we understand this typist (who types professor as proffessor)? It is: How did this typist come to be, and what does this mean for us all?" (Richard Mitchell, 1929-2002. "The Underground Grammarian advocates ridicule.")

♦ This sort of language has many possible explanations.

And I ain’t eaten in so long my stomach thinks my throat was cut an’ I was wonderin’ if you’d have any work I could do fer a small meal. I’d do anythin’ at all to earn it... / Minister: Son, I have been in the service all my life and have seen that thousands of men like you got to work for a meal. However, at this moment, there is no work to be done here, and therefore if I were to feed you it would be a cast [act?] of charity, which may help for the moment but cause harm in the long run. You seem to have retained your pride and dignity since you did not ask outright for a free meal and that is to your credit. But to answer your question, there is no work to be done so therefore you cannot earn a meal. (He steps back into the house and closes the door, leaving Woody standing on the porch with his mouth hanging open.)” (From the filmscript of the 1976 film Bound for Glory, based on the life of singer-songwriter and composer Woody Guthrie. Guthrie was played by the actor David Carradine.)

♦ A RIDDLE. If you were a black bear, which of the above "nature kings" would you visit?

♦ For a country that revolted against King George III, we still have a lot of "Kings"! But "King" was also a common surname when our country was born, and that may be the reason for many of these place names. It's worth noting that at one time "King" was a popular name for a dog. Nowadays, names for pets are much trendier.

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ "I don't believe in gestures, I believe in substance, I believe in doing things that make a practical difference." (Prime Minister Boris Johnson, asked if he would "take the knee.")

♦ "Will England be taking the knee at this World Cup to highlight social injustices? If so, does this also cover gingers and baldies?" / "Of course. What do you think the G and B stand for in LGBTQ?" (Inspired repartee on a BBC HYS about the FIFA World Cup in Qatar. The snark alludes to a speech given by FIFA president Gianni Infantino in which he said, "At school I was bullied because I had red hair and freckles." Read "Fact check: 11 eye-catching lines from Gianni Infantino's speech in Qatar" by Paul MacInnes, The Guardian, 19 Nov 2023. The games were considered a great success by everyone, and those who visited Qatar in person praised the country for its unique culture and wonderful hospitality.)

*** presentism, history in contempo-speak...

♦ "That issue [prejudice] is now full and centre and top of the mind in the world and I think this movement of Black Lives Matter and taking the knee campaign made the world sit back and look at the issue. So 2010 took world football's knee off Africa's neck, I don't think it will be allowed to put that knee on Africa's neck again." (Danny Jordaan, organising chief for the 2010 World Cup in South Africa, won by Spain. From "2010 took world football's knee off Africa's neck," BBC, July 11, 2020. This is a form of presentism.)

the ~ (where Pamirs, Hindu Kush and Karakoram meet)

Pine Knot

~ Branch is a stream in Pickens County, Alabama

Three Knot Bayou

~ is a stream in St. Tammany Parish, Louisiana

*** analysis

♦ Three Knot Bayou in Louisiana is NOT straight. In fact, it looks like an S with an added loop. If you took a boat along it, you would swing every point of the compass, much as if you were walking a path up a cove in the Appalachian mountains: north, south, east, west, making your head spin. Three Knot Bayou winds its way into Morgan Bayou. Such a "knot" might be thought of as a "tangle." And Americans do not like tangles. They like a straight distance from A to B.

♦ A "knot" in wood is where the grain goes from straight to haywire (twisted).

♦ Our direct, straightforward ancestors had a sense of direction as well as purpose and time, and consequently seem to have honored the bends in waterways that "meandered" and violated the straight line from point A to B with the name of the devil.

♦ see also elbow (Elbow Lake, etc.)

Krakatoa (Krakatoa of the Middle Ages, etc.)

Krakatoa of the Middle Ages
it was the ~ (Kuwae eruption in 1453)

♦ "For many, such as the young Luke Howard and his schoolmates at the Hillside Academy in Burford, the great cinema of light proved a magnificent compensation for all that was strange in the air. They gazed enraptured from the windows of the schoolhouse, while Howard, the sky watcher, wrote descriptions in his journal." (The strange weather of 1783 included in England appearances of the aurora borealis. From The Inventions of Clouds by Richard Hamblyn.)

*** analysis

♦ Roger Crowley in 1453 writes about a possible link between the Kuwae eruption and weather and atmospheric effects during the siege of Constantinople.

♦ Another eruption often cited for its effects on sunsets and climate was the 1815 eruption of Mount Tambora that caused the "Year Without a Summer" in 1816 and may have inspired J.M.W. Turner's vivid red sunsets.

♦ Simon Winchester writes about the atmospheric effects of the 1883 eruption of Krakatoa in his wonderful book Krakatoa.

*** analysis

♦ The play Macbeth is traditionally thought of in terms of manipulation, ambition, hate and revenge. On the other hand, the 2015 film Macbeth, directed by Justin Kurzel, portrays a love story. (See "Macbeth Without Evil" by Andrew O'Hagan, The New York Review, December 17, 2015.) And more recently, Naveen Andrews, who plays Sunny Balwani in the Hulu series The Dropout, compared his character to Lady Macbeth, and suggested that the story was about how far his character would go for love! (See "The Dropout's Naveen Andrews Saw Sunny Balwani as Lady Macbeth" by Roxana Hadadi, Vulture.) What an epithet traditionally suggested can completely change as the work is interpreted through the generations.

♦ “Chia-Yu lay upon a heated kang, watched by the three bearded physicians in long full robes...Yu had been a pretty child of six... His right arm was encased in a horrible plaster of dirt mixed with little printed paper scraps... Father Chisholm... began to remove the filthy dressing... He drew from his pocket the little leather case...took from that case the single lancet. A great gush of putrid matter came heaving through the wound... The stench was dreadful, evil... On the next day little Yu was greatly better. His fever was almost gone, he had slept naturally and drunk several cups of chicken broth. Without the miracle of the shining lancet he would almost certainly have been dead...” (The Keys of the Kingdom by A. J. Cronin.)

♦ "[Choice] #2 would be admirable, but [choice] #1 is where they'll likely land." (Vivek Ramaswamy, presidential hopeful, about the resignation under fire of UPenn's President Liz Magill. Choice #2 is to "embrace true free speech." Choice #1 is to expand speech codes, or restrictions.)

♦ "Is she alive, is she not, where is she, is she dead, and she couldn't land on any particular... on one of those." (A priest about a bereft mother whose 6-year-old child had vanished.)

♦ "It's become, how do I say customary to say, to thank service members like yourself, for your service. I think that's an acknowledgement that a lot of people who came back from Vietnam in particular that the country did them dirty, you know, did not respect what they had personally sacrificed even if people did not like or agree with the overall mission, right, or the overall conflict, okay, so, I think people want to do better, and, it has been, you know, one thanks people who served like yourself for your service, how does that land with you." (NPR's Michel Martin interviewing Laura Jedeed, author of "Afghanistan Meant Nothing.")

♦ "I just wanted to start by asking how all this is landing with you...How are you taking all this in." (NPR's Michel Martin interviewing Rep. Pramila Jayapal about Kamala Harris become the Democratic nominee for president after Joe Biden decided not to run for re-election)

♦ "It's disappointing that we've landed in a place where the uniforms are the topic of discussion." (MLB. Versus "It's disappointing that this is an issue." Contempo-speak can be prolix. Maybe that's its whole point.)

♦ NBC's Hallie Jackson: "So why do you think that's not landing with voters?" (An interview with Kamala Harris, NBC Nightly News, October 22, 2024.)

*** analysis

♦ This is often used with wh-question words: how did it land; where will it land; when will it land... It seems to be connected with the idea of something being "up in the air." It is a natural metaphor for people who are accustomed to flying and airports. In Bhutan, I suspect the equivalent expression is, "So, where does this yak stop?"

♦ HOWEVER. "Titled Porches, the album is slated to make landfill on August 11." In this instance, it is clearly a ship, not a plane, that is landing.

♦ One meaning of land means arrive. Another means "to affect you." Yet another meaning seems to be "decide."

♦ "There are always land mines and hiccups that come along." (Doctor Anthony Fauci on vaccine production during the 2019-2020 pandemic.)

♦ "Not every day was like that, of course. But even when the house was ostensibly peaceful, our lives were so charged that I was constantly on guard. Mom and Bob never smiled at each other or said nice things to Lindsay and me anymore. You never knew when the wrong word would turn a quiet dinner into a terrible fight, or when a minor childhood transgression would send a plate or book flying across the room. It was like we were living among land mines—one wrong step, and kaboom." (Hillbilly Elegy: A Memoir of a Family and Culture in Crisis by J.D. Vance.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "The S-Mine, a bounding fragmentation device, explodes at a height of 2 metres."

♦ "I can't run any more. I can't play with the other children and I can't go to school at the moment because of the infection." (Eleven-year-old Mawa, in Egypt. She kicked what she thought was a tin can and it blew off her foot. The UXO was a leftover from World War II.)

♦ "It looked like a little can; it was interesting." (Mara al-Miri, 10, from her hospital bed, where she was taken with shrapnel wounds to her leg. She had picked up a metallic grey canister, the size of a battery with a head that looked like a cigarette lighter, not knowing it was a bomblet, more dangerous than a grenade, that had been delivered by an artillery shell and that had failed to explode. She had thrown it to a 10-year-old playmate. The bomblet had exploded, injuring her, her playmate and a third child, her cousin. This all happened in the village of Ayt el Shaab, in southern Lebanon.)

♦ "Throughout the Soviet occupation the only [mine clearing] equipment the guerrillas ever had was the winter hail, dubbed 'Allah's mine sweeper' because the crashing pellets of ice sometimes triggered the mines." (Soldiers of God, With the Mujahidin In Afghanistan, by Robert D. Kaplan.)

♦ "Dear Joe, I am delighted to tell you that I have managed to convince the editorial team to include A Mine Goes Boom in Volume 2, Issue I of the Out of the Box section of Essential Teacher. Hopefully, this will go some way in convincing you and others that there is a wind of change in TESOL publications towards hearing the voices of teachers with 'real' voices... Phil." (The article was "Oh, Dear, A Mine Goes Boom" by Joe Stockdale, Essential Teacher (a TESOL publication), Volume 2, Issue 1, March, 2005. Print. And it proved controversial at the 2005 San Antonio TESOL Convention.)

♦ "One cannot change this all in a moment, but one can at least change one's own habits, and from time to time one can even, if one jeers loudly enough, send some worn-out and useless phrase...into the dustbin where it belongs." ♦ (Costello) Thanks for joining us on 5 Live Boxing with Costello and Bunce. And now, with less than a month to go until the rematch between Tyson Fury and Deontay Wilder in Las Vegas, it's a chance to assess the heavyweight landscape as it stands and shapes up at the moment, Steve. / (Bunce) And what a glorious landscape it is, Mike!

♦ "The legal landscape of the past weeks and months has prompted questions of..." (Dull use of the cliché in a "Talk of the Town" article in The New Yorker, a magazine ordinarily known for good writing.)

♦ "The Hollywood landscape is more cautious than ever today." (Very dull use of the cliché. How can a landscape be cautious?)

♦ "She dives into the contentious landscape of modern academia." (How can a landscape be contentious? How can one "dive into" the landscape? Stupid.)

♦ "The community needs to figure out the landscape of need." (NPR's Rob Schmitz. Umm...)

♦ "Affirmative action has changed the shape of and landscape of American education." (Drew Gilpin Faust. This is odd because "shape of" and "landscape of" seem roughly synonymous.)

♦ "We now do have donors who are able to alter the playing field, change the landscape, and do so with relatively little notice." (NPR's Ron Elving about money, politics and elections.)

♦ "Our political parties are still in the process of working out their positions in this new drug landscape." ("Slowing the Growth of Weed" by Rachel Lu, National Review, December 19, 2022. Much better usage than The New Yorker use cited above. Knowing your position in the landscape is important.)

*** the Mato Grosso, the Nullabor, etc.

♦ "...There appeared glimpses of a landscape now in a state of arboreal undress, much changed from what had gone before. / What Clark glimpsed was a relatively treeless brown-green country, stretching away into a violet horizon that was longer and flatter than any that these hill-born Easterners had ever witnessed or imagined before. It was landscape laid out, flatly undulating, beneath a sky so big it was overwhelming. It was a new kind of prairie, a limitless tableland of grass, a huge grazing-plain, with a wind that souged near-constantly above the vegetation, the temperature of the drifting air the only clue to the season. Its sky was flecked with mare's tails of clouds, where lightning could be seen a hundred miles distant and you could watch the black storms chewing their way toward you, the sky suddenly darkening overhead as the squalls arrived and smashed down wafting curtains of hail until the earth was quite white and crunched underfoot, though within moments the reappearing sun then melted it away, steam suddenly began to rise from the grass, and you could almost hear the plants bursting upward in the newly made and richly damp sauna of heat... / In these prairie parts one finds people and creatures uniquely suited to the conditions: the Comanche and the prairie dog, the Sioux and the rattlesnake, and all of the other Plains Indians—the Blackfoot, the Cheyenne, the Arapaho and the Crow—together with uncountable millions of the single species of animal that once so dominated and symbolized the grass-covered landscapes here, the American bison. / Generally speaking, the Great Plains extend between the 95th and 105th meridians—with the midline... marking 100 degrees west of Greenwich." (The Men Who United The States: America's Explorers, Inventors, Eccentrics, and Mavericks, and the Creation of One Nation, Indivisible by the great writer Simon Winchester.)

♦ "It is rough, steep, mountainous country where we were trekking, covered with dense virgin forest, the famous taigá of Siberia, in places almost impenetrable, especially where the ground is littered with fallen giants smashed down by storms." (Dersu Uzala by V.K. Arseniev, translated by Malcolm Burr. The country Arseniev describes lies between the Amur and Ussuri Rivers and the Sea of Japan, north of Vladivostok, to include the Sihoté-Alin mountain range.)

♦ "I shall always remember the next day for one of the most beautiful experiences I have ever had. As we marched forward we caught sight, after a while, of the gleaming golden towers of a monastery in the far distance. Above them, shining superbly in the morning sun, were tremendous walls of ice, and we gradually realized that we were looking at the giant trio Dhaulagiri, Annapurna, and Manaslu. As Tradun and the filigree towers of its monastery lay at the far end of the plain we had many hours in which to enjoy the view of these mighty mountains. Not even the necessity of wading through the icy waters of the Tsachu dampened our exuberance. / It was evening when we marched into Tradun. In the last rays of the setting sun the red monastery with its golden roof looked like a fairy palace on the hillside." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter "Into Tibet.")

♦ "They call this plain the Nullabor (Nullarbor). If you want water you have to dig for it among the sand dunes along the shore... In this wilderness everything runs to excess; the excessive noonday heat is followed by outrageous cold by night, rainstorms burst with cyclonic force, and when the rain fails the blown sand is suffocating; even the flies and mosquitoes are in mad abundance. There are moments of grace sometimes in the evenings when extravagant sunsets sweep across the sky and then fade slowly behind enormous stars, but in the main the Nullabor has an implacable sterility and the aborigines used to believe that it was inhabited by demons. They would not chase a kangaroo there. / This then was the terrible region into which Eyre plunged..." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

*** things...

♦ Cars have their own language—clunks, clanks, squeals, squeaks, and rattles—which can say a lot about a vehicle's health."

♦ "Chocolate speaks an international language. There is no concern about accents or incorrectly structured sentences. Whether in Tokyo or Madrid, everyone understands chocolate's many culinary dialects." ("Chocolate: A Food Without Borders" by Alejandra Garcia, NPR, Kitchen Window, January 14, 2009.)

♦ "A brand can communicate something, how you wear your pants can communicate something, the portfolio of colors that you choose to adorn yourself with can communicate something..." (Branding and shoes, clothing, pens, politics, authenticity, identity, etc.)

♦ "If you grew up in a black household, Ebonies [copies of Ebony Magazine] were everywhere... It's one of our languages." (Rosa Duffy, bookstore owner and Ebony Magazine collector, about the transformational magazine that was intended to be Life Magazine for Blacks. Once a pillar of the Black community, this great magazine has fallen on hard times, and is now only available online. You would think some US philanthropist would endow a monthly hard-copy version of it in perpetuity. Sadly, not yet.)

♦ "And from being trained, I think it's easier for me to speak a language to producers, and I can speak engineer to the engineers." (The remarkable Lizzo, who is classically trained in music theory and performance, among other things...)

♦ "Crossword puzzles are a way of documenting the language that we share." (Anna Shechtman, crossword constructor.)

♦ "The elk whisperer speaks English, Spanish and elk." (Mark Casillas.)

*** academic language...

♦ "There are no native speakers of academic language." (This is certainly true, and it explains many things, such as who is recognized by academia, and who isn't.)

♦ "There is jargon, and then there is jargon." (Academic writing.)

*** diplomacy...

♦ "Such language risks destabilizing an already complicated situation." (A Russian diplomat.)

♦ "Well, those phrases that you're referring to used by the [US] ambassador ["immediate ceasefire," "UN-facilitated talks"] have become empty cliches, they have been repeated for months and months, you know, if not years. The same phrases were used last year. People thought the elections were going to be organized. Nothing happened, and the people in power are still in power. So I think US diplomacy and other Western diplomacy should be refreshed, should be renewed, and a new technique should be used because Libyans have learned to ignore everything you said. I mean, this discourse by the internationalists is absolutely ignored by Libyans, and foreign states as well." (Jalel Harchaoui, a fellow at the Royal United Services Institute which focuses on Libyan security and politics, speaking to David Gura on NPR.)

♦ "Israel is making troubles and problems... they could not be a good neighbor here. We want to liberate the whole Palestine, that's right, because Israel has no right to exist in this region... This war is full of hypocrisy, they are just giving sweet words and some good statements but nothing is done on the ground..." (Hamas spokesman Ghazi Hamad in Gaza talking to Steve Inskeep on NPR. From "Hundreds killed in explosion at a crowded Gaza hospital", NPR, Morning Edition, October 17, 2023. In a later interview with Lebanon TV, Ghazi Hamad said, "Israel is a country that has no place on our land...[It] must be finished." He has also been quoted as saying, "We must teach Israel a lesson, and we will do this again and again," about what Hamas calls Operation al-Aqsa Flood and the rest of the world knows as the October 7 Hamas-led attack on Israel.)

*** the law...

♦ "Those instructions [from the judge], I'm a lawyer and I couldn't understand them... They've gotten to be too much. They're legalese. And jurors tend to go by the smell test. Does it seem right? Does it seem wrong. And that's what we wanted the jury to do." (Mark Richards, Kyle Rittenhouse's attorney, speaking to Ailsa Chang. From "Kyle Rittenhouse's defense attorney discusses the trial and acquittal," NPR, All Things Considered, Nov. 19, 2021.)

*** sports...

♦ "There's no 'I' in 'team.'" (An NFL coach.)

♦ "There's an 'I' in 'win.'" (An NFL player.)

♦ “A stream of players were coming over, you know, popping him on the shoulder pads, back patting him on the back, dapping him up...” (The NFL.)

♦ “Man, Brock was bailing, put some respect on that man’s name, you know, he was runnin’, he was throwin’... (Jesse Washington, ESPN, heard on NPR.)

♦ “Do you know the stigmatism of Alabama education?” (Kayvon Thibodaux, a football player.)

♦ “Bobo got throatied.” (Surfing.)

♦ “What the f*** is an ‘online safety expert’? Do you see how media outlets baptize totally fake expertise industries and titles (like ‘disinformation reporter’) to launder their highly politicized censorship agenda as scientific, data-based and neutral?” (A thundering Glenn Greenwald.)

♦ “Tuesday. The world of work has changed out of all recognition from the one I inhabited when I last received a paycheck... Now it seems, freebies are distributed with a liberality unknown in my day, in lieu of salaries, which themselves have disappeared along with actual work...” (Ed Reardon’s Week, BBC Episode 5, “How did I do? Hilarious and droll!)

*** groups, social justice...

♦ “If we could claim marriage, we would be claiming an engine of transformation, a vocabulary of shared values—love, commitment, family, inclusion, dignity, respect—that would help non-gay people better understand who gay people really are, and allow us to share equally, not only in marriage, but in everything.” (“Radically Normal: How Gay Rights Activists Changed The Minds Of Their Opponents,” NPR, Hidden Brain (with Shankar Vedantam), April 8, 2019. Many gays at the time denigrated the tradition of marriage. Many still do.)

♦ “Love is Love.” (A slogan from the “Freedom to Marry” Campaign.)

♦ “As it turned out, the word ‘homophobia’ was exactly the concept that gay men and lesbians needed to achieve liberation.” (Psychotherapist George Weinberg, in 2012. He is the author of the 1972 book Society and the Healthy Homosexual and a gay-rights activist. Quoted in “How ‘-Phobic’ Became a Weapon in the Identity Wars” by Amanda Hess, The New York Times Magazine, Jan. 26, 2016. It’s a brilliant article.)

♦ “Gay pop stars can be—and have been—subversive about slipping in references that change our language and thoughts about gay sex. The more that happens, the less likely people feel uncomfortable hearing about it.” (Culture journalist Brennan Carley on BBC Culture.)

♦ “A lot of readers, both trans and cis, really want you to say, in the first sentence of the story, ‘As a trans person...’ But by saying as a trans person, it cedes ground to the idea that I need disclaimers about my point of view. There’s a little bit of sick and twisted pleasure I get from saying, ‘I’m not going to do that...’ / That said, there are certain claims that I can make as a trans writer...” (“Jamie Lauren Keiles Follows the Surgical and Philosophical Journey of Phalloplasty” by Celia Ford, July 26, 2022.)

♦ “I call disabled viewing platforms the “cripple pen.” (A disabled commenter, reclaiming the word “cripple.” From “After the N-word, the P-word” by Rajni Bhatia, BBC, 11 June 2007, which is about reclaiming the word “Paki” in the same way some Blacks have “reclaimed” the N-word. Who has the right to say what when.)

♦ “black power & intersectional feminism & gender self-determination & solidarity with muslims & indigenous sovereignty & decolonization & disability justice & queer kinship & migrant justice & fat freedom & collective liberation” (A black T-shirt with white lettering worn by Stephanie Lyn Kaufman-Mthimkhulu, Director of Project LETS. “Disability and Mad Justice cultural worker. Community Educator. Organizer. Parent. Conflict Intervention. Facilitator. Care Strategist. Writer... Hire me.)

♦ “The attention The Wing generates is, in large part, because it was founded upon a paradox: its brand is steeped in the feminist language of emancipation, empowerment and equality, while its business is based on one of society’s more elitist institution: the private members’ club.” (Investors include Serena Williams, President Obama’s friend and former senior adviser Valerie Jarrett, and members of the US women’s soccer team. From “The Wing: how an exclusive women’s club sparked a thousand arguments” by Linda Kinstler, The Guardian, 18 Oct 2019.)

*** political correctness...

♦ “Language should be chosen intentionally and not just in a reflexive manner based on how words were used in the past.” (Emily Barske, the Office of the Public Editor, NPR.)

♦ “Inclusive language is not about critical mass, it’s about possibility.” (NPR Public Editor Kelly McBride, about the use of “pregnant people” versus “pregnant women.”)

♦ “I hope they don’t take anything away from me, whoever they are.” (Dave Chappelle on SNL.)

*** contempo-speak...

♦ “[Jake] Paul was fluent in the language of YouTube, where he came across as a familiar type: the high-school jock, popular and gregarious... / His body of work is filled with dubious stunts...and with mind-numbing repetition of the word, ‘bro.’ / [His videos] have drawn more than seven billion views; that figure, which approaches the population of this planet, does not account for the innumerable videos that summarize or criticize the ones that Paul has posted...” (“Punching Down” by Kelefa Sanneh, The New Yorker, November 8, 2021.)

♦ “Yeah, they have these belts on with like all these extra bullets and they’re like dressed for war.” (Leah like talking to her Brit producer, Georgia, for their podcast about the militia movement.)

♦ “Alright, let’s not fap around here, let’s get into it...” (The opening to a Pop Culture Happy Hour episode on NPR. Classy!)

♦ “The book was marketed with the language of pop feminism.” (A comment by Jill Lepore.)

♦ “He lacks the TED-talk affect of some of his peers.” (Extracurricular Kids In High Places,” The New Yorker, Jan. 4 & 11, 2021.)

♦ “In the language of the show, this is a very ‘Who-y’ thing for a Them to have done.” (“Guiding Stars: How ‘Who Weekly’ explains the new celebrity” by Rachel Syme, The New Yorker, June 7, 2021.)

♦ “PEN15, write out the title, you’ll get it, has begun its second season on Hulu...” (A well-briefed Scott Simon of NPR. This is an example of leetspeak.)

♦ “Everytime he says something he sounds like he is reading it from a Poundland self-help book.” / “He can’t think on his feet, relies too heavily on his corner, and just speaks in a series of clichés with very little substance behind them.” (Criticism of a contemporary boxer.)

♦ “The language a writer uses to create a world is that world, and Franzen’s strenuously contemporary and therefore juvenile language is a world in which nothing important can happen. Madame Bovary’s marriage sucked, Heathcliff was into Catherine: these words fail the context not just because they are of our own time. There is no import in things that ‘suck,’ no drama in someone’s being ‘into’ someone else. A writer like Franzen, who describes two lovers as ‘fucking,’ trivializes their relationship. The result is boredom.” (“Smaller Than Life,” by B. R. Myers, The Atlantic, October, 2010.)

*** mental health...

♦ “Sadness is a language too many of us are fluent in; and suicide is a dialect that’s east (sic, “easy”) to pick up.” (“A Letter To My Father,” Eva Evan’s Story, don’t mind me.org. Linked from “TikTok star Eva Evans found dead from apparent suicide: ‘A New York icon,’” by Lauren Samer, The New York Post, April 23, 2024. “Evans was known for her videos about life as a 20-something in New York City.” She left 300,000 followers.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ Bill’s Weekly Column. “Who to Speak Progressive.” (Bill O’Reilly.)

♦ “Fauci Among the Humans: Health officials play language games to make COVID life permanent” by Peter Tonguette, Washington Examiner, January 4, 2022.

♦ “Wokeness is not just a social philosophy, but an elite status marker, a strategy for personal advancement. You have to possess copious amounts of cultural capital to feel comfortable using words like intersectionality, heteronormativity, cisgender, problematize, triggering, and Latinx...” (“How The Bobos Broke America” by David Brooks, The Atlantic, September 2021. Bohemian values, bourgeois lives.)

♦ “Look, I mean voters of color don’t talk about voters of color. Who the hell lives in communities of color? The people I know live in neighborhoods. Right, so there’s this whole you know sort of rhetorical lexicon the left of the Democratic party has become obsessed with and insists on using. Which basically just alienates normie voters, including normie non-white voters. I mean, we have people in and around the Democratic Party talking about how all white people have white privilege, and how this is a white supremacist society, and so on, and I just don’t think this is the way people think about the world, including you know normie non-white voters.” (The political scientist Ruy Teixeira. From “Hispanic and minority voters are increasingly shifting to the Republican party,” NPR, Weekend Edition Saturday, July 23, 2022.)

♦ “I don’t know of a single person that thinks of themselves as a ‘person of color.’ I really don’t...” (James Carville, sounding honestly regretful on “Conversations with Bill Kristol.”)

♦ “There’s like an entire language that Democrats just need to f-king throw in the trash about like ‘institutions,’ ‘democracy,’ ‘sacred this.’” (Jon Favreau, one of former President Barack Obama’s speechwriters, about President Joe Biden’s Jan. 6, 2025 op-ed in The Washington Post concerning the January 6, 2021 United States Capitol attack. From “Obama alums trash ‘stubborn old man’ Biden’s ‘feckless’ Jan. 6 op-ed” by David Spector, Fox News, Jan. 7, 2025.)

♦ “Democratic political consultant and advisor James Carville called on his party to ‘tone’ down the use of ‘jargonistic language’ with voters, calling it ineffective. / ‘Let’s just be authentic and to the point,’ Carville told White House press secretary turned MSNBC host Jen Psaki in an interview Sunday night, when asked about sophisticated political-style language from Washington, D.C. / ‘So I think people like you and I can bring this home by example and don’t use that idiotic

NPR jargon when you are talking to voters,’ he said.” (“James Carville calls on Democrats to ‘tone it down’ with ‘idiotic NPR jargon’” by Jeffrey Clark, Fox News, January 6, 2025.)

♦ “Collaborating with these gentry was a mixed crowd of wide-minded, wide-mouthed Liberals, who darkened council with pious but disintegrating catch-words, and took care to live very well indeed.” (Something of Myself by Rudyard Kipling.)

*** presentism, history in contempo-speak...

♦ “Although it might not be entirely fair to describe Charles as feudalism-curious, his world view does appear to incorporate an implicit defense of his monarchical position.” (“King Me: Charles tried to be a philosopher-prince. But a British monarch must keep quiet” by Rebecca Mead, The New Yorker, May 8, 2023. Such use of contempo-speak is a form of presentism. Other examples from her article include, “In time, they grew closer, partly because of a mutual love of art. It can happen”—about the marriage of Charles I and Henrietta Maria in 1625—and “primogeniture is a bummer”—about Prince Andrew. She also mentions that “There are no glamorous teenage or twentysomething royals for the TikTok generation to scroll through...” Mead is certainly au courant for a 56 year old!)

♦ “There was a poster for One Million Years B.C. where she was in a—guess you’d call it a fur bikini (light upspeak)—and she’s standing there looking fierce.” (NPR movie critic Bob Mondello, on the death of Raquel Welch. Using contempo-speak to describe historical events is a form of presentism.)

♦ “Meacham’s book, And There Was Light, tells of the anti-slavery politician whose election as president in 1860 triggered the Civil War. Lincoln struck back at the rebel states by ordering freedom for their enslaved workers, the Emancipation Proclamation, but the first Republican president was fiercely criticized by people who wanted less social change.” (Steve Inskeep. From “Lincoln prioritized democracy over his political future. A new biography explains why,” NPR, Morning Edition, October 18, 2022. Using contempo-speak and clichés to describe historical events is a form of presentism. Notice the use of “enslaved workers” for slaves. See the quote below for how such language should be noted.)

♦ “[Lincoln] sends a message to South Carolina’s governor, and he says, ‘I’m going to send humanitarian supplies’—he didn’t use that term at the time, but—I’m going to send humanitarian supplies to the men at Fort Sumter...” (The writer Erik Larson, author of The Demon of Unrest, speaking to Dave Davies. From “What the ‘Dawn of the Civil War’ can tell us about today’s acrimonious politics,” NPR, Fresh Air, May 1, 2024. Larson is a fine writer.)

♦ “I was sort of nine-eleven moment for America.” (The Fort Sumter attack.)

♦ Lincoln prioritized democracy over his political future.” (NPR’s Steve Inskeep.)

♦ “As the historian Eric Foner phrased it, for all its shortcomings, the Midwest ‘recognized black humanity.’ One might even say that with Lincoln and the region’s ardent abolitionists, black lives, for the first time, mattered.” (“Recovering The Heartland” by Hendrik Meijer, National Review, December 19, 2022. History framed in contempo-speak.)

♦ “Black Lives Matter. History Matters. John Hope Franklin showed us how much they matter to each other.” (“John Hope Franklin: Race and the Meaning of America” by the historian Drew Gilpin Faust, The

New York Review, December 17, 2015. History framed in contempo-speak.)

♦ "His book represents his own meditation on the meaning of the 'forever war' of race not just in American history and literature, but in our fraught time." ("What to Do About William Faulkner" by Drew Gilpin Faust, The Atlantic, September 2020. Which begs the question, "What to Do about Drew Gilpin Faust?" The answer: make her a contributing writer at The Atlantic. She is a former president of Harvard University, where she is the Arthur Kingsley Porter University Professor. The use of modern contempo-speak in a historical context is a form of presentism. To her credit, however, she does put the term in parentheses.)

♦ In Churchill: Walking With Destiny, Andrew Roberts says that Churchill, in 1940, "vigilantly guarded against mission-creep." That phrase struck a very wrong note with me. Luckily, Wikipedia has an entry: "The phrase first appeared in 1993, in articles published in the Washington Post and in the New York Times concerning the United Nations peacekeeping mission during the Somali Civil War." Roberts could have put the phrase in quotation marks, or added "in what is today called X," as he rightly did when he used "groupthink" in another part of his book, but for some reason he didn't. His use of the phrase is a form of presentism.

♦ "The memorial to the Murdered Jews of Europe, recognized as the official Holocaust memorial of Germany, sits in the center of downtown Berlin, just south of the famous Brandenburg Gate and a block away from the site of the bunker where Hitler died by suicide [italics mine]." ("Monuments to the Unthinkable: America still can't figure out how to memorialize the sins of our history. What can we learn from Germany?" by Clint Smith, The Atlantic, December, 2022. Contrast this with what Andrew Roberts wrote about Churchill's 1945 visit to Hitler's bunker: "He had finally tracked the beast to its lair.")

♦ "Even if these Masters died just when things were getting interesting, they were crucial superspreaders of the Renaissance, as anyone who attends 'Siena: The Rise of Painting, 1300-1350,' at the Met (Oct. 13), will be able to confirm." (Duccio, Simone Martini, and Ambrogio and Pietro Lorenzetti all died of the plague. The New Yorker.)

♦ The concept of "burnout," originally coined to describe the way many drug addicts felt in the late 1960s, has been expanded to Achilles in the Bronze Age. (See "It's Just Too Much" by Jill Lepore, The New Yorker, May 24, 2021. An excellent article by an excellent writer.)

*** average people...

♦ "There was a lot of language I was unfamiliar with." (A parent about messages he began receiving from his children's elite private school concerning antiracism. He eventually removed his children from the school.)

♦ "It occurred to me that, because the world media establishment had ignored the Balkans for so long..., these people never had to learn, as the Israelis and Arabs did, how to talk in code, so as not to offend Western sensibilities with their racial hatred. In the Balkans, people spoke more honestly than in the Middle East, and therefore more brutally." (Balkan Ghosts: A Journey Through History by the superb writer and correspondent Robert D. Kaplan.)

♦ "A pidgin English field guide would list buk-buks, pakes, buddaheads, katonks, mokes, titas, popolos, yobos, blalahs, haoles and portagees." (Ethnic and racial labels used in Hawaii.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "EOD handled the bombs. SSTP treated the wounds. PRP processed the bodies. The 08s fired DPICM. The MAW provided CAS. The 03s patrolled the MSRs. Me and PFC handled the money... / I will remember that our HMMWV had 5 PX. That the SITREP was 2 KIA, 3 WIA. That KIA means they gave everything. That WIA means I didn't." (From the short story "OIF" in Redeployment by the brilliant Marine writer Phil Klay. OIF stands for Operation Iraqi Freedom.)

*** Tibet; the Malay Archipelago; outside Allegan, Michigan...

♦ “During our excursions we found masses of wild strawberries but where we found the best we also found the most leeches. I knew from my reading that these creatures are the plague of many Himalayan valleys, and now learned from personal experience how helpless one is against them. They drop from trees on men and animals and creep through all the openings in one’s clothes, even the eyelets in one’s shoes. If one tears them off one loses more blood than if one lets them drink their fill, when they fall off by themselves. Some of the valleys are infested to such a degree by leeches that one simply cannot protect oneself against them. The best way of keeping them out is by wearing socks and trousers steeped in salt.” (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, “The Village of Happiness.”)

♦ “Our first day’s march lay through patches of forest, clearings, and Malay villages, and was pleasant enough... The next day, the country got wilder... We passed through extensive forests, along paths often up to our knees in mud, and were much annoyed by the leeches for which this district is famous. These little creatures infest the leaves and herbage by the side of the paths, and when a passenger comes along they stretch themselves out at full length, and if they touch any part of his dress or body, quit their leaf and adhere to it. They then creep on to his feet, legs, or other part of his body and suck their fill, the first puncture being rarely felt during the excitement of walking. On bathing in the evening we generally found half a dozen or a dozen on each of us, most frequently on our legs, but sometimes on our bodies, and I had one who sucked his fill from the side of my neck, but who luckily missed the jugular vein. There are many species of these forest leeches. All are small, but some are beautifully marked with stripes of bright yellow. They probably attach themselves to deer or other animals which frequent the forest paths, and have thus acquired the singular habit of stretching themselves out at the sound of a footstep or of rustling foliage...” (The Malay Archipelago by Alfred Russel Wallace, Chapter 3, Malacca and Mount Ophir.)

♦ The pond behind my grandpa’s shack outside of Allegan, Michigan, was full of leeches. As a kid, I can remember pulling the leeches off my body after swimming in the pond. The leeches were fat and black, tended to be in the creases of my body, and sometimes pulling them off I saw my own red, vivid blood. I thought nothing of it... As far as I know, no harm ever came to me from them.

♦ This refers to a throw from the left fielder to any of the bases, particularly home plate, surprising the runner and exciting the spectators. Ordinarily, a throw from the outfield is cut off by the second-baseman. It takes an outfielder with a strong arm to make such a long throw, and it is always a dramatic moment.)

♦ "I chose my first day camp between two boulders in the river bed, but I had hardly unpacked my things when a company of apes appeared. They caught sight of me and began to pelt me with clods... / As I was loping along in the gray of dawn I found myself facing my first leopard. My heart nearly stopped beating as I was completely defenseless. My only weapon was a long knife which the camp blacksmith had made expressly for me... The leopard sat on a thick branch fifteen feet or more above the ground, ready to spring. I thought like lightning...then, masking my fear, I walked steadily on my way. Nothing happened, but for a long time I had a peculiar feeling in my back. / It may have been a little after midnight when I ran into a bear standing on his hind legs in the middle of my path, growling at me. At this point the sound of the swiftly running waters of the Ganges was so loud that we had neither of us heard the other's approach. (Seven Years in Tibet," Chapter 2 "Escape," by Heinrich Harrer.)

*** analysis

- ♦ Mountain lions are also referred to as cougars and catamounts.
- ♦ There are many "Lion" canyons in California.
- ♦ There are many "Lion" creeks and springs. Water attract wildlife. And a big cat needs to drink, too!
- ♦ Place names with "Lion" in them indicate the traditional range of mountain lions in the United States. A small breeding population of panthers exist in Florida, protected by the Everglades. In the Southeast, they were traditionally referred to as catamounts. Some high-school sports teams still carry the name.
- ♦ There are "Red Lion" place names on the East Coast, but those must surely relate to the British symbol.
- ♦ The United States also "Sea Lion" place names, mainly along the Pacific Ocean, as you would expect. There is a Sea Lion Lake in Florence County, Wisconsin. Curious. Like Wisconsinites.

♦ "I am sorry you were treated so badly and I understand. Thank you for your service."

♦ "It's become, how do I say customary to say, to thank service members like yourself, for your service. I think that's an acknowledgement that a lot of people who came back from Vietnam in particular that the country did them dirty, you know, did not respect what they had personally sacrificed even if people did not like or agree with the overall mission, right, or the overall conflict, okay, so, I think people want to do better, and, it has been, you know, one thanks people who served like yourself for your service, how does that land with you." (NPR's Michel Martin interviewing Laura Jeeded, author of "Afghanistan Meant Nothing.")

*** someone's death...

♦ "I'm sorry for your loss." (Death of first-grade girl on beach on holiday in a freak accident.)

*** corporations, businesses, organizations...

♦ "We want to reassure customers that our restaurants are clean and safe." (A statement by Yum Brands Inc. after TV cameras showed a swarm of rats scurrying about a KFC / Taco Bell in New York City.)

♦ "A spokesman for the company said the safety of its residents was paramount and it was helping them find temporary alternative accommodation." (The company, according to the government, had consistently failed to take action against the risk of fire.)

♦ "The safety of our cast and crew is the top priority of Rust Productions and everyone associated with the company." (A statement after cinematographer Halyna Hutchins was shot and killed on set.)

♦ "The Grand Slam organisers wrote to [Naomi Osaka] to offer support, as well as to 'remind her of her obligations.'"

♦ "The club have said they will work to educate fans on the issue." (BBC, "Manchester United condemn fans' 'completely unacceptable' chants about Hillsborough tragedy," 20 April, 2022. The Hillsborough disaster occurred in 1989.)

*** hospitals, pharmacies, health insurance...

♦ "She said, 'I just want to check in with you and let you know your mother's doing fine, that she doesn't have a temperature.' I said, 'That's *. My mom died at 3:30 this morning.' And she was like, 'Oh my God. That wasn't in the chart.'" (Pat Herrick, daughter of a Life Care Resident in Kirkland, Washington. Her mom died of COVID-19.)

♦ "Go to the state's website to see the dashboard." (Coronavirus information.)

♦ "You need to sign up for a vaccine appointment at the web site." (A pharmacy worker at the pharmacy where the shot is given.)

♦ "We know the health system does not work as well as it should, and we understand people's frustrations with it... Our mission is to help make it work better." (UnitedHealth Group C.E.O. Andrew Witty, reacting to the murder of UnitedHealthcare CEO Brian Thompson. From "UnitedHealth Group C.E.O.: The Health Care System Is Flawed. Let's Fix It," Opinion, Guest Essay, The New York Times, Dec. 13, 2024. Luigi Mangione was arrested for the murder and is the chief suspect.)

*** airports and airlines...

♦ Officials say they are doing all they can; officials say the fault has been identified and remedied; officials apologized and said the problem had been fixed; airlines say they are doing all they can to get people home; he is confident the technical problem won't happen again... (Britain's NATS bank holiday airline travel disruption 2023.)

*** police, the Secret Service, the courts...

♦ "An initial identification procedure was conducted using established procedures and would appear to have resulted in a mistaken identification... We ask that people do not speculate on social media." (Wrong man declared dead by the Isle of Man TT races.)

♦ "Urging people 'not to speculate on details of the incident while the incident is ongoing' has all the effect of a mop and bucket against a tsunami." (The murder of children by Axel Rudakubana, Southport, England. See the Wikipedia article "2024 Southport stabbing.")

♦ "The Secret Service has a vast, challenging, and intricate mission. Every day we work in a dynamic threat environment to ensure our protectees are safe and secure across multiple events, travel, and other difficult environments. We execute a comprehensive and layered strategy to balance personnel, technology, and specialized operational needs." (Anthony Guglielmi, a spokesman for the Secret Service, after Donald Trump's near assassination.)

♦ "Anytime there's a large program, there are going to be bumps along the road. The issue you were talking about had nothing to do with the AI or the technology, it was really a configuration issue." (Charley Territo, a spokesman for Hayden AI, which installed cameras inside buses to record cars parked in bus lanes. Hundreds of tickets were mailed to New York City drivers for parking in bus lanes, when in fact they weren't.)

*** the military...

♦ "We have secured the armaments package, which will be properly disposed of. Safety is our utmost priority." (A military official, after a plane full of rounds and live missiles crashed into a warehouse near an airport and burned. Thankfully, the live munitions did not go off.)

*** education...

♦ "Lauren's death was a tragedy that affected all of us in very, very difficult ways and we know that mistakes were made, we own the fact that mistakes were made..." (The Vice President of Student Affairs at the University of Utah, speaking on Dateline NBC for the episode "Lauren's Promise.")

♦ "That would be like obviously very extremely interesting for like a future direction. (A young male presenter responding to a question at an academic presentation.)

♦ "Mr. Selim will not be at work at this time." (Burnsville-Eagan-Savage School District 191 in Minnesota.)

♦ "Let me assure you that nothing is more important to us than for you to feel your children are in a safe and secure environment... I've just been informed that all of your children are missing." (The character of Miss Mullins in the film School of Rock. Funny!)

*** social media...

♦ "We agree we must do better and we are working inside to do so." (Twitter.)

♦ "We value your privacy." (Express.co.uk. Accept cookies to continue.)

♦ “Upon discovery, we took steps to secure our systems...Additionally, while we have safeguards in place to protect data in our care, we continue to review and further enhance these protections as part of our ongoing commitment to data security.” (Shields Health Care Group, a Massachusetts-based company, after being hacked. As Papijoe 13 commented, “Great name for a company that cannot shield their clients’ personal information.”)

*** politics...

♦ “We mourn every innocent life lost.” (President Biden about the October 2023 attack on Israel from Gaza, and Israel’s response. The Israel-Hamas war.)

♦ “This is a day that Minnesota says, ‘Bring your authentic self. You’ll be seen, heard, valued and loved in this state, and we want you to be whoever you are.’ We see you, we hear you, and we will make sure you are in a safe place to be who you are.” (Gov. Tim Walz. Kamala Harris selected him to be her vice-presidential running mate.)

♦ “Bring everyone in and shut no one out, take no one for granted, write nobody off. So I’m for everyone.” (The politician Beto O’Rourke.)

♦ “I’m sorry; No, no, no!; I’m so sorry; We’re not doing any questions, I know you have been in touch with our communications director, that would be the best way; Sorry about that; I’m so sorry about that...” (Republican functionaries at a campaign event doing their best to silence NPR’s Danielle Kurtzleben and shoo her away. Kurtzleben persisted in shrilly shouting questions and demanding answers. Many Republicans have simply given up speaking to representatives of mainstream / legacy / national media such as NPR. Kurtzleben describes herself as “a real piece of work” and “absolutely a girlboss.”)

♦ “Thank you so much. Have an amazing, amazing day.” (An upset Karine Jean-Pierre, abruptly cutting short a radio interview.)

♦ “I just want the people of Florida to know. We see what you’re going through and we’re with you. We’re going to do everything we can for you.” (President Joe Biden after Hurricane Ian.)

♦ “I see you, I hear you, I grieve with you, and I promise you we have your back. We’re going to stay until you’re restored.” (President Joe Biden after Hurricane Helene.)

♦ “I know it’s a difficult time. You’re hurting. I hear you and I see you.” (President Biden thanking his staff, et. al., in his address to the nation after Kamala Harris’ loss to Donald Trump in the 2024 U.S. presidential election.)

♦ “We also know hydrants are not designed to deal with this type of massive devastation, and that...” (L.A. Mayor Karen Bass, back from a trip to Ghana, reading from a script, about the massive 2025 L.A. wildfires. “If you need help just go to URL.”)

*** lip service for and about various “protected” groups...

♦ “I think it’s absolutely fine, I do.” “I think it’s great.” “I have no problem with it whatsoever.” (Comments about a gay marriage by a politician many consider to be paying lip service.)

♦ “We all should feel comfortable with who we are in our own skin. But...” (Michael Phelps about male-to-female transgender swimmers like Lia Thomas.)

♦ “Racism is a societal problem, and it is no longer good enough to simply be non-racist, Scottish sport must now be actively anti-racist.” (Steward Harris, chief executive of Sportscotland.)

♦ The Canadian War Museum is Canada’s national museum of military history. It is one of the world’s most respected museums for the study and understanding of armed conflict. The Museum is located in Ottawa, Ontario. I would like to acknowledge that the land on which the museum is located is on the traditional territory of the Algonquin Anishinaabe people. The Canadian War Museum emphasizes the human experience of war throughout its galleries...” (Caroline Dromaquet, Director General, Canadian War Museum Virtual Tour, YouTube.)

♦ “Lisa and Rhali: We see you and we hear you.” (Football Australia (FA) chief executive James Johnson, responding to their accusations of “women protecting women who abuse women,” presumably lesbians. From “Lisa De Vanna’s allegations highlight tensions in Australia’s complex [italics mine] football culture” by Samantha Lewis, ABC Australia, Analysis, Sport, 18 Oct 2021.)

*** the media...

♦ “That’s a great question. We don’t yet know...”

♦ “I’m sorry to take you back to that moment but do you remember...” (NPR’s Michel Martin interviewing Mark Barden, a Sandy Hook parent.)

*** religion...

♦ “The worst part is behind us, we are seeing a new dawn, hold on, have faith, because good days are coming, glorious days are coming, keep on praying, and we are with you, we are praying along with you, good days are coming.” (Samson Shekhar Chauhan of the Lutheran Maritime Ministry, to sailors stranded on ships by COVID.)

♦ “‘Have a blessed day,’ that means get lost!” (The great writer James McBride.)

*** analysis

♦ Bill Gates: What expression in English bothers you the most? Linguist John McWhorter: When people say (changing his voice), “Oh, well, it is what it is...” (Changing back to his normal voice.) What a gorgeously chilly way of saying, “Your problems don’t matter to me.” (From “Unconfuse Me With Bill Gates.” The proper response to “It is what it is” is “Until it isn’t.”)

♦ “‘Have a blessed day,’ that means get lost!” (The great writer James McBride.)

♦ “We’re headed in a direction where we want people to feel more comfortable bringing their lived experiences into the hosts’ chairs.” (Sarah Gilbert, NPR’s vice president over its newsmagazines. From “NPR hosts’ departures fuel questions over race. The full story is complex” by David Folkenflik, NPR, media, January 12, 2022.)

♦ “We kinda really tried to focus on that lived experience that people have.” (Colorado Democratic Governor Jared Polis, explaining his laissez-faire Covid strategy. It is interesting usage by a relatively older, white politician. “Kinda really.” “Lived experience.”)

♦ Maggie Harrison Dupre: “AI is not a person. It doesn’t have personal experiences to draw on? And so I think in terms of news and reporting and really being creative, I would personally argue that that’s still a deeply human endeavor and to create good news there needs to be a lot of humanity infused into it?” / NPR’s Ailsa Change. Yeah. And lived experiences. / Maggie Harrison Dupre: [Instant affirmation.] Yes. Exactly. [End of story.] (“AI-generated articles are permeating major news publications,” NPR, All Things Considered, May 16, 2024. This is a good example of how interviewer-interviewee often “mind-meld” at NPR. One must also consider, if both were reading from scripts, the role of editors / producers / tape splicers in this kind of discourse heard by millions of Americans every day.)

*** pop culture, social media, texting, etc.

♦ I.Y.K.Y.K. (If you know, you know.)

♦ “The movie starts off like a sentimental ‘fish out of water’ story, about a young woman’s search for her roots. It quickly becomes clear we are seeing something stranger, and stronger... Freddy is clearly searching for an identity, yet neither she nor the movie defines identity in terms of race, nationality or family, notions that Chou, himself a cultural outsider, thinks too broad to capture the multiplicity of lived experience.” (John Powers review of the film Return to Seoul on Fresh Air, March 8, 2023.)

♦ “In describing their lived experiences during the pandemic, several participants specifically referenced the movie Groundhog Day remarking that they felt as though they were stuck in some sort of repeating existence.”

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ “He is versed in a certain kind of performativity, a conspiratorial brandishing of one’s Blackness as automatic expertise.” (“All Talk: The news, according to Charlamagne tha God and Jon Stewart” by Doreen St. Felix, The New Yorker, October 25, 2021.)

♦ “We sell [young people] insultingly short in thinking that they won’t read unless the subject is themselves.” (“School Shouldn’t Be A Battlefield” by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2022.)

♦ “It is disingenuous, absurd and historically false to argue that a hellish system such as National Socialism sanctifies its victims.” (Primo Levi. Quoted in “How Did He Die?: An Exchange” by Tim Parks, The New York Review, December 17, 2015.)

♦ “Whether it’s journalism, fiction or poetry, writing about war is routinely prized for ‘combat gnosticism,’ which is the notion that the ability to comprehend war requires a special knowledge possessed only by a battle-hardened elite.” (“The War of Words” by John Palattella, The Nation, January 2, 2004 issue.)

♦ “This thinking [identity politics] appeals not to reason or universal values but to the authority of identity, the ‘lived experience’ of the oppressed... [This has led some] to believe that words can be a form of violence; to close down a general argument with a personal truth (‘You wouldn’t understand,’ or just ‘I’m offended’); to keep your mouth shut when identity disqualified you from speaking.” (“School Shouldn’t Be A Battlefield” by George Packer, The Atlantic, April 2022.)

*** “The only way you can kill a mapinguary is by...”

♦ [Scientist] “It is quite clear to me that the legend of the mapinguary (pronounced ma-ping-wahr-EE) is based on human contact with the last of the ground sloths. We know that extinct species can survive as legends for hundreds of years. But whether such animal still exists or not is another question, one we can’t answer yet.” (Dr. David Oren, a former director of research at the Goeldi Institute in Belem, at the mouth of the Amazon River.) [Indigenous person] “The only way you can kill a mapinguary is by shooting at its head. But that is hard to do because it has the power to make you dizzy and turn day into night. So the best way to do it if you see one is climb a tree and hide.”

(Domingos Parintintin, a tribal leader in Amazonas State, on the mapinguary, a legendary Amazonian beast. From “A Huge Amazon Monster Is Only a Myth. Or Is It?” by Larry Rohrer, The New York Times International Sunday, July 8, 2007.)

*** A funny joke, story, and cartoon...

♦ A FUNNY JOKE. Question: How many Vietnam veterans does it take to screw in a lightbulb? / (The twitchy, trembling, quavering answer): How would you know, man? You weren’t there!

♦ A FUNNY STORY. A college-student “reporter” for The Primo Times, a free Bloomington, Indiana, community newspaper in the 1970s, interviewed the owner of a porn shop when such things were new and unusual. While interviewing the owner, the youth was startled by a contraption that looked like an octopus and heard himself blurting out, “What’s that for?” The porn-shop owner narrowed his eyes and growled, “The clientele knows.”

♦ A FUNNY CARTOON. Four Viking types, each clutching a book, are sitting around a fire under a sign that says, “Saga Club.” One of them is speaking, and he is saying, “The endless parade of murder and pillaging really spoke to me.” (The New Yorker, November 22, 2021)

♦ OLD: life experience, personal experience... / NEW: lived experience

*** analysis

♦ “The new exclusivity is partly epistemological, claiming that out-group members cannot share in the knowledge possessed by in-group members.” (“How America’s identity politics went from inclusion to division” by Amy Chua, The Guardian, 1 March 2018.)

♦ “Lived experience” is not listed by the Merriam-Webster online dictionary, although the perfectly comprehensible “life experience” is. The short Wikipedia article is categorized as follows: philosophy stubs | phenomenological methodology | qualitative research. Even academics are befuddled by it: see “Exploring what the Notion of ‘Lived Experience’ Offers for Social Policy Analysis” by Ian McIntosh and Sharon Wright, Urban Studies, School of Social and Political Sciences, University of Glasgow.

♦ NPR will gratuitously place “lived” before “experience” or “experiences.” At NPR, the word seems to possess some kind of totemic or fetishistic power.

♦ “The law, in its majestic equality, forbids rich and poor alike to sleep under bridges, to beg in the streets, and to steal their bread. This equality is one of the benefits of the Revolution.” (Anatole France, The Red Lily.)

♦ “EXPERIENCE, n. The wisdom that enables us to recognize as an undesirable old acquaintance the folly that we have already embraced.” (The Devil’s Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

♦ "Last week, there was widespread outrage when Judge Schroeder set ground rules forbidding prosecutors from referring to the men Rittenhouse shot as victims." ("A look at Bruce Schroeder, the judge in the Kyle Rittenhouse trial," NPR, All Things Considered, Nov. 4, 2021.)

♦ "The word 'victim' is a loaded, loaded word that can prejudice the jury." (Judge Bruce Schroeder of Wisconsin.)

*** analysis

♦ "The term 'microaggression' in itself is loaded. And this is how words work. Words don't mean what the dictionary says they mean. Words mean your opinions about people who use that word. So the term 'microaggression' in its self—some people will bristle because they've seen it applied to things they don't think are problematic—it just means a use of a word that can be offensive or hurtful and so, when your consciousness is raised, you try to avoid it. And that I think is the status of the word 'ladies.' Calling it a microaggression in itself is going to separate people into camps..." (Georgetown University linguist Dr. Deborah Tannen. From "Is 'ladies' acceptable workplace language?" by Robin Young, wbur, April 18, 2023.)

♦ "Government ministers, newspaper columnists, ordinary people—they're all asking why the BBC doesn't say the Hamas gunmen who carried out appalling atrocities in southern Israel are terrorists. / The answer goes right back to the BBC's founding principles. / Terrorism is a loaded word, which people use about an outfit they disapprove of morally. It's simply not the BBC's to tell people who to support and who to condemn—who are the good guys and who are the bad guys... / And it's always been like this in the BBC. During World War Two, BBC broadcasters were expressly told not to call the Nazis evil or wicked, even though we did call them 'the enemy'. / 'Above all,' said a BBC document about all this, 'there must be no room for ranting'. Our tone had to be calm and collected. / It was hard to keep that principle going when the IRA was bombing Britain... / But we held the line. And we still do, to this day. / We don't take sides. We don't use loaded words like 'evil' or 'cowardly'. We don't talk about 'terrorists'. And we're not the only ones to follow this line. Some of the world's most respected news organisations have exactly the same policy." ♦ "All I carried away from the magic town of Auckland was the face and voice of a woman who sold me beer at a little hotel there. They stayed at the back of my head till ten years later when, in a local train of the Cape Town suburbs, I heard a petty officer from Simon's Town telling a companion about a woman in New Zealand who 'never scrupled to help a lame duck or put her foot on a scorpion.' Then, precisely as the removal of the key-log in a timber-jam starts the whole pile—those words gave me the key to the face and voice at Auckland, and a tale called 'Mrs. Bathurst' slid into my mind, smoothly and orderly as floating timber on a bank-high river." (Something of Myself by Rudyard Kipling.)

*** "Old man Jinby rode frantically into Grand Rapids..."

♦ "Old man Jinby rode frantically into Grand Rapids, like a second Paul Revere, screaming out that the flood had broken loose. It is impossible to describe the excitement and consternation that reigned in Grand Rapids as the rushing timbers shot down the current past the city. The heavy iron bridges one after the other crumpled up like matchwood and were borne out of sight down stream on the very top of the jam... Five hours later about half of the logs boiled into sight at Grand Haven, fifty miles away... Now [at Grand Haven] for four days and nights ensued a grim struggle for supremacy [to secure its own booms and to keep the logs from floating out into Lake Michigan] that has probably never been equaled in industrial history." ("The Great Log Jam" by Stewart Edward White is a terrific account of an actual log jam. It appeared in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, Vol. LII No. 3 in July, 1901, and it is an account of the Great Log Jam of 1883 on the Grand River in Michigan, perhaps the largest logjam in the history of logging.)

*** analysis

♦ Read "Last Log Drive in U.S. Floating to End in Maine" by John Kifner, The New York Times, Sept. 8, 1976. It occurred on the Kennebec River. Logs are transported by trucks and helicopters, even, nowadays. And yet, the expression persists in the language. It lives on!

*** analysis

♦ In 2019, forest fires in the Amazon caused leaders and the media to repeat the old canard that the Amazon creates 20 percent of the world's oxygen. This figure is grossly inflated, and reflects a total misunderstanding of the science involved. That's because plants not only create oxygen but use it. "The net contribution of the Amazonian ecosystem to the world's oxygen level is effectively zero." (FactCheck.org and many other sources.)

*** THE GOOD WORK PROGRESSES...

♦ On October 9 Cheyenne's Leader reprinted a story from the Deadwood Times: "THE GOOD WORK PROGRESSES: [The sheriffs] returned yesterday and reported that they found the bodies of two men hanging to a pine tree about seven miles from Jenny's Stockade... They were black in the face, with tongues and eyes protruding, and were a ghastly looking spectacle... They had been hanging for some time, and it is thought that the Scott Davis party did the good work last week. The sheriffs did not molest them, but left them to swing and fester in the sun, a warning to others of the same ilk." / None of the men in the Davis party ever confirmed that these two men were hanged by them or that they were Carey and McBride..." (From Great Stagecoach Robberies Of the Old West by R. Michael Wilson, Chapter Nine, "The Ironclad Stagecoach." "Eventually all but one of the robbers, and several other road agents (robbers), would be killed and four-fifth of the treasure recovered." Obituaries for the yuppie began to appear—notably (and strangely unmentioned in McGrath's book). Hendrik Hertzberg's classic 'The Short Happy Life of the American Yuppie,' in Esquire. The yuppie, Hertzberg said, was 'the collective projection of a moral anxiety. We loaded onto him everything we hated about the times we had been living through... Then we strung the little bastard up.' It was over." ("What Happened To The Yuppie?" by Louis Menand, The New Yorker, July 29, 2024. Great writing.)

*** “Hey, Mr. Cunningham. I said, ‘Hey, Mr. Cunningham’...”

♦ “The main body of the citizens’ force, numbering nearly one hundred men, filed into the jail yard. They took Scanland and jailer McKane prisoner and placed them under guard... / Once the citizens were in the cell area, they threw ropes over the braces between a joist and then opened the cells. Joe Tuttle and Len Redfield were quietly taken out into the corridor. Redfield was game, so when the men went into the cell to bring him out he coolly looked around and asked, ‘Who is the leader of this gang?’ As the noose was placed around his neck he remarked, ‘Well, boys, I guess my time has come.’ / Tuttle broke down completely when the men entered his cell. He placed his hands over his face and sobbed, ‘Let me talk; give me time to talk,’ and one of the men replied, ‘You didn’t give poor Collins time to talk, and we will serve you the same way.’ / Both men were drawn up and the loose ends tied off. They did not struggle, even though they slowly strangled to death. After the two men were hanging, young Carpenter was brought out of his cell and told to look at his uncle and at Joe Tuttle and to take warning by their fate—he was young and could still turn from his course and make a man of himself... He was returned to his cell, and the mob guarded the hanging men until a physician pronounced them dead. They then disbanded and went about their business as though nothing happened. / An inquest soon followed, conducted by the local judge, the coroner being absent. The verdict? The two men had been hanged by persons unknown...” (Great Stagecoach Robberies Of The Old West by R. Michael Wilson. Chapter 12, “A Lynchin’ Bee.”)

♦ “The community is well convinced he was disloyal. The city does not miss him. The lesson of his death has had a wholesome effect on the Germanists of Collinsville [Illinois] and the rest of the nation.” (The report in a local paper on the murder of Robert Prager, a German immigrant, who was lynched in Collinsville, Illinois, now a suburb of St. Louis, on April 4, 1918. He was stripped naked and made to walk down Main Street singing patriotic songs. The drunken mob broke beer bottles at his feet, so that he walked barefoot on glass shards to the tree from which he was hanged. The mob believed him to be a German spy. Eleven men were put on trial for his murder, and all were acquitted. From “During World War I, U.S. Government Propaganda Erased German Culture,” NPR, All Things Considered, April 7, 2017.)

♦ “Hey, Mr. Cunningham. I said, ‘Hey, Mr. Cunningham’... Don’t you remember me, Mr. Cunningham? I’m Jean Louise Finch. You brought us some hickory nuts one early morning. Remember? We had a talk... I go to school with your boy... He’s a nice boy, tell him hey for me, won’t you?” (A small girl shames a lynch mob and affects an entire generation. Trump’s Machiavelli he essentially became ~, plotting and planning...

♦ “I mean, his life basically vanished like an Alka-Seltzer tablet.” (Guy Raz and Stacey Vanek Smith breezily dishing about Machiavelli on NPR to promote Stacey’s book, Machiavelli for Women: Defend your Worth, Grow Your Ambition, and Win the Workplace.)

*** “Machiavelli, an Italian patriot...”

♦ “‘Italy,’ declared Metternich, ‘is a geographical expression.’ He spoke no more than the truth. Never in all its history had the Italian peninsula constituted a single nation; even in the days of imperial Rome it had been merely a part—and usually quite a small part—of the Roman state. Since the early Middle Ages, however—and perhaps even earlier—the concept of Italian nationhood had existed as a distant ideal: Dante and Petrarch had both dreamed of it, as later had Machiavelli.” (The Middle Sea: A History of the Mediterranean by the historian John Julius Norwich.)

♦ “Niccolo Machiavelli’s cool appreciation of expediency, expressed most famously in his slender book The Prince, has made his name a synonym for double-dealing and cynicism. And yet most modern historians who examine his life and work offer a more balanced perspective... [He] was also an Italian patriot who believed that the well-being of his countrymen could only be ensured by a strong ruler who would unify the country...” (National Geographic Almanac of World History by Patricia S. Daniels and Stephen G. Hyslop.)

Maginot Line

♦ "The British General Staff and our headquarters in the field had long been anxious about the gap between the northern end of the Maginot Line and the beginning of the British fortified front along the Franco-Belgian frontier. Mr. Hore-Belisha, the Secretary of State for War, raised the point in the War Cabinet on several occasions. Representations were made through military channels. The Cabinet and our military leaders however were naturally shy of criticising those whose armies were ten times as strong as our own. The French thought that the Ardennes were impassable for large modern armies. Marshal Petain had told the Senate Army Commission, 'This sector is not dangerous.' A great deal of field work was done along the Meuse, but nothing like a strong line of pill-boxes and anti-tank obstacles, such as the British had made along the Belgian sector, was attempted... Here, then, from Sedan to Hirson, on the Oise, along a front of fifty miles, there were no permanent fortifications, and only two divisions of professional troops." (Their Finest Hour by Winston S. Churchill, Book 1, Chapter II, "The Battle Of France.")

♦ "Here [in Marble Canyon] the men started to grow restless: the trip was taking too long and was bruising, cold, and dangerous. Major Powell, they complained, was interested only in science—in taking observations, in collecting, in writing. He seemed less concerned with getting the team down to calm waters, to safety, and to home. / There were mutinous rumblings, and they were scarcely mitigated when their leader realized—and promptly told his men—that it was going to get worse and take still longer. For with the cliffs fast rising around them and the outflow of a known river named by the old conquistador explorers the Colorado Chiquita bursting in on their left side, it was clear that the main part of the huge cleft, the hitherto untraveled Big Canyon, as it was then vaguely known—lay now directly in front of them. What had gone before were mere hors d'oeuvres. The main dish lay just ahead. / 'We are three quarters of a mile in the depths of the earth,' Powell would later write in his diary." (The Men Who United The States by Simon Winchester.)

♦ "There's one of your Whigs for ye!" cried Alan; and then turning to me, he asked if I had done much execution. / I told him I had winged one, and thought it was the captain. / "And I've settled two," says he. (Reactions from online commenters ranged from "Wow, a real live Norman Bates" and "All moms are controlling" to "Most boys are mama's boys and most girls are daddy's girls.")

♦ "So, in the eyes of her classmates, Nelle's taking on the job of guardian angel to Truman Streckfus Persons... was further proof of her particularity: Truman, as surely as every kid at Monroeville Elementary knew that night followed day, was a sissy, a crybaby, a mamma's boy, and so on. Moreover, if he had worn a sandwich board to school with the words HATE ME painted on it two feet tall, the advertisement would have been redundant. His clothes extended that invitation from a block away. It was the 1930s, the Great Depression...A girl in a flower-print dress of cotton made from a fifty-pound flour sack had nothing to be ashamed of then... Consequently, when Truman's Aunt Jennie, the owner of a millinery in town, outfitted Truman in Hawaiian shirts, white duck shorts, blue socks, sandals, and Eton caps from the best department stores in Mobile and Montgomery, he looked, as one teacher expressed it, 'like a bird of paradise among a flock of crows.' The implied insult to the other children could not be ignored. Boys gave him his comeuppance by rubbing cockleburs into his fine blond hair and bruising his milky skin." (Mockingbird: A Portrait of Harper Lee by Charles J. Shields. It's a wonderful portrait of an amazing woman.)

♦ A boy shall learn to fight, or let him put skirts about his knees. This boy has never been taught to fight, but he shall have his first lesson to-night. *** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "Not much is happening at the moment according to the war map they have hanging in the classroom. Nothing of any note has happened in Africa or Asia for several weeks. Yesterday, unfortunately, 289 men capitulated in Likuyu in German East Africa, and several Turkish trenches were taken by the British south-west of Kut al-Amara in Mesopotamia. That is all. Things are also quiet in Italy and the Balkans; nor is anything new happening on the Western Front, apart from the occasional raid. It is only the Eastern Front that is providing the newspapers with anything more than the occasional notice, and almost all the fighting there has been concentrated in one area—Romania—for months. That part of the map is now a patchwork of small black, white and red flags and there could well be a major victory there soon. The last was on 6 December when Bucharest fell and the children were given a day off school. Elfriede used that sudden holiday to go for a walk." (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter Englund, writing about World War I.)

♦ "This war is a new kind of war. It is different from all other wars of the past, not only in its methods and weapons, but also in its geography... This is warfare in terms of every continent, every island, every sea, every air lane in the world. That is the reason why I have asked you to take out and spread before you a map of the whole Earth, and to follow me in the references which I shall make to the world-encircling battle lines of this war." (President Franklin D. Roosevelt in a radio broadcast to the nation. In advance of the President's talk, Americans had been encouraged to bring a world map to have by their radio, and map sales soared. More than 60 million people tuned in to the broadcast, nearly half the population. FDR used the map to show listeners how big and mighty the Allied nations were. From "The First Family of Radio: Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt's Historic Broadcasts," American RadioWorks, November 2014.)

♦ My knowledge of geography had been expanding... with reports of front movements in the east, of battles for islands in the Pacific between the Japanese and the Americans, of developments in southern Europe." (Gunter Grass, "How I spent the War," New Yorker Magazine.)

♦ “The school board in Tupper Lake, New York, tasked a committee to draft a new policy on diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI). Whether or not the phrase “historically marginalized” was to be included became a sticking point, among many other issues. In the end, the draft policy did not include a reference to “historically marginalized groups.” (“Schools find conspiracy theories interfere with making classrooms inclusive” by Zach Hirsch, NPR, Morning Edition, August 16, 2022.)

♦ “I will NO LONGER tolerate ANY racism against me for being a #ProudBrownWoman of #SouthAsian and #Caribbean descent...The fact that I have consistently been made to endure this hateful racism in anti-racist spaces is abhorrently shameful.” (Dr. Vanessa Toolsie, who was born in Trinidad of Indian descent, resigning from her position of elected vice president of the Orange County branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. From “NAACP leader in Florida quits over ‘racist marginalization,’” AP, August 25 2022. Republished on ABC News.)

♦ “Historians championing previously marginalized intellectual and literary figure are often caught on the horns of a dilemma. On the one hand, the subject—the woman scientist, the Black composer, the Indigenous military strategist—must have met with some degree of social acceptance in their day or the work would never have had enough support and attention to have flourished and survived. Since historians wish to draw on the wiser judges of the era to establish the importance of their subjects, we are told about whom they wowed and how they wowed them. On the other hand, the point must be made that such subjects have had far less attention than they deserved. So they must be shown to have been keenly appreciated by the better spirits of their time as well as wrongly consigned to oblivion.” (“A Piece Of Her Mind: Does the Enlightenment’s great female intellect need rescuing?” by Adam Gopnik, The New Yorker, November 4, 2024.)

♦ Refers to nothing real.

♦ "We don't call him Marmite for nothing." (A colleague about the irrepressible Piers Morgan of ITV.)

♦ "If you love me or you hate me, you're gonna watch me fight." (The MMA fighter Paddy "The Baddy" Pimblett, who refuses to get his hair cut. He is a Liverpudlian.)

♦ "I think he's one of those marmite fighters, some people might love the way that he goes about what he does, his trash talk, his, you know, all that stuff, trying to get under people's skin, other people will absolutely hate, it's always been the way, but at the end of the day, people want to hear from him..." (Commentator Stacey Copeland about Jarrell "Big Baby" Miller, who was born and raised in Brooklyn. Stacey was talking with Steve Bunce in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, prior to the Day of Reckoning fight card, part of Riyadh Season. Super!)

*** the durian, lutefisk, tsampa, walrus flippers with sea cabbage...

♦ A similar food is the durian, which has been described as smelling like garbage, moldy cheese, rotting fish, a dead cat, last season's unwashed gym socks, and a mixture of cheese, onions, sherry, rotting meat and drains.

♦ "Most lutefisk is not edible by normal people. It is reminiscent of the afterbirth of a dog or the world's largest chunk of phlegm." (The beloved American humorist Garrison Keillor.)

♦ "The staple food in this region is tsampa. This is how they prepare it. You heat sand to a high temperature in an iron pan and then pour barley corns onto it. They burst with a slight pop, whereupon you put the corns and the sand in a fine meshed sieve through which the sand runs: after this you grind the corn very small. The resulting meal is stirred up into a paste with butter tea or milk or beer and then eaten. The Tibetans make a special cult of tsampa and have many ways of preparing it. We soon got accustomed to it, but never cared much for butter tea, which is usually made with rancid butter and is generally repugnant to Europeans. It is, however, universally drunk and appreciated by the Tibetans, who often drink as many as sixty cups in a day." (Seven Years in Tibet by Heinrich Harrer, from the chapter, "The Village of Happiness.")

♦ "Kangding is a crossroads town, once a terminus for the brick tea trade, now an important rest stop for anyone bound into or out of Tibet—it is the true beginning of ethnic Tibet or, for someone coming from the far side, the true beginning of the real China. The little cafes here serve Tibetan tea—a powerful decoction brewed from tea dust and twigs, with copious amounts of salt added to impart extra flavor and with large globules of rancid, hairy yak-butter floating on top. It is an acquired taste that I was not to acquire—finding it even less attractive a comestible than tsampa, the principal food of the Tibetan peasantry, which consists merely of flour worked with water and yak-butter, and which is eaten raw and has a taste like rotten dough." (The River at the Center of the World: A Journey Up the Yangtze, and Back in Chinese Time by the wonderful writer Simon Winchester.)

*** analysis

♦ "The 'Marmite Test' is a research design technique." (AI Overview.)

*** the battle of the sexes...

♦ “Treat her like a Queen, and she’ll treat you like a King.” (Said in Saudi Arabia.)

♦ “I have studied this matter. Most of the couples who visit a big shopping center start quarreling with each other within an hour and a half.” (Sergei Y. Klyuchnikov, a psychologist in Moscow, on Russia’s long New Year’s holiday. Duh!)

♦ Men who do housework may get more sex...

♦ First man: “How’s your wife?” / Second man: “Still in charge...”

♦ “My wife ran off with my best friend... and I miss him!” (A bumper sticker.)

♦ “Why women seek conflict,” Health & Science, The Week, March 23, 2012.)

♦ “Grow your own dope—plant a man.” (A bumper sticker for a female landscaping company, seen at the Ingles parking lot in East Oteen, Asheville, North Carolina, USA.)

♦ A FUNNY STORY. One day Abu Nuas and the Caliph Haroon Rashid were talking about marriage. “Tell me, great Caliph, speaking about the men you rule over, who has the upper hand in the relationship, the man or the woman?” Abu Nuas asked innocently. The Caliph snorted at such a stupid question and became angry. He berated Abu Nuas. He laughed at him and mocked him and abused him! / Abu Nuas just smiled a little smile. He knew that he had netted a great fish. And not just the greatest fish in the Tigris, or the Euphrates, or the Nile, but the greatest fish in all the seas and oceans in the world! And so he made his wager...” (To be continued in tomorrow’s class. The bell has rung.)

was the correct and necessary result of a racist criminal legal system. But he’s still a monster, not a martyr.” (Marc Lamont Hill, a professor and media commentator.)

♦ “It’s not unusual for people with an extreme devotion to animals to believe that the objects of their affection are equally devoted to them. Animal obsessives routinely portray themselves as martyrs, holy warriors who fight the good and solitary fight on behalf of animals, their shared enemies the billions of stupid, thoughtless humans who can’t know what they know. These same people often claim special powers: that they can commune with animals, talk to them in their own private language...” (From “The Original Tiger Kings: The Improbable Rise And Savage Fall Of Siegfried & Roy” by Chris Jones and Michael J. Mooney, The Atlantic, November 2022.)

♦ “I’ve never seen an athlete in my generation take the bullets in the way he has taken the bullets. Metaphorically speaking, he is a martyr.” (The broadcaster Craig Mitch about Raheem Sterling, and the latter’s efforts to fight racism in soccer and the media.)

♦ “Ibrahim Kandalakt, Arafat’s adviser on Christian affairs, eulogized Khoury on behalf of the PA chairman, describing him as a shaheed (martyr) of the Palestinian Cause. But the victim’s mother interrupted him by declaring that her son was an “angel, not a shaheed.” (Mother of 21-year-old university student George Khoury, murdered by the Aksa Martyrs Brigade while jogging in Jerusalem. The “Brigade” later apologized, saying they thought he was a Jew. He was actually a Christian.)

♦ “WHAT IS VETERANS DAY? Veterans Day is an American holiday to honor the patriotism, love of country, and sacrifice of veterans. THIS WON’T STAND! We reject this holiday and refuse to celebrate it. The American war machine should not be honored for the horrors unleashed on others. WHAT NOW? Instead, we will celebrate Martyrs Day in honor of those martyred by the Israel-US war machine.” (A flyer put out by the Columbia University Apartheid Divest group announcing a protest at Columbia University. “All our martyrs have a name.”)

*** various groups...

♦ "Why does 'Black Lives Matter' trigger so many people?"

♦ "The slogan [White Lives Matter]... is considered hate speech by the Anti-Defamation League and has been attributed to white supremacist groups..." ("The fashion world embraced Ye. After his 'White Lives Matter' shirts, that may change" by Michel Martin, NPR, All Things Considered, October 9, 2022.)

♦ "When you're not able to recognize Black lives, you just don't get to [sic] all lives." (Celeste Hodge Growden, president of the Alaska Black Caucus. Presumably, she is referring to "Black Lives Matter" versus "All Lives Matter." From "Anchorage police investigated in White Privilege card photo" by Mark Thiessen, AP, July 13, 2022.)

♦ "You have to be authentic, I want you to be authentic, your story matters." (Maimouna Youssef to young artists about social-justice music and the new Grammy merit award for “Best Song for Social Change.”)

*** social media, popular culture...

◆ The phrase “Black Lives Matter” has achieved the status of a meme, along with online meme generators that are often used to create vile messages.

◆ “Institutions matter... The church as an institution matters. Ask John Wesley. The government as an institution matters. Ask John Lewis. The post office as an institution matters. Ask Benjamin Franklin. The CDC as an institution matters. Ask Anthony Fauci. The EU and Nato as institutions matter. Ask Vladimir Zelensky. And one more...Marsh Chapel, as an institution, matters.” (From the live broadcast of the Marsh Chapel Service at Boston University on May 1, 2022. “Ask” is a fine rhetorical device, as is “matters.”)

*** jumping on the “Matter” bandwagon...

◆ “If we truly believe that all lives matter, and Black lives matter and brown lives matter and the lives of poor people matter, it’s time for us to make sure...” (US Senator Dick Durbin of Illinois, who is seeking to end federal capital punishment.)

◆ “If we believe that the lives of incarcerated people matter, she maintains, we have a legal and moral obligation to make these conditions less inhumane.” (“Dying Behind Bars” by Eyal Press, The New Yorker, August 23, 2021.)

◆ “We need to stop with the delusions. Science matters. Biology matters. Truth matters.” (Trans women are trans women, not women.)

◆ “We are sending a strong message to young girls who dream... Your service matters, your contribution to the Coast Guard and to the country matters. And yes, you too can be Commandant someday.” (U.S. Senator Maria Cantwell praising Admiral Linda Fagan, the first female commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard. Military recruitment matters...)

◆ “[The parents] want to make their [children’s] loss of life matter.” (Uvalde school shooting.)

◆ “Hope. Hope and just the fact that we actually matter. Like Kansas City’s on the map, I mean, we’re like the center of the NFL World right now, so, like yeah, he brought us hope, he brought us meaning, he brought us purpose.” (A happy football fan about what Patrick Mahomes means to Kansas City, Missouri, in 2023.)

◆ “It matters whether or not you accept the outcome of elections. It matters whether or not you, for example, talk about how you’re gonna deal with the border instead of talkin’ about people being vermin. I mean, those things matter. That’s the kind of language that is inflammatory.” (President Joe Biden’s interview at the White House with Lester Holt, NBC News, on Monday, July 15, 2024, two days after Trump’s near-assassination, on Saturday, July 13, 2024.)

*** monetizing, commerce, biz, ads, merch, pods, books...

*** presentism, history in contempo-speak...

◆ “As the historian Eric Foner phrased it, for all its shortcomings, the Midwest ‘recognized black humanity.’ One might even say that with Lincoln and the region’s ardent abolitionists, black lives, for the first time, mattered.” (“Recovering The Heartland” by Hendrik Meijer, National Review, December 19, 2022. History framed in contempo-speak.)

*** more conventional usage...

◆ “Why don’t you guys talk about something that matters? I’m happy to answer a question that matters.” (President Joe Biden, criticizing reporters asking him if he regretted fist-bumping Saudi Arabia’s Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman in 2022.)

◆ “I like living someplace where a horse matters... I like being a person to whom a horse matters...I like living a life where a horse matters...” (“Baxter Black’s final column: A horse matters,” The Las Cruces Bulletin, posted Jan. 5, 2022. Baxter Black wrote the article in November 2017.)

◆ “Being personal with each other, it’s valuable, it matters...” (“Warm human connections.”)

◆ “The war had made it obvious by the most cruel of all arguments, that science is of the most immediate and direct importance to everybody. This had changed the character of physics.” (The physicist Victor Weisskopf. If he were alive today, he probably would simply write, “Physics matter,” and expect everyone to understand and agree.)

♦ "Let's face it, America is getting bigger, and women want to see themselves instead of the image of what society says they should be." (Plus-size model Ashley Graham.)

♦ "Cuz, it wasn't many people that looked like me doing it, so..."

♦ "If you've not seen yourself on screen before, why would you ever want to go for that role? You've suddenly got representation from not one, but two South Asian women and it's a period drama which traditionally you'd only see white cast members in." (Laraib Waheed, an actor, about on-screen representation of people of South Asian heritage in the hit period drama Bridgerton. From "Bridgerton: South Asian faces on TV 'makes me happy'" by Paige Neal-Holder and Steffan Powell, BBC, March 22, 2022.)

♦ "I was welcomed by so many amazing Black students who look just like me, who have the same dreams and aspirations as me as well." (Daya Brown about Duke University. From "Teen accepted to more than 50 colleges, receives over $1.3 million in scholarships." She wants to study mass communications or film, and she created her own production company while in high school. "I think a lot of people think that if you're smart, you can't be cool. So I found a way to showcase brilliance [and] still have fun while you're doing it.")

♦ "It was nice to be around people that look like you who just kind of get it [italics mine]" (Mayowa Aina about the Black Student Union at the University of Washington. She is the author of "Dear Whiteness" for the audio project, "Letters from Young Activists.")

♦ "I was exhausted with the culture of country music not creating space for people who look like me." (This short sentence combines three tropes relating to inclusion and exclusion: physical malaise; the idea of spaces; and "look like me.")

♦ "Not everyone feels safe and comfortable in nature. People who didn't grow up camping or who might not recognize themselves in a hiking-gear catalogue may experience stress or anxiety instead. To make green spaces more inviting to everyone, start by evaluating your own actions and following this advice from Latino Outdoors founder Jose G. Gonzalez." ("The Nature Antidote" by Jill U. Adams, Audubon magazine, Winter, 2019.)

♦ "Yeah, absolutely. You know, I was a typical sort of nineties alternative person [upspeak] you know like I really prized the clothes I wore sort of my unusual taste in music and when I arrived at Berkeley in 1995 I was seeking out people who were exactly like me [light upspeak]. ### *** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

♦ “It gets boring just talking to the same people that look like you, you know. It’s like talking to yourself. So, it would be nice, you know? Different perspectives on different things. Too bad I don’t see a lot.” (Dahi, a student who only knows two white adult people, teachers at his nearly all Black school in Washington, DC. From “Raising Kings: A Year Of Love And Struggle At Ron Brown College Prep. Episode 3: The Fierce Debate Over High Standards,” NPR, Code Switch, November 1, 2017. In a Code Switch follow-up, “Is Ron Brown High School Working?” (October 31, 2018), we learn that Dahi left the school after being threatened by a student and harassed by others.)

♦ She remains thrilled by the unusually wide demographic appeal of the series (Last Tango in Halifax). Might this be due to its subject matter being love and families, which most people have some experience of? ‘Yes. Even if the characters didn’t look like them. I sometimes think we make too much of ‘representation’. You don’t necessarily need to see yourself on a screen for it to be interesting. For me, ideally ‘diversity’ would mean white audiences watching black shows and the other way round.” (The actor Nina Sosanya. From “Nina Sosanya: ‘I was always a minority—even in my own family’ by Mark Lawson, The Guardian, 11 July 2016.)

♦ “[My father said to me] ‘Listen son, people like us don’t do things like that (go into acting)...son, I just don’t want you to talk about it anymore...’” (“British Actor Terence Stamp Reflects on London in the Swinging ‘60s,” NPR, Fresh Air, Nov 5, 2021. Originally broadcast in 2002. About what his father had said, Stamp said, “In fact, it didn’t deter me at all.”)

♦ “As you get higher up in the levels, when it comes to the national circuit, if you don’t fit in with the crowd, you won’t make it.” (Retired W-League player Rhali Dobson. ### *** analysis

♦ According to Merriam-Webster, this word comes from the name of a river in Asia Minor that was known for its turning and winding. It’s a nice way to think of the word.

♦ “There is no way to devise order when we are dealing with the left-overs from this chapter of miscellaneous words. It may be best that we wander without particular direction or plan through this unrelated field of words, and when we do this we will be what is called meandering. That is, we will be acting like the river Maiandros, from which our English word was taken, that went winding aimlessly through the fields of Phrygia in the Asia Minor of classic Greece.” (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D.)

♦ MEANDER, n. To proceed sinuously and aimlessly. The word is the ancient name of a river about one hundred and fifty miles south of Troy, which turned and twisted in the effort to get out of hearing when the Greeks and Trojans boasted of their prowess.” (The Devil’s Dictionary by Ambrose Bierce.)

♦ "It was the Somme in miniature. To the Finns who witnessed these attacks, it seemed beyond belief that any army, no matter how fatalistic its ideology or inexhaustible its supply of manpower, would continue to mount attack after attack across such billiard-table terrain. / In some battles the Finnish machine gunners held their fire until the range was down to fifty meters; the butchery was dreadful. In a number of cases Finnish machine gunners had to be evacuated due to stress. They had become emotionally unstable from having to perform such mindless slaughter, day after day." (Taipale. From Frozen Hell: The Russo-Finnish Winter War Of 1939-40 by William R. Trotter.)

♦ "You are just meat to your commanders." (Text messages from Ukrainian soldiers to those resisting them in the Donbas. From the Wikipedia article "Battle of Avdiivka (2017)." Olga Schechter's remarkable 2018 documentary film A Sniper's War recorded a piece of this battle. She focused on the Serb sniper "Deki.")

*** analysis

♦ In many of the examples above and below, "mental health" can be substituted with "mental illness."

*** various groups...

- ♦ “Too many times we think of things like ‘this is racism’ and ‘this is mental health,’ and they’re separate. But in reality, it’s really complex and they inform one another.” (Kristi Oshiro, an assistant professor at Belmont University who has studied racism and its impact on athletes. From “Why mental health matters for athletes—even as they give their all to win” by Leah Asmelash, CNN, July 26, 2022. Consider also “Dumped NBA Star Goes After Team Therapist Who Exposed Him” by Josh Fiallo, Daily Beast, Nov. 04, 2022, about the NBA player Joshua Primo. At one time Primo’s lawyer accused the therapist of trading in “racial stereotypes.”)
- ♦ “The intersection of policing, race, and autism has the potential to result in tragic outcomes.” (“Parents of Black autistic sons share their stories after tragic encounters with police,” ABC News, April 28, 2023.)
- ♦ Dylann Roof, who murdered nine in “The Charleston church shooting,” is autistic. So was Adam Lanza, the “Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting” shooter. As was the U.K.’s Jake Davison (“Plymouth shooting”), who shot his mother and four passers-by.
- ♦ “Boy Y has been diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder and is non-verbal and girl X has traits of autism and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder.” (Convicted of murdering transgender Brianna Ghey, in the U.K.)
- ♦ “Transgender and non-binary people are up to six times more likely to also have autism” by Lesley McClurg, NPR, Weekend Edition Sunday, January 15, 2023.
- ♦ “Ulven revealed in 2021 that she has been diagnosed with obsessive-compulsive disorder and generalized anxiety disorder.” (The Wikipedia article “Girl in Red.”)
- ♦ “You think I’m tepid but I’m misdiagnosed, / Cause I’m a stalker I seen all of your posts.” (“Crush” by Tessa Violet.)
- ♦ “My brain is poison and I’m searchin’ for the antidote / but every time I find it, my defenses scream ‘Oh no you don’t! woah...” (YouTube gabbie hanna tik tok compilation.)
- ♦ Olivia Rodrigo put her own feminine rage on display in “good4u.”
- ♦ “Famous American ‘OnlyFans’ star has been charged with murder for stabbing her Nigerian-American lover to death.”
- ♦ “Girlfriend kills boyfriend by mowing him down with her car, police say.”
- ♦ “Even before her teens [the blond actress Tuesday] Weld had claimed a nervous breakdown at nine, heavy drinking at ten and a suicide attempt at twelve. ‘As a teenager I was a wreck,’ she admits. ‘I drank so much I can’t remember anything. My teens passed by in drink.’ She had brawled publicly with an early Hollywood beau, John Barrymore, Jr., and tried to run down another, Gary Lockwood, speeding down Sunset Boulevard with him clinging to the hood. ‘Tuesday’s done some wild, wild things,’ said one longtime friend, ‘and screwed up many, many guys. She’s highly sexual.’” (AI Pacino: A Life On The Wire by Andrew Yule.)
- ♦ “We have Mexican vocalist Carla Morrison talking about mental health. Her own mental health, and how reaching out for help is viewed in some Latino communities...” (“After an extended hiatus, Alt. Latino returns to NPR Music,” NPR Morning Edition, Sept. 14, 2022.)
- ♦ “He was held first in Iron County in Utah, then in Salt Lake City, then put on a plane and transported to a federal pretrial holding facility in North Carolina. When three separate psychiatrists working with the U.S. Bureau of Prisons examined McRae in the years following his arrest, one concluded that he was not fit to stand trial and another questioned his fitness. McRae showed ‘psychotic symptoms,’ including ‘thought disorganization, and pre-occupying persecutory delusions,’ along with ‘depressive symptoms meeting criteria for a major depressive episode.’ He also displayed ‘symptoms of mania.’ The psychiatrists believed that he may have had bipolar disorder, possibly schizoaffective disorder, and also narcissistic personality disorder—which ‘makes him difficult to work with.’” (“The Machine Breaker: Inside the mind of an ‘ecoterrorist’” by Christopher Ketcham, Harper’s Magazine, November, 2023. Ketcham suggests an alternative diagnosis: “If Steve McRae sounds to some like a madman, I’d suggest he’s ahead of the curve in feeling deeply the pain of solastalgia. Perhaps those of us who deny the seriousness of the crisis have had our senses dulled, our hearts hardened, and are

- ♦ “One study found eliminating marijuana use in adolescents would reduce global rates of schizophrenia by 10%.” (“California may require labels on pot products to warn of mental health risks” by April Dembosky, NPR, June 17, 2022.)

♦ “According to her testimony, after the second hit, Spejcher initially felt like she was caught in a time loop, and then became convinced she was dead. She then said she felt she was outside her body, watching her hands pick up two knives as they stabbed both her dog and O’Melia. Then, she said, everything went black. While blacked out, Spejcher began stabbing herself in the neck with a long, serrated bread knife.” (Read “The Murky Story Behind the Woman Who Stabbed her Date to Death While High” by Brenna Ehrlich, Rolling Stone, January 31, 2024. Or watch “Woman convicted of killing man during marijuana-induced psychosis speaks out,” WGN News. “Experts on both sides agreed. Her actions were the result of cannabis-induced psychosis.”)

*** language...

- ♦ “We...develop new knowledge and language [italics mine] around mental distress.” (Project LETS.)
- ♦ “On Saturday, July 16, 2022, at 2:am, Officers responded to an armed mental consumer [italics mine] call in the 200 Block of South Main Street.” (A tweet by Memphis Police. The “armed mental consumer” was threatening to commit a mass shooting outside an arena.)
- ♦ DEPARTMENT OF BEHAVIORAL HEALTH AND / DEVELOPMENTAL SERVICES / CENTRAL STATE HOSPITAL / HIRAM W. DAVIS MEDICAL CENTER. (Signage for Virginia State’s “mental health” facility.)
- ♦ “Our perhaps understandable modern need to dull the sawtooth edges of so many of the afflictions we are heir to has led us to banish the harsh old-fashioned words: madhouse, asylum, insanity, melancholia, lunatic, madness. But never let it be doubted that depression, in its extreme form, is madness.” (Darkness Visible: A Memoir of Madness by William Styron.)
- ♦ “When I was first aware that I had been laid low by the disease, I felt a need, among other things, to register a strong protest against the word ‘depression.’ Depression, most people know, used to be termed ‘melancholia,’ a word which appears in English as early as the year 1303 and crops up more than once in Chaucer, who in his usage seemed to be aware of its pathological nuances. ‘Melancholia’ would still appear to be a far more apt and evocative word for the blacker forms of the disorder, but it was usurped by a noun with a bland tonality and lacking any magisterial presence, used indifferently to describe an economic decline or a rut in the ground, a true wimp of a word for such a major illness. It may be that the scientist generally held responsible for its currency in modern times, a Johns Hopkins Medical School faculty member justly venerated—the Swiss-born psychiatrist Adolf Meyer—had a tin ear for the finer rhythms of English and therefore was unaware of the semantic damage he had inflicted by offering ‘depression’ as a descriptive noun for such a dreadful and raging disease. Nonetheless, for over seventy-five years the word has slithered innocuously through the language like a slug, leaving little trace of its intrinsic malevolence and preventing, by its very insipidity, a general awareness of the horrible intensity of the disease when out of control. / As one who has suffered from the malady in extremis yet returned to tell the tale, I would lobby for a truly arresting designation. ‘Brainstorm,’ for instance, has unfortunately been preempted to describe, somewhat jocularly, intellectual inspiration. But something along these lines is needed...” (Darkness Visible: A Memoir of Madness by William Styron.)
- ♦ Type in “mental health” at NPR and you get 8,657 results (and counting). Type in “mental illness” at NPR and you get 2,225 results.)

*** the bright side...

- ♦ “Living a life of mental illness, they call it—I like to say mental superpowers—you know, basketball was always my escape.” (Former NBA player Delonte West about bipolar disorder.)
- ♦ “He called it his superpower.” (Ye, about being bipolar, in his 2018 song “Yikes” on his Ye album.)
- ♦ Vibrant Emotional Health, which operates the lifeline...

♦ Funding for WonderMind, the mental health platform associated with Selena Gomez and her mother, is partly funded by Serena Ventures, the golf legend Serena Williams’ investment portfolio.

♦ “Autistic people who create new universes...”

♦ “For all the little kids who have autism, it’s validating to see characters like themselves on television, instead of feeling invisible.” (Rose Jochum of the Autism Society of America, about the Sesame Street character Julia.)

♦ “If we can just free them to think that they can do anything, I really think they can. They need support. We should support them.” (Debbie Mielewski, whose son has autism spectrum disorder (ASD). From “U. Michigan study to help those with autism improve driving” by Mike Householder, AP, August 23, 2022. In phase 1 of the study, researchers found drivers with ASD detected fewer hazards. They also tended to stop short at stop signs. For further consideration, read “She was a respected nurse. Now she’s accused of killing 5 in horrific Windsor Hills crash” by Richard Winton, Noah Goldberg, Nathan Solis, Los Angeles Times, Aug. 12, 2022. Nicole Lorraine Linton had “mental health issues” and had been “involved in up to 13 wrecks before the Windsor Hills crash.”)

♦ Brendan Depa was one of the “so-called exceptional students.” The special help they are given at school is called exceptional student education. (Video shows 6-foot-6 student beat teacher unconscious, Matanzas High School, Palm Coast, Florida.)

♦ “According to the Clay Center for Young Healthy Minds [italics mine], 73% of college students experience some sort of mental health crisis during college.”

♦ “I’m not crazy. But it’s a crazy life. I was raised in a crazy family and it took 31 years to get the crazy out of me.” (Anne Heche, speaking to ABC News. Her 2001 memoir is called Call Me Crazy. Sadly, she died in 2022 in Los Angeles, age 53, having run her car into another person’s house, setting her car, the house, and herself on fire. She left behind two children.)

♦ “This is what happens when you work to change things. First they think you’re crazy, then they fight you, and then all of a sudden you change the world.” (Elizabeth Holmes of Theranos.)

♦ “Positive affirmations encouraging you to live your best life can be found almost everywhere. / But what if you don’t feel like it? For mental health advocate and author Dave Tarnowski, society’s penchant to push what he calls ‘toxic positivity’ felt like brainwashing.” (“Pushing back at a culture of relentless ‘toxic positivity’” by Terry Ward, CNN, Thu May 2, 2024.)

*** doing nothing...

♦ “When the paramedics arrived and tried to hospitalize Flack, she refused to go, telling the EMTs that she was just stressed and trying to sleep. / The following day...Flack took her own life.” (“Trouble in Paradise” by Anna Peele, Vanity Fair, July / August 2022.)

♦ “Joanna Hartigan, 54, from Hereford, was found dead in Nov. 2021 after medics decided she did not pose a serious risk.”

♦ “She was found asleep in a doorway in Croydon on the 6th of July, but told police officers she didn’t need help, and left.” (Student nurse Owami Davies. Subsequently five men were arrested for her disappearance, police trawled through 50,000 hours of CCTV, and Great Britain was put on alert. Five weeks later, she was found in Hampshire “in good health and not in a vulnerable state.” From BBC Six O’Clock News, August 23, 2022.)

♦ “His parents assured police he was getting help from mental health professionals.” (Robert E. Crimo III.)

*** the police, caught in the middle...

♦ “Jason had a medication meltdown where he was very, very violent. And I had to call the ambulance. The fire department called the police. And they came in with guns drawn. I’m telling them all the time, ‘There’s no weapons. My son has autism.’ They weren’t hearing anything. So, we want to make sure that the first responders are trained...” (Debra Vines. From CNN health. To donate to Vines’ group The Answer Inc. via GoFundMe, click here.)

♦ “He trusted the police to come and help him. Instead, they attacked and killed him.” (Simon and Sally Glass, the parents of Christian Glass. Christian had self-inflicted wounds from stabbing himself.)

♦ “St. Louis officer shot during mental health welfare check.”

♦ “Sgt. Matthew Fishman of the Wayne County Sheriff’s Office was killed last week. He was one of three deputies shot while trying to serve involuntary commitment papers at a home south of Goldsboro on Aug. 1.” (The 23-year-old who shot the officers committed suicide after a 9-hour standoff.)

♦ “A commuter was struck and killed by a Manhattan subway train Monday after being shoved onto the tracks by an emotionally disturbed person in an unprovoked attack, according to police and sources...” (Arrested was Carlton McPherson, a 24 year-old Black male, free on bond for assault.)

*** parents love their children...

♦ “We choose to remember Jonathan as the thoughtful and intelligent young man we knew and loved.” (Family of man who shot and killed three strangers at a shopping mall and who himself was killed by an armed citizen who prevented an even worse massacre.)

♦ “It’s so terrible when someone is a good person but they do something like this and then all the good is erased and they only see the bad.” (Sylvia Brogdon, ex-mother-in-law of Amy Brogdon Anderson.)

♦ “He was crazy silly, crazy happy. He just loved everybody, he loved life.” (The mother of a 20-year-old man shot by police who had come to arrest him for domestic violence, assault, and improper handling of a firearm. The mother is suing.)

♦ “He was just a great kid... He’d walk in a room and he’d have this infectious smile... I had a false expectation that if law enforcement...knew that he just [italics mine] had a mental health condition...that he wouldn’t be gunned down in the middle of the street on a bright sunny day.” (The mother of a mentally ill man. She herself was the one who called the police, who ended up shooting and killing her son.)

♦ “He was the peacemaker [with his siblings]. He was the one that would make sure that they didn’t fight and they get along very well.” (A family member about Osaze Osagie, a schizophrenic, killed by police.)

♦ “Crumbley’s parents, James and Jennifer Crumbley, were charged with involuntary manslaughter and have pleaded not guilty. / Prosecutors accuse the couple of failing to keep the gun used in the shooting secure at home and failing to reasonably care for their son when he showed signs of mental distress [italics mine].” (“Lawyer: Teen a worry months before Michigan school shooting” by Corey Williams, AP, Sept. 22, 2022.)

♦ “To you he is a monster. To me, he was a very sick boy.” (Andrew Cauchi, father of Joel Cauchi, 40.)

*** Simon Biles, Naomi Osaka...

♦ “[Her case] is opening up this space to have these conversations where people can you know choose mental health over you know necessarily you know showing up to work when they’re feeling miserable.” (ABC, “Naomi Osaka Steps Away.”)

♦ “It does open up a conversation because it’s her using her voice and her platform to really call out systemic change, which she has done before. I think she can show other girls and women who look like her how to empower them to stand up for themselves in ways that I think we haven’t always been able to see.” (C. Vaile Wright, PhD, a clinical psychologist and the American Psychological Association’s Senior Director of Health Care Innovation, about Naomi Osaka and mental health.)

♦ “This is the new breed of ‘sporting achievement.’ The loser reveling in their own narrative of ‘poor me’ and ‘victimhood...’ [A] troubled past, a difficult childhood from nothing, and then of course the trump card: ‘My mental health issues.’ Serena W., Naomi O., Anthony J.” (A BBC HYS commenter about Anthony Joshua's "bizarre post-fight antics" after his second loss to Oleksandr Usyk.)

♦ "Cricket poses unique challenges to wellbeing and mental health in terms of time away from home and the amount of travel, so that's a key area we try to incorporate into our work." (Jon Marzetti, a sports psychologist for England's cricket team. From "The Ashes: Why England will double down on 'Bazball' culture" by John Nassoori, BBC Sport, 4 July 2023. Problems mentioned in the article include: (1) hurting from defeat (2) fear of failure or losing (3) pressure to perform (4) the rigours of an Ashes series (5) the demands of touring and time away from home (6) amount of travel (7) anxiety (8) depression and (9) speculation and scrutiny over a player's place in the team. Nassoori makes it hard to imagine why anyone would want to play cricket!)

*** paranoid schizophrenia, psychosis...

♦ “Moore’s mother, Rachel Crisp, spoke to Louisville news station WHAS11 about her son’s mental health [italics mine] leading up to the incident. ‘He was talking about vampires following him home. Just crazy nonsense stuff like that, it doesn’t make any sense’ she told the news station, adding that her son believed he was a werewolf and that most of his family, including his own child, were vampires.” (“Man Killed Firefighter Who Came to His Aid, Thought Vampires Were After Him” by Gerrard Kaonga, Newsweek, 5/1/22.)

♦ “A man who fatally stabbed an elderly mobility scooter rider five days after being released from prison has been detained indefinitely in a psychiatric hospital. Lee Byer killed 87-year-old Thomas O’Halloran in Greenfort in West London in August, 2022. The Old Bailey heard he had been suffering from paranoid schizophrenia.” (BBC.)

♦ “Calocane, 32, had been diagnosed with paranoid schizophrenia before the attacks. / In addition to killing Mr Webber (19), Ms O’Malley-Kumar (19), and Mr Coates (65), Calocane stole Mr Coates’s van and used it to drive at three pedestrians, who were all left seriously injured.” (“Nottingham attacks: Triple killer’s sentence not unduly lenient—judges” by Will Jefford, BBC News, May 14, 2024. ♦ “Major manic episodes; antisocial personality disorder (sociopath); anxiety disorders; bipolar disorder; schizo-affective disorder; schizophrenia; paranoid delusions; delusional disorder; dissociative disorders; “D.I.D., a complex mental health condition (dissociative identity disorder); “He felt like he was being surveilled and then accusing me of conspiring with the government” (a mother, about her son); borderline personality disorder; histrionic personality disorder; (THC-induced) psychosis; “How to spot the difference between a narcissist, psychopath, or sociopath”; hallucinations; hearing voices...; auditory hallucinations... (Mental illness terms, some scientific, some lay. Some of the disorders are relatively innocuous, others incredibly dangerous, all commonly referred to now as “mental health.”)

*** jumping on the “mental health” bandwagon...

♦ “The field is starting to build momentum right now. Evidence is there to support the conclusion that contact with nature benefits our mood, our psychological well-being, our mental health, and our cognitive functioning.” (University of Washington environmental psychologist Gregory Bratman. Quoted in “The Nature Antidote” by Jill U. Adams, Audubon magazine, Winter 2019.)

♦ “A recent study in the journal Scientific Reports found that hearing or seeing birds can have a positive benefit on one’s mental health.” (“Feeling down? Step outside for a bird walk,” Scott Simon, NPR, Mental Health, Weekend Edition Saturday, Nov. 12, 2022. A 1-minute listen. “Thank you, Scott.” See the Wikipedia article “Scientific Reports.”)

♦ “We want teachers to be able to understand what mental-health concerns may be in your classroom.” (Psychologist Dr. Janice Beal, who works with schools in the Houston area. “Have everybody share how they’re feeling.”)

♦ “A first. Earlier this year, NPR’s Student Podcast Challenge asked students to share their stories about mental health. Hundreds of middle-and high schoolers responded. Our judge listened to them all, and we are now awarding our first ever prize in this important category. / Grace Go, a Korean-American: [T]his was the first piece that I’ve made where I put myself in the spotlight. / Janet W. Lee: And that vulnerability really caught our judges’ attention...” (“Living with an eating disorder, a teen finds comfort in her favorite Korean food” by Janet W. Lee, NPR, Weekend Edition Sunday, July 18, 2023.)

♦ “People found they got remarkable feedback when they talked about their mental health.” (Dan Roth, Editor in Chief at LinkedIn, about LinkedIn’s “new emotional tone.”)

♦ “Even five years ago people didn’t open up so much. Now there’s greater awareness of people’s vulnerabilities, such as mental health and LinkedIn has magnified this.” (Douglas Rode of the recruitment giant Page Group in the U.K and Ireland about LinkedIn’s “new emotional tone.”)

♦ “Heather has a BS in Psychology and an MS in Criminal Forensic Studies. She aims to use her gifts, talents, experiences, education, and authentic self to help others feel empowered to live as their authentic selves. She wants to normalize mental health struggles and addiction, and let people know that they are not alone. There is help and support just around the corner.” (An advertising circular on a public bulletin board at a public library.)

♦ Funding for WonderMind, the mental health platform associated with Selena Gomez and her mother, is partly funded by Serena Ventures, the golf legend Serena Williams’ investment portfolio.

♦ “Barbie launches first ever Barbie doll with Down Syndrome. (Mattel. The doll is shorter, with smaller features.)

♦ SAD, seasonal affective disorder, was identified in the 1980s and always related to the diminishing hours of sunlight in winter. Now there is “summer SAD,” which supposedly relates to anxiety about heat waves, smoke from Canadian wildfires, etc., which nicely ties in to worries about global warming...

*** institutionalization, commitment, jail...

♦ “It’s concerning how easily the courts and the clinicians presume danger in individuals who may be having extreme mental experiences.” (Laurie Coker, a psychiatric nurse once diagnosed with bipolar disorder. Her son committed suicide. She has opened the Green Tree Peer Center, “a peer-operated wellness center that empowers people to live more fully through peer support, self-help education, and great social connections! Click to donate online.”)

♦ “Care Court as it’s written right now is unconstitutionally vague and it violates the civil rights of our clients with mental health disabilities who are homeless.” (Christian Abasto, legal director of Disability Rights California.)

♦ “California governor OKs mental health courts for homeless” by Janie Har and Adam Beam, ABC/AP, Sept. 14, 2022. The ACLU of California, Human Rights Watch, Disability Rights California, and numerous other organizations that work with homeless people, minority communities and people with disabilities, all claim the new program will violate civil rights.)

♦ “So we end up building like the Winchester Mystery House. It is a structure that was okay but then it just started adding hallways to nowhere and basements that are on top of the building. That’s what our system looks like.” (Veronica Kelly, Orange County Director of Behavioral Health (DBH), who opposes California’s Care Courts, which can now mandate treatment for the mentally ill. Her office must now provide treatment or face fines. Most citizens, and families of the mentally ill, and even many of the mentally ill, favor such courts.)

♦ “Dear has refused to take medication.” (“Planned Parenthood shooting suspect can be forcibly medicated” by Abigail Beckman, KRCC. In a 2015 attack on a Colorado Springs Planned Parenthood, Robert Lewis Dear Jr. murdered three people and injured nine others.)

♦ “He’s in that dark hole right now, and if you could force treatment there’s a chance he could possibly crawl out of it...He’s never been diagnosed. He doesn’t want any help. He refuses to think of himself as ill, at all... It’s okay to kill himself. He can stay on the streets, and he can die there, but he’s going to die with his rights. The only rights I have as a mother is to go claim him in the morgue.” (The mother of a mentally ill homeless drug addict who refuses treatment and is in and out of crisis police holds, emergency rooms, jails, and homeless shelters.)

♦ A “Ulysses pact” (contract) allows a mentally ill person to stipulate in advance that he be hospitalized during a mental illness crisis, thus circumventing a legal requirement that he give permission. Ulysses wished to hear the sirens, but understood their voices would lead him and his men to their doom. So he ordered his men to tie him to the mast, block their own ears with beeswax, and under no circumstance untie him until the danger was past.

♦ "I, _____, being an adult of sound mind, willfully and voluntarily make this advance instruction for mental health treatment to be followed if it is determined by a physician or eligible psychologist that my ability to receive and evaluate information or communicate decisions is impaired to such an extent that I lack the capacity to refuse or consent to mental health treatment." (A psychiatric advance directive (PAD), or advance instruction.)

♦ "Why wasn't I in a hospital?... / I'm convinced I should have been in the hospital weeks before. For, in fact, the hospital was my salvation [where] I found the repose, the assuagement of the tempest in my brain... This is partly the result of sequestration, of safety, of being removed to a world in which the urge to pick up a knife and plunge it into one's own breast disappears... [T]he hospital also offers the mild, oddly gratifying trauma of sudden stabilization—a transfer out of the too familiar surroundings of home, where all is anxiety and discord, into an orderly and benign detention where one's only duty is to try to get well. For me the real healers were seclusion and time... [I] began to get well, gradually but steadily. I was amazed to discover that the fantasies of self-destruction all but disappeared within a few days after I checked in, and this again is testimony to the pacifying effect that the hospital can create, its immediate value as a sanctuary where peace can return to the mind." (Darkness Visible: A Memoir of Madness by William Styron.)

♦ "I feel quite normal so often that I should think that if what I have is only a malady peculiar to this place, I must wait quietly till it is over, even if it returns again (and let's say that it won't). But I told Doctor Rey that if sooner or later it is desirable that I should go to Aix, as has already been suggested, I consent beforehand." (Dear Theo: The Autobiography of Vincent Van Gogh, Edited by Irving and Jean Stone.)

♦ "The fatal beating of a hospital psychiatrist, allegedly by a former patient, has sparked calls in Italy to improve mental health." (From "Fatal Beating of psychiatrist in Italy sparks reform outcry," AP, April 24, 2023. According to the article, "Under a 1978 law, Italy closed down psychiatric hospitals and made all psychiatric treatment voluntary, with very few exceptions. Critics say the legislation envisioned a network of neighborhood public health facilities to deliver mental health care, but that never fully developed." The victim, Dr. Barbara Capovani, 55, was the mother of three children. She was beaten to death while unlocking her bicycle by a man who had previously beaten another doctor.)

♦ "New Hampshire Hospital was established, in 1842, as a kind of utopian community, a reprieve from the disorder of the outside world. The hospital's early leaders tried to help patients regain their common sense... by immersing them in a model society. The hospital was situated on a hundred and seventeen acres, and patients lived in a stately, red-brick Colonial building with a steeple and a tiered white porch, surrounded by trees. They farmed, gardenized, and cooked together; there was a golf course, an orchestra, a monthly newspaper, dances, and boating on the hospital's pond... / As the patient population expanded, though, the hospital couldn't maintain its early idealism. Psychiatrists no longer had time for the benevolent form of care known as 'moral treatment.'" ("God Knows Where I Am," by Rachel Aviv, The New Yorker, May 30, 2011.)

*** perceptions of the majority...

♦ "So this nurse was psychotic, but allowed to be in the medical field???? If she was in jumping out of windows, on police cars but a licensed medical professional. Hmmm now that is insane." (A commenter about "Nicole Linton Was Involuntarily Committed Multiple Times Before LA Crash, Attorneys Said" by Kui Wmai, Yahoo news, August 16, 2022.)

♦ "The same formula again and again. I want to post pictures of myself in bathing suits. When I get criticized I'll say I want to do it for others and for body positivity. When I get criticized for that, I will show sadness that the world doesn't support mental health and I'm a victim, and finally I'll get praised for being so brave for living my own truth." (Bob Loblaw. A BBC HYS comment about "SI Swim model Natalie Mariduena wants to 'be an example' of 'body normalcy'" by Stephanie Nolasco, August 20, 2022.)

♦ "The clinical varieties of what used to be called 'madness' keep rising, especially among the young."

♦ "I am a retired senior citizen, but I do not recall any era in my lifetime of such an overload of patients seeking mental health services." (An online commenter.)

♦ "Growing up in the 70s and 80s we never heard much about 'mental health.'" (An online commenter.)

♦ 99% of artists would've canceled the show + put out a "mental health statement." (Mod Sun, praising Camila Cabello for performing in Atlanta, in spite of the fact the arena was largely empty.)

*** an international perspective...

♦ "For more than a generation now, we in the West have aggressively spread our modern knowledge of mental illness around the world. We have done this in the name of science... There is now good evidence to suggest that in the process of teaching the rest of the world to think like us, we've been exporting our Western 'symptom repertoire' as well. Indeed, a handful of mental-health disorders—depression, post-traumatic stress disorder and anorexia among them—now appear to be spreading across cultures with the speed of contagious diseases. These symptom clusters are becoming the lingua franca of human suffering, replacing indigenous forms of mental illness..." ("The Americanization of Mental Illness," by Ethan Watters, NYT, January 10, 2010. In addition, the western idea that mental illness is a disease, and not a spiritual sickness or temporary possession, has led to greater stigmatization for sufferers, not less. Studies show that schizophrenics fare better over time in less developed countries in such aspects as relapses, and social acceptance.)

♦ "Just admitted a gunner suffering from shock alone—no wound—completely knocked out; he can't tell you his name, or stand, or even sit up, but just shivers and shudders. Now he is warm in bed, he can say 'Thank you.' I wonder what exactly did it." (Diary of a Nursing Sister on the Western Front: 1914-1915 by Kate (Katherine) Evelyn Luard.)

♦ "HYSTERICAL MONOPLÉGIA, Case D5.—FLACCID FOOT DROP / PRIVATE, 21 YEARS OF AGE. DURATION, 9 MONTHS / During the advance on Loos this private was "blown up" with his platoon and taken prisoner. He escaped the same evening and returned to the trenches, but walked with difficulty. The following evening when making an attack he was wounded in the left arm by shrapnel. The arm fell lifeless and he was dazed. An officer gave the warning that the Prussian Guards were advancing; he got up and made his way to a communication trench, where he began shaking; the left leg went "dead" and powerless and he became deaf. Hearing came back in about an hour. A fortnight later he was sent to England, where he received electrical treatment to the left arm and leg. / Nine months later there was no power whatever in the left foot. Anaesthesia was noted over the leg to a line drawn round the knee." (Hysterical Disorders of Warfare by Lewis Ralph Yealland, M.D., Resident Medical Officer, National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, Queen Square, London, with preface by E. Farquhar Buzzard, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lieut.-Colonel, R.A.M.C., 1918.)

♦ Zhivago: There are three points. First, the court-martial of the vodka brewers; second, the reorganization of the field ambulance and the pharmacy; and third, my proposal for the treatment of mental illnesses. I don't know whether you agree with me, my dear Lajos, but from what I observe we are going mad, and modern forms of insanity spread like an epidemic... / Lajos: ...I am not surprised at your suggestion for preventive psychiatry. I believe in it myself. We are faced with the rise and spread of a form of psychic illness that is typical of our time and is directly related to the contemporary upheavals. We have a case of it in the camp—Pamphil Palykh... / Zhivago: I know Palykh very well... All right, I'll see what I can do about it." (Dr. Zhivago by Boris Pasternak, from "The Forest Brotherhood.")

♦ "Pamphil [Palykh] was devoted to [his wife] and loved his children to distraction... With the arrival of his family he had cheered up and begun to recover... But now the news had got about that... [the families] were going to be sent... to winter quarters... Pamphil's spirits fell and his hallucinations came back... / A bleeding stump of a man [lay] on the ground. His right arm and left leg had been chopped off. It was inconceivable how, with his remaining arm and leg, he had crawled to the camp... Fainting repeatedly from loss of blood, the dying man told him ... of the tortures and atrocities perpetrated by Vitsyn's squads. 'As for the children and women—O God!' / Pamphil had been in the crowd surrounding the dying man. He had seen him, heard his words, and read the threatening inscription on the board. His constant fear for his family in the event of his own death rose to a new climax... In his imagination he saw them handed over to slow torture... / In his desperate anguish he killed them himself, felling his wife and three children with that same, razor-sharp ax that he had used to carve toys for the two small girls and the boy... / The astonishing thing was that he did not kill himself immediately afterward. What could he be thinking of? It was a clear case of insanity... / While Liberius, the doctor, and the members of the army soviet debated what to do with him, he roamed freely about the camp... An obtuse vague grimace of inhuman, unconquerable suffering never left his face. / No one was sorry for him. Everyone avoided him, some people said he should be lynched, but they were not heeded. / There was nothing in the world left for him to do. At dawn he vanished from the camp, fleeing from himself like a dog with rabies." (Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak.)

♦ "One agency that seized upon Freeman's work was the Veterans Administration. Faced with an influx of shell-shocked World War II GIs that flooded its mental wards, the VA issued a directive in 1943 requesting its neurosurgeons to study and use the Freeman and Watts lobotomy technique. By 1951, nearly 3,000 lobotomies had been performed at VA hospitals, according to agency records." ("D.C. Neurosurgeon Pioneered 'Operation Icepick' Technique" by Glenn Frankel, the Washington Post, April 7, 1980.)

*** analysis

♦ It is impossible to understand what "mental health" means nowadays. Having a bad day? Female hormones? Bad behavior? A personality disorder? An excuse for bad behavior? An aspect of the for-profit and clicks "wellness" industry? Criminal behavior? An excuse for criminal behavior? Drug addiction or alcoholism? Simple anxiety? Paranoid schizophrenia? All of these things seem to be expressed by the term, "mental health." Mental illness is even considered as a "gift," "wonderful," and the mentally ill person is considered "amazing" and "exceptional" right up until the time he or "they" commits a horrible mass shooting, and then the mentally ill person becomes "a coward" or "pure evil" or "a monster."

♦ When a term can mean anything to anyone, or includes everyone, it means nothing.

her post-modern, ~ lyrics failed to find an audience

♦ “The film leans fully into meta territory.” (Caryn James about the 2022 film Bros, a gay rom-com. This short sentence is notable for containing 3 contempo-speak clichés: “lean into,” “meta,” and “territory.” The film’s marketing roll-out was budgeted higher than the production of the film. Now, that’s meta!)

♦ “The assemblage provokes a meta-consideration: what truly separates the stripper from the actor, the club from the theater?” (“Down South: P-Valley,” on Starz by Doreen St. Felix, The New Yorker, August 8, 2022.)

♦ “That’s a funny thing about being a content creator, though, right? You are trying to make money off your audience, and obviously sometimes you have to behave in ways that you wouldn’t be behaving if the audience weren’t there watching you. You and your audience are just supposed to operate as if that’s not the case. / Yeah, it gets very meta...” (“Pokimane” by David Marchese, The New York Times Magazine, April 30, 2023.)

LaGuardia Community College, Queens, New York City.)

♦ See the Wikipedia article "Mic drop." Wikipedians are wonderful.

♦ This term is a good one to show how dictionaries can define words in different ways, and also how people might use a word in idiosyncratic ways when it becomes trendy. I like the way Stuart Heritage explained it in his short article, "'Obama out': a brief history of mic drops" (The Guardian, 2 May 2016). He wrote, "As a gesture, the mic drop signals the end of a statement so definitive that it cannot possibly be followed."

♦ The greatest mic drop of all time was not a mic drop, but a "guitar toss"—for which there is not yet a Wikipedia article. Dhani's expression says it all. Prince. Nuff said. Watch: Prince, Tom Petty, Steve Winwood, Jeff Lynne, more—"While My Guitar Gently Weeps" 2004 Induction

(Dr. Jonas Salk on being put in his place by Albert Sabin at a meeting.)

♦ "Elon can be so much hell and brimstone in meetings and just unpredictable as all get out. But I've also seen him flip a switch and suddenly be this incredibly effective, charismatic, high-emotional-intelligence business person, when he has to do it." (JB Straubel about Elon Musk. From Elon Musk by Walter Isaacson.)

*** analysis

term 'microaggression' in its self—some people will bristle because they've seen it applied to things they don't think are problematic—it just means a use of a word that can be offensive or hurtful and so, when your consciousness is raised, you try to avoid it. And that I think is the status of the word 'ladies.' Calling it a microaggression in itself is going to separate people into camps... (Georgetown University linguist Dr. Deborah Tannen. From "Is 'ladies' acceptable workplace language?" by Robin Young, wbur, April 18, 2023.)

(Kidnapped by Robert Louis Stevenson.)

♦ Before 1910, more than 90 percent of blacks lived in the South. In 1940, 77 percent of black Americans still lived in the South—40 percent in the rural South. By the end of the migration, black America was only half Southern, and less than a quarter rural; "urban" had become a euphemism for "black." The black migration was one of the largest and most rapid mass internal movements of people in history—perhaps the greatest not caused by the immediate threat of execution or starvation. In sheer numbers it outranks the migration of any other ethnic group—Italians or Irish or Jews or Poles—to this country." (The Promised Land: The Great Black Migration and How It Changed America by Nicholas Lemann.)

*** analysis

♦ Hawaii has the "coconut wireless" or the Coconut Wire. The Philippines have the Bamboo Telegraph. Ghanaians can hear things via "the talking drum." From time immemorial, as Ibrahim al-Koni tells us, the desert winds have brought rumors and reports to the Sahrawis: "I heard it on the wind." Americans can "hear it through the grapevine," or hear a report or account through the rumor mill. Italians say "per sentito dire" which basically means, "heard it said," and they hear gossip "voci di corridoio" which means "hall voice" or "voices in the hall." These systems operate by word-of-mouth, or, nowadays, the Internet.

♦ Don Quixote and Sancho encountered a fulling mill in Cervantes' great work, and the scene focused on its loud sound, the river, a waterfall, the mill workers, and the mill's danger. "Six fulling hammers making all the noise with their alternating blows." Read the Wikipedia article "Fulling." Wikipedians are wonderful.

♦ Fulling mill (walk mill, tuck mill); textile mill; jute mill; windmill; watermill; sawmill; stamp mill (placer mining)...

*** analysis

♦ A mill traditionally ground wheat, then the word became synonymous with a factory. And, of course, the word is used figuratively. In fact, people who happen to live in "post-industrial" economies might encounter the word used figuratively much more often than it is used literally. And yet, the expression persists in the language. It lives on!

♦ "The next day the mines arrived. / Medieval, ugly, they smelled like death. Appropriately, the wooden boxes they came in were marked with a skull and crossbones. We were issued three types: 'Bouncing Bettys' that jumped up and exploded about waist high to maximize casualties, foot jammers that blew feet apart, and swarthy, lethal anti-tank mines. / We dug row upon row of potholes between the concertina-wire loops in front of our positions. The following morning we placed the mines by the holes and marked them on a map. At midday, King, Rome, and I, lying on our stomachs, lifted the mines, one by one, put them in the holes; covered them with dirt; tied our trip lines; and, finally, removed the safety pins. / I had Castro replace me when we finished the first row. I sat on top of Spencer's bunker the rest of the day watching the men as they slowly and carefully laid the minefield. The following afternoon they placed the last mine... A safe lane was marked through the field. If a friendly patrol arrived back at the outer concertina strand, someone from inside would have to go out to escort it into the area. Our safe lane came down right in front of the M-60 machine gun. / There was nothing funny or cute about laying a minefield. It lay like death at our front door." (Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of The Vietnam War by James E. Parker Jr. A battalion basecamp, Phuoc Vinh.)

♦ "What happened?" I asked, my voice breaking. / 'Well, one of those things. The trip lines to the mines around the perimeter have got tangled in undergrowth and a couple of days ago one of the mines went off in front of George's positions. Someone said a dog had gotten into the minefield, someone else said they saw some villagers near the concertina. George went out to check. He was walking down the safe lane and he took a little half-step off to one side and a mine went off. He never knew what hit him. No reason. There is no great combat story here. Our friend was just walking along and he took a misstep and he died. Nor moral. Nothing gained. Just one of those things.' / George's death was on my mind for days. I could not shake the sense of loss. The only consolation was George's contention that if we die in combat, we're at peace. If others get upset, it's their problem. Even so, my attitudes changed. I did not make friends with the replacements but kept to myself, relaxing only with Dunn, Wooley, and the men in the platoon." (Last Man Out: A Personal Account Of The Vietnam War by James E. Parker Jr.)

*** Aberfan, Wales; Yorkshire; Appalachia; Butte Montana...

♦ "In this grim Welsh mining village of 5,000 there is turkey in plenty on the table, but the eyes of bereaved parents turn inevitably to empty chairs." ("Turkey Is Plentiful But Holiday is Sad in Aberfan, Wales," NYT, Dec. 25, 1966. One hundred and sixteen children between the ages of seven and ten, and 28 adults, died when a mountain of coal waste collapsed, hitting a school.)

♦ "I have only been down one coal mine so far but hope to go down some more in Yorkshire. It was for me a pretty devastating experience and it is a fearful thought that the labour of crawling as far as the coal face (about a mile in this case but as much as 3 miles in some mines), which was enough to put my legs out of action for four days, is only the beginning and ending of a miner's day's work, and his real work comes in between. Have you ever been down a mine? I don't think I shall ever feel quite the same about coal again." (Eric A. Blair in a letter to Richard Rees, 29 February 1936. Sent from Darlington Street / Wigan, Lancs.)

♦ "The phenomena are always of the same kind. The miners are either immediately destroyed by the explosion, and thrown with the

♦ "When the mines were working, there was a rhythm to life by what the whistles told you, and what the sounds were. So there was a noise that went on constantly that you were aware of and yet not aware of. And when the mines were gone, there was a dead silence... And it was eerie." (From the PBS documentary, "Butte, America," which recreates the life in Butte, Montana, when the mines were still operating. The mines operated from 1890 to 1977, and in 1920 over 40,000 people lived in Butte, many of them miners.)

♦ Oh, come all you young fellers, so young and so fine / Seek not your fortune in the dark dreary mine / It'll form as a habit and seep in your soul / Till the stream of your blood runs as black as the coal / Where it's dark as a dungeon, damp as the dew / Danger is double, the pleasures are few / Where the rain never falls, the sun never shines / It's dark as a dungeon way down in the mine / Well, I pray when I'm dead and the ages shall roll / That my body will blacken and turn into coal / Then I'll look from the door of my heavenly home / And pity the miner digging my bones. ("Dark as a Dungeon." I like the version sung by Johnny Cash.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ "I would just like to comment briefly about that casualty chart. The loss of one human life is intolerable to any of us who are in the military. But I would tell that the casualties of that order of magnitude considering the job that has been done and the number of forces that are involved is almost miraculous..." (General Schwarzkopf, at the "Mother of All News Conferences," the Gulf War, 1991.)

♦ "An amulet hung by a silk cord from the dead man's neck. The doctor took it off. It contained a sheet of paper, worn and rotted at the folds, sewn into a piece of cloth. Written on the paper... were excerpts from the Ninety-first Psalm... Leaving the telephonist, Yuri Andreievich went out into the field to the young White Guardsman whom he had killed... From the opening of [the White Guardsman's] shirt there slipped out and hung suspended by a chain a cross, a locket, and some other small flat gold case, rather like a snuffbox, dented as if a nail had been driven into it. A paper fell out. The doctor unfolded it and could not believe his eyes. It was the same Ninety-first Psalm...[The White Guardsman] groaned and stirred... The bullet had been stopped by his mother's amulet and this had saved him." (Doctor Zhivago by Boris Pasternak.)

♦ "Full autonomy continued to be a receding mirage, always a year or so away." (Self-driving cars. From Elon Musk by Walter Isaacson.)

*** the Sahara, Antarctica, Lake Michigan...

♦ "In crossing the desert, I perceived, at a distance, immense tracts, which had the appearance of rivers or lakes, with islands of sand rising in the midst of them; they presented themselves to the eye, in the horizon of the desert, as places where one might quench one's thirst... This illusion only rendered my situation more dreadful, when I was consumed with thirst, and saw the sea receding before me as by enchantment. It is impossible to form any correct idea of a mirage without have seen one." (Travels Through Central Africa To Timbuctoo; and Across The Great Desert, to Morocco; Performed in the Years 1824-1828 by Rene Caillie.)

♦ "The mirages in the Antarctic had a clarity that was almost beyond belief, and made it difficult for an explorer to know whether he was seeing land or not. Second ranges of mountains appeared to be built up on top of the real mountains lying below, and these false ranges were immensely high and clear in outline. They hung there in the pale sky for a few minutes and then vanished only to re-form themselves again, so that the sailing ships drifted about in an atmosphere of ghostly fantasy. It was both awe-inspiring and wonderfully beautiful." (The Fatal Impact by Alan Moorehead.)

mirages. A freighter on the skyline would suddenly break up, midships section vanishing altogether, pilothouse and after cabins becoming extremely tall, reaching up like lighthouses in the deep water; then, after a minute or two, the lighthouses would disappear and there would be a steamboat again, prosaic as any other cargo carrier. On the north shore of Lake Superior the Canadian cities of Fort William and Port Arthur lie at the end of a broad bay, and on the seaward side of this bay there are islands; and if you sail from one of these cities late in the day these islands suddenly multiply so that each one is accompanied by a twin, each rock and tree perfectly duplicated, and no matter how hard you look you cannot tell which island is real and which is not... After a while the imitation islands rise into the air, get all streaky and distorted, and then go away entirely, and the lake is clear once more. I feel sorry for people who have never cruised the Great Lakes by steamboat." (Waiting for the Morning Train: An American Boyhood by Bruce Catton.)

♦ "One of...my experiences with the magicians of the air occurred near the forks of the Platte. There had been a tremendous thunderstorm, lasting all night. In the morning my party set forward over the soaked prairie under a cloudless sky intensely blue. I was riding in advance.... Looking forward I beheld a truly terrifying spectacle. Immediately in front, at a distance, apparently, of not more than a quarter-mile, was a long line of the most formidable looking monsters that the imagination ever conceived. They were taller than trees...and partook of the triple character of animals, houses and machines. Legs they had, that an army of elephants could have marched among; bodies that ships might have sailed beneath; heads about which eagles might have delighted to soar, and ears—they were singularly well gifted with ears. But wheels also they were endowed with, and vast sides of blank wall; the wheels as large as the ring of a circus, the walls white and high as cliffs of chalk along an English coast. Among them, on them, beneath, in and a part of them, were figures and fragments of figures of gigantic men. All were inextricably interblended and superposed—a man's head and shoulders blazoned on the side of an animal; a wheel with legs for spokes rolling along the creature's back; a vast section of wall, having no contact with the earth, but (with a tail hanging from its rear, like a note of admiration), moving along the line... [O]ur tongues were loosened only when it began rapidly to diminish and recede, and at last was resolved into a train of mules and wagons, barely visible on the horizon. They were miles away and outlined against the blue sky. / This pageant had appeared to move along parallel to the foot of a slope extending upward and backward to an immense height, intersected with rivers and presenting all the features of a prairie landscape. The mirage had in effect contracted the entire space between us and the train to a pistol-shot in breadth, and had made a background...by lifting into view Heaven knows how great an extent of country below our horizon. Does refraction account for all this?" ("Mirage" by Ambrose Bierce. Early Cubism?)

  - ♦ “When we look one another in the face, we’re neither of us just looking at a face we hate—no, we’re gazing into a mirror. That’s the tragedy of our age. Do you really not recognize yourselves in us—yourselves and the strength of your will? Isn’t it true that for you too the world is your will?... You may think you hate us, but what you really hate is yourselves—yourselves in us. It’s terrible, isn’t it? Do you understand me?... Do you think the world looks on us with horror and on you with hope and love? No, the world looks on us both with the same horror!... You and I both know that it’s not on battlefields that the future is decided... It was the Roehm purge that gave Stalin the idea for the purge of the Party in 1937... You must believe me. You’ve kept silent while I’ve been talking, but I know that I’m like a mirror for you—a surgical mirror.” (Liss interrogating Mostovskoy. Life And Fate by Vasily Grossman, translated by Robert Chandler, New York Review Books. Part Two, Chapter 14.)
  - ♦ “They should take a look in the mirror before judging others...”
  - ♦ “The media sometimes serves as a window and sometimes as a mirror. Shows and characters that resonate the most are actually both. You see yourself reflected in them, but you also get to learn about other things through them.” (Mariana Diaz-Wioczek. From “Kids need to see themselves reflected in media. Here are some recommendations,” Elizabeth Blair, NPR, December 26, 2021.)
  - ♦ “Novels are both windows and mirrors.”
  - ♦ A FUNNY STORY. Every morning, Osama Bin Laden would wake up, look in the mirror, and say, “Mirror mirror on the wall, who’s the greatest a**hole of them all?” And every morning the mirror would say, “Oh you are, Osama.” Then he would go downstairs in a jovial mood for breakfast. One day he showed up for breakfast in a foul temper. “What’s the matter?” his family members cried in consternation. “What’s happened?” And Osama said, “Who the F*** is Roy Keane?”
- *** mirror mazes, funhouse mirrors...

♦ “A number of isolated groups do reach the German trenches on the edge of what was once Guillemont and chaotic close-quarters combat breaks out there. / Kresten Andresen is still alive around the middle of the day on 8 August [1916]... / When the 1st Company is mustered it is discovered that there are twenty-nine men who cannot be accounted for among either the living or the dead. Kresten Andresen is one of them. / There has been no word of him since. / His fate is unknown. / [Footnote: The paths of one of the forgotten and one of the most famous participants in the war almost crossed at Guillemont. On 24 August Lieutenant Ernst Junger and his 73rd Regiment of Fusiliers were sent into action there. Junger has described it in his superb war memoir The Storm of Steel. By the time of Junger's arrival the village had been completely obliterated: 'only a whitish mark on the field of craters still showed the spot where the chalky stone of the houses had been ground to dust.' There was an all-pervasive stench of putrefaction and millions of fat blowflies filled the air. Even Junger, normally so cool, was shaken by what he saw. 'The ploughed-up battlefield was a scene of horror. The dead lay there among the living defenders. When we dug bunkers we saw how the dead lay in layers one above the other. One company after another had been mown down as they made a stand shoulder to shoulder under the drum fire; then their corpses had been buried under the tons of earth hurled up by the projectiles and new men had taken the place of the fallen.'” (The Beauty and the Sorrow by Peter England.)

♦ 1915 Age 50. His son John killed in the Battle of Loos, age 18, a first lieutenant. Missing. Never found.

Kipling felt guilt, as he had helped John get into the war. He wrote “My Boy Jack” in 1915, after John had been declared missing and was presumed dead: “Have you news of my boy Jack?” / Not this tide. / “When d’you think that he’ll come back?” / Not with this wind blowing, and this tide.”

Kipling wrote “Gethsemane” (poem), and also “Mesopotamia” (1917), an indictment of the Allied side. Also the “Common Form” poem: “If any question why we died, / Tell them, because our fathers lied.”

“After the war, Kipling served on the Imperial War Graves Commission until his death. ‘It is one of the great ironies that Kipling should have been the person to select the phrase ‘known unto God’ for all unknown soldiers, and then not know what happened to his own son,’ says Phillip Mallett, author of Kipling: A Literary Life. / Kipling worked with Winston Churchill to ensure that all gravestones were the same shape and size, regardless of military rank. The long lines of matching gravestones lining war cemeteries are their legacy.” (“Solving the mystery of Rudyard Kipling’s son,” BBC, 18 January 2016.)

The trip lines to the mines around the perimeter have got tangled in undergrowth and a couple of days ago one of the mines went off in front of George's positions. Someone said a dog had gotten into the minefield, someone else said they saw some villagers near the concertina. George went out to check. He was walking down the safe lane and he took a little half-step off to one side and a mine went off. He never knew what hit him. No reason. There is no great combat story here. Our friend was just walking along and he took a misstep and he died. Nor moral. Nothing gained. Just one of those things.' / George's death was on my mind for days. I could not shake the sense of loss. The only consolation was George's contention that if we die in combat, we're at peace. If others get upset, it's their problem. Even so, my attitudes changed. ♦ "He saw the red mist. That's no excuse. You can't lay your hand on an official." (Ex-footballer and commentator Chris Sutton, recommending that Aleksander Mitrovic get a 10-game ban for pushing the referee.)

♦ "Then came a moment of madness from James as she stamped on Alozi following a challenge which saw the pair fall to the floor." (Fifa 2023 Women's World Cup. Others characterized this as "stood on.")

♦ “The red mist had metaphorically descended over the defendant’s eyes...” (The ruling by Mr Justice Martin Spencer in Czernuszka v King. From “Reading rugby player wins compensation over revenge tackle” by Marcus White, BBC News, 23 Feb 2023. Natasha King, captain of the Bracknell Ladies rugby team, had referred to her opponents as “c***s” and said, “That f***ing number 7, I’m going to break her.” An appalling case with real-life consequences.)

♦ “Yes I do we have a rule of law. Unintentionally killing someone is manslaughter you brought race into this. Ones Canadian ones usa so both not natives here. We don’t have the same racial bias as you do...” (An online commenter about “How the Racist Treatment of Matt Petgrave Hurts Black Hockey Players by Isi Frank Atvie, Chicago Defender, December 4, 2023. An appalling case.)

♦ “A man cannot change his feelings again during the last rush with a veil of blood before his eyes.” (Ernst Junger. Quoted in On Killing by Lt. Col. Dave Grossman. Close-quarters combat. Soldiers who resist to the final moment and then throw down their weapons and raise their hands may or may not be taken prisoner.)

♦ “They were one hole over. They got plumed. They were erased from the Earth. DiLeo watched the round all the way down, and it exploded right in their hole, vaporizing them. One second, they were there, living and breathing and thinking and maybe swearing or even praying just like him. And in the next second, two hale, young men, both of them sergeants in the United States Army, pride of their hometowns—Perryville, Mo., and Willimantic, Conn., respectively—had been turned into a plume of fine pink mist, tiny bits of blood, bone, tissue, flesh and brain that rose and drifted and settled over everyone and everything nearby. It—or they—drifted down on DiLeo, who reached up to wipe the bloody ooze from his eyes and saw that his arms and the rest of him were coated, too. Then there would come another pock and another whoosh.” (Mark Bowden, author of Hue 1968, reading from his book. From “‘Hue 1968’ Revisits An American ‘Turning Point’ In The War In Vietnam,” NPR, Fresh Air with the wonderful host Dave Davies, November 10, 2017.)

♦ “If you are lucky, in that window will one day emerge the figure of the enemy. The JFK shot. Pink mist.” (The 2005 film Jarhead, based on the book by Anthony Swofford, a Marine. Watch: Jarhead (2005): Most Memorable Scenes!

♦ There are many “Half Moon” topographical features, no doubt based on shape: arch; bar; basin; bay; bayou; beach; bend; bluff; brook; canyon; cove; creek; draw; gulch; hill; hollow; island; lake (many); mountain; pass; prairie; ridge; raffle (rapids); shoals; slough; spring; swamp; tank; valley...

♦ There are many “Moon” creeks, and even more “Moon” lakes. In some instances this no doubt relates to the reflection of the moon in the water.

♦ The moon follows the ecliptic, as far as I know. And so, there must be an element of direction in some of these “moon” place names. Of course, the moon is a shape. Finally, the notion of entertainment must figure in, because nature was free entertainment before stupid TVs and cellphones. Many inhabitants of our urban ghettos have never seen the Milky Way, or a dark sky, and never will. Their habitual mannerism is to look around, for whatever reason, but seldom to look up.

♦ NPR’s hyping of every particular “blue moon” or “super moon,” or “super blue moon” is disgusting and stupid. Their “digital” editors—whoever they are—have obviously not spent much if any time outdoors.

*** jumping on the "moonshot" bandwagon...

♦ "With profound sadness [sic], my most extraordinary moonshot kid, Marco Troper whose light, leadership and love will never diminish unexpectedly died. Marco and I were working on his most inspiring idea to cure cancer..." (Professor Freedom Cheteni of www.moonshots.org)

*** various groups...

♦ "A lot of these guys and gals are really really hurting, because of what they saw, and what they went through, and then when you add on top of that, the criticism, like I said, the moral injury..." (Andy Carrier, clinical social worker, who counseled Uvalde school shooting officers.)

♦ "With the moral injury, that was going on with the officers, because of the scrutiny from the public, umm, uhh... I'm sure you've heard of the term compassion fatigue and secondary trauma, we felt it..." (Andy Carrier, clinical social worker, who counseled Uvalde school-shooting officers.)

*** war, conflict, the military...

♦ [A quiet card game in the rear was disturbed by the shots of a sniper in a tree. A soldier from the West, a crack shot, dealt with the problem.] "That gray squirrel is pretty frisky, and I must stop his fun to stop him spoiling ours." He drew a bead on the man in the tree and fired. As the Confederate sharpshooter came crashing through the branches to the ground, the Westerner sat down and asked: 'What's trumps?' He seemed as unconcerned as if he had killed a mosquito that had been annoying him. / ...[B]ehind all this was constantly present to our eyes and mind the scene of a great stream, a procession, so to speak of human souls on their way to eternity." (Memoirs of Chaplain Life by W. Corby. The Civil War.)

♦ "Numerous NSW members interviewed during this investigation operate with a strongly held conviction, some of it enculturated from BUD/S, of the obligation and moral duty [italics mine] to follow a Man Overboard into the water." ("Subj: Command Investigation into the Facts and Circumstances Surrounding the Loss at Sea of Two Task Force Three Personnel on or about 11 January [sic] 2024.)

*** analysis

♦ According to the Wikipedia article "Moral injury," the term "moral distress" originated in the 1980s in reference to health-care workers. Through "concept inflation" or "co-option," the construct has since been applied to soldiers, police, firefighters, EMTs, legal defenders and lawyers, people in child and adult protective services, and even to veterinarians, leading inevitably to the construct's disparagement: "moral injury Olympics."

♦ When a term can mean anything to anyone, or includes everyone, it means nothing.

*** various groups...

- ♦ "Moral panics are a way of pushing back against change or reform, a way of preserving the status quo." (According to Sandhya Dirks, who covers race and identity for NPR, about US citizens concerned about crime, and who tend to vote Republican.)

- ♦ "I just think the moral panic that has been induced over some horrific moments—the overreach of protest—it is a manufactured panic." (Eddie Glaude Jr., Princeton University. From "Israel-Hamas war provokes some intense responses on U.S. college campuses," NPR, Morning Edition, Nov. 16, 2023.)

- ♦ "Big Freedia, queen of the New Orleans 'sissy bounce' scene, released her first EP and is bringing her 'go homo' anthems nationwide on a successful tour." (Tavia Nyong'o, professor of performance studies at NYU and blogger at Hear is Queer.)

- ♦ "In American history there are these irrational outbursts of moralism, and the death of "Kid" Paret was the occasion for one of these epidemics of piety." (Jack Newfield, boxing journalist, about the calls to ban boxing. From the affecting and emotionally wrenching documentary Ring of Fire: The Emile Griffith Story 2005.)

- ♦ "'Petting parties' were neon signposts on the road to perdition." (The 1920s.)

- ♦ "He expects them to be a hit (COO Will Paccione); a first for the house of ill repute; the mother-daughter combination; showing her mother the ropes; I also enjoy the type of work; I couldn't have asked for a better first experience; a mother-daughter tagteam; strong women..." ("North Carolina mom joins daughter to work at notorious Chicken Ranch brothel near Las Vegas" by Lauren Elkie Schram, The New York Post, May 18, 2024.)

- ♦ "This Throuple has mastered 'sharing everything'—and they don't care if you think they're 'going straight to hell'" by Adriana Diaz, The New York Post, August 7, 2024.)

- ♦ "It's the same moral panic that emerges with new forms of media." (A response to criticism of social media.)

- ♦ "Go Ahead! regardless of the consequences and indifferent to the value of human life." (A diarist in the 1840s about science, technology, and the use of steam for power.)

- ♦ "The 'threat of a jobless future' is, of course, an old one, almost as old as technology. The first, rudimentary knitting machine, known as a 'stocking frame,' was invented in the late sixteenth century by a clergyman named William Lee. Seeking a patent for his invention, Lee demonstrated the machine for Elizabeth I. Concerned about throwing hand-knitters out of work, she refused to grant one. In the early nineteenth century, a more sophisticated version of the stocking frame became the focus of the Luddites' rage; in towns like Liversedge and Middleton, in northern England, textile mills were looted. Parliament responded by declaring 'frame breaking' a capital offense, and the machines kept coming." ("Rage Against the Machine: Will robots take your job?" by Elizabeth Kolbert, The New Yorker, December 19 & 26, 2016.)

*** problems, criticism, pushback, snark...

- ♦ "That's how the press read the signs, too. 'YUPPIES' LAST RITES READIED' was the headline in the Times after Black Monday. 'SUNSET FOR YUPPIES' was the headline in USA Today. Obituaries for the yuppie began to appear—notably (and strangely unmentioned in McGrath's book), Hendrik Hertzberg's classic 'The Short Happy Life of the American Yuppie,' in Esquire. The yuppie, Hertzberg said, was 'the collective projection of a moral anxiety. We loaded onto him everything we hated about the times we had been living through... Then we strung the little bastard up.' It was over." ("What Happened To The Yuppie?" by Louis Menand, The New Yorker, July 29, 2024. Great writing.)

- ♦ Rikki Schlott has characterized the upheaval in U.S. society after the 2020 death of George Floyd and the Black Lives Matter movement as a "racial moral panic." White Americans made best sellers out of books by Robin DiAngelo and Ibram X Kendi, and educational institutions, corporations, and the government committed to DEI programs. She likens this to "mass hysteria." ("Walmart ditches DEI, because, duh, dividing people doesn't bring them closer together," by Rikki Schlott, Opinion, The New York Post, Nov. 26, 2024.)

*** analysis

- ♦ Fragility (white fragility, etc.), moral panic (noun), panic (bisexual panic, etc.), and phobia (fatphobia, etc.) are often used by groups with agendas to mischaracterize and disparage their opponents. Of course, this is gaslighting.

- ♦ "Normalize" often goes with "moral panic." They are often opposite sides of the same coin.

- ♦ Read the Wikipedia article "Moral panic." The article says that Stanley Cohen "developed the term." See the Wikipedia article "Stanley Cohen (sociologist)." Make up your own mind about the validity of the term.

- ♦ Wikipedia has an article, "Lavender scare." Wikipedians are wonderful.

- ♦ "Life with Dead Metaphors: Impairment Rhetoric in Social Justice Praxis" by Tanya Titchkosky, University of Toronto. Journal of Literary and Cultural Disability Studies 9.1 (2015). She gives many examples of words that relate to disability, used figuratively, including amnesia; amputated; aphasia; autistic; blind; crazy; cripple; crippled; deaf; deformed; lame; limping...

- ♦ "Anyone who has been alone in the woods on a dark night is aware of the eerie sounds that can be heard. The Greeks thought that these frightening noises were purposely caused by the great god Pan who dwelt in the forest, and his name gave them their phrase to panikon deima, 'the panic fear.' So a Wall Street panic descends directly from the Greek god Pan." (Word Origins And Their Romantic Stories by Wilfred Funk, Litt.D.)

♦ "Most of the 25,000 soldiers that Napoleon sent to Haiti to quash the slave rebellion died of malaria. Napoleon had planned to transfer his army from Haiti to New Orleans but he had to abandon that strategy, and sold the Louisiana Territory to the US instead." (The Invention of Nature: Alexander Von Humboldt's New World by Andrea Wulf.)

♦ "In those days, you could say, 'Shut up and take it, we're fighting the Japanese.' The Japanese didn't have it, and they were devastated by malaria. You could make a case that atabrine won the war." (Col. Alan J. Magill, speaking about World War II. The atabrine turned the skin yellow.)

♦ "We are fighting malaria as we are fighting the Maoist rebels. The mosquitoes are deadlier than the Maoists since we are more vulnerable to their attacks. Mosquitoes are killing more security forces than the rebels." (Akhileshwar Pandey, president of the Jharkhand police association, on the deaths of more than 100 policemen and soldiers from cerebral malaria. The police and paramilitary forces are stationed in forest camps.)

*** Battista Grassi...

♦ "Anopheles claviger! This became the slogan of Battista Grassi. You can see him, shuffling along behind lovers in the dusk, making fists of his fingers to keep himself from pouncing on the zanzarone who made meals off their regardless necks... You can see this Grassi, sitting in a stagecoach with no springs, oblivious to bumps, deaf to the chatter of his fellow-passengers, with absent eyes counting the Anopheles claviger he had discovered—with delight—riding on the ceiling of the wagon in which he journeyed from one utterly terrible little malarious village to another still more cursed." (Grassi did what Ross and Koch couldn't: prove that malaria is passed from man to man by the bite of a mosquito that the locals called zanzarone and that naturalists called Anopheles claviger. From Microbe Hunters by Paul De Kruif.)

*** analysis

♦ "We perceived a single Bedawi, running southward all in a flutter, his grey hair and grey beard flying in the wind, who yelled 'The biggest aeroplane in the world...' At Um el Surab the Handley stood majestic on the grass, with Bristols and 9's like fledglings beneath its spread of wings. Round it admired the Arabs, saying, 'Indeed and at last they have sent us THE aeroplane, of which these things were foals.'" (Seven Pillars of Wisdom, Book X, Chapter CXIV, by T.E. Lawrence.)

♦ "All were on foot, with the exception of a few gentlemen, about fifty in number; and they possessed but one piece of artillery—an old iron cannon, drawn by a string of ponies. For any military purposes it was useless, and it was only employed as a signal gun; but it accompanied the march in deference to the superstitious ideas of the Highlanders, who, being but little accustomed to cannon, attached great importance to the possession of 'the musket's mother,' as they called it. Many of the Highlanders were armed only with scythes or pitchforks." (Prestonpans. From British Battles on Land and Sea by James Grant.)
